START

Microfilmed By:

NORTHEAST DOCUMENT CONSERVATION CENTER
Andover, MA 01810

July 1994

Camera Operator:
John Sullivan

MASTER
NEGATIVE
NUMBER:
BSO-56-057

MICROFILMED
August 1993 - April 1994

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA SCRAPBOOK MICROFILMING PROJECT

Funded in part by

THE NATIONAL ENDOWMENT FOR THE HUMANITIES

Grant No. PS-20709-93

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA MICROFILMING PROJECT

A Cooperative Project Between the Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives and the Boston Public Library (August 1993 - April 1994)

The Microfilming Project incorporates two collections of scrapbooks housed in two separate repositories. The first set of scrapbooks (80 volumes) resides within the Allen A. Brown Collection of the Boston Public Library (BPL) Music Department. Their call number is M.125.5. The second set of scrapbooks (132 volumes) resides within the Press Clippings collection of the Boston Symphony Orchestra (BSO) Archives. They have the designation Pres 56.

The BPL scrapbooks begin with the founding of the BSO in 1881 and continue, through 79 seasons, to 1960. Articles consist mainly of reviews and feature stories from Boston and New York newspapers. Occasionally, magazine articles and press releases are also included. The scrapbooks cover most aspects of the BSO.

The BSO scrapbooks run from 1889, the Orchestra's 9th season, to 1973. In addition to local reviews and features, the volumes contain articles culled from national and international publications. The scrapbooks document, in detail, all aspects of the BSO: The Symphony Orchestra (including subscription concerts, tours, and trips), the Boston Pops, the Tanglewood Festival, the Tanglewood Music Center, and Symphony Hall.

The two sets of scrapbooks have been filmed as two separate entities. Researchers wanting to look at specific seasons or subjects must examine both sets of films to ensure full coverage.

The scrapbooks do not represent the complete holdings of either location on the subject of the BSO.

Requests for positive microfilm copies of individual rolls, or of film sets, should be directed to the respective repository:

Music Department
Boston Public Library
Post Office Box 286
Boston, MA 02117

Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives
Symphony Hall
Boston, MA 02115

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA SCRAPBOOKS

1889 - 1973

132 VOLUMES

Source: Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives

FINDING AID

Boston Symphony Orchestra Scrapbooks (Series 56, Sub-Series 1)

Source: Press Office (Office of the Public Relations Director)

The BSO scrapbooks comprise part of one series in the BSO Archives. Series 56, Press Clippings, is divided by format into 3 sub-series: 1) Scrapbooks, 1889-1973 (132 volumes); 2) Loose Clippings, 1931-1991 (9 record cartons); and 3) Oversize Newspapers and Journals, 1919-1979 (1 oversize box). Each sub-series is arranged chronologically.

The scrapbooks contain concert notices and reviews, record reviews, and feature articles. Early scrapbooks may also contain programs, tickets, and subscription orders. Materials are organized by concert season into the following categories: BSO (including tours); Kneisel Quartet (and later Boston Symphony Chamber Players); Boston Pops (referred to in early years as Promenade concerts); and Tanglewood (including the Tanglewood Music Center, the Tanglewood Festival, Tanglewood-on-Parade, and the Fromm Festival of Contemporary Music).

Reviews and articles cover a wide range of subjects: Founder H.L. Higginson; BSO conductors, players, trustees, and other personnel; guest artists and composers; BSO and Pops performances and recordings; U.S. and overseas tours; BSO/Cecilia Society joint performances; open rehearsals; and special events connected to anniversary celebrations and fundraising.

Feature stories document changes in the size, composition, and location of the orchestra. Topics include the hiring of women and minorities; the unionization of players; controversies (such as the internment of conductor Karl Muck during World War II); the sale of the old Music Hall; and the construction of Symphony Hall and other structures (such as the Koussevitsky Music Shed at Tanglewood).

Reproductions of the materials in the collection may not be made without permission from the Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives.

GUIDE TO CONTENTS

Institution: BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Series Name: PRESS CLIPPINGS
Series Number: 56
Series Dates: 1889-1991

Sub-series Name: SCRAPBOOKS
Sub-series Number: 1
Sub-series Dates: 1889-1973

VOLUME LISTING

VOL	TITLE	DATES
1	BSO	1889-1890
2	BSO
	Kneisel Quartet	1890-1891
3	BSO	1891-1892
4	Promenade (Pops)	1892
5	BSO
	Kneisel Quartet	1892-1893
6	BSO
	Kneisel Quartet	1893-1894
7	BSO
	Kneisel Quartet	1894-1895
8	BSO	1895-1896
9	Promenade (Pops)	1895-1896
10	BSO	1896-1897
11	BSO	1897-1898
12	Promenade (Pops)	1897-1898
13	BSO	1898-1899
14	BSO	1899-1900
15	Pops	1899-1900
16	BSO	1900-1901
17	BSO	1901-1902
18	Pops	1901-1903
19	BSO	1902-1903
20	BSO	1903-1904
21	BSO	1904-1905
22	Pops	1904-1905
23	BSO	1905-1906
24	BSO	1906-1907
25	BSO	1907-1908
26	BSO	1908-1909
27	BSO
	Pops	1909-1910
28	BSO
	Pops	1910-1911
29	BSO Advertisements	1910-1911
30	BSO
	Pops	1911-1912
31	BSO
	Pops	1912-1913
32	BSO
	Pops	1913-1914
33	BSO
	Pops	1914-1915
34	BSO
	Pops	1915-1916
35	BSO
	Pops	1916-1917
36	BSO
	Pops	1917-1918
37	Karl Muck	1918
38	BSO
	Pops	1918-1919
39	BSO
	Pops	1919-1920
40	BSO Advertisements	1919-1920
41	BSO
	Pops	1920-1921
42	BSO
	Pops	1921-1922
43	BSO
	BSO Advertisements
	Pops Advertisements	1922-1923
44	BSO
	Pops	1922-1924
45	BSO
	Pops	1924
46	BSO
	BSO Advertisements
	Pops Advertisements	1924-1926
47	BSO
	Pops	1925-1926
48	BSO Advertisements
	Pops Advertisements	1926-1927
49	BSO
	Pops	1926-1928
50	BSO	1928
51	BSO
	Pops	1928-1929
52	BSO
	Pops
	U.S. Tour	1929-1930
53	BSO	1930-1931
54	BSO
	Pops	1931-1932
55	BSO
	Pops	1932-1933
56	BSO	1933-1934
57	BSO	1934-1935
58	BSO	1935-1936
59	BSO	1936-1937

VOL	TITLE	DATES
60	Pops
	Tanglewood	1936-1937
61	BSO	1937
62	BSO	1937-1938
63	Pops
	Tanglewood	1938
64	BSO	1938-1939
65	Pops
	Tanglewood	1939
66	BSO	1939-1940
67	Tanglewood	1939-1941
68	BSO
	Pops	1940
69	BSO	1940-1941
70	Tanglewood	1940-1944
71	BSO	1941-1942
72	BSO	1942-1943
73	BSO	1943-1944
74	BSO
	Pops
	Tanglewood	1944-1945
75	BSO
	Pops
	Tanglewood	1945-1946
76	BSO
	Pops
	Tanglewood	1946-1947
77	Tanglewood	1947-1948
78	BSO	1947-1949
79	Tanglewood	1949-1950
80	BSO	1949-1951
81	Tanglewood	1950-1951
82	BSO
	Pops	1951-1952
83	BSO
	Pops	1952-1953
84	Tanglewood	1952-1953
85	BSO	1953-1955
86	Tanglewood	1953-1954
87	Tanglewood	1954-1955
88	BSO
	Pops	1955-1956
89	Tanglewood	1955-1956
90	Tanglewood	1955-1956
91	European Tour	1956
92	European Tour	1956-1957
93	BSO
	Pops	1956-1957
94	Tanglewood	1957
95	BSO	1957-1958
96	BSO
	Pops	1958-1959
97	BSO	1958-1959
98	Tanglewood	1958-1959
99	Tanglewood	1959
100	BSO
	Pops	1959-1960
101	Tanglewood	1959-1960
102	Far Eastern Tour	1959-1960
103	BSO
	Pops	1960-1961
104	Tanglewood	1961
105	BSO
	Pops	1961-1962
106	Tanglewood	1962
107	BSO
	Pops	1962-1963
108	Tanglewood	1963
109	BSO
	Pops	1963-1964
110	Tanglewood	1963-1964
111	BSO
	Pops	1964-1966
112	Tanglewood	1965
113	BSO 85th Anniversary	1965
114	BSO
	Pops	1965-1966
115	Tanglewood	1966
116	BSO
	Pops	1966-1967
117	Tanglewood	1967
118	BSO
	Pops	1967-1968
119	Tanglewood	1968-1969
120	BSO
	Pops	1968-1969
121	Tanglewood	1969
122	BSO
	Pops	1969-1970
123	Tanglewood	1970
124	BSO
	Pops	1970-1971
125	Tanglewood	1971
126	BSO
	Pops	1971-1972
127	European Tour	1970-1971
128	European Tour	1971
129	Tanglewood	1972
130	BSO
	Pops	1972-1973
131	Tanglewood	1973
132	BSO
	Pops	1973-1974

MATERIALS NOT FILMED

SUB-SERIES NUMBER	SUB-SERIES NAME	SUB-SERIES DATES
2	Loose Clippings	1931-1991
3	Oversize Newspapers and Journals	1919-1979

COPYRIGHT STATEMENT

The copyright law of the Unites States - Title 17, United States Code - concerns the making of photocopies or other reproductions of copyrighted material.

Under certain conditions specified in the law, libraries and archives are authorized to furnish a photocopy or other reproduction. One of these specified conditions is that the photocopy or other reproduction is not to be "used for any purpose other than private study, scholarship, or research." If a user makes a request for, or later uses, a photocopy or reproduction for purposes in excess of "fair use," that user may be liable for copyright infringement.

This institution reserves the right to refuse to accept a copy order if, in its judgment, fulfillment of the order would involve violation of the copy-right law.

TECHNICAL DATA

IMAGE PLACEMENT: IA IB IIA IIB

REDUCTION RATIO: 14X

FILM STOCK:

REEL 57

Volume 93

BSO
Pops
1956-1957

PM-MGP 13"x18"
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

200 mm

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

A3

1.0

1.1

1.25

1.4

1.6

1.8

2.0

2.2

2.5

2.8

3.2

3.6

4.0

4.5

5.0

5.6

6.3

7.1

8.0

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.5 mm

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

MULTIPLE EXPOSURES DUE TO COLOR VARIATIONS AND OVERLAPPING MATERIAL

VOLUME 93

BSO
Pops

1956 - 1957

NATIONAL FLAT BACK SCRAP BOOKS

NATIONAL Made in U.S.A.

FULL DUCK COVER, MANILA PAPER

Without Index, Ruling, Paging or Title

NUMBER	THICKNESS	SIZE
1032	72 Leaves	12⅝ × 10¼
1033	72 Leaves	15 × 10
1034	100 Leaves	15 × 10
1036	90 Leaves	16 × 11⅜
1038	150 Leaves	16 × 11⅜
1039	90 Leaves	18 × 13
1041	150 Leaves	18 × 13
1042	150 Leaves	25 × 20

To duplicate this book Order Number indicated by arrow

PORTLAND, ORE.
OREGONIAN
Circ. D. 236,289 - S. 294,216
FEB 9 1956

Concertmaster Wins Term At Berkshire Music Fete

Marlene Majovski, concertmaster of the Portland Junior symphony, Wednesday was announced as winner of the association's most coveted award —a tuition and residence scholarship for next summer to the Berkshire Music center in Tanglewood, Mass. Joan Baker, principal of the oboe section, was named alternate winner.

The award is sponsored by the Boston Symphony orchestra, under whose auspices the Berkshire center carries on a six-week summer session in conjunction with its series of festival concerts.

Last year's winner was Marcia Hansen, the junior orchestra's principal cellist.

Miss Majovski received the Tanglewood scholarship following auditions and interviews with the candidates at Reed college. Dr. R. F. Arragon was chairman of the judging committee, which was composed of Jacob Avshalomov, Mrs. George Leonard, Mrs. A. Gordon Russell, Mrs. Leslie Sherman, Mrs. Claud Farrow, Carl Beecher, Lewis H. Kleinholz, Thomas Wendel and Mrs. Barbara M. Walker.

MARLENE MAJOVSKI
Winner of music scholarship

Miss Majovski is a violin student of Franck Eichenlaub. She has been a member of the Junior Symphony for four years, attends Portland State college, and is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Majovski.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
Circ. D. 526,215 - S. 1,146,860
FEB 9 1956

Music: Copland Premiere

Bostonians Play Revised 'Symphonic Ode'

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Charles Munch conducting. At Carnegie Hall.
Leonore Overture No. 2.....Beethoven
Symphony No. 7.....Sibelius
Symphonic Ode, 1955 (first New York performance).....Copland
Prelude a l'apres-midi d'un faune.....Debussy
Don Juan, Op. 20.....Strauss

By HOWARD TAUBMAN

COMMISSIONED to write a piece for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's current seventy-fifth season, Aaron Copland turned to a work he had written for the orchestra's fiftieth anniversary. "Symphonic Ode," in a revision made twenty-five years after its original composition, had its New York première last night at a Boston Symphony concert conducted by Charles Munch at Carnegie Hall.

•

It is impossible to say whether Mr. Copland chose to do the revision rather than a new piece out of thriftiness or out of admiration of his "Symphonic Ode." The motivation does not matter. If the Boston Symphony and Koussevitzky Music Foundation are satisfied with what they got for their commission, the composer cannot be blamed either for husbanding his resources or for seeking to work over an old composition that has not been performed a great deal.

"Symphonic Ode," which uses a great deal of irregularity of rhythm, gave some conductors difficulty in its earlier version, one recalls. Mr. Copland says that he has notated the score differently and has reduced the size of the orchestra "mainly for practical reasons." It has not been reduced by a lot, judging by the massive sonorities the music calls for and gets.

When it comes to size, this "Symphonic Ode" is a substantial piece. It is in one movement that lasts about twenty minutes, containing five contrasting sections. It is scored with sure-handed resourcefulness; one is certain that it is now saying just what Mr. Copland wants it to say.

Some of the lyrical passages have the character and quality of Mr. Copland's so-called folk-song style. The composer's exegetes insist that he adopted this style in the late Thirties, but here it was in kernel some years earlier. It is these pages, particularly in the middle section of the work, that have the most immediate appeal.

Aaron Copland

These touches of lyricism and the vitality of the rhythmic writing are the things that one cares to remember of this music. Otherwise, it seems somewhat overblown—too big, long and insistent for its content.

Mr. Munch conducted the piece with absorption and the Boston Symphony played for all it is worth, which is all one could ask. Mr. Copland took a bow from a box.

•

Beethoven's "Leonore" Overture No. 2 began the program in brilliant style. Mr. Munch took the coda at so precipitous a pace that one wondered whether the music would founder, but the Boston Symphony players sped along with him, playing cleanly and accurately all the time.

The Sibelius Seventh Symphony got a performance that was spacious and rhapsodic by turns, and the program ended with two of Mr. Munch's specialties, Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun" and Strauss' "Don Juan." It was an evening with something for different tastes.

NEW YORK CITY, N. Y.
POST
Circ. D. 398,982 - S. 274,577
FEB 9 1956

WORDS and MUSIC

By Harriett Johnson

Bostonians Play Sibelius' Seventh

The illustrious Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Charles Munch, has been acquiring a more mellow personality this season, and never has it been more apparent than last night in Carnegie Hall.

Munch at his best is an inspired conductor, and when he combines excitement with the tonal sheen he drew from his ensemble in the Sibelius Seventh Symphony last night, the effect is sumptuous.

The weaving of the many fragments of this symphony—a gigantic canvas in one movement—were caressingly and subtly interwoven into a magnificent whole. Dominating it was a profound overall understanding of the symphony's expressive beauty.

The dynamics and balance emerged with a naturalness that gave the idea that the symphony could never sound any way other than this.

A beautifully integrated performance of the Beethoven Overture to "Leonore," No. 2, which opened the program, was played with exemplary precision and architectural splendor.

Aaron Copland's "Symphonic Ode," which closed the first half of the program, is a revision of the "Ode" Copland wrote 25 years ago for the 50th anniversary of the Boston Symphony. This year the orchestra celebrates its 75th year.

As the composition continues, it grows in impressiveness, and its best section is revealed as the work nears its conclusion and climax. Part of this portion is newly written. For the most part, the work remains as it was, except for some rescoring to present the instruments more gratefully. The orchestral texture has been made richer in places, though the size of the orchestra is slightly smaller.

In general, this "Ode" doesn't impress me as a major example of Copland's creativeness. Its content and movement seem less spontaneous and significant than such compositions as "Appalachian Spring" and "A Lincoln Portrait."

Music Tonight . . .

Philharmonic-Symphony, Dimitri Mitropoulos conducting. Jascha Heifetz, soloist. Carnegie Hall, 8:45. Program repeated tomorrow at 2:30.

Metropolitan Opera: "La Boheme," with Daniele Barioni making his Met debut as Rodolfo. 8:15.

Yi-Kwei Sze, bass-baritone. Town Hall, 8:30.

I Musici. Grace Rainey Rogers Auditorium, Metropolitan Museum of Art. 8:30.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
Circ. D. 653,252 - S. 982,081
FEB 9 1956

At Carnegie Hall:

Munch Offers New Ode

By MILES KASTENDIECK

EACH time this season that the Boston Symphony plays in Carnegie Hall with Charles Munch conducting, he offers another New York composed for orchestra's 75th anniversary. Last night it was Copland's "Symphonic Ode" revised from the piece that he wrote for the Bostonians' 50th celebration.

Though Copland disclaims this Ode as one written to anything, it certainly sounds as though written for an occasion. Its proclamative opening and its continuous heraldry in the brasses suggest that it should be considered in this light. The event need not be designated, but its atmosphere is one of pomp and circumstance.

Should this not be so, the piece would be quite empty of anything but technical resourcefulness in the use of rhythmic buildup. As a study in reiterated rhythms, it has point, though it presents little more than a study. Prolonged beyond a reasonable limit, it finally reaches a somewhat conclusive summing up.

Stunning Job

The big orchestra played it stunningly. If the ears rang with it thereafter, the performance only emphasized a production as staged by the composer as well.

The concert opened with a most convincing interpretation of Beethoven's Leonore Overture, No. 2. This can stand very well on its own even when compared with the more familiar No. 3. In being superbly played, the piece showed off the orchestra as substantiating its newly-found tonal mellowness, noted earlier in the season.

Sibelius's Seventh Symphony sounded a bit mystifying again last night. Munch's interpretation did not persuade this listener as others have done. The remainder of the program included Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun" and Strauss's "Don Juan," staples of the repertory and, so far as performance is concerned, of the Boston Symphony.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
World-Telegram & Sun
Circ. D. 518,809 - Sat. 172,502
FEB 9 1956

Music

Munch and Symphony Sparkle

By LOUIS BIANCOLLI.

Brilliant performances of four classics plus a brilliant performance of a problematic American score marked the Boston Symphony's visit to Carnegie Hall last night.

Conducted by Charles Munch, the concert was one more demonstration of a major principle of American music—that the Boston Symphony is second to none in technical power and tone.

A second principle by now undisputed anywhere was just as forcefully enunciated last night—that Charles Munch, in control and intensity, can match any contender for the country's podium title.

Mr. Munch exhibited this power in music by Beethoven, Strauss, Debussy and Sibelius, achieving some of his most gripping effects in Beethoven's Second "Leonore" overture and Sibelius' Seventh Symphony.

I was also deeply impressed by Mr. Munch's reading of Aaron Copland's "symphonic ode"—freshly revised for the orchestra's 75th birthday season—impressed, I'm afraid, more by the performance than by the music.

Copland first composed this "Ode" for the Boston Symphony's 50th anniversary, and now after a quarter of a century he has seen fit to recondition an old birthday gift for another celebration.

There is obviously a fresher energy and rhythmic lunge to the revised score; also a shrewder economy of texture and volume, and of course the old Copland hallmark of bold intervals.

But it is still rather harsh and arid music, barren of any recognizable poetic content, and concerned mainly with working out intriguing devices of analysis and synthesis.

Which brings us back to Mr. Munch. . . . The score obviously gripped him by its technical and formal challenge, the result being as forceful an exposition of its quality as Mr. Copland is ever likely to get.

I enjoyed Mr. Munch's interpretation of the Sibelius Seventh—the way he gave urgency to the one-movement scheme and flooded the

Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 10,000 Free
FEB 9 1956

Pierre Monteux To Conduct Next Boston Concerts

The Boston Symphony Orchestra currently is playing in Springfield, New London, New York, Philadelphia and Brooklyn this week. When the orchestra returns to Boston next week, Pierre Monteux will be the guest conductor for two weeks.

Mr. Monteux' first concert will be in Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, on Tuesday evening, Feb. 14. The program will consist of the "Festival major; D'Indy's "Istar" Variations and a Suite from the opera "Der Rosenkavalier" by Richard Strauss.

Continued on Page Three

At the Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts on Feb. 17 and 18, Mr. Monteux will conduct the Freed, D'Indy and Strauss works and in addition the young American violinist, David Abel, will make his first appearances at these concerts playing the Violin Concerto in D major by Brahms.

PORTLAND, ORE.
OREGONIAN
Circ. D. 236,289 - S. 294,216
FEB 9 1956

Concertmaster Wins Term At Berkshire Music Fete

Marlene Majovski, concertmaster of the Portland Junior symphony, Wednesday was announced as winner of the association's most coveted award—a tuition and residence scholarship for next summer to the Berkshire Music center in Tanglewood, Mass. Joan Baker, principal of the oboe section, was named alternate winner.

The award is sponsored by the Boston Symphony orchestra, under whose auspices the Berkshire center carries on a six-week summer session in conjunction with its series of festival concerts.

Last year's winner was Marcia Hansen, the junior orchestra's principal cellist.

Miss Majovski received the Tanglewood scholarship following auditions and interviews with the candidates at Reed college. Dr. R. F. Arragon was chairman of the judging committee, which was composed of Jacob Avshalomov, Mrs. George Leonard, Mrs. A. Gordon Russell, Mrs. Leslie Sherman, Mrs. Claud Farrow, Carl Beecher, Lewis H. Kleinholz, Thomas Wendel and Mrs. Barbara M. Walker.

MARLENE MAJOVSKI
Winner of music scholarship

Miss Majovski is a violin student of Franck Eichenlaub. She has been a member of the Junior Symphony for four years, attends Portland State college, and is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Majovski.

NEW YORK CITY, N. Y.
POST
Circ. D. 398,982 - S. 274,577
FEB 9 1956

WORDS and MUSIC

By Harriett Johnson

Bostonians Play Sibelius' Seventh

The illustrious Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Charles Munch, has been acquiring a more mellow personality this season, and never has it been more apparent than last night in Carnegie Hall.

Munch at his best is an inspired conductor, and when he combines excitement with the tonal sheen he drew from his ensemble in the Sibelius Seventh Symphony last night, the effect is sumptuous.

The weaving of the many fragments of this symphony—a gigantic canvas in one movement—were caressingly and subtly interwoven into a magnificent whole. Dominating it was a profound overall understanding of the symphony's expressive beauty.

The dynamics and balance emerged with a naturalness that gave the idea that the symphony could never sound any way other than this.

A beautifully integrated performance of the Beethoven Overture to "Leonore," No. 2, which opened the program, was played with exemplary precision and architectural splendor.

Aaron Copland's "Symphonic Ode," which closed the first half of the program, is a revision of the "Ode" Copland wrote 25 years ago for the 50th anniversary of the Boston Symphony. This year the orchestra celebrates its 75th year.

As the composition continues, it grows in impressiveness, and its best section is revealed as the work nears its conclusion and climax. Part of this portion is newly written. For the most part, the work remains as it was, except for some rescoring to present the instruments more gratefully. The orchestral texture has been made richer in places, though the size of the orchestra is slightly smaller.

In general, this "Ode" doesn't impress me as a major example of Copland's creativeness. Its content and movement seem less spontaneous and significant than such compositions as "Appalachian Spring" and "A Lincoln Portrait."

Music Tonight . . .

Philharmonic-Symphony, Dimitri Mitropoulos conducting. Jascha Heifetz, soloist. Carnegie Hall, 8:45. Program repeated tomorrow at 2:30.

Metropolitan Opera: "La Boheme," with Daniele Barioni making his Met debut as Rodolfo. 8:15.

Yi-Kwei Sze, bass-baritone. Town Hall, 8:30.

I Musici. Grace Rainey Rogers Auditorium, Metropolitan Museum of Art. 8:30.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
World-Telegram & Sun
Circ. D. 518,809 - Sat. 472,502
FEB 9 1956

Music

Munch and Symphony Sparkle

By LOUIS BIANCOLLI.

Brilliant performances of four classics plus a brilliant performance of a problematic American score marked the Boston Symphony's visit to Carnegie Hall last night.

Conducted by Charles Munch, the concert was one more demonstration of a major principle of American music—that the Boston Symphony is second to none in technical power and tone.

A second principle by now undisputed anywhere was just as forcefully enunciated last night—that Charles Munch, in control and intensity, can match any contender for the country's podium title.

Mr. Munch exhibited this power in music by Beethoven, Strauss, Debussy and Sibelius, achieving some of his most gripping effects in Beethoven's Second "Leonore" overture and Sibelius' Seventh Symphony.

I was also deeply impressed by Mr. Munch's reading of Aaron Copland's "symphonic ode"—freshly revised for the orchestra's 75th birthday season—impressed, I'm afraid, more by the performance than by the music.

Copland first composed this "Ode" for the Boston Symphony's 50th anniversary, and now after a quarter of a century he has seen fit to recondition an old birthday gift for another celebration.

There is obviously a fresher energy and rhythmic lunge to the revised score; also a shrewder economy of texture and volume, and of course the old Copland hallmark of bold intervals.

But it is still rather harsh and arid music, barren of any recognizable poetic content, and concerned mainly with working out intriguing devices of analysis and synthesis.

Which brings us back to Mr. Munch. . . . The score obviously gripped him by its technical and formal challenge, the result being as forceful an exposition of its quality as Mr. Copland is ever likely to get.

I enjoyed Mr. Munch's interpretation of the Sibelius Seventh—the way he gave urgency to the one-movement scheme and flooded the ...

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
Circ. D. 526,215 - S. 1,146,860
FEB 9 1956

Music: Copland Premiere

Bostonians Play Revised 'Symphonic Ode'

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Charles Munch conducting. At Carnegie Hall.

Leonore Overture No. 2.....Beethoven
Symphony No. 7.....Sibelius
Symphonic Ode, 1955 (first New York performance).....Copland
Prelude a l'apres-midi d'un faune.....Debussy
Don Juan, Op. 20.....Strauss

By HOWARD TAUBMAN

COMMISSIONED to write a piece for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's current seventy-fifth season, Aaron Copland turned to a work he had written for the orchestra's fiftieth anniversary. "Symphonic Ode," in a revision made twenty-five years after its original composition, had its New York première last night at a Boston Symphony concert conducted by Charles Munch at Carnegie Hall.

•

It is impossible to say whether Mr. Copland chose to do the revision rather than a new piece out of thriftiness or out of admiration of his "Symphonic Ode." The motivation does not matter. If the Boston Symphony and Koussevitzky Music Foundation are satisfied with what they got for their commission, the composer cannot be blamed either for husbanding his resources or for seeking to work over an old composition that has not been performed a great deal.

"Symphonic Ode," which uses a great deal of irregularity of rhythm, gave some conductors difficulty in its earlier version, one recalls. Mr. Copland says that he has notated the score differently and has reduced the size of the orchestra "mainly for practical reasons." It has not been reduced by a lot, judging by the massive sonorities the music calls for and gets.

When it comes to size, this "Symphonic Ode" is a substantial piece. It is in one movement that lasts about twenty minutes containing five contrasting sections. It is scored with sure-handed resourcefulness; one is certain that it is now saying just what Mr. Copland wants it to say.

Some of the lyrical passages have the character and quality of Mr. Copland's so-called folk-song style. The composer's exegetes insist that he adopted this style in the late Thirties, but here it was in kernel some years earlier. It is these pages, particularly in the middle section of the work, that have the most immediate appeal.

These touches of lyricism and the vitality of the rhythmic writing are the things that one cares to remember of this music. Otherwise, it seems somewhat overblown—too big, long and insistent for its content.

Mr. Munch conducted the piece with absorption and the Boston Symphony played for all it is worth, which is all one could ask. Mr. Copland took a bow from a box.

•

Beethoven's "Leonore" Overture No. 2 began the program in brilliant style. Mr. Munch took the coda at so precipitous a pace that one wondered whether the music would founder, but the Boston Symphony players sped along with him, playing cleanly and accurately all the time.

The Sibelius Seventh Symphony got a performance that was spacious and rhapsodic by turns, and the program ended with two of Mr. Munch's specialties, Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun" and Strauss' "Don Juan." It was an evening with something for different tastes.

Aaron Copland

NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
Circ. D. 653,252 - S. 982,081
FEB 9 1956

At Carnegie Hall:

Munch Offers New Ode

By MILES KASTENDIECK

EACH time this season that the Boston Symphony plays in Carnegie Hall with Charles Munch conducting, he offers another New York composed for orchestra's 75th anniversary. Last night it was Copland's "Symphonic Ode" revised from the piece that he wrote for the Bostonians' 50th celebration.

Though Copland disclaims this Ode as one written to anything, it certainly sounds as though written for an occasion. Its proclamative opening and its continuous heraldry in the brasses suggest that it should be considered in this light. The event need not be designated, but the atmosphere is one of circumstance.

Should this piece would b anything b sourceful rhythmi in rei poin m bey finall conclusi

Stunning

The big orchest stunningly. If the with it thereafter, th formance only emphasize production as staged by the composer as well.

The concert opened with a most convincing interpretation of Beethoven's Leonore Overture, No. 2. This can stand very well on its own even when compared with the more familiar No. 3. In being superbly played, the piece showed off the orchestra as substantiating its newly-found tonal mellowness, noted earlier in the season.

Sibelius's Seventh Symphony sounded a bit mystifying again last night. Munch's interpretation did not persuade this listener as others have done. The remainder of the program included Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun" and Strauss's "Don Juan," staples of the repertory and, so far as performance is concerned, of the Boston Symphony.

10¢ LIN
10¢ NES
10¢ MILL

Ledger &
Times
...ss.

...tisan
...is page of Saturday's

Pierre Monteux

Continued from Page One

Overture" by the American composer, Isadore Freed; Brahms' Third Symphony in F major; D'Indy's "Istar" Variations and a Suite from the opera "Der Rosenkavalier" by Richard Strauss.

At the Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts on Feb. 17 and 18, Mr. Monteux will conduct the Freed, D'Indy and Strauss works and in addition the young American violinist, David Abel, will make his first appearances at these concerts playing the Violin Concerto in D major by Brahms.

Transcript
DEDHAM, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 4,294

FEB 10 1956

Music Appreciation Gets Uplift B Dedham Firm's Painted Spectacu

The Boston Envelope Company, one of Dedham's major industries, is again coming to the forefront in publicizing a worthy project through the medium of one of its sponsored outdoor advertising billboards.

This occasion is the 75th anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which epic musical event will be strikingly and artistically highlighted by the painting of the entire orchestra personnel on the board located at the Riverview and Brookline Avenue, Boston. An embossed, large panel cut-out bears the legend, "The Boston Envelope Company Salutes the Boston Symphony."

It is expected that the painting of the billboard will require five days; it will be a striking tribute to culture and the value of good music in a world dedicated to somewhat less aesthetic aims.

Seventy-five years ago, when the Boston Symphony Orchestra began its career, and for nearly forty years afterward, only one wealthy man — its founder, Henry Lee Higginson — made up its deficits. He could foresee its contribution to Boston's and the Bay State's cultural and musical knowledge. Today, the tax situation being what it is, the Boston Symphony Orchestra is relying more and more on industry for help.

The Boston Envelope Company, through its president, William H. Woolner, is an example of this cooperation by industry, in donating its outdoor advertising site to salute the noted musical unit.

The billboard has been maintained by the Dedham firm for some years, as well as the one so well known in this community, and which is utilized for the same unselfish purposes. The Dedham board has publicized the high school activities, the Little League, the Christmas season and artistically welcomed the Rust Craft Greeting Card Company to Dedham.

A sketch of the proposed billboard was approved by Charles Munch, conductor of the orchestra, and Henry B. Cabot, president of the board of trustees, and James C. MacDonald, vice president of Boston Envelope.

INSPECT BILLBOARD MODEL—Charles Munch, left, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Henry B. Cabot, president of the board of trustees, are shown approving a sketch of the outdoor tribute being shown them by James C. MacDonald, vice-president of the Boston Envelope Company, of Dedham.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
NEWS
Circ. D. 142,763

FEB 10 1956

Piston Premiere by Boston Symphony

By J. CARTIN McKINNEY

Big things are always expected when the Boston Symphony Orchestra comes to play its annual concert for the Philadelphia Forum. Last night's visit drew a capacity crowd at the Academy and the boys from Beantown did not disappoint.

Their program was one of unusual value, including three items of established high merit and an important local premiere. Equally important, their performance was what one would expect from an orchestra that is one of the very finest in the world.

Conductor Charles Munch started with a bristling account of Berlioz' "Roman Carnival" Overture. It was a happy choice for the French maestro has a way with Berlioz that few can approach.

There was a marked difference in his approach to Debussy's "Prelude to the Afternoon of a Faun." Here he favored a slower tempo than usual and a deliberate dulling of tone. The music's over-all gain in dimension fully justified the means.

The premiere was Walter Piston's Symphony No. 6, which was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Foundation in honor of this orchestra's 75th Anniversary. Piston, at his creative best, is a most important voice in the contempory scene. In the 6th, he is obviously at his best.

The first movement, slow and shapeless, finds him groping. But in the second, an ingenious whisp of a scherzo, he catches on firmly and spins out a work of truly great stature. The adagio is a thing of quiet beauty and the concluding allegro is expansively written in the vein of the delightful scherzo.

The audience took to the work with great enthusiasm. A healthy sign that the Sixth Symphony will find a permanent place in the repertoire.

Brahms' Fourth Symphony was performed with all of its majestic eloquence to close the evening. It was followed by an extended ovation and the deserving Mr. Munch was recalled for several solo bows.

PHILADELPHIA PA.
BULLETIN

FEB 10 1956

Munch Leads Boston Symphony Concert

By MAX de SCHAUENSEE

The distinguished Boston Symphony Orchestra and Charles Munch, its conductor, were presented to a packed Academy of Music by the Philadelphia Forum last night.

Boston, the hub of American culture, and Colonel Henry Lee Higginson founded this historic group in 1881. Thus, if you stop and add carefully, you will realize that this is the Boston Symphony's 75th season, a fact that is being celebrated in the New England capital.

The Boston Symphony, as everyone knows, is one of the great orchestras of the world. Its precision has always been impressive; it was again last night.

Charles Munch selected a varied program, which included Berlioz, Debussy, Piston, and Brahms. Mr. Munch is a conductor of rugged individuality; his work is always vital in its undeniable impact. He is not a particularly subtle musician; much of the time his work is at a level of very high tension.

The Brahms Fourth, which concluded the program, was a case in point. It was intensely virile and masculine — almost blustering, as conducted by Mr. Munch. This was a far more rough-hewn performance than we are accustomed to, but one had the sneaking suspicion that it was probably nearer the real essence of Brahms' spirit than many performances we hear.

New to Philadelphians was Walter Piston's Symphony No. 6, especially composed for the 75th anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The piece started out like a dozen other rather formless, groping, shapeless compositions of our modern era.

However, many bars had not been played before one realized that this was again something different. The feather-lightness of the beguiling scherzo (leggierissimo vivace); the poignant beauty of the adagio sereno, and the forthright wholesomeness of the final allegro energico all added up to a work which one would be glad to hear again — a work which provides many moments of inner contemplation and solid enjoyment.

Mr. Munch began his program with the boisterous "Carnaval Romain" Overture of Berlioz, where he laid the vigor on a bit thick, and continued with an exquisitely beautiful performance of Debussy's "L'Apres Midi d'un Faun," one of those performances when a piece seems to have been given new life. The work of the flutist, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, a lady of great talent, was especially entrancing as it evoked the languorous beauty of the Pagan afternoon.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER
Circ. D. 647,807 - S. 1,146,321

FEB 10 1956

Boston Symphony Here With Munch as Conductor

By EDWIN H. SCHLOSS

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, currently celebrating its 75th anniversary was heard by a capacity audience in the Academy of Music last night under the sponsorship of the Philadelphia Forum. It was something of an anniversary for the Forum, too, since the concert was the Bostonians' 23d annual visit here under Forum auspices. Charles Munch conducted.

The program, which opened with a gallant performance of Berlioz' "Roman Carnival Overture," and closed with a splendid publication of Brahams' Fourth Symphony, included a work especially commissioned for the anniversary. This was the Sixth Symphony of Walter Piston, given its world premiere in Boston last November and heard here for the first time last night.

HARVARD FACULTY MEMBER

Piston has for years been a sort of unofficial composer laureate of the Boston Symphony. A member of the Harvard Music Faculty, many of his works have been given first performances by the Bostonians under the late Serge Koussevitzky.

The new Anniversary Symphony is scored for a lavishly full orchestra and like most of Piston's music has an interesting profile and individuality of its own. The score is notable for the vigor of its rhythmic patterns, its unhackneyed melodic content, its atonal sonorities and its discriminating use of dissonance.

The first movement is formal in structure but expressive in spirit. The second, a Scherzo, is light handed. In the third movement, a lyric Adagio, the composer seems to be remembering two of the ensemble's chief assets, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, first flute, and Samuel Mayes, first cellist. Mayes, an outstanding young artist, is remembered here as the former tenant of the Philadelphia Orchestra's first cello chair.

FORMER KINCAID PUPIL

Mrs. Dwyer, one of the very few women to achieve such a post in a major orchestra, is a former pupil of the Philadelphia Orchestra's incomparable first flautist, William Kincaid. There were brief incidental solos for flute and cello in the slow movement, admirably played by the aforesaid artists. Mrs. Dwyer shone, too, in what might be called the title role of Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun."

The program concluded with an eloquent performance of one of the supreme masterpieces of the Romantic repertory — Brahms Fourth Symphony. The glorious sweep of the first movement; the elegaic nobility of the Andante; the exuberance of the Scherzo and the architectural grandeur of the concluding Passacaglia were all realized with a splendor worth of a distinguished conductor and an orchestra which ranks high among the country's Big Three.

The audience was highly appreciative at all stages and the maestro and his men were called on for frequent acknowledgments.

Transcript
DEDHAM, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 4,294

FEB 10 1956

Music Appreciation Uplift By Dedham Firm's Pain Spectacular

The Boston Envelope Company, one of Dedham's major industries, is again coming to the forefront in publicizing a worthy project through the medium of one of its sponsored outdoor advertising billboards.

This occasion is the 75th anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which epic musical event will be strikingly and artistically highlighted by the painting of the entire orchestra personnel on the board located at the Riverview and Brookline Avenue, Boston. An embossed, large panel cut-out bears the legend, "The Boston Envelope Company Salutes the Boston Symphony."

It is expected that the painting of the billboard will require five days; it will be a striking tribute to culture and the value of good music in a world dedicated to somewhat less aesthetic aims.

Seventy-five years ago, when the Boston Symphony Orchestra began its career, and for nearly forty years afterward, only one wealthy man — its founder, Henry Lee Higginson — made up its deficits. He could foresee its contribution to Boston's and the Bay State's cultural and musical knowledge. Today, the tax situation being what it is, the Boston Symphony Orchestra is relying more and more on industry for help.

The Boston Envelope Company, through its president, William H. Woolner, is an example of this cooperation by industry, in donating its outdoor advertising site to salute the noted musical unit.

The billboard has been maintained by the Dedham firm for some years, as well as the one so well known in this community, and which is utilized for the same unselfish purposes. The Dedham board has publicized the high school activities, the Little League, the Christmas season and artistically welcomed the Rust Craft Greeting Card Company to Dedham.

A sketch of the proposed billboard was approved by Charles Munch, conductor of the orchestra, and Henry B. Cabot, president of the board of trustees, and James C. MacDonald, vice president of Boston Envelope.

INSPECT BILLBOARD MODEL—Charles Munch, left, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Henry B. Cabot, president of the board of trustees, are shown approving a sketch of the outdoor tribute being shown them by James C. MacDonald, vice-president of the Boston Envelope Company, of Dedham.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
NEWS
Circ. D. 142,763
FEB 10 1956

Piston Premiere by Boston Symphony

By J. CARTIN McKINNEY

Big things are always expected when the Boston Symphony Orchestra comes to play its annual concert for the Philadelphia Forum. Last night's visit drew a capacity crowd at the Academy and the boys from Beantown did not disappoint.

Their program was one of unusual value, including three items of established high merit and an important local premiere. Equally important, their performance was what one would expect from an orchestra that is one of the very finest in the world.

Conductor Charles Munch started with a bristling account of Berlioz' "Roman Carnival" Overture. It was a happy choice for the French maestro has a way with Berlioz that few can approach.

There was a marked difference in his approach to Debussy's "Prelude to the Afternoon of a Faun." Here he favored a slower tempo than usual and a deliberate dulling of tone. The music's over-all gain in dimension fully justified the means.

The premiere was Walter Piston's Symphony No. 6, which was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Foundation in honor of this orchestra's 75th Anniversary. Piston, at his creative best, is a most important voice in the contempory scene. In the 6th, he is obviously at his best.

The first movement, slow and shapeless, finds him groping. But in the second, an ingenious whisp of a scherzo, he catches on firmly and spins out a work of truly great stature. The adagio is a thing of quiet beauty and the concluding allegro is expansively written in the vein of the delightful scherzo.

The audience took to the work with great enthusiasm. A healthy sign that the Sixth Symphony will find a permanent place in the repertoire.

Brahms' Fourth Symphony was performed with all of its majestic eloquence to close the evening. It was followed by an extended ovation and the deserving Mr. Munch was recalled for several solo bows.

PHILADELPHIA PA.
BULLETIN
FEB 10 1956

Munch Leads Boston Symphony Concert

By MAX de SCHAUENSEE

The distinguished Boston Symphony Orchestra and Charles Munch, its conductor, were presented to a packed Academy of Music by the Philadelphia Forum last night.

Boston, the hub of American culture, and Colonel Henry Lee Higginson founded this historic group in 1881. Thus, if you stop and add carefully, you will realize that this is the Boston Symphony's 75th season, a fact that is being celebrated in the New England capital.

The Boston Symphony, as everyone knows, is one of the great orchestras of the world. Its precision has always been impressive; it was again last night.

Charles Munch selected a varied program, which included Berlioz, Debussy, Piston, and Brahms. Mr. Munch is a conductor of rugged individuality; his work is always vital in its undeniable impact. He is not a particularly subtle musician; much of the time his work is at a level of very high tension.

The Brahms Fourth, which concluded the program, was a case in point. It was intensely virile and masculine — almost blustering, as conducted by Mr. Munch. This was a far more rough-hewn performance than we are accustomed to, but one had the sneaking suspicion that it was probably nearer the real essence of Brahms' spirit than many performances we hear.

New to Philadelphians was Walter Piston's Symphony No. 6, especially composed for the 75th anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The piece started out like a dozen other rather formless, groping, shapeless compositions of our modern era.

However, many bars had not been played before one realized that this was again something different. The feather-lightness of the beguiling scherzo (leggierissimo vivace); the poignant beauty of the adagio sereno, and the forthright wholesomeness of the final allegro energico all added up to a work which one would be glad to hear again — a work which provides many moments of inner contemplation and solid enjoyment.

Mr. Munch began his program with the boisterous "Carnaval Romain" Overture of Berlioz, where he laid the vigor on a bit thick, and continued with an exquisitely beautiful performance of Debussy's "L'Apres Midi d'un Faun," one of those performances when a piece seems to have been given new life. The work of the flutist, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, a lady of great talent, was especially entrancing as it evoked the languorous beauty of the Pagan afternoon.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER
Circ. D. 647,807 - S. 1,146,321
FEB 10 1956

Boston Symphony Here With Munch as Conductor

By EDWIN H. SCHLOSS

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, currently celebrating its 75th anniversary was heard by a capacity audience in the Academy of Music last night under the sponsorship of the Philadelphia Forum. It was something of an anniversary for the Forum, too, since the concert was the Bostonians' 23d annual visit here under Forum auspices. Charles Munch conducted.

The program, which opened with a gallant performance of Berlioz' "Roman Carnival Overture," and closed with a splendid publication of Brahams' Fourth Symphony, included a work especially commissioned for the anniversary. This was the Sixth Symphony of Walter Piston, given its world premiere in Boston last November and heard here for the first time last night.

HARVARD FACULTY MEMBER

Piston has for years been a sort of unofficial composer laureate of the Boston Symphony. A member of the Harvard Music Faculty, many of his works have been given first performances by the Bostonians under the late Serge Koussevitzky.

The new Anniversary Symphony is scored for a lavishly full orchestra and like most of Piston's music has an interesting profile and individuality of its own. The score is notable for the vigor of its rhythmic patterns, its unhackneyed melodic content, its atonal sonorities and its discriminating use of dissonance.

The first movement is formal in structure but expressive in spirit. The second, a Scherzo, is light handed. In the third movement, a lyric Adagio, the composer seems to be remembering two of the ensemble's chief assets, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, first flute, and Samuel Mayes, first cellist. Mayes, an outstanding young artist, is remembered here as the former tenant of the Philadelphia Orchestra's first cello chair.

FORMER KINCAID PUPIL

Mrs. Dwyer, one of the very few women to achieve such a post in a major orchestra, is a former pupil of the Philadelphia Orchestra's incomparable first flautist, William Kincaid. There were brief incidental solos for flute and cello in the slow movement, admirably played by the aforesaid artists. Mrs. Dwyer shone, too, in what might be called the title role of Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun."

The program concluded with an eloquent performance of one of the supreme masterpieces of the Romantic repertory — Brahms Fourth Symphony. The glorious sweep of the first movement; the elegaic nobility of the Andante; the exuberance of the Scherzo and the architectural grandeur of the concluding Passacaglia were all realized with a splendor worth of a distinguished conductor and an orchestra which ranks high among the country's Big Three.

The audience was highly appreciative at all stages and the maestro and his men were called on for frequent acknowledgments.

Munch Leads Boston Symphony Concert

By MAX de SCHAUENSEE

The distinguished Boston Symphony Orchestra and Char Munch, its conductor, were p sented to a packed Academy Music by the Philadelphia Fori last night.

Boston, the hub of Americ

VENTURA, CALIF.
STAR-FREE PRESS
Circ. D. 17,088

FEB 11 1956

Munch to Conduct Anniversary Work

NEW YORK — Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony orchestra in a composition which was specially commissioned for he orchestra's 75th anniversary the Monday broadcast at 9:15 m. on NBC. The new work is "Symphonic Ode: 1955" by the American composer Aaron Copland. This work is a re-write of "Symphonic Ode 1930" which was omposed for the 50th anniversary the orchestra.

The remainder of the program ill be devoted to music of Mort. Two works have been selected by conductor Munch: The "Adgio and Fugue for String Orchstra," (K 536) and the "Serede for 13 Wind Instruments in -Flat" (K 361).

Gazzetta
del Massachusetts
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 13,092

FEB 10 1956

THE PHILADELPHIA INQUIRER

Boston Symphony Here With Munch as Conductor

By EDWIN H. SCHLOSS

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, currently celebrating its 75th anniversary was heard by a capacity audience in the Academy of Music last night under the sponsorship of the Philadelphia Forum. It was something of an anniversary for the Forum, too, since the concert was the Bostonians' 23d annual visit here under Forum auspices. Charles Munch conducted.

The program, which opened with a gallant performance of Berlioz' "Roman Carnival Overture," and closed with a splendid publication of Brahams' Fourth Symphony, included a work especially commissioned for the anniversary. This was the Sixth Symphony of Walter Piston, given its world premiere in Boston last November and heard here for the first time last night.

HARVARD FACULTY MEMBER

Piston has for years been a sort of unofficial composer laureate of the Boston Symphony. A member of the Harvard Music Faculty, many of his works have been given first performances by the Bostonians under the late Serge Koussevitzky.

The new Anniversary Symphony is scored for a lavishly full orchestra and like most of Piston's music has an interesting profile and individuality of its own. The score is notable for the vigor of its rhythmic patterns, its unhackneyed meiodic content, its atonal sonorities and its discriminating use of dissonance.

The first movement is formal in structure but expressive in spirit. The second, a Scherzo, is light handed. In the third movement, a lyric Adagio, the composer seems to be remembering two of the ensemble's chief assets, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, first flute, and Samuel Mayes, first cellist. Mayes, an outstanding young artist, is remembered here as the former tenant of the Philadelphia Orchestra's first cello chair.

FORMER KINCAID PUPIL

Mrs. Dwyer, one of the very few women to achieve such a post in a major orchestra, is a former pupil of the Philadelphia Orchestra's incomparable first flautist, William Kincaid. There were brief incidental solos for flute and cello in the slow movement, admirably played by the aforesaid artists. Mrs. Dwyer shone, too, in what might be called the title role of Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun."

The program concluded with an eloquent performance of one of the suprême masterpieces of the Romantic repertory — Brahms Fourth Symphony. The glorious sweep of the first movement; the elegaic nobility of the Andante; the exuberance of the Scherzo and the architectural grandeur of the concluding Passacaglia were all realized with a splendor worth of a distinguished conductor and an orchestra which ranks high among the country's Big Three.

The audience was highly appreciative at all stages and the maestro and his men were called on for frequent acknowledgments.

58 Health Dept. Aids to Be Honored

The city Health Department will honor 58 employes with 25 years or more of service at a luncheon Thursday at the Hotel Sylvania, Dr. James P. Dixon, health commissioner, announced today.

Of the group, 25 are physicians, 15 are nurses, ten are clerical and administrative personnel, seven are laboratory workers and sanitarians and one is a dentist.

Three employes with the longest length of service will set at the head table. They are Marie E. Brunken, a telephone operator, of 2736 Pratt st., with 36 years; Dr. Louis Segal, a communicable disease physician, of 704 S. 52d st., 35 years; and Dr. Francis C. Hartung, a tuberculosis control physician, of 6711 Crittenden st., 34 years.

Sidney B. Dexter, chairman of the Civil Service Commission, will be toastmaster.

France-Amérique

Charles Münch à Carnegie Hall

L'ORCHESTRE symphonique de Boston exécutera deux des oeuvres composées spécialement pour son 75ème anniversaire lors de ses prochains concerts à Carnegie Hall, le mercredi soir, 8 février, et le samedi après-midi, 11 février. M. Charles Münch dirigera les deux concerts.

Le 8 février, M. Münch et l'Orchestre symphonique de Boston joueront pour la première fois à New-York le "Symphonic Ode, 1955" d'Aaron Copland, version nouvelle de l'oeuvre que M. Copland composa il y a 25 ans pour le 50ème anniversaire de l'orchestre, ainsi que des sélections de Beethoven, Sibelius, Debussy et Strauss.

Le 11 février, M. Münch présentera, aussi en première audition à New-York, l' "Elégie à la mémoire de Serge Koussevitzky" d'Howard Hanson, et des oeuvres de Berlioz, Debussy et Brahms.

Ce même programme aura figuré la veille, au soir, à l'affiche de l'Académie de Musique de Brooklyn.

Transcript
DEDHAM, Mass.
Non-Partisan
Circ. 4,294

FEB 10 1956

If This Be Long-Hair

Good music is enjoyed by many Americans, it attracts a substantial, but not overwhelming, audience in our times. Good music is not the serviceable, commercial noise spun usually by the breed known as disc jockeys. Neither is good music constantly assailing our violated ears via radio or television stations.

Therefore, any agency which helps promote or sustain what avenues of good music remain in our high-pressured modern times, is deserving of the commendation of the vanishing Americans who still cling desperately to a few cultural standards. Such a local agency is the Boston Envelope Company which is sponsoring an outdoor advertising spectacular dedicated to the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It will be displayed at the Riverway and Brookline Avenue, Boston, board maintained by the company, and will require five days to finish and will portray a painted facsimile of the entire orchestra and a dedicatory plaque carrying the legend: "The Boston Envelope Company Salutes the Boston Symphony."

This is a full-sized billboard and will probably cause some motorists to lose control of their cars because of the unique nature of the subject, not consistent with the popular outdoor art theme of beer, whiskies, gasoline, automobiles, and cigarettes. We trust that the "happy highway" platoons can take this drop of culture in stride—and gear.

Boston Envelope is well aware of the precarious footing upon which rests the security of the nation's symphony orchestras; several large communities have been forced to abandon theirs due to lack of support. This could be construed as a sad commentary on our times that the juke box and the disc jockey bloom and flourish while the symphonies die on the vine.

The singing golden lads and lassies of the discs fill our ears from dawn 'round the clock 'til the next dawn while the indefatigable D.Js. spin the platters between plugs for some product or other, and are dedicated to the prolongation of the period of adolescence in themselves and their listeners.

It is essential that the maturity of life, as exemplified in one sense by the symphony orchestra, must be recognized and lent an occasional ear amidst the deplorable amount of din-music being peddled daily over the air, and store counters.

Most firms who employ the high-priced art of the outdoor billboard use the repetitious phrase and the over-charged objective in order to persuade users of the other fellow's product to switch to theirs. Dedham's Boston Envelope Company is spending this money with the subtle suggestion that all of us switch to culture and good music by saluting one of the nation's most respected purveyors of this rare product, the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

In an age given over to the glorification of the politician, the military and the athletic—with occasional bows to the hoodlum and the lunatic fringe, an unselfish gesture towards the aesthetic must be recognized and applauded even at the risk of being labeled a long-hair.

Our Women (and their

by OLGA VERZARI PINI

we did, to shake the hand of a ry charming and gallant gentlean 105 years young? Yes, it was the Hawthorne Room of the Parr House at a GOP luncheon where was presented with a bronze eleant as one of the life members the rapidly growing Republican ub of Massachusetts. His name? r. C. W. Thiery and he lives in elmont and he gave us the inforation in no uncertain tone, too. ow, how dare WE slacken our tivities at our "tender" ages?

Speaking of the above luncheon, t. Gov. Whittier, the principal peaker, declared that "our state dustry has never been more prosrous, labor never better paid, and e are getting ready for peacetime xpansion of the atomic age." Sure ounds good!

Active in our midst is Judge incent Mottola who, among other aried interests he heads, is the resident of the New England Conervatory of Music Alumni Associaion. Well-known Italo-Americans orking with him in this organiation are Dr. Salvatore J. Messina, ianist; our own Lillian Tortorela Cook, vocalist, and Mrs. Pasquae Massa. The membership is naionwide and one of its most thrilng yearly gatherings is in June hen we visit the Four Winds Farm n New Hampshire as guests of hat very gracious little lady, Mrs. May Fiske Hoffman. Mr. F. Otis Drayton is the Executive Alumni Secretary and if you have attended the New England Conservatory at ny time and you are interested in joining this very genial group, do contact Judge Mottola or Mr. Drayton at the Conservatory on Huntington avenue.

The grapevine provided us with an interesting tidbit . . . another repercussion from our very successful Salute to Rome . . . As a part of the 75th Anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Sig. Geoffredo Petrassi was commissioned to write a symphony. The world premiere of this work was performed by the Orchestra during Boston's Salute to Rome. The performance was broadcast to Italy.

Through the intercession of Mark Bortman, general chairman of the Salute, Geoffredo Petrassi, president of the International Society of Contemporary Music, will appear at Tanglewood Music Festival and will teach there. The Koussevitsky Music Foundation together with the Boston Symphony Orchestra commissioned this composition dedicated to the memory of Serge and Natalie Koussevitsky. The score is inscribed "Roma 1955."

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has also offered a scholarship to a deserving Roman youth to the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood for next year.

Thus two months after the Salute, we still delight in the news of youngsters coming here from Rome on scholarships and a great composer coming here to teach. Extending and grasping hands acro the water is a step forward in c menting friendships which will u doubtedly contribute in a gre measure to assure a world Peace.

For this, too, Mr. Bortman w salute you!

Nice to know that Marie Di Pes is actively engaged in organizin our ladies interested in cultural er deavors . . . hope your group wi grow by leaps and bounds, Marie . . . and . . . don't forget to pro vide this column with its progress We'd like to help!

Mail material to Olga Pini, Pin Towne House, Wrentham, Mass.

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,872

FEB 11 1956

Monteux to Be Sym

Gus Manos

Pierre Monteux will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for its concerts in Sanders Theater, Cambridge, on Tuesday evening, and in Symphony Hall Friday afternoon, Saturday evening, and Sunday afternoon, Feb. 17, 18, and 19.

Freed F New Violinist on Program

Pierre Monteux, who has been making regular visits to Boston for the past five seasons, will return for several engagements as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra next week. His first concert will be in Sanders Theater, Cambridge, on Tuesday evening.

For this Cambridge concert he will conduct Isadore Freed's Festival Overture (first performance by the Boston Symphony), the Brahms Third Symphony, the "Istar" Variations by D'Indy, and a Suite from Richard Strauss's "Der Rosenkavalier."

David Abel, a young violinist from San Francisco, will make his Boston debut with the orchestra when Mr. Monteux conducts the Symphony Hall concerts on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Feb. 17-18. Mr. Abel will be the soloist in the Brahms Violin Concerto. Mr. Monteux will also conduct the Freed, D'Indy, and Strauss works.

The program for the Sunday afternoon concert in Symphony Hall on Feb. 19 will be the same as that played in Cambridge Tuesday evening.

Isadore Freed composed his Festival Overture at West Stockbridge, Mass., in the summer of 1944. Mr. Monteux conducted the première in November, 1946. with the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra. The composer, a native of Russia, has spent the greater part of his life in Philadelphia. Since 1945 he has been the chairman of the composition and theory departments at the Hartt College of Music in Hartford, Conn.

Hindemith Choral Work

Under the direction of Klaus Liepmann the MIT Choral Society with 42 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform "Apparebit Repentina Dies," a recent work by Paul Hindemith, and "Ein Deutsches Requiem" by Brahms at 8:30 on Monday evening, Feb. 20, in the Kresge Auditorium. Soloists for the Requiem will be Helen Boatwright, soprano, and John Hornor, bass-baritone.

Munch Lead

By MAX de SCHAUENSEE

The distinguished Boston Sy phony Orchestra and Char Munch, its conductor, were p sented to a packed Academy Music by the Philadelphia Fort last night.

Boston, the hub of American land capital.

The Boston Symphony, as everyone knows is one of the great orchestras of the world. Its precision has always been impressive, it was again last night.

Charles Munch selected a varied program, which included Berlioz, Debussy, Piston, and Brahms. Mr. Munch is a conductor of rugged individuality; his work is always vital in its undeniable impact. He is not a particularly subtle musician; much of the time his work is at a level of very high tension.

The Brahms Fourth, which concluded the program, was a case in point. It was intensely virile and masculine — almost blustering, as conducted by Mr. Munch. This was a far more rough-hewn performance than we are accustomed to, but one had the sneaking suspicion that it was probably nearer the real essence of Brahms' spirit than many performances we hear.

New to Philadelphians was positions of our modern era.

However, many bars had not been played before one realized that this was again something different. The feather-lightness of the beguiling scherzo (leggierissimo vivace); the poignant beauty of the adagio sereno, and the forthright wholesomeness of the final allegro energico all added up to a work which one would be glad to hear again — a work which provides many moments of inner contemplation and solid enjoyment.

Mr. Munch began his program with the boisterous "Carnaval Romain" Overture of Berlioz, where he laid the vigor on a bit thick, and continued with an exquisitely beautiful performance of Debussy's "L'Apres Midi d'un Faun," one of those performances when a piece seems to have been given new life. The work of the flutist, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, a lady of great talent, was especially entrancing as it evoked the languorous beauty of the Pagan afternoon.

VENTURA, CALIF.
STAR-FREE PRESS
Circ. D. 17,088

FEB 11 1956

Munch to Conduct Anniversary Work

NEW YORK — Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony orchestra in a composition which was specially commissioned for the orchestra's 75th anniversary on the Monday broadcast at 9:15 p.m. on NBC. The new work is "Symphonic Ode: 1955" by the American composer Aaron Copland. This work is a re-write of "Symphonic Ode 1930" which was composed for the 50th anniversary of the orchestra.

The remainder of the program will be devoted to music of Mozart. Two works have been selected by conductor Munch: The "Adagio and Fugue for String Orchestra," (K 536) and the "Serenade for 13 Wind Instruments in E-Flat" (K 361).

Gazzetta
del Massachusetts
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 13,092

FEB 10 1956

Our Women In the News
(and their friends)

by OLGA VERZARI PINI

we did, to shake the hand of a ry charming and gallant gentlean 105 years young? Yes, it was the Hawthorne Room of the Parr House at a GOP luncheon where was presented with a bronze eleant as one of the life members the rapidly growing Republican ub of Massachusetts. His name? r. C. W. Thiery and he lives in elmont and he gave us the inforation in no uncertain tone, too. ow, how dare WE slacken our ctivities at our "tender" ages?

Speaking of the above luncheon, t. Gov. Whittier, the principal peaker, declared that "our state ndustry has never been more prosrous, labor never better paid, and e are getting ready for peacetime xpansion of the atomic age." Sure ounds good!

Active in our midst is Judge Vincent Mottola who, among other varied interests he heads, is the president of the New England Conservatory of Music Alumni Association. Well-known Italo-Americans working with him in this organization are Dr. Salvatore J. Messina, pianist; our own Lillian Tortorella Cook, vocalist, and Mrs. Pasquale Massa. The membership is nationwide and one of its most thrilling yearly gatherings is in June when we visit the Four Winds Farm in New Hampshire as guests of that very gracious little lady, Mrs. May Fiske Hoffman. Mr. F. Otis Drayton is the Executive Alumni Secretary and if you have attended the New England Conservatory at any time and you are interested in joining this very genial group, do contact Judge Mottola or Mr. Drayton at the Conservatory on Huntington avenue.

The grapevine provided us with an interesting tidbit . . . another repercussion from our very successful Salute to Rome . . . As a part of the 75th Anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Sig. Geoffredo [redacted] was commissioned to write a symphony. The world premiere of this work was performed by the Orchestra during Boston's Salute to Rome. The performance was broadcast to Italy.

Through the intercession of Mark Bortman, general chairman of the Salute, Geoffredo Petrassi, president of the International Society of Contemporary Music, will appear at Tanglewood Music Festival and will teach there. The Koussevitsky Music Foundation together with the Boston Symphony Orchestra commissioned this composition dedicated to the memory of Serge and Natalie Koussevitsky. The score is inscribed "Roma 1955."

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has also offered a scholarship to a deserving Roman youth to the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood for next year.

Thus two months after the Salute, we still delight in the news of youngsters coming here from Rome on scholarships and a great composer coming here to teach. Ex- tending and grasping hands acro the water is a step forward in c menting friendships which will u doubtedly contribute in a gre measure to assure a world Peace.

For this, too, Mr. Bortman w salute you!

Nice to know that Marie Di Pes is actively engaged in organizin our ladies interested in cultural er deavors . . . hope your group wi grow by leaps and bounds, Marie . . . and . . . don't forget to pro vide this column with its progress We'd like to help!

Mail material to Olga Pini, Pin Towne House, Wrentham, Mass.

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,872

FEB 11 1956

Monteux to Be Symphony Guest

Gus Manos

Pierre Monteux will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for its concerts in Sanders Theater, Cambridge, on Tuesday evening, and in Symphony Hall Friday afternoon, Saturday evening, and Sunday afternoon, Feb. 17, 18, and 19.

Freed Festival Overture, New Violinist on Program

Pierre Monteux, who has been making regular visits to Boston for the past five seasons, will return for several engagements as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra next week. His first ~~concert~~ will be in Sanders Theater, Cambridge, on Tuesday evening.

For this Cambridge concert he will conduct Isadore Freed's Festival Overture (first performance by the Boston Symphony), the Brahms Third Symphony, the "Istar" Variations by D'Indy, and a Suite from Richard Strauss's "Der Rosenkavalier."

David Abel, a young violinist from San Francisco, will make his Boston debut with the orchestra when Mr. Monteux conducts the Symphony Hall concerts on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Feb. 17-18. Mr. Abel will be the soloist in the Brahms Violin Concerto. Mr. Monteux will also conduct the Freed, D'Indy, and Strauss works.

The program for the Sunday afternoon concert in Symphony Hall on Feb. 19 will be the same as that played in Cambridge Tuesday evening.

Isadore Freed composed his Festival Overture at West Stockbridge, Mass., in the summer of 1944. Mr. Monteux conducted the première in November, 1946, with the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra. The composer, a native of Russia, has spent the greater part of his life in Philadelphia. Since 1945 he has been the chairman of the composition and theory departments at the Hartt College of Music in Hartford, Conn.

Hindemith Choral Work

Under the direction of Klaus Liepmann the MIT Choral Society with 42 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform "Apparebit Repentina Dies," a recent work by Paul Hindemith, and "Ein Deutsches Requiem" by Brahms at 8:30 on Monday evening, Feb. 20, in the Kresge Auditorium. Soloists for the Requiem will be Helen Boatwright, soprano, and John Hornor, bass-baritone.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

58 Health Dept. Aids to Be Honored

The city Health Department will honor 58 employes with 25 years or more of service at a luncheon Thursday at the Hotel Sylvania, Dr. James P. Dixon, health commissioner, announced today.

Of the group, 25 are physicians, 15 are nurses, ten are clerical and administrative personnel, seven are laboratory workers and sanitarians and one is a dentist.

Three employes with the longest length of service will set at the head table. They are Marie E. Brunken, a telephone operator, of 2736 Pratt st., with 36 years; Dr. Louis Segal, a communicable disease physician, of 704 S. 52d st., 35 years; and Dr. Francis C. Hartung, a tuberculosis control physician, of 6711 Crittenden st., 34 years.

Sidney B. Dexter, chairman of the Civil Service Commission, will be toastmaster.

France-Amérique

Charles Münch à Carnegie Hall

L'ORCHESTRE symphonique de Boston exécutera deux des oeuvres composées spécialement pour son 75ème anniversaire lors de ses prochains concerts à Carnegie Hall, le mercredi soir, 8 février, et le samedi après-midi, 11 février. M. Charles Münch dirigera les deux concerts.

Le 8 février, M. Münch et l'Orchestre symphonique de Boston joueront pour la première fois à New-York le "Symphonic Ode, 1955" d'Aaron Copland, version nouvelle de l'oeuvre que M. Copland composa il y a 25 ans pour le 50ème anniversaire de l'orchestre, ainsi que des sélections de Beethoven, Sibelius, Debussy et Strauss.

Le 11 février, M. Münch présentera, aussi en première audition à New-York, l' "Elégie à la mémoire de Serge Koussevitzky" d'Howard Hanson, et des oeuvres de Berlioz, Debussy et Brahms.

Ce même programme aura figuré la veille, au soir, à l'affiche de l'Académie de Musique de Brooklyn.

Transcript
DEDHAM, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 4,294

FEB 10 1956

If This Be Long-Hair

Good music is enjoyed by many Americans, it attracts a substantial, but not overwhelming, audience in our times. Good music is not the serviceable, commercial noise spun usually by the breed known as disc jockeys. Neither is good music constantly assailing our violated ears via radio or television stations.

Therefore, any agency which helps promote or sustain what avenues of good music remain in our high-pressured modern times, is deserving of the commendation of the vanishing Americans who still cling desperately to a few cultural standards. Such a local agency is the Boston Envelope Company which is sponsoring an outdoor advertising spectacular dedicated to the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It will be displayed at the Riverway and Brookline Avenue, Boston, board maintained by the company, and will require five days to finish and will portray a painted facsimile of the entire orchestra and a dedicatory plaque carrying the legend: "The Boston Envelope Company Salutes the Boston Symphony."

This is a full-sized billboard and will probably cause some motorists to lose control of their cars because of the unique nature of the subject, not consistent with the popular outdoor art theme of beer, whiskies, gasoline, automobiles, and cigarettes. We trust that the "happy highway" platoons can take this drop of culture in stride—and gear.

Boston Envelope is well aware of the precarious footing upon which rests the security of the nation's symphony orchestras; several large communities have been forced to abandon theirs due to lack of support. This could be construed as a sad commentary on our times that the juke box and the disc jockey bloom and flourish while the symphonies die on the vine.

The singing golden lads and lassies of the discs fill our ears from dawn 'round the clock 'til the next dawn while the indefatigable D.Js. spin the platters between plugs for some product or other, and are dedicated to the prolongation of the period of adolescence in themselves and their listeners.

It is essential that the maturity of life

49¢ lb
½'s
RENT
CHASEN FROM SWIFT & CO.
Mr. Quinlan
Dedha
Michael W. Quinlan, 79, of East Gay street, Dedham, a well known retired carriage and auto body craftsman, died sud-
Lt. Gov invited Gues dedication ex

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 106,753

FEB 12 1956

4

Second Thoughts in Music

Boston Symphony Heard To Good Advantage Here

Charles Munch Conducts in Program of Berlioz, Debussy, Piston and Brahms; Organists' Guild Holds Meeting; New Recordings Noted

By WILLARD M. CLARK

The Springfield Community Concert Association, sponsored by the Springfield Junior League, has brought the Boston Symphony Orchestra to the Auditorium many times. We were glad to hear it again last week, for this great orchestra and its fine conductor Charles Munch, who has stamped the orchestra with his own personality, have seldom appeared to better advantage.

It was a stormy evening, but the audience was of good size and enthusiastic. The Boston orchestra had changed to a great extent since the death of Serge Koussevitzky, its director for a quarter of a century. Under the Russian conductor the orchestra became a brilliant instrument capable of responding to the almost inhuman demands of its conductor. There was discipline of the most rigid sort and a precision of ensemble not equalled by any other orchestra in the country.

Munch's Orchestra

Things are different today. The Munch personality seems to have embraced the orchestra. One senses a greater feeling of relaxation, a desire to make known both the beauty and spirit of the music being performed. There is less the emphasis on technical virtuosity and more on music making. Mr. Munch can, and does, summon great masses of tone and he can build up a magnificent crescendo, but when he does it is all within the framework, not for show purposes.

We had many examples of this new emphasis in the concert last week. It opened with a rousing performance of the overture "The Roman Carnival" by Berlioz. Mr. Munch has a deep regard for the music of this great craftsman and he interprets it with unequalled authority. The Debussy "Afternoon of a Faun" revealed yet another facet of the Munch art. This performance was a tonal painting of many colors as seen through the eyes of an extremely sensitive musician. How fortunate the orchestra is to have so fine a flutist as Doriot Anthony. Mr. Munch called upon her twice to share the applause following her exquisite playing in the Debussy opus.

This year marks the 75th anniversary of the orchestra. As part of its observance, a number of works have been commissioned. At its concert at Smith College, we heard a Milhaud symphony. In Springfield the orchestra played an American work, the sixth symphony by Walter Piston. It has been our contention that commissioned works and inspiration do not necessarily go hand in hand. One has only to listen to some of the recorded works commissioned by the Louisville orchestra to come to such a conclusion.

Melody Stressed

However, few composers know the Boston orchestra more intimately than Walter Piston. The works of the Harvard composer have been introduced several times by it. Thus, writing for the orchestra he knew its characteristics, its virtuosity and its resources. In the sixth symphony he has made use of all its facets. The inner movements of this symphony are the most rewarding. The fast, lightsome Scherzo is made for the virtuosi and it has a humor that caused audience chuckles. The Adagio reveals that Mr. Piston has not forgotten, and is not ashamed to make use of melody, a disease which seems to have afflicted many modern composers.

There are several lovely passages for solo cello and the entire movement has a sort of mysterious beauty. The final movement calls for masses of tone piled one upon the other. It provides a display of orchestral power and virtuosity worthy of Tchaikowsky. One may also add that no matter how great the voices, the texture of the music was always wonderfully clear.

The program concluded with a rugged performance of the fourth symphony of Brahms. By rugged we mean a performance which had a continuing onward surge and rhythmic drive. It was a richly detailed performance, clear and forthright with just enough of the romanticism which is inherent in practically any work by Brahms.

Springfield Chapter A.A.G.O.

The Springfield Chapter of the American Guild of orgainsts held a recent meeting in St. Michael's Cathedral where those present had the opportunity to hear the magnificent organ built by Casavant Freres. Cathedral organist George Hart was host.

There was a recital of the test pieces for the 1956 Associateship and Fellowship examinations. These are the pieces which candidates will be required to have ready. Springfield is fortunate in having several extremely competent organists in its churches and three of them undertook these test pieces, each playing two of them. LeRoy Hanson, minister of music at Hope Congregational Church, played a "Choral Song and Fugue" by Wesley-Emery and the "Fugue on G.A.E." by Bach.

Robert Swan, minister of music at South Congregational Church, played "The Celestial Banquet" by Messiaen and "Canzona in B minor" by Bach. George Hart was heard in a "Pastorale" by Philip James and the "Prelude and Fugue in B minor" by Bach.

We found the contemporary works entirely listenable, excellent addition to the repertoire. To hear them played on so fine an instrument and by so competent organists was a pleasant experience.

Mozart-Schumann Program

From Amherst we learn that a program of songs by Mozart and Schumann will be given on the Fine Arts Series of the University of Massachusetts on the 23d. We also learn that that excellent soprano, Dorothy Feldman will be heard in Schumann's "Frauenliebe und Leben." That as far as we are concerned is ample reason to attend this concert.

Some Recent Recordings

Writing of Schumann reminds us that one of the finest performances of his "Dichterliebe" may be heard on Telefunken LGX 66023 sung by the tenor Anton Dermota. Known to us primarily as an opera singer, this fine tenor gives a most sensitive performance of this exquisite cycle. Also on the record are songs from the Schumann song cycles "Mrythen" and "Liederkreis."

Among the new Capitol releases is the Capitol debut of pianist Rudolf Firkusny. He will be remembered as having appeared here with the Little Orchestra Society at the opening of the Community Concerts season. For his debut Firkusny gives us his readings of the Beethoven "Moonlight" and "Pathetique" conatas. The pianist doesn't add much to the many recorded versions of these works, but he does give us scholarly and sensitive interpretations. The piano tone is excellent. One may anticipate future recordings by this very fine pianist. P-8322.

Capitol has recognized the 90th birthday of Jan Sibelius with a reissue of Camilla Wicks' fine performance of the violin concerto. Miss Wicks has identified herself with this concerto and has earned the personal praise of the composer. The reissue is tonally bright and rich. Also on the recording are first rate performances of "The Swan of Tuonela" and "The Return of Lemminkainen" played by the Symphony of Radio-Stockholm, Sixten Ehrling conductor. P-8327.

Another interesting record from Columbia brings us the music of the ballet "The Fall River Legend" by Morton Gould and Leonard Bernstein's provocative music for the ballet "Facsimile." The Gould work is based on the story of Lizzie Borden. It might just as well have been used for any other subject, for it is static and heavy. On the other hand, Bernstein's "Facsimile" first produced by the Ballet Theater in 1946 has striking movement value, vitality and imagination. Both works are handsomely played by the Ballet Theater orchestra conducted by Joseph Levine. Record P-8320.

Another "Don Giovanni"

Three new recordings of Mozart's "Don Giovanni" have resulted from the current Mozart Bicentennial Observance. Capitol-Cetra comes out with one which has much to commend it. Aside from that splendid tenor now at the Met, Cesare Valletti, who is to Don Octtavio and the American soprano Maria Curtis Verna, the cast is unknown to us, but the voices are fresh and the sense of comedy expert, particularly in the case of the Leporello of Italo Tajo.

Giuseppe Taddei, known in this country, is not as suave as some Don Giovannis we know, provide a dignified portrayal, or at least one which is not so overdone as one sometimes hears. The voice of Miss Verna is a very fine one and quite equal to the demands of the music, which are many. There is a fine integration of cast and a unanimity of expression throughout the opera which is conducted in authoritative manner by Max Rudolf of the Met. We find this performance as natural in its humor and tragedy as any we have heard. Excellent notes and translation are included in the three record album.

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 369,241

FEB 12 1956

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 248,071

FEB 12 1956

PIERRE MONTEUX, guest conductor of the Boston Symphony on Tuesday evening in Sanders Theater and on Friday afternoon, Saturday evening and Sunday, Feb. 19, at Symphony Hall.

ADMIRED FRENCHMAN—Pierre Monteux, once the Boston Symphony's regular conductor and now a welcome guest conductor, will head the orchestra for the next two weeks.

Monteux Is Symphony Guest Conductor

Pierre Monteux will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the sixth consecutive season during the next two weeks.

His first concert will be in Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, Tuesday evening, when he will conduct the first Boston Symphony performances of the "Festival Overture" by Isadore Freed; Brahms' Third Symphony; the "Istar" Variations by D'Indy and a Suite from Richard Strauss' "Der Rosenkavalier."

At the Friday afternoon-Saturday evening concerts in Symphony Hall on Feb. 17-18, the young violinist, David Abel, will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the first time, playing the Concerto by Brahms. In addition, Mr. Monteux will conduct the Freed, D'Indy and Strauss works. The program for Boston next Sunday, Feb. 19, will be the same as that played in Cambridge on Tuesday evening.

Isadore Freed composed his "Festival Overture" at West Stockbridge, Massachusetts in the Summer of 1944. Pierre Monteux conducted its first performance in November, 1946, with the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Freed, who was born in Russia, has spent the greater part of his life in Philadelphia. Since 1945 he has been the chairman of the composition and theory departments at Hartt College of Music in Hartford, Conn.

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 106,753

FEB 12 1956

NEW COPLAND WORK BY BOSTON SYMPHONY

Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in another composition which was specially commissioned for the orchestra's 75th anniversary in the broadcast for tomorrow (NBC Radio, 8.15 p. m., EST). The new work is "Symphonic Ode: 1955" by the American composer Aaron Copland. This work is a rewrite of "Symphonic Ode 1930," which was composed for the 50th anniversary of the orchestra.

The remainder of the program will be devoted to music of Mozart. Two works have been selected by conductor Charles Munch, the Adagio and Fugue for String Orchestra (K-546) and the Serenade for 13 Wind Instruments in B flat (K 361). Listeners will have an unusual opportunity to hear the separate string and wind choirs of this orchestra, which many critics have described as the world's greatest.

2/12/56

France-Amérique

A Boston: Le Martyre de Saint-Sébastien

par Georges ZILBERSTEIN

CE fut presque une nouveauté que cette reprise de Saint-Sébastien aux concerts réguliers de l'orchestre symphonique de Boston. En effet, l'oeuvre de Debussy n'avait pas été entendue ici depuis mars 1948, lorsque Charles Münch — alors chef d'orchestre invité, avant d'être nommé définitivement — en donna une interprétation pleine de dignité et de sentiment religieux. Il semble que la seule interprétation précédente à Boston ait été celle que donna Pierre Monteux, en 1924, d'extraits pour orchestre seulement.

Le concert de vendredi dernier donnait la musique écrite par Claude Debussy sur le Mystère de Gabriel d'Annunzio, dont Fokine avait tiré un ballet donné sur la scène du Châtelet, à Paris, en mai 1911.

Les choeurs du Conservatoire de Musique de Nouvelle-Angleterre, préparés par leur chef, Mme Lorna Cooke de Varon, et par Mme Simone Rivière pour la diction française, ont puissamment aidé à faire ressortir la beauté de l'oeuvre. Les solistes étaient Phyllis Curtin, soprano, Mlles Florence Kopleff et Catherine Akos, contraltos, et M. Arnold Moss, récitant.

Il est bon que, de temps en temps, le public américain ait ainsi l'occasion de faire connaissance avec nos grands compositeurs dans des oeuvres qui ne sont pas celles de leur manière habituelle. Car "Le Martyre de Saint-Sébastien" n'a rien de commun ni avec "La Mer", ni avec "Pelléas", par exemple et, pourtant, on y retrouve toute la maîtrise de Debussy, tant dans l'inspiration que dans l'écriture.

Certains passages, comme la fin de la scène III avec ses "choeurs séraphiques" atteignent à la perfection des meilleurs oratorios. Nous avons beaucoup aimé aussi la Scène V (Le Paradis), avec son Hallelujah final qui termine l'oeuvre sur une note d'apothéose religieuse.

Inutile de dire que l'orchestre fut remarquable, surtout les vents sur qui retombe presque toute la responsabilité de la partition, les cordes n'intervenant que pour de courts accents ou trémolos.

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 106,753

FEB 12 1956

Orchestra Tours

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which gave such a stirring concert here Monday night, is going abroad again next fall, after the Tanglewood season ends. Soviet Russia may even be invaded on the tour. About the same time, the Symphony of the Air, which toured the Far East last spring, is planning to visit India, the Near East, Greece and Yugoslavia, while the Los Angeles Symphony will go to the Far East this spring.

The Symphony of the Air is the orchestra assembled for Arturo Toscanini for radio broadcasting, and which refused to disband when the maestro retired and went back to Italy. Since then it has had a succession of conductors. Like the 1955 tour, this year's is to be under State Department auspices, sponsored by the International Exchange Program of the American National Theater and Academy.

Last summer the New York Philharmonic-Symphony gave 27 concerts during a five-week stay in Europe, and the Philadelphia Orchestra also regaled audiences there and called on the Finnish composer Jan Sibelius at his Helsinki home. Moreover, prominent American musicians have had leading parts in European summer festivals in recent years, all of which is an excellent way of fostering international good will.

It is not necessary that these emissaries to foreign lands perform American music, although they do to some extent. The bulk of the great symphonic music was composed by Europeans, and modern patrons there, as well as Americans living abroad, appreciate its interpretation by leading American orchestras, which invariably include a certain number of members with European backgrounds and who are familiar with musical traditions on the continent.

Meanwhile, the announcement that the Berlin Philharmonic will make its second tour of the United States and Canada next fall is a reminder that the process works both ways. Orchestras from Vienna, Amsterdam and London—both the Philharmonia and the Royal Philharmonic—have come to this country within the last year or two, and Sir Thomas Beecham is here now as guest conductor. After the war years when such exchanges were impossible, the practice of mutual acquaintance is all the more palatable.

Even relations with Russia can be sweetened in this fashion. The violinist David Oistrakh and the pianist Emil Gilels have lately established themselves with American audiences as artists of the first rank, while about the same time the American opera "Porgy and Bess" was proving a smash hit in Moscow. Thus, the people of countries whose customs may differ and whose governments may clash, can understand and be drawn closer together through each other's music.

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 106,753

FEB 12 1956

4

Second Thoughts in Music

Boston Symphony Heard To Good Advantage Here

Charles Munch Conducts in Program of Berlioz, Debussy, Piston and Brahms; Organists' Guild Holds Meeting; New Recordings Noted

By WILLARD M. CLARK

The Springfield Community Concert Association, sponsored by the Springfield Junior League, has brought the Boston Symphony Orchestra to the Auditorium many times. We were glad to hear it again last week, for this great orchestra and its fine conductor Charles Munch, who has stamped the orchestra with his own personality, have seldom appeared to better advantage.

It was a stormy evening, but the audience was of good size and enthusiastic. The Boston orchestra had changed to a great extent since the death of Serge Koussevitzky, its director for a quarter of a century. Under the Russian conductor the orchestra became a brilliant instrument capable of responding to the almost inhuman demands of its conductor. There was discipline of the most rigid sort and a precision of ensemble not equalled by any other orchestra in the country.

Munch's Orchestra

Things are different today. The Munch personality seems to have embraced the orchestra. One senses a greater feeling of relaxation, a desire to make known both the beauty and spirit of the music being performed. There is less the emphasis on technical virtuosity and more on music making. Mr. Munch can, and does, summon great masses of tone and he can build up a magnificent crescendo, but when he does it is all within the framework, not for show purposes.

We had many examples of this new emphasis in the concert last week. It opened with a rousing performance of the overture "The Roman Carnival" by Berlioz. Mr. Munch has a deep regard for the music of this great craftsman and he interprets it with unequalled authority. The Debussy "Afternoon of a Faun" revealed yet another facet of the Munch art. This performance was a tonal painting of many colors as seen through the eyes of an extremely sensitive musician. How fortunate the orchestra is to have so fine a flutist as Doriot Anthony. Mr. Munch called upon her twice to share the applause following her exquisite playing in the Debussy opus.

This year marks the 75th anniversary of the orchestra. As part of its observance, a number of works have been commissioned. At its concert at Smith College, we heard a Milhaud symphony. In Springfield the orchestra played an American work, the sixth symphony by Walter Piston. It has been our contention that commissioned works and inspiration do not necessarily go hand in hand. One has only to listen to some of the recorded works commissioned by the Louisville orchestra to come to such a conclusion.

Melody Stressed

However, few composers know the Boston orchestra more intimately than Walter Piston. The works of the Harvard composer have been introduced several times by it. Thus, writing for the orchestra he knew its characteristics, its virtuosity and its resources. In the sixth symphony he has made use of all its facets. The inner movements of this symphony are the most rewarding. The fast, lightsome Scherzo is made for the virtuosi and it has a humor that caused audience chuckles. The Adagio reveals that Mr. Piston has not forgotten, and is not ashamed to make use of melody, a disease which seems to have afflicted many modern composers.

There are several lovely passages for solo cello and the entire movement has a sort of mysterious beauty. The final movement calls for masses of tone piled one upon the other. It provides a display of orchestral power and virtuosity worthy of Tchaikowsky. One may also add that no matter how great the voices, the texture of the music was always wonderfully clear.

The program concluded with a rugged performance of the fourth symphony of Brahms. By rugged we mean a performance which had a continuing onward surge and rhythmic drive. It was a richly detailed performance, clear and forthright with just enough of the romanticism which is inherent in practically any work by Brahms.

Springfield Chapter A.A.G.O.

The Springfield Chapter of the American Guild of orgainsts held a recent meeting in St. Michael's Cathedral where those present had the opportunity to hear the magnificent organ built by Casavant Freres. Cathedral organist George Hart was host.

There was a recital of the test pieces for the 1956 Associateship and Fellowship examinations. These are the pieces which candidates will be required to have ready. Springfield is fortunate in having several extremely competent organists in its churches and three of them undertook these test pieces, each playing two of them. LeRoy Hanson, minister of music at Hope Congregational Church, played a "Choral Song and Fugue" by Wesley-Emery and the "Fugue on G.A.E." by Bach.

Robert Swan, minister of music at South Congregational Church, played "The Celestial Banquet" by Messiaen and "Canzona in B minor" by Bach. George Hart was heard in a "Pastorale" by Philip James and the "Prelude and Fugue in B minor" by Bach.

We found the contemporary works entirely listenable, excellent addition to the repertoire. To hear them played on so fine an instrument and by so competent organists was a pleasant experience.

Mozart-Schumann Program

From Amherst we learn that a program of songs by Mozart and Schumann will be given on the Fine Arts Series of the University of Massachusetts on the 23d. We also learn that that excellent soprano, Dorothy Feldman will be heard in Schumann's "Frauenliebe und Leben." That as far as we are concerned is ample reason to attend this concert.

Some Recent Recordings

Writing of Schumann reminds us that one of the finest performances of his "Dichterliebe" may be heard on Telefunken LGX 66023 sung by the tenor Anton Dermota. Known to us primarily as an opera singer, this fine tenor gives a most sensitive performance of this exquisite cycle. Also on the record are songs from the Schumann song cycles "Mrythen" and "Liederkreis."

Among the new Capitol releases is the Capitol debut of pianist Rudolf Firkusny. He will be remembered as having appeared here with the Little Orchestra Society at the opening of the Community Concerts season. For his debut Firkusny gives us his readings of the Beethoven "Moonlight" and "Pathetique" conatas. The pianist doesn't add much to the many recorded versions of these works, but he does give us scholarly and sensitive interpretations. The piano tone is excellent. One may anticipate future recordings by this very fine pianist. P-8322.

Capitol has recognized the 90th birthday of Jan Sibelius with a reissue of Camilla Wicks' fine performance of the violin concerto. Miss Wicks has identified herself with this concerto and has earned the personal praise of the composer. The reissue is tonally bright and rich. Also on the recording are first rate performances of "The Swan of Tuonela" and "The Return of Lemminkainen" played by the Symphony of Radio-Stockholm, Sixten Ehrling conductor. P-8327.

Another interesting record from Columbia brings us the music of the ballet "The Fall River Legend" by Morton Gould and Leonard Bernstein's provocative music for the ballet "Facsimile." The Gould work is based on the story of Lizzie Borden. It might just as well have been used for any other subject, for it is static and heavy. On the other hand, Bernstein's "Facsimile" first produced by the Ballet Theater in 1946 has striking movement value, vitality and imagination. Both works are handsomely played by the Ballet Theater orchestra conducted by Joseph Levine. Record P-8320.

Another "Don Giovanni"

Three new recordings of Mozart's "Don Giovanni" have resulted from the current Mozart Bicentennial Observance. Capitol-Cetra comes out with one which has much to commend it. Aside from that splendid tenor now at the Met, Cesare Valletti, who is to Don Octtavio and the American soprano Maria Curtis Verna, the cast is unknown to us, but the voices are fresh and the sense of comedy expert, particularly in the case of the Leporello of Italo Tajo.

Giuseppe Taddei, known in this country, is not as suave as some Don Giovannis we know, provide a dignified portrayal, or at least one which is not so overdone as one sometimes hears. The voice of Miss Verna is a very fine one and quite equal to the demands of the music, which are many. There is a fine integration of cast and a unanimity of expression throughout the opera which is conducted in authoritative manner by Max Rudolf of the Met. We find this performance as natural in its humor and tragedy as any we have heard. Excellent notes and translation are included in the three record album.

ADMIRED FRENCHMAN—Pierre Monteux, once the Boston Symphony's regular conductor and now a welcome guest conductor, will head the orchestra for the next two weeks.

Monteux Is Symphony Guest Conductor

Pierre Monteux will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the sixth consecutive season during the next two weeks.

His first concert will be in Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, Tuesday evening, when he will conduct the first Boston Symphony performances of the "Festival Overture" by Isadore Freed; Brahms' Third Symphony; the "Istar" Variations by D'Indy and a Suite from Richard Strauss' "Der Rosenkavalier."

At the Friday afternoon-Saturday evening concerts in Symphony Hall on Feb. 17-18, the young violinist, David Abel, will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the first time, playing the Concerto by Brahms. In addition, Mr. Monteux will conduct the Freed, D'Indy and Strauss works. The program for Boston next Sunday, Feb. 19, will be the same as that played in Cambridge on Tuesday evening.

Isadore Freed composed his "Festival Overture" at West Stockbridge, Massachusetts in the Summer of 1944. Pierre Monteux conducted its first performance in November, 1946, with the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Freed, who was born in Russia, has spent the greater part of his life in Philadelphia. Since 1945 he has been the chairman of the composition and theory departments at Hartt College of Music in Hartford, Conn.

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 106,753

FEB 12 1956

NEW COPLAND WORK BY BOSTON SYMPHONY

Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in another composition which was specially commissioned for the orchestra's 75th anniversary in the broadcast for tomorrow (NBC Radio, 8.15 p. m., EST). The new work is "Symphonic Ode: 1955" by the American composer Aaron Copland. This work is a rewrite of "Symphonic Ode 1930," which was composed for the 50th anniversary of the orchestra.

The remainder of the program will be devoted to music of Mozart. Two works have been selected by conductor Charles Munch, the Adagio and Fugue for String Orchestra (K-546) and the Serenade for 13 Wind Instruments in B flat (K 361). Listeners will have an unusual opportunity to hear the separate string and wind choirs of this orchestra, which many critics have described as the world's greatest.

2/12/56

France-Amérique

A Boston: Le Martyre de Saint-Sébastien

par Georges ZILBERSTEIN

CE fut presque une nouveauté que cette reprise de Saint-Sébastien aux concerts réguliers de l'orchestre symphonique de Boston. En effet, l'oeuvre de Debussy n'avait pas été entendue ici depuis mars 1948, lorsque Charles Münch — alors chef d'orchestre invité, avant d'être nommé définitivement — en donna une interprétation pleine de dignité et de sentiment religieux. Il semble que la seule interprétation précédente à Boston ait été celle que donna Pierre Monteux, en 1924, d'extraits pour orchestre seulement.

Le concert de vendredi dernier donnait la musique écrite par Claude Debussy sur le Mystère de Gabriel d'Annunzio, dont Fokine avait tiré un ballet donné sur la scène du Châtelet, à Paris, en mai 1911.

Les choeurs du Conservatoire de Musique de Nouvelle-Angleterre, préparés par leur chef, Mme Lorna Cooke de Varon, et par Mme Simone Rivière pour la diction française, ont puissamment aidé à faire ressortir la beauté de l'oeuvre. Les solistes étaient Phyllis Curtin, soprano, Mlles Florence Kopleff et Catherine Akos, contraltos, et M. Arnold Moss, récitant.

Il est bon que, de temps en temps, le public américain ait ainsi l'occasion de faire connaissance avec nos grands compositeurs dans des oeuvres qui ne sont pas celles de leur manière habituelle. Car "Le Martyre de Saint-Sébastien" n'a rien de commun ni avec "La Mer", ni avec "Pelléas", par exemple et, pourtant, on y retrouve toute la maîtrise de Debussy, tant dans l'inspiration que dans l'écriture.

Certains passages, comme la fin de la scène III avec ses "choeurs séraphiques" atteignent à la perfection des meilleurs oratorios. Nous avons beaucoup aimé aussi la Scène V (Le Paradis), avec son Hallelujah final qui termine l'oeuvre sur une note d'apothéose religieuse.

Inutile de dire que l'orchestre fut remarquable, surtout les vents sur qui retombe presque toute la responsabilité de la partition, les cordes n'intervenant que pour de courts accents ou trémolos.

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 106,753

FEB 12 1956

Orchestra Tours

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which gave such a stirring concert here Monday night, is going abroad again next fall, after the Tanglewood season ends. Soviet Russia may even be invaded on the tour. About the same time, the Symphony of the Air, which toured the Far East last spring, is planning to visit India, the Near East, Greece and Yugoslavia, while the Los Angeles Symphony will go to the Far East this spring.

The Symphony of the Air is the orchestra assembled for Arturo Toscanini for radio broadcasting, and which refused to disband when the maestro retired and went back to Italy. Since then it has had a succession of conductors. Like the 1955 tour, this year's is to be under State Department auspices, sponsored by the International Exchange Program of the American National Theater and Academy.

Last summer the New York Philharmonic-Symphony gave 27 concerts during a five-week stay in Europe, and the Philadelphia Orchestra also regaled audiences there and called on the Finnish composer Jan Sibelius at his Helsinki home. Moreover, prominent American musicians have had leading parts in European summer festivals in recent years, all of which is an excellent way of fostering international good will.

It is not necessary that these emissaries to foreign lands perform American music, although they do to some extent. The bulk of the great symphonic music was composed by Europeans, and modern patrons there, as well as Americans living abroad, appreciate its interpretation by leading American orchestras, which invariably include a certain number of members with European backgrounds and who are familiar with musical traditions on the continent.

Meanwhile, the announcement that the Berlin Philharmonic will make its second tour of the United States and Canada next fall is a reminder that the process works both ways. Orchestras from Vienna, Amsterdam and London—both the Philharmonia and the Royal Philharmonic—have come to this country within the last year or two, and Sir Thomas Beecham is here now as guest conductor. After the war years when such exchanges were impossible, the practice of mutual acquaintance is all the more palatable.

Even relations with Russia can be sweetened in this fashion. The violinist David Oistrakh and the pianist Emil Gilels have lately established themselves with American audiences as artists of the first rank, while about the same time the American opera "Porgy and Bess" was proving a smash hit in Moscow. Thus, the people of countries whose customs may differ and whose governments may clash, can understand and be drawn closer together through each other's music.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
Circ. D. 526,215 - S. 1,146,860
FEB 12 1956

Music: Boston Symphony

Plays Hanson Elegy to Koussevitzky

By HAROLD C. SCHONBERG

A NEW work was heard at yesterday afternoon's Carnegie Hall concert of the Boston Symphony. It was Howard Hanson's "Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky," composed for the seventy-fifth anniversary of the orchestra on a commission from the Koussevitzky Music Foundation.

•

Mr. Hanson's score, almost twelve minutes in length, is a serious, sincere piece of writing in the composer's familiar romantic vein. It poses no problems, features a constant lyric flow and builds to a big climax. It may not be music of originality, but it does have integrity in its avoidance of cheap or obvious effects.

The composer was in the audience and was twice summoned down the center aisle by Charles Munch, who had conducted the score in a manner that must have made Mr. Hanson extremely happy.

The three other works on the program have long been associated with Mr. Munch and his orchestra. Berlioz' "Roman Carnival" Overture and Debussy's "La Mer" are examples of the French school so well understood by Mr. Munch and his predecessor, M. Koussevitzky. And the Brahms Fourth Symphony is another old favorite.

Probably the members of the Boston Symphony could play these scores with their eyes shut. There was, however, nothing lackadaisical in the approach of conductor or players. All of the details were carefully etched and the music emerged with spontaneity.

Mr. Munch's ideas about Brahms have changed somewhat during the last decade. Today he is a much more convincing interpreter of the German master than he used to be, although he is not an exponent of the strictly Teutonic viewpoint toward the music. His tempos are just a shade on the fast side, and he stresses the elegance of the scores.

Howard Hanson

•

It may astonish some listeners to realize that the Brahms orchestral music can be elegant, but here it is; and the Fourth Symphony yesterday afternoon was sinuous, silken in sound and aristocratically phrased. Mr. Munch made it hold together, too, and with the prevailing smoothness there never was a hint of weakness.

All of which proves that, while there are several million ways of interpreting a score wrongly, there is more than one way to interpret it correctly.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N. Y.
FEB 15 1956

Andrew Schulhof

Andrew Schulhof

Andrew Schulhof will devote his full time to the exclusive world-wide management of his conductors: Ernest Ansermet and Sir Thomas Beecham, giving his individual attention to all phases of their activities. In addition, he is negotiating with a few American and European conductors whose names will be announced later. A new addition to his list is the well-known American conductor, Edwin McArthur.

Ernest Ansermet, who conducted the Boston Symphony for three weeks, will fulfill his commitments in Europe next season, and devote the remainder of his time to the completion of his books on musical subjects.

Sir Thomas Beecham, who is here on a four-month guest conducting tour, will return next season for a short period only as guest conductor of some major orchestras.

Edwin McArthur, whose manifold activities include the musical directorship of the St. Louis Municipal Opera for the 12th consecutive season, as well as the musical directorship of the Harrisburg Symphony for the fifth consecutive season, will continue in these capacities, where his leadership, community spirit and ability are widely acclaimed. He will appear as guest conductor in various cities, here and abroad, and will increase his recording activities.

Ellen Ballon, pianist, has been engaged for orchestral appearances this season and next, in this country and abroad, and is following her Villa-Lobos and Chopin concertos and solo recordings, which now number seven LPs, with additional releases on London FFRR. After an American tour, she will fill engagements in Europe. In her limited free time, Miss Ballon is giving master classes at McGill University in Montreal.

Ernst von Dohnanyi, distinguished composer-pianist, who recently became an American citizen, will continue his activities as composer in residence at Florida State University giving piano master classes and a few selected appearances with orchestras, mostly in performances of his own compositions. After 12 years absence, Dohnanyi will return to Europe this summer, appearing as soloist at festivals.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N. Y.
FEB 15 1956

Copland Premiere, Revival Of Debussy Work in Boston

Boston.—When Aaron Copland was requested to compose for the 75th anniversary of the Boston Symphony, he responded by revising the abstract "Symphonic Ode" that he had been commissioned to write for the 50th anniversary of the orchestra in 1930-31.

The revised version was given its first performances, Charles Munch conducting, at the Symphony Hall concerts of Feb. 3 and 4, the composer in attendance and seemingly quite pleased. The "new" piece is a sort of Copland compendium it seems to me, although he stated that he wrote but a few new measures, and for the most part did not change "the over-all shade and character of the 'Ode' ". He reduced the orchestra somewhat, and effected certain modifications.

Almost Dehumanized

At any rate, the revised "Ode" impresses me as a large, economy-sized work with a lot of mechanistic rhythmic play, a fierce amount of wild dissonance and a sense of academic dryness, without the point, direct progress, or ascertainable style and shape of the best Copland. It seems ponderous and cold, for all the obvious writing skill; professorial, in a way rhetorical, and almost dehumanized.

This program began with two contrasting Mozart works, another step in the local observance of the composer's bicentennial. First came the Adagio and Fugue for strings, in C minor (K. 546), followed by four movements from the Serenade in B flat for 13 wind instruments (K. 361). Each was performed with loving care and superb clarity. The program ended with Brahms's E minor Symphony which, at the first concert, represented the best reading of the work Mr. Munch ever has accomplished here.

The week before (Jan. 27 and 28), Mr. Munch revived Debussy's "The Martyrdom of St. Sebastian", that lapidary but desiccated work which, up to a point, is Debussy's "Parsifal". The performance was quite good, especially in the choral work by the New England Conservatory Chorus, prepared by Lorna Cooke de Varon. Phyllis Curtin, soprano, had some difficulties with the uppermost reaches of her solo part, but at her best she was delicate and lustrous. The speaking part was nobly, dramatically voiced by that excellent actor, Arnold Moss. Florence Kopleff and Catherine Akos, contraltos, were meritorious. Mr. Munch's conducting of this repressed music was full of authority and devotion.

Elman Plays Mendelssohn

The remainder of the program was given to the Mendelssohn Violin Concerto in E minor, of whose solo part Mischa Elman gave an agreeable and highly competent, but somewhat uninteresting account.

The principal activity of the New England Opera Theater in Boston, this season, will have been a week's run, in alternating presentations, of "Cosi fan tutte" (Jan. 29, 31, Feb. 2 and 4), and "Don Giovanni" (Jan. 30, Feb. 1, 3 and 5), at the downtown Majestic Theater. These productions, staged, styled, conducted, and otherwise overseen by the artistic director, Boris Goldovsky, are, of course, the NEOT's contribution to the Mozart 200th anniversary.

"Cosi fan tutte" was new to the repertory, and it was admirably sung. The cast for the first performance was: David Lloyd, Ferrando; Mac Morgan, Guglielmo; Robert Gay, Don Alfonso; Jacqueline Bazinet, Fiordiligi; Nancy Trickey, Dorabella; and Naomi Farr (Boston debut), Despina. There were some changes at later performances. Mr. Goldovsky shortened the running time by cutting a good amount of recitative.

"Don Giovanni" likewise had admirable singers: Adele Addison, as Donna Anna; Kenneth Smith, in the title role; Marjorie McClung, as Donna Elvira; James Joyce, as Leporello; John McCollum, as Don Ottavio; Joan Moynagh, as Zerlina; and Paul Ukena, as Masetto. The part of the Commendatore was divided, the music of the living noble taken by Ernest Eames, that of the Statue, by McHenry Boatwright.

Tebaldi's Debut

Renata Tebaldi made her Boston debut at a concert in the Boston University Celebrity Series at Symphony Hall, Feb. 1, and received the biggest, longest, and noisiest ovation I have heard here in years. All the music was of Italian origin, save airs by Handel and Mozart, and a Turina song, in translation. Singing to Miss Tebaldi must be as natural as breathing and walking, and so must be acting. Her voice, in timbre and management, took me back more than two decades to the late and very great Claudia Muzio.

The two weeks past have seen—or perhaps heard is the better verb—enjoyable performances by the duo-pianists Vronsky and Babin, at the fourth Boston Morning Musicale in the Hotel Statler Ballroom, Jan. 25, and the Robert Shaw Chorale, with orchestra, at Symphony Hall, in the Boston University Celebrity Series, Jan. 29. —Cyrus Durgin

MUSICAL COURIER
NEW YORK CITY
FEB 1956

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Jan. 11, E—Exciting, sparkling performances of Bartok's Music for Strings, Percussion and Celesta and Two Nocturnes ("Nuages" and "Fêtes") by Debussy highlighted an all-orchestral program under Ernest Ansermet. The Bartok work, full of intricate rhythmic patterns and highly demanding in the matter of range and effects for the individual instrumentalist, is truly a tour de force for both orchestra and conductor. Conductor Ansermet, obviously a specialist in this field, evoked a brilliant performance from his orchestral forces. The Debussy Nocturnes received a most subtle and at the same time meticulous reading. Performances of Mozart's Symphony in C Major ("Jupiter," K. 551), which opened the concert, and Ravel's "Bolero," which concluded the evening, were less convincing. However, in both instances the readings were marked by an almost unique orchestral precision, which is, of course, a trademark of the conductor. In the case of the "Bolero," this reviewer felt the performance lacked urgency and drive, qualities which are necessary to avoid the composition's inherent monotony.

G. W.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N. Y.
FEB 15 1956

Ironically enough, it was the second half of this program, consisting of two thrice-familiar tone poems that brought the major satisfactions of this stimulating evening. Mr. Munch and the orchestra were in excellent form throughout (except for some fatigue in the brass) and they gave a spanking performance of Aaron Copland's "Symphonic Ode", heard for the first time here in the new revision that he made in celebration of the Boston Symphony's 75th anniversary.

In 1928-29 Copland composed his original "Symphonic Ode" for the orchestra's 50th anniversary, which fell in 1931. When he was commissioned to write a work for the present anniversary by the Boston Symphony and the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, he decided to revise his original "Ode", leaving "the over-all shape and character" unaltered but notating certain passages differently to simplify performance problems, lowering the opening and closing passages for brasses and strings, slightly reducing the size of the orchestra, and adding some new measures at the start of the 7/4 section near the close. The "Symphonic Ode" remains a curiously uneven work, alternating between passages of heroic proclamation in widely spaced, stingingly dissonant, gleaming chords and patches of jazzy, homespun polyphony that are delightful. It has much sterling Copland in it, but it seems hollow and forced in its more strenuous sections.

Sibelius' Seventh Symphony is a patchy, sentimental, pretentious piece that little deserves the hysterical encomiums that have been showered upon it, but Mr. Munch gave it a devoted performance. The magic sensuousness of the Debussy piece and the gripping drama of the Strauss tone poem were superbly projected.

S.

Munch Conducts Copland Ode

Boston Symphony, Charles Munch conductor, Carnegie Hall, Feb. 8:

Overture, "Leonore" No. 2 ..Beethoven
Symphony No. 7 .....Sibelius
"Symphonic Ode" .....Copland
(First New York performance of revised version)
"Prélude à l'Après-midi d'un Faune" .....Debussy
"Don Juan" .....Strauss

MUSICAL COURIER
NEW YORK CITY
FEB 1956

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Jan. 14, A—Ernest Ansermet, guest conductor of this concert, famed for the clarity of his musical conceptions, bestowed his magnificent artistry upon Bartok's Music for Strings, Percussion and Celesta, which opened the concert. Beyond a doubt Bartok belongs to the ages and is one of the most important of our day's composers. We say "is," for his compositions—and the above work stands in the front row of his creative effort—gain in appeal with every hearing and are exerting their influence in no uncertain way. This work is the ultimate in formal and sound imagination, and the performance, with the orchestra playing at its best for an analytical mind like Mr. Ansermet's, was equal to the composition's stature. It was followed by an equally projective interpretation of Stravinsky's Symphonies for Wind Instruments. This piece is not a symphony in the traditional sense, but a study in coordinated sound for the instruments it is written for, a symphonic study. It is the result of the keen mind of the composer, a cool and rather calculated exploitation of the color possibilities of the wind instruments, juxtaposing them in groups rather than singly, and achieving its contrasts by color rather than dynamics. The exemplary performance won a cordial reception. Franck's D Minor Symphony, brought the concert to a rousing close.

H. W. L.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 27,538
FEB 13 1956

Hanson's Elegy To Koussevitzky Given Premiere

A new short work by Howard Hanson, "Elegy to the Memory of My Friend, Serge Koussevitzky," was given its premiere by the Boston Symphony Orchestra over the weekend. It was played by the orchestra, under the baton of Charles Munch, in Brooklyn Friday evening and at Carnegie Hall in New York the following afternoon.

The Hanson work is one of several commissioned for the BSO's 75th anniversary.

Of the 12-minute score, Francis D. Perkins of the Herald Tribune wrote that it is marked by "emotional sincerity and depth." He went on to say that "It was expression of personal feeling, but of more than that; it seemed to memorialize Dr. Koussevitzky not only as a friend but as a great artist and musical personality; to suggest what he contributed to his orchestra and to American musical life."

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 248,071
FEB 12 1956

OISTRAKH, Russian violinist, right, making his first American recording with Boston Symphony Orchestra, as Charles Munch conducts.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
Circ. D. 526,215 - S. 1,146,860
FEB 12 1956

Music: Boston Symphony

Plays Hanson Elegy to Koussevitzky

By HAROLD C. SCHONBERG

A NEW work was heard at yesterday afternoon's Carnegie Hall concert of the Boston Symphony. It was Howard Hanson's "Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky," composed for the seventy-fifth anniversary of the orchestra on a commission from the Koussevitzky Music Foundation.

Mr. Hanson's score, almost twelve minutes in length, is a serious, sincere piece of writing in the composer's familiar romantic vein. It poses no problems, features a constant lyric flow and builds to a big climax. It may not be music of originality, but it does have integrity in its avoidance of cheap or obvious effects.

The composer was in the audience and was twice summoned down the center aisle by Charles Munch, who had conducted the score in a manner that must have made Mr. Hanson extremely happy.

The three other works on the program have long been associated with Mr. Munch and his orchestra. Berlioz' "Roman Carnival" Overture and Debussy's "La Mer" are examples of the French school so well understood by Mr. Munch and his predecessor, M. Koussevitzky. And the Brahms Fourth Symphony is another old favorite.

Probably the members of the Boston Symphony could play these scores with their eyes shut. There was, however, nothing lackadaisical in the approach of conductor or players. All of the details were carefully etched and the music emerged with spontaneity.

Mr. Munch's ideas about Brahms have changed somewhat during the last decade. Today he is a much more convincing interpreter of the German master than he used to be, although he is not an exponent of the strictly Teutonic viewpoint toward the music. His tempos are just a shade on the fast side, and he stresses the elegance of the scores.

Howard Hanson

It may astonish some listeners to realize that the Brahms orchestral music can be elegant, but here it is; and the Fourth Symphony yesterday afternoon was sinuous, silken in sound and aristocratically phrased. Mr. Munch made it hold together, too, and with the prevailing smoothness there never was a hint of weakness.

All of which proves that, while there are several million ways of interpreting a score wrongly, there is more than one way to interpret it correctly.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N. Y.
FEB 15 1956

Ironically enough, it was the second half of this program, consisting of two thrice-familiar tone poems that brought the major satisfactions of this stimulating evening. Mr. Munch and the orchestra were in excellent form throughout (except for some fatigue in the brass) and they gave a spanking performance of Aaron Copland's "Symphonic Ode", heard for the first time here in the new revision that he made in celebration of the Boston Symphony's 75th anniversary.

In 1928-29 Copland composed his original "Symphonic Ode" for the orchestra's 50th anniversary, which fell in 1931. When he was commissioned to write a work for the present anniversary by the Boston Symphony and the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, he decided to revise his original "Ode", leaving "the over-all shape and character" unaltered but notating certain passages differently to simplify performance problems, lowering the opening and closing passages for brasses and strings, slightly reducing the size of the orchestra, and adding some new measures at the start of the 7/4 section near the close. The "Symphonic Ode" remains a curiously uneven work, alternating between passages of heroic proclamation in widely spaced, stingingly dissonant, gleaming chords and patches of jazzy, homespun polyphony that are delightful. It has much sterling Copland in it, but it seems hollow and forced in its more strenuous sections.

Sibelius' Seventh Symphony is a patchy, sentimental, pretentious piece that little deserves the hysterical encomiums that have been showered upon it, but Mr. Munch gave it a devoted performance. The magic sensuousness of the Debussy piece and the gripping drama of the Strauss tone poem were superbly projected. S.

Munch Conducts Copland Ode

Boston Symphony, Charles Munch conductor. Carnegie Hall, Feb. 8:

Overture, "Leonore" No. 2 ..Beethoven
Symphony No. 7 .....Sibelius
"Symphonic Ode" .....Copland
(First New York performance of revised version)
"Prélude à l'Après-midi d'un Faune" .....Debussy
"Don Juan" .....Strauss

Andrew Schulhof

Andrew Schulhof

Andrew Schulhof will devote his full time to the exclusive world-wide management of his conductors: Ernest Ansermet and Sir Thomas Beecham, giving his individual attention to all phases of their activities. In addition, he is negotiating with a few American and European conductors whose names will be announced later. A new addition to his list is the well-known American conductor, Edwin McArthur.

Ernest Ansermet, who conducted the Boston Symphony for three weeks, will fulfill his commitments in Europe next season, and devote the remainder of his time to the completion of his books on musical subjects.

Sir Thomas Beecham, who is here on a four-month guest conducting tour, will return next season for a short period only as guest conductor of some major orchestras.

Edwin McArthur, whose manifold activities include the musical directorship of the St. Louis Municipal Opera for the 12th consecutive season, as well as the musical directorship of the Harrisburg Symphony for the fifth consecutive season, will continue in these capacities, where his leadership, community spirit and ability are widely acclaimed. He will appear as guest conductor in various cities, here and abroad, and will increase his recording activities.

Ellen Ballon, pianist, has been engaged for orchestral appearances this season and next, in this country and abroad, and is following her Villa-Lobos and Chopin concertos and solo recordings, which now number seven LPs, with additional releases on London FFRR. After an American tour, she will fill engagements in Europe. In her limited free time, Miss Ballon is giving master classes at McGill University in Montreal.

Ernst von Dohnanyi, distinguished composer-pianist, who recently became an American citizen, will continue his activities as composer in residence at Florida State University giving piano master classes and a few selected appearances with orchestras, mostly in performances of his own compositions. After 12 years absence, Dohnanyi will return to Europe this summer, appearing as soloist at festivals.

MUSICAL COURIER
NEW YORK CITY
FEB 1956

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Jan. 14, A—Ernest Ansermet, guest conductor of this concert, famed for the clarity of his musical conceptions, bestowed his magnificent artistry upon Bartok's Music for Strings, Percussion and Celesta, which opened the concert. Beyond a doubt Bartok belongs to the ages and is one of the most important of our day's composers. We say "is," for his compositions—and the above work stands in the front row of his creative effort—gain in appeal with every hearing and are exerting their influence in no uncertain way. This work is the ultimate in formal and sound imagination, and the performance, with the orchestra playing at its best for an analytical mind like Mr. Ansermet's, was equal to the composition's stature. It was followed by an equally projective interpretation of Stravinsky's Symphonies for Wind Instruments. This piece is not a symphony in the traditional sense, but a study in coordinated sound for the instruments it is written for, a symphonic study. It is the result of the keen mind of the composer, a cool and rather calculated exploitation of the color possibilities of the wind instruments, juxtaposing them in groups rather than singly, and achieving its contrasts by color rather than dynamics. The exemplary performance won a cordial reception. Franck's D Minor Symphony brought the concert to a rousing close. H. W. L.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 27,538
FEB 13 1956

Hanson's Elegy To Koussevitzky Given Premiere

A new short work by Howard Hanson, "Elegy in the Memory of My Friend, Serge Koussevitzky," was given its premiere by the Boston Symphony Orchestra over the weekend. It was played by the orchestra, under the baton of Charles Munch, in Brooklyn Friday evening and at Carnegie Hall in New York the following afternoon.

The Hanson work is one of several commissioned for the BSO's 75th anniversary.

Of the 12-minute score, Francis D. Perkins of the Herald Tribune wrote that it is marked by "emotional sincerity and depth." He went on to say that "It was expression of personal feeling, but of more than that; it seemed to memorialize Dr. Koussevitzky not only as a friend but as a great artist and musical personality; to suggest what he contributed to his orchestra and to American musical life."

Copland Premiere, Revival Of Debussy Work in Boston

Boston.—When Aaron Copland was requested to compose for the 75th anniversary of the Boston Symphony, he responded by revising the abstract "Symphonic Ode" that he had been commissioned to write for the 50th anniversary of the orchestra in 1930-31.

The revised version was given its first performances, Charles Munch conducting, at the Symphony Hall concerts of Feb. 3 and 4, the composer in attendance and seemingly quite pleased. The "new" piece is a sort of Copland compendium it seems to me, although he stated that he wrote but a few new measures, and for the most part did not change "the over-all shade and character of the 'Ode' ". He reduced the orchestra somewhat, and effected certain modifications.

Almost Dehumanized

At any rate, the revised "Ode" impresses me as a large, economy-sized work with a lot of mechanistic rhythmic play, a fierce amount of wild dissonance and a sense of academic dryness, without the point, direct progress, or ascertainable style and shape of the best Copland. It seems ponderous and cold, for all the obvious writing skill; professorial, in a way rhetorical, and almost dehumanized.

This program began with two contrasting Mozart works, another step in the local observance of the composer's bicentennial. First came the Adagio and Fugue for strings, in C minor (K. 546), followed by four movements from the Serenade in B flat for 13 wind instruments (K. 361). Each was performed with loving care and superb clarity. The program ended with Brahms's E minor Symphony which, at the first concert, represented the best reading of the work Mr. Munch ever has accomplished here.

The week before (Jan. 27 and 28), Mr. Munch revived Debussy's "The Martyrdom of St. Sebastian", that lapidary but desiccated work which, up to a point, is Debussy's "Parsifal". The performance was quite good, especially in the choral work by the New England Conservatory Chorus, prepared by Lorna Cooke de Varon. Phyllis Curtin, soprano, had some difficulties with the uppermost reaches of her solo part, but at her best she was delicate and lustrous. The speaking part was nobly, dramatically voiced by that excellent actor, Arnold Moss. Florence Kopleff and Catherine Akos, contraltos, were meritorious. Mr. Munch's conducting of this repressed music was full of authority and devotion.

Elman Plays Mendelssohn

The remainder of the program was given to the Mendelssohn Violin Concerto in E minor, of whose solo part Mischa Elman gave an agreeable and highly competent, but somewhat uninteresting account.

The principal activity of the New England Opera Theater in Boston, this season, will have been a week's run, in alternating presentations, of "Cosi fan tutte" (Jan. 29, 31, Feb. 2 and 4), and "Don Giovanni" (Jan. 30, Feb. 1, 3 and 5), at the downtown Majestic Theater. These productions, staged, styled, conducted, and otherwise overseen by the artistic director, Boris Goldovsky, are, of course, the NEOT's contribution to the Mozart 200th anniversary.

"Cosi fan tutte" was new to the repertory, and it was admirably sung. The cast for the first performance was: David Lloyd, Ferrando; Mac Morgan, Guglielmo; Robert Gay, Don Alfonso; Jacqueline Bazinet, Fiordiligi; Nancy Trickey, Dorabella; and Naomi Farr (Boston debut), Despina. There were some changes at later performances. Mr. Goldovsky shortened the running time by cutting a good amount of recitative.

"Don Giovanni" likewise had admirable singers: Adele Addison, as Donna Anna; Kenneth Smith, in the title role; Marjorie McClung, as Donna Elvira; James Joyce, as Leporello; John McCollum, as Don Ottavio; Joan Moynagh, as Zerlina; and Paul Ukena, as Masetto. The part of the Commendatore was divided, the music of the living noble taken by Ernest Eames, that of the Statue, by McHenry Boatwright.

Tebaldi's Debut

Renata Tebaldi made her Boston debut at a concert in the Boston University Celebrity Series at Symphony Hall, Feb. 1, and received the biggest, longest, and noisiest ovation I have heard here in years. All the music was of Italian origin, save airs by Handel and Mozart, and a Turina song, in translation. Singing to Miss Tebaldi must be as natural as breathing and walking, and so must be acting. Her voice, in timbre and management, took me back more than two decades to the late and very great Claudia Muzio.

The two weeks past have seen—or perhaps heard is the better verb—enjoyable performances by the duo-pianists Vronsky and Babin, at the fourth Boston Morning Musicale in the Hotel Statler Ballroom, Jan. 25, and the Robert Shaw Chorale, with orchestra, at Symphony Hall, in the Boston University Celebrity Series, Jan. 29. —Cyrus Durgin

MUSICAL COURIER
NEW YORK CITY
FEB 1956

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Jan. 11, E—Exciting, sparkling performances of Bartok's Music for Strings, Percussion and Celesta and Two Nocturnes ("Nuages" and "Fêtes") by Debussy highlighted an all-orchestral program under Ernest Ansermet. The Bartok work, full of intricate rhythmic patterns and highly demanding in the matter of range and effects for the individual instrumentalist, is truly a tour de force for both orchestra and conductor. Conductor Ansermet, obviously a specialist in this field, evoked a brilliant performance from his orchestral forces. The Debussy Nocturnes received a most subtle and at the same time meticulous reading. Performances of Mozart's Symphony in C Major ("Jupiter," K. 551), which opened the concert, and Ravel's "Bolero," which concluded the evening, were less convincing. However, in both instances the readings were marked by an almost unique orchestral precision, which is, of course, a trademark of the conductor. In the case of the "Bolero," this reviewer felt the performance lacked urgency and drive, qualities which are necessary to avoid the composition's inherent monotony. G. W.

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 248,071
FEB 12 1956

OISTRAKH, Russian violinist, right, making his first American recording with Boston Symphony Orchestra, as Charles Munch conducts.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N. Y.
FEB 15 1956

Letters to the Editor

"Silent Pauses" — Malipiero and the United States

IN the year of grace 1919, in early May, a friend of mine (a member of the Flonzaley Quartet) informed me that on April 4, Henry Rabaud had directed, with the Boston Symphony, my "Pause del silenzio". Therefore, for the first time I arrived in America exactly five months after the end of the first world war. The reception was more than cordial; it was really hearty. In an article which Olin Downes wrote in March, 1948, he said:

"Music has gone that far since Malipiero astonished the modern music world with his orchestral work 'Pause del silenzio' produced about 30 years ago, a work which has virtually disappeared from the repertory, yet a work, one would say, which alone had prepared us for certain of the pages of the symphony heard last night."

SILENCE has made too long a pause. Music between 1914 and 1918, then when war was being waged—music could not raise her voice to cover war's cry, which imposes silence. Peace was, therefore, necessary for my timid craft to sail to a far away land quite unknown to me. Strange that today I cannot recall what the United States represented to me then, before I deluded myself that definitively I had, like a new Christopher Columbus, landed there.

In 1919 the Boston Orchestra had reached its 38th year of activities. From the fatidical 1919 I followed the evolution of the Boston Symphony which, by force of circumstances, followed the taste and the personality of its director. In 1920 Henry Rabaud had been succeeded by Pierre Monteux, who immediately wished to repeat the performance of the 'Pause del silenzio', evident sign that the musical world of austere Boston was not indifferent to it; and the following year another work of mine was produced.

In 1927, finally, Serge Koussevitzky remembered me with an entertaining but not very significant work, "La Cimarosiana." A few years previously Koussevitzky had directed in Paris my "Pause del silenzio," which had had among its interpreters Arturo Toscanini and Wilhelm Furtwangler—strange phenomenon indeed, possibly due to its name, which had swept them away from their customary rectilineal rails.

NOTWITHSTANDING my realization that in the vast American Republic it was somewhat difficult to emerge from the shade, I seemed to be firmly anchored between the two oceans and my illusions were justified by the fact that I continued to receive notices of performances and their programs which I have preserved to this day. I still possess those of the "Pause del silenzio" given in various parts of America by Leopold Stokowski, Frederick Stock, and others.

If all my symphonic works were being executed a little everywhere, it is only the "Pause del silenzio" and the "Ricercari" which satisfy me personally (I refer to symphonic works conceived before 1930).

In 1922 the Schola Cantorum of New York gave the first performance anywhere of my "San Francesco d'Assisi". Kurt Schindler, who conducted it, had been in Europe and asked me to give him the first performance in America. In those days, contemporary music still occupied a post of honor. As to my theater, it showed itself in America with "Sette Canzoni" in Philadelphia and at the Juilliard School of Music in New York with the "False Harlequin".

This hasty recapitulation must be taken for what it is worth: a drop of water pouring in the sea. Nevertheless Klemperer, Kleiber, Ormandy, without any personal acquaintanceship, included me in their programs, while Walter Damrosch, Stokowski, Ossip Gabrilowitsch, Bodanzky, and others sought to know me personally.

Between 1925 and 1935 I can say I lived in the United States because many American musicians came to see me in Asolo: Walter Kramer, Randall Thompson, Tillmann Merritt, Everett Helm, Leo Sowerby, Hans Kindler, Hugo Kortschak and, a short while before the war, Giani Carlo Menotti with Samuel Barber. I do not name those who came to study with me. As a matter of fact, I almost felt I was a citizen of the Republic of the Stars and Stripes, so great was my contact with the musical life beyond the Atlantic.

Every artist can follow the vagaries of his own life through his own works. Accordingly I consider the date of the First Symphony (1933) almost like a birth certificate, or a rebirth, if this could be said. I owe to Serge Koussevitzky all the merit of my resuscitation in Boston in October, 1934, with the First Symphony which he followed up in 1938 with the Second Symphony. However, the closer war was drawing near, the rarer were my appearances in America. Would I dare to add that the ascertaining of that fact alarmed me, not at all for egotistical personal advantages, but because it might mean another great war was in sight. Actually a long parenthesis was starting and silence caused by a tragic pause.

IN 1947 Serge Koussevitzky invited me to write a symphonic work in memory of Natalia Koussevitzky. I dedicated to her my Fourth Symphony, which, notwithstanding the excellent success it achieved in 1948, closed the doors of Symphony Hall in Boston, which 30 years previously had been opened to me by a conductor who was French and a true musician.

War drew away friends who had seemed sincere and death carried away many others. For instance, a void never to be filled remained after the death of Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, incomparable friend of chamber music. Here in Europe her concerts were messages and expressions of a love and devotion to music and creation of fellowship among all nations. The memory of Elizabeth Coolidge remains, forever illuminating a past which can never return.

Contacts become rarer with America, which is now giving life to a school of her own composers. Unfortunately, in all the world inclusive of the United States, little by little contemporary music is in exile or only tolerated in homeopathic doses. Consequently, in all countries the various foreigners alive today find very little space at hand.

WE are no longer in 1918 today and I am no longer in the condition of the inexpert explorer. Today I know the musical power and energy of the United States and I can foresee that the school of composers of that deeply generous nation will develop as it deserves to.

Only one thing I would care to see is that a wreath of flowers should be deposited in my name on the graves of friends who have departed, and that also in my name there be handed a few bunches of forget-me-nots to some friends who spiritually have departed from me.

Perhaps my silence will have no more pauses.

G. Francesco Malipiero
Asolo, Italy

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
FEB 21 1956

Music Critics Pick Martinu Work

Bohuslav Martinu's "Fantaisies Symphoniques," or Symphony No. 6, received the New York Critics' Circle orchestral award for 1955 at a meeting yesterday afternoon. The operatic award went to Sir William Walton's "Troilus and Cressida." No awards were made in the chamber music and choral categories.

The awards were made for works that had first New York performances during 1955. The "Fantaisies Symphoniques," one of the compositions commissioned by the Boston Symphony Orchestra to celebrate its seventy-fifth anniversary, was first played here by the Boston Symphony under Charles Munch at Carnegie Hall on Jan. 12, 1955. The Walton opera was first performed here by the New York City Opera Company at the City Center on Oct. 21. An American work, Walter Piston's Symphony No. 6, also commissioned by the Boston Symphony, was runner-up in the orchestral voting.

ELKHART, IND.
TRUTH
Circ. D. 19,908
FEB 17 1956

Can't 'See' Music Of Aaron Copland

Editor, The Truth:

Not to change the subject pertaining to the interesting "tax" arguments: I would like to hear of the reaction of some of Elkhart's fine musicians in regard to the (musical?) compositions of Aaron Copland, as, for instance, his symphonic ode, as rendered by the Boston Symphony orchestra over the radio.

I may be wrong, but to me the work sounded like horrible dissonances as heard on the inside of a huge boiler factory. (No fault of the orchestra, understand.)

I always thought true music strove to be a universal language, and should be understood and pleasing to the sensitive ear, transferring a definite message from composer to listener.

Now the only effect I felt was that of a demoniac cacaphony resulting from the discordant voices of wild demons held captive in Hades.

To me there was no "rhyme or reason" in any of the movements. If Copland's works are true music, then that of Bach, Mozart, and Beethoven must go by the board; and that of Schumann, Sibelius, and Chopin be relegated to the discard (to coin a word.)

Even those "silly little tunes" of Tschaikowsky and Grieg are preferable to those so-called ultra-modern ear-splitting concoctions, foisted on the unsuspecting public.

This, of course, is only my own valuation, and if there be any virtue in Copland's works, I would appreciate having it explained to me, and to others in like position, through Home Town Slants where all may see it; for perhaps my own musical education has been sadly neglected.

A GROPING INQUIRER.

Post (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 285,839
FEB 18 1956

Music Review

By TUCKER KEISER

The concert this week end by the Boston Symphony Orchestra is an exhilarating event. Pierre Monteux is on the podium; there is an exciting young violinist as soloist, David Abel; and the program is splendidly put together.

Isadore Freed's "Festival Overture" opens the proceedings in a cheerful vein. The work, though somewhat involved in its development, is bright and colorful, replete with appropriate brass flourishes.

Seldom has a Friday afternoon audience greeted a soloist so warmly as they did Abel for his compelling performance of the Brahms Violin Concerto.

It was indeed merited, for Mr. Abel's traversal of the score, under the sympathetic baton of Mr. Monteux, displayed remarkable understanding for one who has just turned 20. Needless to say, the soloist is an accomplished technician, but more important was the expansive line he maintained throughout, even in the vigorous finale, giving a spacious grandeur to the piece.

Special courage was required by Mr. Abel to perform the concerto so soon after Oistrakh's breath-taking performance of the same piece at the Pension Fund concert in December. In some ways Abel's reading was more moving than the Russian's, especially in its poetic thought, and from Monteux we certainly had the best Brahms in years.

The program also included a silken, luminous performance of D'Indy's "Istar Variations" and Strauss' Suite from "Der Rosenkavalier."

MILLERTON, N. Y.
NEWS-REPUBLICAN
Circ. W. 3,617
FEB 16 1956

Boston Symphony Orchestra To Tour Europe

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will tour Europe for five weeks during August and September, 1956, in cooperation with the International Exchange Program of the American National Theatre and Academy. This was announced by Robert W. Dowling, Chairman of the Board of A. N. T. A.

A subsidy from the International Exchange Program will help cover the cost of transportation of the orchestra's 104 men and instruments by air as well as help defray deficits to the orchestra from its concerts abroad. The International Exchange Program is the professional agency appointed by the State Department for the administration of the President's Fund for International Affairs to assist American performing artists to tour abroad.

To secure the balance of funds necessary to cover the expensive undertaking, private contributions have been made to the orchestra and other funds are being solicited. The European tour of the Boston Symphony will take place under the direction of Charles Munch, its Music Director for the past seven years, at the conclusion of the 1956 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., whose dates are July 2 to August 12.

Charles Munch has invited his friend and colleague, Pierre Monteux, once regular conductor of the Boston Symphony, to conduct some of the concerts abroad. The Boston Symphony Orchestra made its only previous tour of Europe in May, 1952, under the auspices of the Congress for Cultural Freedom, when it performed in France, Germany, Belgium, Holland and England. According to present plans the only cities to be revisited are Paris and London: all other places on the proposed itinerary are cities where the orchestra has not previously played.

At the close of the European tour, about September 25, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will return immediately to open its 76th season in Boston on Friday, October 5, 1956, in Symphony Hall, with Mr. Munch beginning his eighth year as its Music Director.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N. Y.
FEB 15 1956

Letters to the Editor

"Silent Pauses" — Malipiero and the United States

IN the year of grace 1919, in early May, a friend of mine (a member of the Flonzaley Quartet) informed me that on April 4, Henry Rabaud had directed, with the Boston Symphony, my "Pause del silenzio". Therefore, for the first time I arrived in America exactly five months after the end of the first world war. The reception was more than cordial; it was really hearty. In an article which Olin Downes wrote in March, 1948, he said:

"Music has gone that far since Malipiero astonished the modern music world with his orchestral work 'Pause del silenzio' produced about 30 years ago, a work which has virtually disappeared from the repertory, yet a work, one would say, which alone had prepared us for certain of the pages of the symphony heard last night."

SILENCE has made too long a pause. Music between 1914 and 1918, then when war was being waged—music could not raise her voice to cover war's cry, which imposes silence. Peace was, therefore, necessary for my timid craft to sail to a far away land quite unknown to me. Strange that today I cannot recall what the United States represented to me then, before I deluded myself that definitively I had, like a new Christopher Columbus, landed there.

In 1919 the Boston Orchestra had reached its 38th year of activities. From the fatidical 1919 I followed the evolution of the Boston Symphony which, by force of circumstances, followed the taste and the personality of its director. In 1920 Henry Rabaud had been succeeded by Pierre Monteux, who immediately wished to repeat the performance of the 'Pause del silenzio', evident sign that the musical world of austere Boston was not indifferent to it; and the following year another work of mine was produced.

In 1927, finally, Serge Koussevitzky remembered me with an entertaining but not very significant work, "La Cimarosiana." A few years previously Koussevitzky had directed in Paris my "Pause del silenzio," which had had among its interpreters Arturo Toscanini and Wilhelm Furtwangler—strange phenomenon indeed, possibly due to its name, which had swept them away from their customary rectilineal rails.

NOTWITHSTANDING my realization that in the vast American Republic it was somewhat difficult to emerge from the shade, I seemed to be firmly anchored between the two oceans and my illusions were justified by the fact that I continued to receive notices of performances and their programs which I have preserved to this day. I still possess those of the "Pause del silenzio" given in various parts of America by Leopold Stokowski, Frederick Stock, and others.

If all my symphonic works were being executed a little everywhere, it is only the "Pause del silenzio" and the "Ricercari" which satisfy me personally (I refer to symphonic works conceived before 1930).

In 1922 the Schola Cantorum of New York gave the first performance anywhere of my "San Francesco d'Assisi". Kurt Schindler, who conducted it, had been in Europe and asked me to give him the first performance in America. In those days, contemporary music still occupied a post of honor. As to my theater, it showed itself in America with "Sette Canzoni" in Philadelphia and at the Juilliard School of Music in New York with the "False Harlequin".

This hasty recapitulation must be taken for what it is worth: a drop of water pouring in the sea. Nevertheless Klemperer, Kleiber, Ormandy, without any personal acquaintanceship, included me in their programs, while Walter Damrosch, Stokowski, Ossip Gabrilowitsch. Bodanzky, and others sought to know me personally.

Between 1925 and 1935 I can say I lived in the United States because many American musicians came to see me in Asolo: Walter Kramer, Randall Thompson, Tillmann Merritt, Everett Helm, Leo Sowerby, Hans Kindler, Hugo Kortschak and, a short while before the war. Giani Carlo Menotti with Samuel Barber. I do not name those who came to study with me. As a matter of fact, I almost felt I was a citizen of the Republic of the Stars and Stripes, so great was my contact with the musical life beyond the Atlantic.

Every artist can follow the vagaries of his own life through his own works. Accordingly I consider the date of the First Symphony (1933) almost like a birth certificate, or a rebirth, if this could be said. I owe to Serge Koussevitzky all the merit of my resuscitation in Boston in October, 1934, with the First Symphony which he followed up in 1938 with the Second Symphony. However, the closer war was drawing near, the rarer were my apperances in America. Would I dare to add that the ascertaining of that fact alarmed me, not at all for egotistical personal advantages, but because it might mean another great war was in sight. Actually a long parenthesis was starting and silence caused by a tragic pause.

IN 1947 Serge Koussevitzky invited me to write a symphonic work in memory of Natalia Koussevitzky. I dedicated to her my Fourth Symphony, which, notwithstanding the excellent success it achieved in 1948, closed the doors of Symphony Hall in Boston, which 30 years previously had been opened to me by a conductor who was French and a true musician.

War drew away friends who had seemed sincere and death carried away many others. For instance, a void never to be filled remained after the death of Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, incomparable friend of chamber music. Here in Europe her concerts were messages and expressions of a love and devotion to music and creation of fellowship among all nations. The memory of Elizabeth Coolidge remains, forever illuminating a past which can never return.

Contacts become rarer with America, which is now giving life to a school of her own composers. Unfortunately, in all the world inclusive of the United States, little by little contemporary music is in exile or only tolerated in homeopathic doses. Consequently, in all countries the various foreigners alive today find very little space at hand.

WE are no longer in 1918 today and I am no longer in the condition of the inexpert explorer. Today I know the musical power and energy of the United States and I can foresee that the school of composers of that deeply generous nation will develop as it deserves to.

Only one thing I would care to see is that a wreath of flowers should be deposited in my name on the graves of friends who have departed, and that also in my name there be handed a few bunches of forget-me-nots to some friends who spiritually have departed from me.

Perhaps my silence will have no more pauses.

G. Francesco Malipiero
Asolo, Italy

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
FEB 21 1956

Music Critics Pick Martinu Work

Bohuslav Martinu's "Fantaisies Symphoniques," or Symphony No. 5, received the New York Critics' Circle orchestral award for 1955 at a meeting yesterday afternoon. The operatic award went to Sir William Walton's "Troilus and Cressida." No awards were made in the chamber music and choral categories.

The awards were made for works that had first New York performances during 1955. The "Fantaisies Symphoniques," one of the compositions commissioned by the Boston Symphony Orchestra to celebrate its seventy-fifth anniversary, was first played here by the Boston Symphony under Charles Munch at Carnegie Hall on Jan. 12, 1955. The Walton opera was first performed here by the New York City Opera Company at the City Center on Oct. 21. An American work, Walter Piston's Symphony No. 6, also commissioned by the Boston Symphony, was runner-up in the orchestral voting.

ELKHART, IND.
TRUTH
Circ. D. 19,908
FEB 17 1956

Can't 'See' Music Of Aaron Copland

Editor, The Truth:

Not to change the subject pertaining to the interesting "tax" arguments: I would like to hear of the reaction of some of Elkhart's fine musicians in regard to the (musical?) compositions of Aaron Copland, as, for instance, his symphonic ode, as rendered by the Boston Symphony orchestra over the radio.

I may be wrong, but to me the work sounded like horrible dissonances as heard on the inside of a huge boiler factory. (No fault of the orchestra, understand.)

I always thought true music strove to be a universal language, and should be understood and pleasing to the sensitive ear, transferring a definite message from composer to listener.

Now the only effect I felt was that of a demoniac cacophony resulting from the discordant voices of wild demons held captive in Hades.

To me there was no "rhyme or reason" in any of the movements. If Copland's works are true music, then that of Bach, Mozart, and Beethoven must go by the board; and that of Schumann, Sibelius, and Chopin be relegated to the discard (to coin a word.)

Even those "silly little tunes" of Tschaikowsky and Grieg are preferable to those so-called ultra-modern ear-splitting concoctions, foisted on the unsuspecting public.

This, of course, is only my own valuation, and if there be any virtue in Copland's works, I would appreciate having it explained to me, and to others in like position, through Home Town Slants where all may see it; for perhaps my own musical education has been sadly neglected.

A GROPING INQUIRER.

Post (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 285,839
FEB 18 1956

Music Review

By TUCKER KEISER

The concert this week end by the Boston Symphony Orchestra is an exhilarating event. Pierre Monteux is on the podium; there is an exciting young violinist as soloist, David Abel; and the program is splendidly put together.

Isadore Freed's "Festival Overture" opens the proceedings in a cheerful vein. The work, though somewhat involved in its development, is bright and colorful, replete with appropriate brass flourishes.

Seldom has a Friday afternoon audience greeted a soloist so warmly as they did Abel for his compelling performance of the Brahms Violin Concerto.

It was indeed merited, for Mr. Abel's traversal of the score, under the sympathetic baton of Mr. Monteux, displayed remarkable understanding for one who has just turned 20. Needless to say, the soloist is an accomplished technician, but more important was the expansive line he maintained throughout, even in the vigorous finale, giving a spacious grandeur to the piece.

Special courage was required by Mr. Abel to perform the concerto so soon after Oistrakh's breath-taking performance of the same piece at the Pension Fund concert in December. In some ways Abel's reading was more moving than the Russian's, especially in its poetic thought, and from Monteux we certainly had the best Brahms in years.

The program also included a silken, luminous performance of D'Indy's "Istar Variations" and Strauss' Suite from "Der Rosenkavalier."

MILWAUKEE, WIS.
NEWS-REPUBLICAN
Circ. W. 3,617
FEB 16 1956

Boston Symphony Orchestra To Tour Europe

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will tour Europe for five weeks during August and September, 1956, in cooperation with the International Exchange Program of the American National Theatre and Academy. This was announced by Robert W. Dowling, Chairman of the Board of A. N. T. A.

A subsidy from the International Exchange Program will help cover the cost of transportation of the orchestra's 104 men and instruments by air as well as help defray deficits to the orchestra from its concerts abroad. The International Exchange Program is the professional agency appointed by the State Department for the administration of the President's Fund for International Affairs to assist American performing artists to tour abroad.

To secure the balance of funds necessary to cover the expensive undertaking, private contributions have been made to the orchestra and other funds are being solicited. The European tour of the Boston Symphony will take place under the direction of Charles Munch, its Music Director for the past seven years, at the conclusion of the 1956 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., whose dates are July 2 to August 12.

Charles Munch has invited his friend and colleague, Pierre Monteux, once regular conductor of the Boston Symphony, to conduct some of the concerts abroad. The Boston Symphony Orchestra made its only previous tour of Europe in May, 1952, under the auspices of the Congress for Cultural Freedom, when it performed in France, Germany, Belgium, Holland and England. According to present plans the only cities to be revisited are Paris and London; all other places on the proposed itinerary are cities where the orchestra has not previously played.

At the close of the European tour, about September 25, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will return immediately to open its 76th season in Boston on Friday, October 5, 1956, in Symphony Hall, with Mr. Munch beginning his eighth year as its Music Director.

CLEVELAND, OHIO
NEWS
Circ. D. 138,887
FEB 17 1956

Heifetz Thrills Again In New Victor Disks

BY ELMORE BACON

With Jascha Heifetz starring with the Cleveland Orchestra in extra concerts Thursday and Saturday of next week at Severance Hall I listened to his recent RCA Victor recording of Bruch and Wieniawski with unusual interest.

And while the Bruch work, the Second Concerto in D Minor, op. 44 is not the familiar No. 1, and lacks some of the latter's smooth, velvety melodic fascination, this work also has its moments. And Heifetz, as may be supposed, takes full advantage of them. He is the real master in all of its challenging features, especially in the final movement.

The Wieniawski D Minor Second Concerto, op. 22, was the one Heifetz played at his American debut a long time ago. He still puts into it all the fire of youth plus the mature understanding, relish and technical perfection.

The fiery virtuosity and sensitive tonal beauty of this work are completely unfolded in this Heifetz performance, which is given an equally perfect disking. In both works the RCA Victor Symphony directed by Izler Solomon provide the excellent background.

There's a clarity and perfection of tonal reproduction in the Victor pressing of the Debussy "La Mer" and the "Nocturnes," the Berkshire Festival Choir joining the Boston Symphony and Monteux in the final feature of the "Nocturnes."

When we hear Mario Lanza singing some of those familiar opera airs and other songs in the Victor disk titled "The Magic Mario," we wondered just how far he would have gone if he had settled on an operatic career instead of making money in radio, TV, music shows and what have you. This Victor disk offers a wide variety of his song artistry.

Szells on Disks

Toward the end of this month the two Epic recordings made here by the Cleveland Orchestra under George Szell are to be released. They offer the Beethoven Fifth and Schubert "Unfinished" symphonies and the Haydn No. 88, one of that master's loveliest works in this form, and the D Major, No. 104, titled "London."

More Mozart

London Records offers two Mozart disks that fit in well with the present anniversary procession. Julius Katchen, a fine pianist is soloist in three Sonatas, the A Major, K331, with the Allegretto movement in the form of a Turkish march; the A Major, K333, and the C Major, K545. Katchen gives to all of these the true Mozartean flavor. Brenton Langbein, a violinist not known to us, but a good one, gives excellent performances of the violin sonatas, Sonatas D Major, K306, and A Major, K526, with Maureen Jones, pianist.

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,872
FEB 18 1956
FEBRUARY

David Abel at the Symphony

Violinist in Brahms Work; Monteux Guest Conductor

By Harold Rogers

Nothing really caught fire at the concert yesterday by the Boston Symphony Orchestra until Pierre Monteux—now here on his sixth annual visit as guest conductor—swung into the waltzes from the "Rosenkavalier" Suite. But the sensuous beauties of these Richard Strauss melodies, heard last on the program, are hardly enough to compensate for an afternoon of much musical promise and little fulfillment.

There was Isadore Freed's "Festival" Overture, offered for the first time at these concerts. If not a memorable piece, it's a serviceable one—an appropriate opening selection with instrumental color, a few French harmonies, and American vigor. Occasionally Mr. Monteux let the brasses get out of hand, as he did from time to time throughout his concert.

* * *

And there was the Boston debut of David Abel, a 20-year-old violinist from the Pacific Coast. It was perhaps unfortunate that he chose the Brahms Violin Concerto, heard in Symphony Hall two months ago in David Oistrakh's superlative performance; but even so, there are some things of a positive nature one can say of Mr. Abel's playing.

He is obviously a young man of talent and of technical gifts. At present, however, his playing impresses one as being emotionally immature. Each note was carefully played, but care is not enough. There must also be controlled abandon; the heart must sing to the stars.

One wonders if Mr. Monteux is not pushing Mr. Abel a little too fast by placing him in front of the Boston Symphony before more has been gained in performances with secondary orchestras. His tone is often too thin and at times tenuous. Though extremely personable, he is still too retiring as a personality to make a forcible communication with his listeners. There is no question, however, that he made a hit with the afternoon audience and enjoyed an ovation. There is something winning about his youthful diffidence.

* * *

After the intermission Mr. Monteux gave us D'Indy's "Istar" Variations, that unusual composition in which the variations, lushly adorned, come first, and the divested statement of the theme, in a striking orchestral tutti, appears near the end.

But it was not until the "Rosenkavalier" waltzes that ignition took place. It was not until those sentimental melodies, singing with the eloquence of a sigh, that one's heart became involved in the music.

It is seldom the listener's fault if his heart remains untouched. It is the man on stage—the soloist or the conductor—whose heart must overflow if he would reach another's heart.

MUSICAL COURIER
NEW YORK CITY
FEB 1956

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
Circ. D. 526,215 - S. 1,146,860
FEB 21 1956

Music Critics Cite Martinu, Walton

Bohuslav Martinu
Best orchestral work

Sir William Walton
Best opera

The New York Music Critics Circle yesterday selected Bohuslav Martinu's "Fantaisies Symphoniques" as the best new orchestral work and Sir William Walton's "Troilus and Cressida" as the best new opera presented here during 1955.

Sir William's opera was performed by the New York City Opera on Oct. 21. It is to be performed again at the City Center during the company's spring season.

The Martinu work, which bears the subtitle Symphony No. 6, was commissioned by the Boston Symphony Orchestra as part of the orchestra's seventy-fifth anniversary celebration. The Boston group first presented it here in Carnegie Hall on Jan. 12 of last year.

This is the second time Mr. Martinu has won the Music Critics Circle award. His "Comedy on the Bridge" was voted the best new opera of 1951.

The Music Critics Circle, which met in the clubroom of The New York Times, voted to make no awards this year for choral or chamber works.

tion. On Jan. 8 pianist Leo Smit scored a satisfying success with the Alexei Haieff Concerto and the Tchaikovsky "Fantasie de Concert" (Op. 56).

■ On Jan. 9 Henry Peltier announced his resignation from the managership of the Dallas Symphony in order to assume an official position with the American Symphony Orchestra League. Mr. Peltier becomes research director for a project, financed by a Rockefeller grant, on the reorganization of the statistical material of the ASOL.

■ The Dallas Lyric Theatre achieved near-professional standards in its Dec. 22 performance of Menotti's Amahl and the Night Visitors. Principals in this well-sung and tastefully mounted staging at Scott Hall were Gloria Brydon, David Jones, R. G. Webb, Richard Leatherwood, and Royce Reaves. On the same program, Artistic Director Samuel Adler featured "As on the Night" by Alan Hovhaness. Marion Morrison was the soprano soloist for this first Dallas performance of the work.

DR. JACK FREDERICK KILPATRICK

BOSTON

■ Some arguments for federal, state, or city subsidy for music can be seen in the figures of last year's operations released by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. In spite of an enormous concert schedule, many out-of-town visits and tours, Pop concerts, Esplanade concerts, and the season at Tanglewood, the orchestra found itself with a $92,000 deficit. Few orchestras, if any ,come proportionately as close to meeting expenses from ticket sales and other orchestral income. The four subscription series in Boston and the series in other cities attract capacity houses. Receipts for the Winter, Pops and Esplanade concerts in Boston, together with record royalties and broadcasting fees, are just over a million dollars. Actually the Esplanade Concerts are free, with voluntary contributions made possible on the grounds.

Salaries, administration costs, travel expenses ,and all the dozens of other little costs mounted up to over a million and a quarter, leaving a deficit of $255,965 in actual figures. The orchestra's annual contributors poured $147,513 into the breach, there was some $6,000 from the Esplanade (a small fraction of the expenses for these concerts), and the orchestra's endowment funds realized $56,828. All this still was not enough and the Boston phase of the operations alone resulted in a $45,000 deficit.

At Tanglewood, it would seem, the orchestra ought at least to break even, what with audiences of 10, 12, and 14 thousands the rule. Ticket sales alone were over $300,000, which might have been expected to cover all expenses and leave something over. But the orchestra also operates the Berkshire Music Center, which means faculty salaries and extra facilities. Tuition costs cover only a small fraction of the added expense. The summer deficit

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 248,071
FEB 19 1956

Munch to Conduct New Langendoen Work

At the second concert by the Zimbler Sinfonietta in Jordan Hall, Boston, on February 29th, Charles Munch will appear as guest conductor in two works performed for the first time anywhere.

Mr. Jacobus Langendoen, well known cellist and composer and for many years a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has written two pieces in title "Siciliana" and "Burlesca" for cello solo and string orchestra. Mr. Munch will conduct this work, and Mr. Samuel Mayes, solo-cellist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Zimbler Sinfonietta, will be the soloist.

The other premiere is a work entitled "Little Suite" and is by the recently discovered Greek composer, Nikos Skalkottas. Mr. Skalkottas unknown in this country (with the exception of a performance of Greek Dances for large orchestra performed by the N. Y. Philharmonic with Mitropolous) died in 1949 at the age of 45. He was a pupil of Schoenberg in Berlin and considered today as one of the geniuses of the century. He has written over one hundred works during the years 1929-1949.

IVON

CLEVELAND, OHIO
NEWS
Circ. D. 138,887
FEB 17 1956

Heifetz Thrills Again In New Victor Disks

BY ELMORE BACON

With Jascha Heifetz starring with the Cleveland Orchestra in extra concerts Thursday and Saturday of next week at Severance Hall I listened to his recent RCA Victor recording of Bruch and Wieniawski with unusual interest.

And while the Bruch work, the Second Concerto in D Minor, op. 44 is not the familiar No. 1, and lacks some of the latter's smooth, velvety melodic fascination, this work also has its moments. And Heifetz, as may be supposed, takes full advantage of them. He is the real master in all of its challenging features, especially in the final movement.

The Wieniawski D Minor Second Concerto, op. 22, was the one Heifetz played at his American debut a long time ago. He still puts into it all the fire of youth plus the mature understanding, relish and technical perfection.

The fiery virtuosity and sensitive tonal beauty of this work are completely unfolded in this Heifetz performance, which is given an equally perfect disking. In both works the RCA Victor Symphony directed by Izler Solomon provide the excellent background.

There's a clarity and perfection of tonal reproduction in the Victor pressing of the Debussy "La Mer" and the "Nocturnes," the Berkshire Festival Choir joining the Boston Symphony and Monteux in the final feature of the "Nocturnes."

When we hear Mario Lanza singing some of those familiar opera airs and other songs in the Victor disk titled "The Magic Mario," we wondered just how far he would have gone if he had settled on an operatic career instead of making money in radio, TV, music shows and what have you. This Victor disk offers a wide variety of his song artistry.

Szells on Disks

Toward the end of this month the two Epic recordings made here by the Cleveland Orchestra under George Szell are to be released. They offer the Beethoven Fifth and Schubert "Unfinished" symphonies and the Haydn No. 88, one of that master's loveliest works in this form, and the D Major, No. 104, titled "London."

More Mozart

London Records offers two Mozart disks that fit in well with the present anniversary procession. Julius Katchen, a fine pianist is soloist in three Sonatas, the A Major, K331, with the Allegretto movement in the form of a Turkish march; the A Major, K333, and the C Major, K545. Katchen gives to all of these the true Mozartean flavor. Brenton Langbein, a violinist not known to us, but a good one, gives excellent performances of the violin sonatas, Sonatas D Major, K306, and A Major, K526, with Maureen Jones, pianist.

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,872
FEB 18 1956
FEBRUARY

David Abel at the Symphony

Violinist in Brahms Work; Monteux Guest Conductor

By Harold Rogers

Nothing really caught fire at the concert yesterday by the Boston Symphony Orchestra until Pierre Monteux—now here on his sixth annual visit as guest conductor—swung into the waltzes from the "Rosenkavalier" Suite. But the sensuous beauties of these Richard Strauss melodies, heard last on the program, are hardly enough to compensate for an afternoon of much musical promise and little fulfillment.

There was Isadore Freed's "Festival" Overture, offered for the first time at these concerts. If not a memorable piece, it's a serviceable one—an appropriate opening selection with instrumental color, a few French harmonies, and American vigor. Occasionally Mr. Monteux let the brasses get out of hand, as he did from time to time throughout his concert.

* * *

And there was the Boston debut of David Abel, a 20-year-old violinist from the Pacific Coast. It was perhaps unfortunate that he chose the Brahms Violin Concerto, heard in Symphony Hall two months ago in David Oistrakh's superlative performance; but even so, there are some things of a positive nature one can say of Mr. Abel's playing.

He is obviously a young man of talent and of technical gifts. At present, however, his playing impresses one as being emotionally immature. Each note was carefully played, but care is not enough. There must also be controlled abandon; the heart must sing to the stars.

One wonders if Mr. Monteux is not pushing Mr. Abel a little too fast by placing him in front of the Boston Symphony before more has been gained in performances with secondary orchestras. His tone is often too thin and at times tenuous. Though extremely personable, he is still too retiring as a personality to make a forcible communication with his listeners. There is no question, however, that he made a hit with the afternoon audience and enjoyed an ovation. There is something winning about his youthful diffidence.

* * *

After the intermission Mr. Monteux gave us D'Indy's "Istar" Variations, that unusual composition in which the variations, lushly adorned, come first, and the divested statement of the theme, in a striking orchestral tutti, appears near the end.

But it was not until the "Rosenkavalier" waltzes that ignition took place. It was not until those sentimental melodies, singing with the eloquence of a sigh, that one's heart became involved in the music.

It is seldom the listener's fault if his heart remains untouched. It is the man on stage—the soloist or the conductor—whose heart must overflow if he would reach another's heart.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
Circ. D. 526,215 - S. 1,146,860
FEB 21 1956

Music Critics Cite Martinu, Walton

Bohuslav Martinu
Best orchestral work

Sir William Walton
Best opera

The New York Music Critics Circle yesterday selected Bohuslav Martinu's "Fantaisies Symphoniques" as the best new orchestral work and Sir William Walton's "Troilus and Cressida" as the best new opera presented here during 1955.

Sir William's opera was performed by the New York City Opera on Oct. 21. It is to be performed again at the City Center during the company's spring season.

The Martinu work, which bears the subtitle Symphony No. 6, was commissioned by the Boston Symphony Orchestra as part of the orchestra's seventy-fifth anniversary celebration. The Boston group first presented it here in Carnegie Hall on Jan. 12 of last year.

This is the second time Mr. Martinu has won the Music Critics Circle award. His "Comedy on the Bridge" was voted the best new opera of 1951.

The Music Critics Circle, which met in the clubroom of The New York Times, voted to make no awards this year for choral or chamber works.

MUSICAL COURIER
NEW YORK CITY
FEB 1956

tion. On Jan. 8 pianist Leo Smit scored a satisfying success with the Alexei Haieff Concerto and the Tchaikovsky "Fantasie de Concert" (Op. 56).

■ On Jan. 9 Henry Peltier announced his resignation from the managership of the Dallas Symphony in order to assume an official position with the American Symphony Orchestra League. Mr. Peltier becomes research director for a project, financed by a Rockefeller grant, on the reorganization of the statistical material of the ASOL.

■ The Dallas Lyric Theatre achieved near-professional standards in its Dec. 22 performance of Menotti's Amahl and the Night Visitors. Principals in this well-sung and tastefully mounted staging at Scott Hall were Gloria Brydon, David Jones, R. G. Webb, Richard Leatherwood, and Royce Reaves. On the same program, Artistic Director Samuel Adler featured "As on the Night" by Alan Hovhaness. Marion Morrison was the soprano soloist for this first Dallas performance of the work.

DR. JACK FREDERICK KILPATRICK

BOSTON

■ Some arguments for federal, state, or city subsidy for music can be seen in the figures of last year's operations released by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. In spite of an enormous concert schedule, many out-of-town visits and tours, Pop concerts, Esplanade concerts, and the season at Tanglewood, the orchestra found itself with a $92,000 deficit. Few orchestras, if any ,come proportionately as close to meeting expenses from ticket sales and other orchestral income. The four subscription series in Boston and the series in other cities attract capacity houses. Receipts for the Winter, Pops and Esplanade concerts in Boston, together with record royalties and broadcasting fees, are just over a million dollars. Actually the Esplanade Concerts are free, with voluntary contributions made possible on the grounds.

Salaries, administration costs, travel expenses ,and all the dozens of other little costs mounted up to over a million and a quarter, leaving a deficit of $255,965 in actual figures. The orchestra's annual contributors poured $147,513 into the breach, there was some $6,000 from the Esplanade (a small fraction of the expenses for these concerts), and the orchestra's endowment funds realized $56,828. All this still was not enough and the Boston phase of the operations alone resulted in a $45,000 deficit.

At Tanglewood, it would seem, the orchestra ought at least to break even, what with audiences of 10, 12, and 14 thousands the rule. Ticket sales alone were over $300,000, which might have been expected to cover all expenses and leave something over. But the orchestra also operates the Berkshire Music Center, which means faculty salaries and extra facilities. Tuition costs cover only a small fraction of the added expense. The summer deficit

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 248,071
FEB 19 1956

Munch to Conduct New Langendoen Work

At the second concert by the Zimbler Sinfonietta in Jordan Hall, Boston, on February 29th, Charles Munch will appear as guest conductor in two works performed for the first time anywhere.

Mr. Jacobus Langendoen, well known cellist and composer and for many years a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has written two pieces in title "Siciliana" and "Burlesca" for cello solo and string orchestra. Mr. Munch will conduct this work, and Mr. Samuel Mayes, solo-cellist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Zimbler Sinfonietta, will be the soloist.

The other premiere is a work entitled "Little Suite" and is by the recently discovered Greek composer, Nikos Skalkottas. Mr. Skalkottas unknown in this country (with the exception of a performance of Greek Dances for large orchestra performed by the N. Y. Philharmonic with Mitropolous) died in 1949 at the age of 45. He was a pupil of Schoenberg in Berlin and considered today as one of the geniuses of the century. He has written over one hundred works during the years 1929-1949.

LYON

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 20,000
FEB 23 1956

MUSIC IN REVIEW

By GERALD A. BERLIN

BSO MONTEUX PROGRAM: CUI BONO?

Pierre Monteux's vast knowledge and experience, catholicity of taste, dedicated musicianship and modesty and humor have all helped to make him one of the most venerated and respected of conductors. Because Mr. Monteux has been a past conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and has been guest-conducting here and at Tanglewood for the past five years or so, local audiences have particular opportunity to acquaint themselves with the craft of his stick technique, his economy of gesture and the authority of his interpretations. By all odds, then, his guest appearances should mark one of the peaks of the symphony year here. Unhappily, this is not always the situation and last week-end's concert, consisting of Isidore Freed's "Festival Overture," Brahms' Violin Concerto with David Abel as soloist, D'Indy's "Istar" Variations and a Suite from R. Strauss' "Der Rosenkavalier," is a case in point.

Why? Mr. Monteux's apparent economy of imagination. Take the Brahms. It had been played here only two months ago by David Oistrakh at the Pension Fund Concert. The impact of that tremendous performance could not but be uppermost in the feeling of many in the audience last week-end. To place the burden of the solo part upon a twenty-year-old newcomer was only to compound the difficulty. This is not to denigrate young Mr. Abel. He plays with taste, even with a cool, silken elegance, and his technique is clean if not dazzling; add exceptional purity of tone and, save for one or two instances where nervousness set in, accuracy of intonation, and you have the ingredients of an artist. But these ingredients have not yet jelled, for this is an artist in the making, not one who has arrived. In general, Mr. Monteux should not have programmed the Brahms concerto at all at this time. Under these circumstances, he was particularly unwarranted in assigning it to someone who perhaps has years to wait before rendering it full justice.

And take the D'Indy and Strauss works. If there is any one commodity of which Boston Symphony audiences get a surfeit, it is French music. The least that a visiting conductor who wants to play something from the French literature might do is to provide some first-rate Gallic fare. But no, what de we get but the "Istar" Variations—one of the more saccharine, contrived pieces of bombast from a composer who even at his best represents an odd marriage of Wagnerian stuffiness and watered-down Franck. As for "Der Rosenkavalier" Suite, it turned out to be the same noisy arrangement that Mr. Monteux had already favored us with less than three years ago. At that time this reviewer said:

> "Suffice it to say that whatever other qualities the original opera score may possess, concisene: is not numbered among them, and the anonymous gent who assembled this particular Suite for the Boosey and Hawkes publishing people did very little to tighten things up. All told, it was one of those night-caps that the long program could just as easily have eschewed."

These same sentiments still obtain.

And finally there is the matter of the opening work, the Freed Overture. This was a loosely wrought, Hollywoodian pastiche of cliches that ran a gamut from French impressionism to Hindemithean modality, with many a brassy fanfare to carry the momentum through those bars where inspiration had run dry, which were frequent. Not that it was particularly difficult to listen to, and under ordinary circumstances one might pass this performance off as a praiseworthy effort to give a chance to an aspiring American composer. But the word is persistently about that the programs Mr. Monteux is presently conducting here are those that he will take on the forthcoming European tour of the orchestra. That is the way it developed, for example, with the 1953 American cross-continental tour when he shared the podium with Mr. Munch. Music for cultural export is another matter, and not something to take lightly. The hostile reception to the impoverished musical fare proferred by the Boston Symphony Orchestra on its last European tour, as well as by infrequent visiting American orchestras, should have taught somebody a lesson. If Mr. Freed's opus is going to be passed off as good American composition, neither the State Department nor America's reputation for cultural maturity is getting any bargain out of the enterprise.

This week Mr. Monteux will conduct Paul Creston's Second Symphony, which he conducted a few years back, along with Hadyn's "Surprise" Symphony No. 94 and the Schubert Symphony in C major.

AMERICAN PREMIERE OF "MATHIS DER MALER"

In the early 1930's Paul Hindemith was still in Germany and found himself deeply embroiled with the Nazis in respect to his artistic cannons and because of his marriage to a non-Aryan. One of the results of this conflict was his opera "Mathis der Maler," a thinly disguised attack on political authority which presumes to interfere with the creative artist. Using the life of the great 16th century painter, Matthias Grunewald, with its background of the bitter religious wars of the Reformation, and of the peasant revolt, Hindemith's opera raises the question of whether an artist should engross himself only in his art, or actively espouse the economic, social, political struggles of his day. In concluding that he must, in order to produce works of universal worth, Hindemith created that rare item, an opera of ideas—one, moreover, that appears to have become a staple in the European repertory.

But despite Hindemith's acknowledged position as one of the very greatest of contemporary composers, and the circumstance that he has lived in the United States for fifteen years, the production by the Boston University School of Fine and Applied Arts at the Boston University Theatre last week-end was the first in this country. Not only are Sarah Caldwell and her cohorts to be congratulated on their imagination in assaying this towering work at all. All praise is theirs for the effective, thoroughly rehearsed and successful fashion in which they brought it off. The spare, austere, lineal writing of Hindemith—totally devoid of lyric sweep and exceedingly narrow in range of mood—would present enormous problems of interpretation in and of itself. To expatiate on an idea so fascinating that the music is practically subordinated to it makes the musical problems nearly insuperable. Yet the total theatrical effect was magnificent and I, for one, found myself fascinated, moved and even ennobled by it all.

Space does not permit adequate testimonial to the many due credit. Miss Caldwell's staging and conducting—an excellent seventy-five piece orchestra was placed out of sight at the rear of the stage—Russell Stanger's preparation of the instrumentalists, Joanne Beck's costuming, Lewis Lehman's lighting, Esther Small's settings and the great majority of the young singers come immediately to mind. That opera is coming into its own in this country so rapidly, it is said, is due as much as anything to the efforts of the college fine arts departments. Boston University may well contemplate its own contribution with pride.

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 196,593
FEB 23 1956

Musician Doriot Anthony Dwyer Woman Of The Week

Flutist In Symphony Is Wife Of Doctor

By MARGARET MOORE

"I've always cooked for myself and it's easier to cook for two," says Doriot Anthony Dwyer, asked how she combines a career and marriage.

Mrs. Dwyer, our Woman of the Week, is first flutist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

She is also the wife of Dr. Thomas Dwyer of Cambridge.

WORKS OUT VERY WELL

She finds that combining a musical career and marriage works out very well. Her husband doesn't go with her when she goes on tour with the symphony, "but he comes to meet me occasionally," she says.

Doriot Anthony Dwyer was quite a shock to the musical world when she came to the Boston Symphony three years ago. She was the first woman to become a principal player with the famous orchestra.

"It's worked out just like I thought it would—well," says Mrs. Dwyer of her unique position. "Everyone is more used to me now. But I'm still a shock to people whenever we go to a new place," she admits.

It's nothing new for Mrs. Dwyer to be the only woman in a large group of men. Before she came to Boston she played with the Washington Symphony Orchestra, the Los Angeles Philharmonic and various radio and film orchestras.

"I was always the onl woman wind player," she says "Most girls seem to get starte on the piano. Maybe it's be cause it takes strength to pla a wind instrument. But the it takes strength to play an instrument," she adds.

TOOK LESSONS FROM MOTHER

The flute was Mrs. Dwyer's first and only instrument. She started taking lessons from her mother, a concert flutist, when she was eight.

"Everyone in my family plays a musical instrument but I seem to be the really interested one," she says.

Mrs. Dwyer's second flute teacher was Ralph Johnson. His teacher had been Georges Laurent. Making a full circle, Mrs. Dwyer replaced Mr. Laurent as the Boston's Symhpony's first flutist.

"It was a big secret who had been chosen to take Mr. Laurent's place," Mrs. Dwyer says. But she let the cat out of the bag to one member of the Boston music world.

Before she left California she wrote to Mr. Verne Q. Powell, famous maker of fine flutes. She sent him her old flute and asked him to check it over completely. She said she'd be in Boston to pick it up in a few weeks.

HE BECAME SUSPICIOUS

Mr. Powell got suspicious and asked someone at the symphony if Mrs. Dwyer was to be the new first flutist. "If she is, then I must make her a new flute," he said. The symphony representative wouldn't say one way or another.

But Mr. Powell made the new flute anyway. "It was so perfect I never even had to break it in," Mrs. Dwyer says.

Even though she's a famous flutist, Doriot Anthony Dwyer still practices almost daily. "Now I give myself lessons," she says.

"I do take vacations when I can though," she admits. "It's good to stop playing for a while. Of course, if you stop too long it's hard to get back in form."

Mrs. Dwyer has no particular favorites in music. "I like all good music and there's so much that is good," she says.

When she isn't rehearsing or playing with the symphony or practicing, Mrs. Dwyer teaches the flute. "I love teaching," she says. "It keeps you very busy."

DORIOT A. DWYER

The Jewish Herald
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Weekly
Circ. 11,979
FEB 24 1956

Munch to Conduct New Symphony

In a revision of the originally-announced program for the next Providence appearance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at the Veterans Auditorium on Tuesday evening, Charles Munch will conduct two works of Mozart in observance of the bi-centennial of the composer's birth. They are the Adagio and Fugue in C Minor for String Orchestra, and the Sinfonia Concertante in E Flat Major for Woodwinds and Orchestra with Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Gino Cioffi, clarinet; James Stagliano, horn; and Sherman Walt, bassoon.

After the intermission Mr. Munch will introduce to Providence the new Sixth Symphony by Walter Piston, composed for the 75th anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The concert will conclude with Beethoven's Second Leonore Overture.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Post (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 285,839

Review

By TUCKER KEISER

For his second week as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony, Pierre Monteux has prepared a program containing two all-time favorites, Haydn's "Surprise" Symphony, and Schubert's "Great" Symphony in C major, and one novelty, Saul Creston's Second Symphony, a work by a contemporary composer not unfamiliar to symphony audiences.

For some time I have been puzzling out why music made under the direction of this 81-year-old maestro sounds so fresh even though there is nothing startling about his interpretations. Yesterday, both the Haydn and the Schubert, every note of which is completely familiar sounded amazingly vital and kept the listener's attention every measure of the way.

The reason, I think, can be summed up as relaxation with control. He does not drive the players, although obviously he has indicated at rehearsal just how he wants this phrase or that section to go precisely what his tempi will be, and the exact dynamic planes he expects.

He trusts his performers to remember these details at the concert and concerns himself primarily with the mechanics of conducting. He does not try to play 100 instruments at once. The musicians, in turn, respond easily and the music emerges in its pristine beauty.

Mr. Creston's Second Symphony is an engagingly unpretentious work, borrowing freely from the romantics and impressionists for its idiom, and exciting purely for the sensual pleasure it gives. It is considerably more vigorous than most impressionistic music, achieving a number of exciting climaxes in the final movement, and sentimentalizes with more shameless abandon than most romantic music in the initial section. The listener is assured in the program notes that the work is ingeniously constructed; the results, however, are anything but cerebral.

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 185,401
FEB 24 1956

Koussevitzky Honored

The Brazilian composer, Heitor Villa-Lobos, has been invited by Charles Munch to conduct the first performances of his own Symphony No. 11 at the week-end concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts this afternoon and tomorrow night.

Mr. Villa-Lobos, who last appeared with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in February, 1945, has composed his new symphony for the 75th anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The Symphony, in four movements, is dedicated to the memory of Serge and Natalie Koussevitzky and is dated "New York, 1955."

Mr. Munch will open the program with Tchaikovsky's Overture-Fantasia, "Romeo and Juliet."

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 20,000
FEB 23 1956

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 196,598
FEB 23 1956

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Post (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 285,839
FEB 25 1956

Daily Mail Call Letter

Hotel BEACONSFIELD

By GERALD A. BERLIN

BSO MONTEUX PROGRAM: CUI BONO?

Pierre Monteux's vast knowledge and experience, catholicity of taste, dedicated musicianship and modesty and humor have all helped to make him one of the most venerated and respected of conductors. Because Mr. Monteux has been a past conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and has been guest-conducting here and at Tanglewood for the past five years or so, local audiences have particular opportunity to acquaint themselves with the craft of his stick technique, his economy of gesture and the authority of his interpretations. By all odds, then, his guest appearances should mark one of the peaks of the symphony year here. Unhappily, this is not always the situation and last week-end's concert, consisting of Isidore Freed's "Festival Overture," Brahms' Violin Concerto with David Abel as soloist, D'Indy's "Istar" Variations and a Suite from R. Strauss' "Der Rosenkavalier," is a case in point.

Why? Mr. Monteux's apparent economy of imagination. Take the Brahms. It had been played here only two months ago by David Oistrakh at the Pension Fund Concert. The impact of that tremendous performance could not but be uppermost in the feeling of many in the audience last week-end. To place the burden of the solo part upon a twenty-year-old newcomer was only to compound the difficulty. This is not to denigrate young Mr. Abel. He plays with taste, even with a cool, silken elegance, and his technique is clean if not dazzling; add exceptional purity of tone and, save for one or two instances where nervousness set in, accuracy of intonation, and you have the ingredients of an artist. But these ingredients have not yet jelled, for this is an artist in the making, not one who has arrived. In general, Mr. Monteux should not have programmed the Brahms concerto at all at this time. Under these circumstances, he was particularly unwarranted in assigning it to someone who perhaps has years to wait before rendering it full justice.

And take the D'Indy and Strauss works. If there is any one commodity of which Boston Symphony audiences get a surfeit, it is French music. The least that a visiting conductor who wants to play something from the French literature might do is to provide some first-rate Gallic fare. But no, what de we get but the "Istar" Variations—one of the more saccharine, contrived pieces of bombast from a composer who even at his best represents an odd marriage of Wagnerian stuffiness and watered-down Franck. As for "Der Rosenkavalier" Suite, it turned out to be the same noisy arrangement that Mr. Monteux had already favored us with less than three years ago. At that time this reviewer said:

"Suffice it to say that whatever other qualities the original opera score may possess, concisene is not numbered among them, and the anonymous gent who assembled this particular Suite for the Boosey and Hawkes publishing people did very little to tighten things up. All told, it was one of those night-caps that the long program could just as easily have eschewed."

These same sentiments still obtain.

And finally there is the matter of the opening work, the Freed Overture. This was a loosely wrought, Hollywoodian pastiche of cliches that ran a gamut from French impressionism to Hindemithean modality, with many a brassy fanfare to carry the momentum through those bars where inspiration had run dry, which were frequent. Not that it was particularly difficult to listen to, and under ordinary circumstances one might pass this performance off as a praiseworthy effort to give a chance to an aspiring American composer. But the word is persistently about that the programs Mr. Monteux is presently conducting here are those that he will take on the forthcoming European tour of the orchestra. That is the way it developed, for example, with the 1953 American cross-continental tour when he shared the podium with Mr. Munch. Music for cultural export is another matter, and not something to take lightly. The hostile reception to the impoverished musical fare proferred by the Boston Symphony Orchestra on its last European tour, as well as by infrequent visiting American orchestras, should have taught somebody a lesson. If Mr. Freed's opus is going to be passed off as good American composition, neither the State Department nor America's reputation for cultural maturity is getting any bargain out of the enterprise.

This week Mr. Monteux will conduct Paul Creston's Second Symphony, which he conducted a few years back, along with Hadyn's "Surprise" Symphony No. 94 and the Schubert Symphony in C major.

AMERICAN PREMIERE OF "MATHIS DER MALER"

In the early 1930's Paul Hindemith was still in Germany and found himself deeply embroiled with the Nazis in respect to his artistic cannons and because of his marriage to a non-Aryan. One of the results of this conflict was his opera "Mathis der Maler," a thinly disguised attack on political authority which presumes to interfere with the creative artist. Using the life of the great 16th century painter, Matthias Grunewald, with its background of the bitter religious wars of the Reformation, and of the peasant revolt, Hindemith's opera raises the question of whether an artist should engross himself only in his art, or actively espouse the economic, social, political struggles of his day. In concluding that he must, in order to produce works of universal worth, Hindemith created that rare item, an opera of ideas—one, moreover, that appears to have become a staple in the European repertory.

But despite Hindemith's acknowledged position as one of the very greatest of contemporary composers, and the circumstance that he has lived in the United States for fifteen years, the production by the Boston University School of Fine and Applied Arts at the Boston University Theatre last week-end was the first in this country. Not only are Sarah Caldwell and her cohorts to be congratulated on their imagination in assaying this towering work at all. All praise is theirs for the effective, thoroughly rehearsed and successful fashion in which they brought it off. The spare, austere, lineal writing of Hindemith—totally devoid of lyric sweep and exceedingly narrow in range of mood—would present enormous problems of interpretation in and of itself. To expatiate on an idea so fascinating that the music is practically subordinated to it makes the musical problems nearly insuperable. Yet the total theatrical effect was magnificent and I, for one, found myself fascinated, moved and even ennobled by it all.

Space does not permit adequate testimonial to the many due credit. Miss Caldwell's staging and conducting—an excellent seventy-five piece orchestra was placed out of sight at the rear of the stage—Russell Stanger's preparation of the instrumentalists, Joanne Beck's costuming, Lewis Lehman's lighting, Esther Small's settings and the great majority of the young singers come immediately to mind. That opera is coming into its own in this country so rapidly, it is said, is due as much as anything to the efforts of the college fine arts departments. Boston University may well contemplate its own contribution with pride.

Flutist In Symphony Is Wife Of Doctor

By MARGARET MOORE

"I've always cooked for myself and it's easier to cook for two," says Doriot Anthony Dwyer, asked how she combines a career and marriage.

Mrs. Dwyer, our Woman of the Week, is first flutist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

She is also the wife of Dr. Thomas Dwyer of Cambridge.

WORKS OUT VERY WELL

She finds that combining a musical career and marriage works out very well. Her husband doesn't go with her when she goes on tour with the symphony, "but he comes to meet me occasionally," she says.

Doriot Anthony Dwyer was quite a shock to the musical world when she came to the Boston Symphony three years ago. She was the first woman to become a principal player with the famous orchestra.

"It's worked out just like I thought it would—well," says Mrs. Dwyer of her unique position. "Everyone is more used to me now. But I'm still a shock to people whenever we go to a new place," she admits.

It's nothing new for Mrs. Dwyer to be the only woman in a large group of men. Before she came to Boston she played with the Washington Symphony Orchestra, the Los Angeles Philharmonic and various radio and film orchestras.

"I was always the onl woman wind player," she says "Most girls seem to get starte on the piano. Maybe it's be cause it takes strength to pla a wind instrument. But the it takes strength to play an instrument," she adds.

TOOK LESSONS FROM MOTHER

The flute was Mrs. Dwyer's first and only instrument. She started taking lessons from her mother, a concert flutist, when she was eight.

"Everyone in my family plays a musical instrument but I seem to be the really interested one," she says.

Mrs. Dwyer's second flute teacher was Ralph Johnson. His teacher had been Georges Laurent. Making a full circle, Mrs. Dwyer replaced Mr. Laurent as the Boston's Symhpony's first flutist.

"It was a big secret who had been chosen to take Mr. Laurent's place," Mrs. Dwyer says. But she let the cat out of the bag to one member of the Boston music world.

Before she left California she wrote to Mr. Verne Q. Powell, famous maker of fine flutes. She sent him her old flute and asked him to check it over completely. She said she'd be in Boston to pick it up in a few weeks.

HE BECAME SUSPICIOUS

Mr. Powell got suspicious and asked someone at the symphony if Mrs. Dwyer was to be the new first flutist. "If she is, then I must make her a new flute," he said. The symphony representative wouldn't say one way or another.

But Mr. Powell made the new flute anyway. "It was so perfect I never even had to break it in," Mrs. Dwyer says.

Even though she's a famous flutist, Doriot Anthony Dwyer still practices almost daily. "Now I give myself lessons," she says.

"I do take vacations when I can though," she admits. "It's good to stop playing for a while. Of course, if you stop too long it's hard to get back in form."

Mrs. Dwyer has no particular favorites in music. "I like all good music and there's so much that is good," she says.

When she isn't rehearsing or playing with the symphony or practicing, Mrs. Dwyer teaches the flute. "I love teaching," she says. "It keeps you very busy."

DORIOT A. DWYER

The Jewish Herald
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Weekly
Circ. 11,979
FEB 24 1956

Munch to Conduct New Symphony

In a revision of the originally-announced program for the next Providence appearance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at the Veterans Auditorium on Tuesday evening, Charles Munch will conduct two works of Mozart in observance of the bi-centennial of the composer's birth. They are the Adagio and Fugue in C Minor for String Orchestra, and the Sinfonia Concertante in E Flat Major for Woodwinds and Orchestra with Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Gino Cioffi, clarinet; James Stagliano, horn; and Sherman Walt, bassoon.

After the intermission Mr. Munch will introduce to Providence the new Sixth Symphony by Walter Piston, composed for the 75th anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The concert will conclude with Beethoven's Second Leonore Overture.

Music Review

By TUCKER KEISER

For his second week as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony, Pierre Monteux has prepared a program containing two all-time favorites, Haydn's "Surprise" Symphony, and Schubert's "Great" Symphony in C major, and one novelty, Saul Creston's Second Symphony, a work by a contemporary composer not unfamiliar to symphony audiences.

For some time I have been puzzling out why music made under the direction of this 81-year-old maestro sounds so fresh even though there is nothing startling about his interpretations. Yesterday, both the Haydn and the Schubert, every note of which is completely familiar sounded amazingly vital and kept the listener's attention every measure of the way.

The reason, I think, can be summed up as relaxation with control. He does not drive the players, although obviously he has indicated at rehearsal just how he wants this phrase or that section to go precisely what his tempi will be, and the exact dynamic planes he expects.

He trusts his performers to remember these details at the concert and concerns himself primarily with the mechanics of conducting. He does not try to play 100 instruments at once. The musicians, in turn, respond easily and the music emerges in its pristine beauty.

Mr. Creston's Second Symphony is an engagingly unpretentious work, borrowing freely from the romantics and impressionists for its idiom, and exciting purely for the sensual pleasure it gives. It is considerably more vigorous than most impressionistic music, achieving a number of exciting climaxes in the final movement, and sentimentalizes with more shameless abandon than most romantic music in the initial section. The listener is assured in the program notes that the work is ingeniously constructed; the results, however, are anything but cerebral.

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 185,401
FEB 24 1956

Koussevitzky Honored

The Brazilian composer, Heitor Villa-Lobos, has been invited by Charles Munch to conduct the first performances of his own Symphony No. 11 at the week-end concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts this afternoon and tomorrow night.

Mr. Villa-Lobos, who last appeared with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in February, 1945, has composed his new symphony for the 75th anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The Symphony, in four movements, is dedicated to the memory of Serge and Natalie Koussevitzky and is dated "New York, 1955."

Mr. Munch will open the program with Tchaikovsky's Overture-Fantasia, "Romeo and Juliet."

FT. LAUDERDALE, FLA.
NEWS & SENTINEL
Circ. D. 27,535 - S. 24,406
FEB 26 1956

Boston Symphony Plays Debussy Compositions

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has made its diamond anniversary memorable with some masterpieces of recorded art on the RCA Victor label. Its newest to reach the record shops, Claude Debussy's "La Mer" and "Nocturnes" on LM-1939 is an achievement in artistry which the company can present with pride.

Pierre Monteux, whose special affinity for his compatriot has made him a Debussian interpreter without equal, leads this orchestra of top musicians to the very heart of the Debussy moods and expresses them with delicacy and conviction.

The recording, in new orthophonic high fidelity sound, was made in Boston with the Berkshire Festival Chorus chanting in the last movement of the Nocturnes. It is encased in an appropriately ornamented cover with liner notes about the sea by such authors as Herman Melville and Thomas Mann.

It is the sea with which Debussy is primarily concerned in these compositions, although two of the three Nocturnes deal with "Clouds" and "Festivals."

Its magnitude and mystery surge throughout the three phases of "La Mer," "From Dawn to Noon at Sea," "Play of the Waves" and "Dialogue of the Wind and the Sea," to create in the listener an impression of timelessness and vastness. The vital interpretation accorded on the record accentuates the moods.

"La Mer," completed in 1905, is called structurally the composer's most ambitious work for orchestra. It also is described as one of the most difficult to analyze because it lacks those fixed points which define a symphony so that conformity with them or departure from them can be noted.

The composer, who spent his 56 years of life in France, was an individualist of the first order and had to write his own kind of music. He became the master of impressionism in his effort to convey mood rather than form, and has never been surpassed, if ever equalled, in this respect.

The Nocturnes include two very well known ones, "Clouds" and "Festivals," plus the third in the series, "Sirens," in which the mystery of the sea again comes to mind. Members of the Berkshire Festival Chorus are heard in this Nocturne, whose song is a wordless chant of eight mezzo-soprano voices. The vocalists were rehearsed and prepared under the direction of Iva Dee Hiatt in association with Hugh Ross.

The composer's own description says: "The sea and its innumerable rhythms; then amid the billows silvered by the moon the mysterious song of the Sirens is heard; they laugh, and the song passes on."

PIERRE MONTEUX
. . . Debussy interpreter

Berenice Parker

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 130,559
FEB 25 1956

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux conducting, gave the 16th program of the 75th season in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. The program:
Symphony No 94 in G "Surprise," Haydn
Symphony No 2, Op. 35.....Creston
Symphony in C, No 7.....Schubert

By RUDOLPH ELIE

This has been a season of much-repeated music.

Yesterday's concert, for example, pleasant and even notable as it was, offered two works given by Mr. Monteux himself within three years. In last week's concert he did the Strauss again after only three years as well the Brahms' D major Concerto, which had not only been done here in '53, '54 and '55 but once before in this very season.

Looking back over the programs of the preceding 15 concerts turns up much the same pattern. Work after work has appeared for a new hearing within two and three years, not works especially needing a second performance to help establish their quality, but pieces like Schumann's Second Symphony, Beethoven's Leonore Overture, the Tchaikovsky Fourth and so on. It is not as if radio were silent on these things: all may be heard on what amounts to a daily basis and all, no doubt, are part of the basic record library of everyone.

And Next Week

And next week what? "Romeo and Juliet," given here only last season! This is a situation that is open, it seems to me, to some criticism. Surely, with the fantastic range of the orchestral repertoire, there is little need to repeat the standard classics in such a short order, and a good deal more thought might be given to it for the benefit of all concerned.

Repeated from 1953 was Paul Creston's Second Symphony, a quite unpretentious work in two extended movements suggesting, in the composer's words, "an apotheosis of the two foundations of all music: song and dance." It is, too, the first movement being of a warm lyric character, never aggressively dissonant. On the contrary, in its middle section suggests some of the elegiac lyricism of Rachmaninoff. There are some exceedingly pleasant sounds in the movement as the composer reinforces some of the lines with the piano, and it is all harmless enough. The two ensuing sections, joined as one, are of somewhat sterner stuff so far as the ear is concerned but still anything but difficult. The movement is rhythmically interesting and varied, the atmosphere gay and colorful. It went well with the audience, too.

Ten years is just about the right interval for the hearing of Haydn's Surprise symphony, which fortunately replaced the originally programmed No. 88. In the years the listener forgets just how bright and fresh this ingenious and witty work is and the experience is a delightful one. Mr. Monteux gave it a straightforward reading, letting the music speak for itself and this it does with the greatest charm. His approach to the Schubert was similarly uncluttered, yet there was a spaciousness and liftiness about it that was very winning. Some overly enthusiastic instrumental attacks slightly marred the finale and there were a couple of un-Bostonian errors in the course of the afternoon, but these are small matters indeed. It was a good concert, but surely Mr. Monteux must have other things up his ample sleeves than these thrice familiar things.

Mr. Munch returns next week doing the aforementioned "Romeo and Juliet" Overture and, with Eugene Istomin, the Beethoven Fourth Piano Concerto. It will be an occasion to welcome back the striking Brazilian composer Villa-Lobos, however, who will bring out his Symphony No. 11.

TOLEDO, OHIO
BLADE
Circ. D. 190,612 - S. 166,660
FEB 26 1956

Copland 'Ode' Given New York Premiere

A "Symphonic Ode" by Aaron Copland, celebrating the 75th anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, had a first New York performance in Carnegie Hall recently, conducted by Charles Muench. It was composed originally on commission of the Boston orchestra and the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and dedicated to the memories of Serge and Natalie Koussevitzky. The score was revised a year ago, from the original of 1928-29, intended for the 50th anniversary season of the orchestra. Mr. Koussevitzky first conducted the original Feb. 19, 1932.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 122,000
FEB 25 1956

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,872
FEB 25 1956

Monteux Conducts Three Symphonies

Works by Haydn, Creston, Schubert Heard

By Harold Rogers

As if personally assuming the role of harbinger of spring, Pierre Monteux scheduled three sunny symphonies for the concerts this weekend, and it's doubtful if a single Boston Symphony subscriber could be found who thought he was pushing the season. It was a clear day yesterday, both inside and outside Symphony Hall.

Mr. Monteux happily chose three admirable symphonies with which to conclude his guest appearances this season. He opened with Haydn's "Surprise" Symphony in G major, No. 94, which, in every movement, has either a chuckle or a twinkle.

He continued with Paul Creston's Symphony No. 2, a favorite of his. He has justifiably championed it. He conducted it in Boston three years ago, and continued to play it in cities across the United States when the Boston Symphony was on its first transcontinental tour.

I welcomed hearing it again to see if my impressions of it had remained constant during this three-year interval, and they have. Mr. Creston has turned out a virile score, intelligently and inventively assembled. The first of the two movements is expressive of song, the second of dance, and in both the quality of his inspiration is high. His music is appealing for its vigorous sound and its emotional content.

The lyrical and lovely melody in the song movement was evocatively stated by Doriot Anthony Dwyer's flute and by Ralph Gomberg's oboe. The dance is a dithyramb of syncopations.

And Schubert's "Great" C major, No. 7—a symphony for all out doors! It extends itself to the horizon under an azure sky without a tragic note to cloud the day. Again one marveled, as one always does, at the simplicity of the melodies, the logic of the form. Only a genius like Schubert could spin such an extraordinarily long symphony out of such lyrical materials and yet engage his listeners' devoted attention.

Mr. Monteux apparently let the "Great" C major sing itself from first to last, as he did with the Haydn and the Creston. As nearly everybody knows by now, his effortless conducting is completely deceptive. It is not his neat baton technique that does the work. It is what he knows about music.

Next week Heitor Villa-Lobos, Brazil's leading composer, will come to Boston to conduct the première of the Symphony No. 11, commissioned by the Boston Symphony for its 75th year. Charles Munch will open with Tchaikovsky's "Romeo and Juliet" and will close with Beethoven's Fourth Piano Concerto, with Eugene Istomin at the keyboard.

...PHONY ORCHESTRA
...ays Creston Music

...gave 16th ...atur- Hall.

...aracterized ...paraphrasing the jingle about a bride's apparel; something old, and something fairly new, many things borrowed, but nothing blue. Haydn was old, and so was the Schubert Symphony of what Robert Schumann claimed was "Heavenly length." The rest of the paraphrase applies to the Second Symphony of Paul Creston.

Upon the two other occasions when this work was played by the Boston Symphony (1945 and 1953) it seems to have been fairly buried under other items more newsworthy at the time. Still less than 15 years old, this large work is fairly new. In aspects of its style it represents borrowings from numerous other composers all the way from the French Impressionists down to Roy Harris, Hindemith and Rachmaninoff. But even in the jazz-manner finale, there is nothing of the blues in harmony or tunes. That is one portion of modern popular music from which Creston did not borrow for his Second Symphony.

Yet for all its eclectic nature, the work is far from negligible or uninteresting. The formal layout of Introduction and Song, Interlude and Dance, make a novel two-movements architectural scheme. The four basic themes, introduced at the outset, and which provide the material for the whole Symphony, are not exceptional in themselves, but the way they are brought in and utilized is distinctive.

Creston's Symphony, I suppose, is another proof of that fact that if you have charm and vivacity you don't necessarily have to be original to make friends and influence people. Charm and vivacity are plentiful here, and the sum total of effect is an agreeable half-hour or so. The music has motion, it is never glum or chunky or sodden, and its orchestration makes a bright-colored facade.

If at the ...

says yo... Friday Hall.

This ... the mo... Hayden ... the "Su... Sympho... most p... sounded ... sonority. Schubert ... values o... able, esp... bers of ... This resu... of sonor... ments too... and other... major ha...

Mr. Mo... that impe... which is ... productive... wise had ... firmly at ... last week, ... gance in t... fine delica... with the lo... with true ... personal r... is that cut ... repeated po... repeat mar... never by a... cordingly S... repeat mar... rightly, and ... taken righ... then-the-first...

Heavenly ... Heaven, whe... not press, bu... with such b... cretion is adn...

Next week ... be back, and ... kovsky's "Ron... the G major ... Beethoven, w... as soloist. By ... Munch, Heito... conduct the fi... his own Symp... posed for the 75th Anniversary of the Boston Symphony.

...shire Gazette (e)
HAMPTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 12,...

...y Standard-Times
BEDFORD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 50,234

...unday Post
...STON, Mass.
...ndent Democrat
...rc. 230,990

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
NEW YORKER
Circ. D. 25,388 - S. 25,685

LUBBOCK, TEX.
Avalanche-Journal
D.
FEB 26 1956

Boston Symphony Plans Berkshire Summer Festival

Completing the 75th anniversary season, the Boston Symphony Orchestra has announced the plans for the 1956 Berkshire Festival, to be given, under the direction of Charles Munch, at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., July 4-Aug. 4.

Followed by the trip to Europe, the Festival will consist of six week-ends of concerts on Friday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons, following the plan of last year, when two weekends of "Bach-Mozart" concerts in the Theatre-Concert Hall were followed by four weekends in the Shed.

In addition there will be a series of six concerts by chamber music groups on Wednesday evenings in the Theatre through this period.

Conductors Listed

Charles Munch will conduct the majority of the Festival Concerts. The guest conductors will be Pierre Monteux, Eleazar de Carvalho, Lukas Foss, Richard Burgin and Leonard Bernstein, the latter dedicating a program to the memory of Serge Koussevitsky.

Four new works have been composed for the 75th anniversary of the orchestra and will be performed for the first time in the course of the present season.

To be introduced at Tanglewood they are by Copland, Piston, Hanson and Villa-Lobos.

The Yale Glee Club is slated to ... Martinu's "Field Mass."

LOS ANGELES CALIF.
EXAMINER
FEB 26 1956

Edinburgh Festival to Mark 10th Year

SEVEN symphony orchestras and programs of drama, ballet, opera and chamber music will be featured at the Edinburgh Festival, scheduled for August 19 through September 8, the British Travel Association has announced.

The Scottish capital, sometimes called "the festival city of the world," will celebrate the 10th anniversary of its great music and drama fete. Artists from at least six countries, including the United States, will take part.

Some highlights of the three-week event include five successive concerts by the Boston Symphony, the Ram Gopal Indian Ballet, the Stratford Ontario Festival Company from Canada and the Piccolo Teatro of Italy.

The Boston Symphony will alternately play under the direction of Charles Munch, permanent conductor, and Pierre Monteux, its former maestro. To mark its 75th anniversary and the fifth anniversary of the death of Serge Koussevitsky, the orchestra has commissioned several new works from distinguished composers.

The Royal Philharmonic will [illegible] under the direction [illegible] Thomas Beecham, doyen [illegible] Other orchestras [illegible] are: Vienna Hofmusikkapelle, London Mozart Players, Scottish National Orchestra, B. B. C. Scottish Orchestra, National Youth Orchestra of Great Britain.

Four productions will be given by the Hamburg State Opera, including Mozart's Die Zauberflote and Strawinsky's Oedipus and Mavra.

On the drama side of the festival, Canada will be represented by the Stratford Ontario Festival Company presenting Shakespeare's Henry IV.

FT. LAUDERDALE, FLA
NEWS & SENTINEL
Circ. D. 27,535 - S. 24,406

FEB 26 1956

Boston Sympho[illegible] Debussy Compos[illegible]

The Boston Symphony Orchestra h[illegible] mond anniversary memorable with some [illegible] recorded art on the RCA Victor label. [illegible] reach the record shops, Claude Debussy's [illegible] and "Nocturnes" on LM-1939 is an achievement in artistry which the company can present with pride.

Pierre Monteux, whose special affinity for his compatriot has made him a Debussian interpreter without equal, leads this orchestra of top musicians to the very heart of the Debussy moods and expresses them with delicacy and conviction.

The recording, in new orthophonic high fidelity sound, was made in Boston with the Berkshire Festival Chorus chanting in the last movement of the Nocturnes. It is encased in an appropriately ornamented cover with liner notes about the sea by such authors as Herman Melville and Thomas Mann.

It is the sea with which Debussy is primarily concerned in these compositions, although two of the three Nocturnes deal with "Clouds" and "Festivals."

Its magnitude and mystery surge throughout the three phases of "La Mer," "From Dawn to Noon at Sea," "Play of the Waves" and "Dialogue of the Wind and the Sea," to create in the listener an impression of timelessness and vastness. The vital interpretation accorded on the record accentuates the moods.

"La Mer," completed in 1905, is called structurally the composer's most ambitious work for orchestra. It also is described as one of the most difficult to analyze because it lacks those fixed points which define a symphony so that conformity with them or departure from them can be noted.

The composer, who spent his 56 years of life in France, was an individualist of the first order and had to write his own kind of music. He became the master of impressionism in his effort to convey mood rather than form, and has never been surpassed, if ever equalled, in this respect.

The Nocturnes include two very well known ones, "Clouds" and "Festivals," plus the third in the series, "Sirens," in which the mystery of the sea again comes to mind. Members of the Berkshire Festival Chorus are heard in this Nocturne, whose song is a wordless chant of eight mezzo-soprano voices. The vocalists were rehearsed and prepared under the direction of Iva Dee Hiatt in association with Hugh Ross.

The composer's own description says: "The sea and its innumerable rhythms; then amid the billows silvered by the moon the mysterious song of the Sirens is heard; they laugh, and the song passes on."

PIERRE MONTEUX
. . . Debussy interpreter

Berenice Parker

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 130,559

FEB 25 1956

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux conducting, gave the 16th program of the 75th season in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. The program:

Symphony No 94 in G "Surprise," ..... Haydn
Symphony No 2, Op. 35 ..... Creston
Symphony in C, No 7 ..... Schubert

By RUDOLPH ELIE

This has been a season of much-repeated music.

Yesterday's concert, for example, pleasant and even notable as it was, offered two works given by Mr. Monteux himself within three years. In last week's concert he did the Strauss again after only three years as well the Brahms' D major Concerto, which had not only been done here in '53, '54 and '55 but once before in this very season.

Looking back over the programs of the preceding 15 concerts turns up much the same pattern. Work after work has appeared for a new hearing within two and three years, not works especially needing a second performance to help establish their quality, but pieces like Schumann's Second Symphony, Beethoven's Leonore Overture, the Tchaikovsky Fourth and so on. It is not as if radio were silent on these things: all may be heard on what amounts to a daily basis and all, no doubt, are part of the basic record library of everyone.

And Next Week

And next week what? "Romeo and Juliet," given here only last season! This is a situation that is open, it seems to me, to some criticism. Surely, with the fantastic range of the orchestral repertoire, there is little need to repeat the standard classics in such a short order, and a good deal more thought might be given to it for the benefit of all concerned.

Repeated from 1953 was Paul Creston's Second Symphony, a quite unpretentious work in two extended movements suggesting, in the composer's words, "an apotheosis of the two foundations of all music: song and dance." It is, too, the first movement being of a warm lyric character, never aggressively dissonant. On the contrary, in its middle section suggests some of the elegiac lyricism of Rachmaninoff. There are some exceedingly pleasant sounds in the movement as the composer reinforces some of the lines with the piano, and it is all harmless enough. The two ensuing sections, joined as one, are of somewhat sterner stuff so far as the ear is concerned but still anything but difficult. The movement is rhythmically interesting and varied, the atmosphere gay and colorful. It went well with the audience, too.

Ten years is just about the right interval for the hearing of Haydn's Surprise symphony, which fortunately replaced the originally programmed No. 88. In the years the listener forgets just how bright and fresh this ingenious and witty work is and the experience is a delightful one. Mr. Monteux gave it a straightforward reading, letting the music speak for itself and this it does with the greatest charm. His approach to the Schubert was similarly uncluttered, yet there was a spaciousness and liftiness about it that was very winning. Some overly enthusiastic instrumental attacks slightly marred the finale and there were a couple of un-Bostonian errors in the course of the afternoon, but these are small matters indeed. It was a good concert, but surely Mr. Monteux must have other things up his ample sleeves than these thrice familiar things.

Mr. Munch returns next week doing the aforementioned "Romeo and Juliet" Overture and, with Eugene Istomin, the Beethoven Fourth Piano Concerto. It will be an occasion to welcome back the striking Brazilian composer Villa-Lobos, however, who will bring out his Symphony No. 11.

TOLEDO, OHIO
BLADE
Circ. D. 190,612 - S. 166,660

FEB 26 1956

Copland 'Ode' Given New York Premiere

A "Symphonic Ode" by Aaron Copland, celebrating the 75th anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, had a first New York performance in Carnegie Hall recently, conducted by Charles Muench. It was composed originally on commission of the Boston orchestra and the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and dedicated to the memories of Serge and Natalie Koussevitzky. The score was revised a year ago, from the original of 1928-29, intended for the 50th anniversary season of the orchestra. Mr. Koussevitzky first conducted the original Feb. 19, 1932.

HONY ORCHESTRA

Monteux Plays Creston Music

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave yesterday the first concert of the 16th program of the Friday afternoon-Saturday evening series, at Symphony Hall. Pierre Monteux, as guest conductor, presented "Surprise" Symphony, Haydn; Symphony No. 2, Paul Creston; Symphony in C major, No. 7, Schubert.

By CYRUS DURGIN

The Boston Symphony program this week could be characterized by paraphrasing the jingle about a bride's apparel; something old, and something fairly new, many things borrowed, but nothing blue. Haydn was old, and so was the Schubert Symphony of what Robert Schumann claimed was "Heavenly length." The rest of the paraphrase applies to the Second Symphony of Paul Creston.

Upon the two other occasions when this work was played by the Boston Symphony (1945 and 1953) it seems to have been fairly buried under other items more newsworthy at the time. Still less than 15 years old, this large work is fairly new. In aspects of its style it represents borrowings from numerous other composers all the way from the French Impressionists down to Roy Harris, Hindemith and Rachmaninoff. But even in the jazz-manner finale, there is nothing of the blues in harmony or tunes. That is one portion of modern popular music from which Creston did not borrow for his Second Symphony.

Yet for all its eclectic nature, the work is far from negligible or uninteresting. The formal layout of Introduction and Song, Interlude and Dance, make a novel two-movements architectural scheme. The four basic themes, introduced at the outset, and which provide the material for the whole Symphony, are not exceptional in themselves, but the way they are brought in and utilized is distinctive.

Creston's Symphony, I suppose, is another proof of that fact that if you have charm and vivacity you don't necessarily have to be original to make friends and influence people. Charm and vivacity are plentiful here, and the sum total of effect is an agreeable half-hour or so. The music has motion, it is never glum or chunky or sodden, and its orchestration makes a bright-colored facade.

If, at the end, you feel the interior substance of the music has not been worth quite so much time and absorption, you likely are quite right, but at the same time you have had fun. Nothing wrong with that. There's no law that says you have to cerebrate every Friday afternoon at Symphony Hall.

This chronicler was more in the mood for Creston than for Hayden or Schubert. All the same, the "Surprise" and the C major Symphonies went superbly, for the most part, and the orchestra sounded with its finest string sonority. There were places in the Schubert when the exact time values of eighth notes were variable, especially among the members of the woodwind sections. This resulted in tiny little clashes of sonorities when some instruments took the notes a hair longer and others clipped them short. No major harm done, however.

Mr. Monteux, conducting with that imperturbable mastery of his, which is both so fascinating and productive of wonderment, otherwise had the Boston Symphony firmly at the end of his stick. As last week, there was great elegance in the playing, and superfine delicacy of shadings. He dealt with the long Schubert Symphony with true logic: he followed his personal rule about cuts, which is that cuts may be made when repeated portions are indicated by repeat marks in the score, but never by arbitrary excision. Accordingly Schubert's conventional repeat marks were ignored, and rightly, and even the scherzo was taken right-through-once, and-then-the-first-section-repeated.

Heavenly length is all right in Heaven, where time probably does not press, but in this world, even with such beautiful melody, discretion is admired.

Next week Charles Munch will be back, and will conduct Tchaikovsky's "Romeo and Juliet" and the G major Piano Concerto of Beethoven, with Eugene Istomin as soloist. By invitation of Mr. Munch, Heitor Villa-Lobos will conduct the first performance of his own Symphony No. 11, composed for the 75th Anniversary of the Boston Symphony.

LOS ANGELES CALIF.
EXAMINER

FEB 26 1956

Edinburgh Festival to Mark 10th Year

SEVEN symphony orchestras and programs of drama, ballet, opera and chamber music will be featured at the Edinburgh Festival, scheduled for August 19 through September 8, the British Travel Association has announced.

The Scottish capital, sometimes called "the festival city of the world," will celebrate the 10th anniversary of its great music and drama fete. Artists from at least six countries, including the United States, will take part.

Some highlights of the three-week event include five successive concerts by the Boston Symphony, the Ram Gopal Indian Ballet, the Stratford Ontario Festival Company from Canada and the Piccolo Teatro of Italy.

The Boston Symphony will alternately play under the direction of Charles Munch, permanent conductor, and Pierre Monteux, its former maestro. To mark its 75th anniversary and the fifth anniversary of the death of Serge Koussevitsky, the orchestra has commissioned several new works from distinguished composers.

The [illegible] Philharmonic will be heard under the direction [illegible] Beecham, doyen of British conductors. Other orchestras [illegible] are: Vienna Hofmusikkapelle, London Mozart Players, Scottish National Orchestra, B. B. C. Scottish Orchestra, National Youth Orchestra of Great Britain.

Four productions will be given by the Hamburg State Opera, including Mozart's Die Zauberflote and Strawinsky's Oedipus and Mavra.

On the drama side of the festival, Canada will be represented by the Stratford Ontario Festival Company presenting Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 12,[illegible]

Sunday Standard-Times
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 50,234

Sunday Post
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 230,990

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
NEW YORKER
Circ. D. 25,388 - S. 25,685

LUBBOCK, TEX.
Avalanche-Journal
D.

FEB 26 1956

Boston Symphony Plans Berkshire Summer Festival

Completing the 75th anniversary season, the Boston Symphony Orchestra has announced the plans for the 1956 Berkshire Festival, to be given, under the direction of Charles Munch, at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., July 4-Aug. 4.

Followed by the trip to Europe, the Festival will consist of six week-ends of concerts on Friday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons, following the plan of last year, when two weekends of "Bach-Mozart" concerts in the Theatre-Concert Hall were followed by four weekends in the Shed.

In addition there will be a series of six concerts by chamber music groups on Wednesday evenings in the Theatre through this period.

Conductors Listed

Charles Munch will conduct the majority of the Festival Concerts. The guest conductors will be Pierre Monteux, Eleazar de Carvalho, Lukas Foss, Richard Burgin and Leonard Bernstein, the latter dedicating a program to the memory of Serge Koussevitsky.

Four new works have been composed for the 75th anniversary of the orchestra and will be performed for the first time in the course of the present season.

To be introduced at Tanglewood they are by Copland, Piston, Hanson and Villa-Lobos.

Munch will give two all-Wagner programs, including the first act of "The Valkyrie" and the final scenes of "The Meistercingers." The music of Mozart will be especially honored in the "Bach-Mozart" concerts in this, the anniversary year of Mozart's birth. Choral works will include Bach's Passion According to St. John, Martinu's "Field Mass," which will be performed by the visiting Yale Glee Club; the other choral works being performed by the Festival Chorus prepared by the director, Hugh Ross.

Soloists will consist of Rudolph Serkin, Zino Francescatti, Margaret Harshaw, Albert Da Costa, Adele Addison, James Pease, Donald Gramm, David Lloyd, Margaret Willauer and others. Boris Goldovsky, Pierre Luboschutz and Genia Nemenoff will present a program of piano concerti by Mozart.

The Berkshire Music Center, the summer school maintained by this orchestra at Tanglewood, will have its 14th season July 2-Aug. 12, under the direction of Charles Munch. Inquiries and renewals should be addressed to the Festival Office at Symphony Hall in Boston.

FT. LAUDERDALE, FLA.
NEWS & SENTINEL
Circ. D. 27,535 - S. 24,406
FEB 26 1956

Boston Symphony Plays Debussy Compositions

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has made its diamond anniversary memorable with some masterpieces of recorded art on the RCA Victor label. Its newest to reach the record shops, Claude Debussy's "La Mer" and "Nocturnes" on LM-1939 is an achievement in artistry which the company can present with pride.

Pierre Monteux, whose special affinity for his compatriot has made him a Debussian interpreter without equal, leads this orchestra of top musicians to the very heart of the Debussy moods and expresses them with delicacy and conviction.

The recording, in new orthophonic high fidelity sound, was made in Boston with the Berkshire Festival Chorus chanting in the last movement of the Nocturnes. It is encased in an appropriately ornamented cover with liner notes about the sea by such authors as Herman Melville and Thomas Mann.

It is the sea with which Debussy is primarily concerned in these compositions, although two of the three Nocturnes deal with "Clouds" and "Festivals."

Its magnitude and mystery surge throughout the three phases of "La Mer," "From Dawn to Noon at Sea," "Play of the Waves" and "Dialogue of the Wind and the Sea," to create in the listener an impression of timelessness and vastness. The vital interpretation accorded on the record accentuates the moods.

"La Mer," completed in 1905, is called structurally the composer's most ambitious work for orchestra. It also is described as one of the most difficult to analyze because it lacks those fixed points which define a symphony so that conformity with them or departure from them can be noted.

The composer, who spent his 56 years of life in France, was an individualist of the first order and had to write his own kind of music. He became the master of impressionism in his effort to convey mood rather than form, and has never been surpassed, if ever equalled, in this respect.

The Nocturnes include two very well known ones, "Clouds" and "Festivals," plus the third in the series, "Sirens," in which the mystery of the sea again comes to mind. Members of the Berkshire Festival Chorus are heard in this Nocturne, whose song is a wordless chant of eight mezzo-soprano voices. The vocalists were rehearsed and prepared under the direction of Iva Dee Hiatt in association with Hugh Ross.

The composer's own description says: "The sea and its innumerable rhythms; then amid the billows silvered by the moon the mysterious song of the Sirens is heard; they laugh, and the song passes on."

PIERRE MONTEUX
. . . Debussy interpreter

Berenice Parker

TOLEDO, OHIO
BLADE
Circ. D. 190,612 - S. 166,660
FEB 26 1956

Copland 'Ode' Given New York Premiere

A "Symphonic Ode" by Aaron Copland, celebrating the 75th anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, had a first New York performance in Carnegie Hall recently, conducted by Charles Muench. It was composed originally on commission of the Boston orchestra and the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and dedicated to the memories of Serge and Natalie Koussevitzky. The score was revised a year ago, from the original of 1928-29, intended for the 50th anniversary season of the orchestra. Mr. Koussevitzky first conducted the original Feb. 19, 1932.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 130,559
FEB 25 1956

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux conducting, gave the 16th program of the 75th season in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. The program:
Symphony No 94 in G "Surprise," ..... Haydn
Symphony No 2, Op. 35 ..... Creston
Symphony in C, No 7 ..... Schubert

By RUDOLPH ELIE

This has been a season of much-repeated music.

Yesterday's concert, for example, pleasant and even notable as it was, offered two works given by Mr. Monteux himself within three years. In last week's concert he did the Strauss again after only three years as well the Brahms' D major Concerto, which had not only been done here in '53, '54 and '55 but once before in this very season.

Looking back over the programs of the preceding 15 concerts turns up much the same pattern. Work after work has appeared for a new hearing within two and three years, not works especially needing a second performance to help establish their quality, but pieces like Schumann's Second Symphony, Beethoven's Leonore Overture, the Tchaikovsky Fourth and so on. It is not as if radio were silent on these things: all may be heard on what amounts to a daily basis and all, no doubt, are part of the basic record library of everyone.

And Next Week

And next week what? "Romeo and Juliet," given here only last season! This is a situation that is open, it seems to me, to some criticism. Surely, with the fantastic range of the orchestral repertoire, there is little need to repeat the standard classics in such a short order, and a good deal more thought might be given to it for the benefit of all concerned.

Repeated from 1953 was Paul Creston's Second Symphony, a quite unpretentious work in two extended movements suggesting, in the composer's words, "an apotheosis of the two foundations of all music: song and dance." It is, too, the first movement being of a warm lyric character, never aggressively dissonant. On the contrary, in its middle section suggests some of the elegiac lyricism of Rachmaninoff. There are some exceedingly pleasant sounds in the movement as the composer reinforces some of the lines with the piano, and it is all harmless enough. The two ensuing sections, joined as one, are of somewhat sterner stuff so far as the ear is concerned but still anything but difficult. The movement is rhythmically interesting and varied, the atmosphere gay and colorful. It went well with the audience, too.

Ten years is just about the right interval for the hearing of Haydn's Surprise symphony, which fortunately replaced the originally programmed No. 88. In the years the listener forgets just how bright and fresh this ingenious and witty work is and the experience is a delightful one. Mr. Monteux gave it a straightforward reading, letting the music speak for itself and this it does with the greatest charm. His approach to the Schubert was similarly uncluttered, yet there was a spaciousness and liftiness about it that was very winning. Some overly enthusiastic instrumental attacks slightly marred the finale and there were a couple of un-Bostonian errors in the course of the afternoon, but these are small matters indeed. It was a good concert, but surely Mr. Monteux must have other things up his ample sleeves than these thrice familiar things.

Mr. Munch returns next week doing the aforementioned "Romeo and Juliet" Overture and, with Eugene Istomin, the Beethoven Fourth Piano Concerto. It will be an occasion to welcome back the striking Brazilian composer Villa-Lobos, however, who will bring out his Symphony No. 11.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 122,000
FEB 25 1956

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,872
FEB 25 1956

...HONY ORCHESTRA

...ays Creston Music

Monteux Conducts T...

...aracterized ... paraphrasing the jingle about a bride's apparel; something old, and something fairly new, many things borrowed, but nothing blue. Haydn was old, and so was the Schubert Symphony of what Robert Schumann claimed was "Heavenly length." The rest of the paraphrase applies to the Second Symphony of Paul Creston.

Upon the two other occasions when this work was played by the Boston Symphony (1945 and 1953) it seems to have been fairly buried under other items more newsworthy at the time. Still less than 15 years old, this large work is fairly new. In aspects of its style it represents borrowings from numerous other composers all the way from the French Impressionists down to Roy Harris, Hindemith and Rachmaninoff. But even in the jazz-manner finale, there is nothing of the blues in harmony or tunes. That is one portion of modern popular music from which Creston did not borrow for his Second Symphony.

Yet for all its eclectic nature, the work is far from negligible or uninteresting. The formal layout of Introduction and Song, Interlude and Dance, make a novel two-movements architectural scheme. The four basic themes, introduced at the outset, and which provide the material for the whole Symphony, are not exceptional in themselves, but the way they are brought in and utilized is distinctive.

Creston's Symphony, I suppose, is another proof of that fact that if you have charm and vivacity you don't necessarily have to be original to make friends and influence people. Charm and vivacity are plentiful here, and the sum total of effect is an agreeable half-hour or so. The music has motion, it is never glum or chunky or sodden, and its orchestration makes a bright-colored facade.

...ave ...6th ...ur- ...all.

says y... Friday Hall.

This ... the mo... Hayden ... the "Su... Symphon... most pa... sounded ... sonority. Schubert ... values of ... able, espe... bers of ... This resul... of sonorit... ments took ... and others ... major harm...

Mr. Mon... that impert... which is b... productive ... wise had t... firmly at th... last week, ... gance in th... fine delicacy ... with the lon... with true lo... personal rul... is that cuts ... repeated port... repeat marks ... never by arb... cordingly Sch... repeat marks ... rightly, and ev... taken right-t... then-the-first-se...

Heavenly len... Heaven, where ... not press, but i... with such beau... cretion is admir...

Next week Ch... be back, and wi... kovsky's "Romeo ... the G major Pi... Beethoven, with ... as soloist. By i... Munch, Heitor V... conduct the first ... his own Symphon... ...posed for the 75th Anniversary of the Boston Symphony.

Works by H...

By Harold Rogers

As if personally assuming ...role of harbinger of sp... Pierre Monteux scheduled t... sunny symphonies for the ... certs this weekend, and ... doubtful if a single Boston S... phony subscriber could be f... who thought he was pushin... season. It was a clear day ... terday, both inside and ou... Symphony Hall.

Mr. Monteux happily ... three admirable sympl... with which to conclude his ... appearances this season ... opened with Haydn's "Sur... Symphony in G major, N... which, in every movemen... either a chuckle or a twi...

He continued with Pau... ton's Symphony No. 2, a f... of his. He has justifiably ... pioned it. He conducted ... Boston three years ago, a... tinued to play it in cities ... the United States wh... Boston Symphony was ... first transcontinental to...

I welcomed hearing it ... see if my impressions o... remained constant dur... three-year interval, a... have. Mr. Creston ha... out a virile score, inte... and inventively assemb... first of the two move... expressive of song, t... of dance, and in both t... of his inspiration is ... music is appealing f... orous sound and its ... content.

The lyrical and lov... in the song movemen... atively stated by ... thony Dwyer's flu... Ralph Gomberg's ...

THE CHRISTIAN ...

Munch will give two all-Wagner programs, including the first act of "The Valkyrie" and the final scenes of "The Meistercingers." The music of Mozart will be especially honored in the "Bach-Mozart" concerts in this, the anniversary year of Mozart's birth. Choral works will include Bach's Passion According to St. John, Martinu's "Field Mass," which will be performed by the visiting Yale Glee Club; the other choral works being performed by the Festival Chorus prepared by the director, Hugh Ross.

Soloists will consist of Rudolph Serkin, Zino Francescatti, Margaret Harshaw, Albert Da Costa, Adele Addison, James Pease, Donald Gramm, David Lloyd, Margaret Willauer and others. Boris Goldovsky, Pierre Luboschutz and Genia Nemenoff will present a program of piano concerti by Mozart.

The Berkshire Music Center, the summer school maintained by this orchestra at Tanglewood, will have its 14th season July 2-Aug. 12, under the direction of Charles Munch. Inquiries and renewals should be addressed to the Festival Office at Symphony Hall in Boston.

LOS ANGELES CALIF.
EXAMINER
FEB 26 1956

Edinburgh Festival to Mark 10th Year

SEVEN symphony orchestras and programs of drama, ballet, opera and chamber music will be featured at the Edinburgh Festival, scheduled for August 19 through September 8, the British Travel Association has announced.

The Scottish capital, sometimes called "the festival city of the world," will celebrate the 10th anniversary of its great music and drama fete. Artists from at least six countries, including the United States, will take part.

Some highlights of the three-week event include five successive concerts by the Boston Symphony, the Ram Gopal Indian Ballet, the Stratford Ontario Festival Company from Canada and the Piccolo Teatro of Italy.

The Boston Symphony will alternately play under the direction of Charles Munch, permanent conductor, and Pierre Monteux, its former maestro. To mark its 75th anniversary and the fifth anniversary of the death of Serge Koussevitsky, the orchestra has commissioned several new works from distinguished composers.

The Royal Philharmonic will [illegible] under the direction [illegible] Thomas Beecham, [illegible] doyen [illegible] British conductors. Other orchestras [illegible] are: Vienna Hofmusikkapelle, London Mozart Players, Scottish National Orchestra, B. B. C. Scottish Orchestra, National Youth Orchestra of Great Britain.

Four productions will be given by the Hamburg State Opera, including Mozart's Die Zauberflote and Strawinsky's Oedipus and Mavra.

On the drama side of the festival, Canada will be represented by the Stratford Ontario Festival Company presenting Shakespeare's Henry IV.

FEB 26 1956

Tanglewood Plans Anniversary Tribute

Completion of the 75th anniversary season of the Boston Symphony orchestra will be marked at the 1956 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass., from July 4 to Aug. 12. The orchestra will be under the direction of Charles Munch.

The Berkshire Festival will consist of six weekends of concerts on Friday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoons. In addition, there will be a series of six concerts by chamber music groups on Wednesday nights in the theater, in this period.

Mr. Munch will direct the majority of the Festival concerts, the guest conductors to be Pierre Monteux, Eleazer de Carvalho, Lukas Foss, Richard Burgin and Leonard Bernstein.

Four new works which have been composed for the 75th anniversary of the orchestra and first performed in the course of the present season, will be introduced at Tanglewood. They are by Copland, Piston, Hanson and Villa-Lobos.

Mr. Munch will present two all-Wagner programs including the first act of "The Valkyrie" and the final scene of "The Mastersingers."

Zino Francescatti, Margaret Harshaw, Albert Da Costa, Adele Addison, James Pease, Donald Gramm, David Lloyd, Margaret Willauer, Boris Goldovsky, and Luboschutz and Nemenoff.

There will be two all-Wagner programs including the first act of "Die Walkure" and the final scene of "Die Meistersinger." The Yale Glee Club is slated for Martinu's "Field Mass."

FT. LAUDERDALE, FLA.
NEWS & SENTINEL
Circ. D. 27,535 - S. 24,406
FEB 26 1956

Boston Symphony Plays Debussy Compositions

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has made its diamond anniversary memorable with some masterpieces of recorded art on the RCA Victor label. Its newest to reach the record shops, Claude Debussy's "La Mer" and "Nocturnes" on LM-1939 is an achievement in artistry which the company can present with pride.

Pierre Monteux, whose special affinity for his compatriot has made him a Debussian interpreter without equal, leads this orchestra of top musicians to the very heart of the Debussy moods and expresses them with delicacy and conviction.

The recording, in new orthophonic high fidelity sound, was made in Boston with the Berkshire Festival Chorus chanting in the last movement of the Nocturnes. It is encased in an appropriately ornamented cover with liner notes about the sea by such authors as Herman Melville and Thomas Mann.

It is the sea with which Debussy is primarily concerned in these compositions, although two of the three Nocturnes deal with "Clouds" and "Festivals."

PIERRE MONTEUX
. . . Debussy interpreter

Its magnitude and mystery surge throughout the three phases of "La Mer," "From Dawn to Noon at Sea," "Play of the Waves" and "Dialogue of the Wind and the Sea," to create in the listener an impression of timelessness and vastness. The vital interpretation accorded on the record accentuates the moods.

"La Mer," completed in 1905, is called structurally the composer's most ambitious work for orchestra. It also is described as one of the most difficult to analyze because it lacks those fixed points which define a symphony so that conformity with them or departure from them can be noted.

The composer, who spent his 56 years of life in France, was an individualist of the first order and had to write his own kind of music. He became the master of impressionism in his effort to convey mood rather than form, and has never been surpassed, if ever equalled, in this respect.

The Nocturnes include two very well known ones, "Clouds" and "Festivals," plus the third in the series, "Sirens," in which the mystery of the sea again comes to mind. Members of the Berkshire Festival Chorus are heard in this Nocturne, whose song is a wordless chant of eight mezzo-soprano voices. The vocalists were rehearsed and prepared under the direction of Iva Dee Hiatt in association with Hugh Ross.

The composer's own description says: "The sea and its innumerable rhythms; then amid the billows silvered by the moon the mysterious song of the Sirens is heard; they laugh, and the song passes on."

Berenice Parker

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 130,559
FEB 25 1956

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux conducting, gave the 16th program of the 75th season in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. The program:
Symphony No 94 in G "Surprise." Haydn
Symphony No 2, Op. 35.....Creston
Symphony in C, No 7.....Schubert

By RUDOLPH ELIE

This has been a season of much-repeated music.

Yesterday's concert, for example, pleasant and even notable as it was, offered two works given by Mr. Monteux himself within three years. In last week's concert he did the Strauss again after only three years as well the Brahms' D major Concerto, which had not only been done here in '53, '54 and '55 but once before in this very season.

Looking back over the programs of the preceding 15 concerts turns up much the same pattern. Work after work has appeared for a new hearing within two and three years, not works especially needing a second performance to help establish their quality, but pieces like Schumann's Second Symphony, Beethoven's Leonore Overture, the Tchaikovsky Fourth and so on. It is not as if radio were silent on these things: all may be heard on what amounts to a daily basis and all, no doubt, are part of the basic record library of everyone.

And Next Week

And next week what? "Romeo and Juliet," given here only last season! This is a situation that is open, it seems to me, to some criticism. Surely, with the fantastic range of the orchestral repertoire, there is little need to repeat the standard classics in such a short order, and a good deal more thought might be given to it for the benefit of all concerned.

Repeated from 1953 was Paul Creston's Second Symphony, a quite unpretentious work in two extended movements suggesting, in the composer's words, "an apotheosis of the two foundations of all music: song and dance." It is, too, the first movement being of a warm lyric character, never aggressively dissonant. On the contrary, in its middle section suggests some of the elegiac lyricism of Rachmaninoff. There are some exceedingly pleasant sounds in the movement as the composer reinforces some of the lines with the piano, and it is all harmless enough. The two ensuing sections, joined as one, are of somewhat sterner stuff so far as the ear is concerned but still anything but difficult. The movement is rhythmically interesting and varied, the atmosphere gay and colorful. It went well with the audience, too.

Ten years is just about the right interval for the hearing of Haydn's Surprise symphony, which fortunately replaced the originally programmed No. 88. In the years the listener forgets just how bright and fresh this ingenious and witty work is and the experience is a delightful one. Mr. Monteux gave it a straightforward reading, letting the music speak for itself and this it does with the greatest charm. His approach to the Schubert was similarly uncluttered, yet there was a spaciousness and liftiness about it that was very winning. Some overly enthusiastic instrumental attacks slightly marred the finale and there were a couple of un-Bostonian errors in the course of the afternoon, but these are small matters indeed. It was a good concert, but surely Mr. Monteux must have other things up his ample sleeves than these thrice familiar things.

Mr. Munch returns next week doing the aforementioned "Romeo and Juliet" Overture and, with Eugene Istomin, the Beethoven Fourth Piano Concerto. It will be an occasion to welcome back the striking Brazilian composer Villa-Lobos, however, who will bring out his Symphony No. 11.

TOLEDO, OHIO
BLADE
Circ. D. 190,612 - S. 166,660
FEB 26 1956

Copland 'Ode' Given New York Premiere

A "Symphonic Ode" by Aaron Copland, celebrating the 75th anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, had a first New York performance in Carnegie Hall recently, conducted by Charles Muench. It was composed originally on commission of the Boston orchestra and the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and dedicated to the memories of Serge and Natalie Koussevitzky. The score was revised a year ago, from the original of 1928-29, intended for the 50th anniversary season of the orchestra. Mr. Koussevitzky first conducted the original Feb. 19, 1932.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 122,000
FEB 25 1956

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,872
FEB 25 1956

Monteux Conducts T... HONY ORCHESTRA ...ays Creston Music

...aracterized ...paraphrasing the jingle about a bride's apparel; something old, and something fairly new, many things borrowed, but nothing blue. Haydn was old, and so was the Schubert Symphony of what Robert Schumann claimed was "Heavenly length." The rest of the paraphrase applies to the Second Symphony of Paul Creston.

Upon the two other occasions when this work was played by the Boston Symphony (1945 and 1953) it seems to have been fairly buried under other items more newsworthy at the time. Still less than 15 years old, this large work is fairly new. In aspects of its style it represents borrowings from numerous other composers all the way from the French Impressionists down to Roy Harris, Hindemith and Rachmaninoff. But even in the jazz-manner finale, there is nothing of the blues in harmony or tunes. That is one portion of modern popular music from which Creston did not borrow for his Second Symphony.

Yet for all its eclectic nature, the work is far from negligible or uninteresting. The formal layout of Introduction and Song, Interlude and Dance, make a novel two-movements architectural scheme. The four basic themes, introduced at the outset, and which provide the material for the whole Symphony, are not exceptional in themselves, but the way they are brought in and utilized is distinctive.

Creston's Symphony, I suppose, is another proof of that fact that if you have charm and vivacity you don't necessarily have to be original to make friends and influence people. Charm and vivacity are plentiful here, and the sum total of effect is an agreeable half-hour or so. The music has motion, it is never glum or chunky or sodden, and its orchestration makes a bright-colored fa...

says yo... Friday ... Hall.

This ... the moo... Hayden ... the "Sur... Symphon... most pa... sounded ... sonority. Schubert ... values of ... able, espe... bers of t... This result ... of sonoriti... ments took ... and others ... major harm...

Mr. Mont... that impertu... which is bo... productive ... wise had th... firmly at the ... last week, t... gance in the ... fine delicacy ... with the long ... with true log... personal rule ... is that cuts n... repeated portio... repeat marks ... never by arbi... cordingly Schu... repeat marks ... rightly, and eve... taken right-th... then-the-first-sec...

Heavenly leng... Heaven, where ti... not press, but in ... with such beauti... cretion is admired...

Next week Cha... be back, and will ... kovsky's "Romeo ... the G major Pian... Beethoven, with ... as soloist. By inv... Munch, Heitor Vi... conduct the first p... his own Symphony ... posed for the 75th Anniversary of the Boston Symphony.

Works by Ha...

By Harold Rogers

As if personally assuming the role of harbinger of spring Pierre Monteux scheduled three sunny symphonies for the concerts this weekend, and it's doubtful if a single Boston Symphony subscriber could be found who thought he was pushing the season. It was a clear day yesterday, both inside and outside Symphony Hall.

Mr. Monteux happily chose three admirable symphonies with which to conclude his guest appearances this season. He opened with Haydn's "Surprise" Symphony in G major, No. 94, which, in every movement, has either a chuckle or a twinkle.

He continued with Paul Creston's Symphony No. 2, a favorite of his. He has justifiably championed it. He conducted it in Boston three years ago, and continued to play it in cities across the United States when the Boston Symphony was on its first transcontinental tour.

I welcomed hearing it again to see if my impressions of it remained constant during the three-year interval, as they have. Mr. Creston has turned out a virile score, intelligently and inventively assembled. The first of the two movements, expressive of song, the other of dance, and in both the quality of his inspiration is high. His music is appealing, sonorous sound and it is content.

The lyrical and l... in the song moveme... atively stated by ... thony Dwyer's f... Ralph Gomberg'...

Munch will give two all-Wagner programs, including the first act of "The Valkyrie" and the final scenes of "The Meistersingers." The music of Mozart will be especially honored in the "Bach-Mozart" concerts in this, the anniversary year of Mozart's birth. Choral works will include Bach's Passion According to St. John, Martinu's "Field Mass," which will be performed by the ...

SOUTH ROAD 3½ MILES
WHITE
14 FT. ...
RUNABOUT
18 FT. O...
THOMPSON
15 FT. O...
18 FT. O...
21 FT. IN...
CRUISERS
TROJAN
15 FT. O...
18 FT. INB...
LYMAN

LOS ANGELES CALIF.
EXAMINER
FEB 26 1956

Edinburgh Festival to Mark 10th Year

SEVEN symphony orchestras and programs of drama, ballet, opera and chamber music will be featured at the Edinburgh Festival, scheduled for August 19 through September 8, the British Travel Association has announced.

The Scottish capital, sometimes called "the festival city of the world," will celebrate the 10th anniversary of its great music and drama fete. Artists from at least six countries, including the United States, will take part.

Some highlights of the three-week event include five successive concerts by the Boston Symphony, the Ram Gopal Indian Ballet, the Stratford Ontario Festival Company from Canada and the Piccolo Teatro of Italy.

The Boston Symphony will alternately play under the direction of Charles Munch, permanent conductor, and Pierre Monteux, its former maestro. To mark its 75th anniversary and the fifth anniversary of the death of Serge Koussevitsky, the orchestra has commissioned several new works from distinguished composers.

The Royal Philharmonic will ... under the direction ... Thomas Beecham, doyen of British conductors. Other orchestras ... are: Vienna Hofmusikkapelle, London Mozart Players, Scottish National Orchestra, B. B. C. Scottish Orchestra, National Youth Orchestra of Great Britain.

Four productions will be given by the Hamburg State Opera, including Mozart's Die Zauberflote and Strawinsky's Oedipus and Mavra.

On the drama side of the festival, Canada will be represented by the Stratford Ontario Festival Company presenting Shakespeare's Henry IV.

FEB 26 1956

Berkshire Festival Program

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give the 1956 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox, from July 4 to Aug. 12. The Festival, together with the trip to Europe which is to follow, will complete the 75th anniversary season of the orchestra.

The festival will consist of six week ends of concerts on Friday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons following the plan of last year, when two week ends of "Bach-Mozart" concerts in the Theatre-Concert Hall were followed by four week ends in the Shed.

Charles Munch will conduct the majority of the festival concerts. Guest conductors listed are Pierre Monteux, Eleazar de Carvalho, Lukas Foss, Richard Burgin, and Leonard Bernstein. Soloist scheduled are Rudolf Serkin, Zino Francescatti, Margare... Harshaw, Albert Da Costa, Adele Addison, James Pease, Donald Gramm, David Lloyd, Margaret Willauer, Boris Goldovsky, and Luboschutz and Nemenoff.

There will be two all-Wagner programs including the first act of "Die Walkure" and the final scene of "Die Meistersinger." The Yale Glee Club is slated for Martinu's "Field Mass."

FT. LAUDERDALE, FLA.
NEWS & SENTINEL
Circ. D. 27,535 - S. 24,406

FEB 26 1956

Boston Symphony Plays Debussy Compositions

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has made its diamond anniversary memorable with some masterpieces of recorded art on the RCA Victor label. Its newest to reach the record shops, Claude Debussy's "La Mer" and "Nocturnes" on LM-1939 is an achievement in artistry which the company can present with pride.

Pierre Monteux, whose special affinity for his compatriot has made him a Debussian interpreter without equal, leads this orchestra of top musicians to the very heart of the Debussy moods and expresses them with delicacy and conviction.

The recording, in new orthophonic high fidelity sound, was made in Boston with the Berkshire Festival Chorus chanting in the last movement of the Nocturnes. It is encased in an appropriately ornamented cover with liner notes about the sea by such authors as Herman Melville and Thomas Mann.

It is the sea with which Debussy is primarily concerned in these compositions, although two of the three Nocturnes deal with "Clouds" and "Festivals."

Its magnitude and mystery surge throughout the three phases of "La Mer," "From Dawn to Noon at Sea," "Play of the Waves" and "Dialogue of the Wind and the Sea," to create in the listener an impression of timelessness and vastness. The vital interpretation accorded on the record accentuates the moods.

"La Mer," completed in 1905, is called structurally the composer's most ambitious work for orchestra. It also is described as one of the most difficult to analyze because it lacks those fixed points which define a symphony so that conformity with them or departure from them can be noted.

The composer, who spent his 56 years of life in France, was an individualist of the first order and had to write his own kind of music. He became the master of impressionism in his effort to convey mood rather than form, and has never been surpassed, if ever equalled, in this respect.

The Nocturnes include two very well known ones, "Clouds" and "Festivals," plus the third in the series, "Sirens," in which the mystery of the sea again comes to mind. Members of the Berkshire Festival Chorus are heard in this Nocturne, whose song is a wordless chant of eight mezzo-soprano voices. The vocalists were rehearsed and prepared under the direction of Iva Dee Hiatt in association with Hugh Ross.

The composer's own description says: "The sea and its innumerable rhythms; then amid the billows silvered by the moon the mysterious song of the Sirens is heard; they laugh, and the song passes on."

Berenice Parker

PIERRE MONTEUX
. . . Debussy interpreter

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 130,559

FEB 25 1956

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux conducting, gave the 16th program of the 75th season in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. The program:
Symphony No 94 in G "Surprise." Haydn
Symphony No 2, Op. 35.....Creston
Symphony in C, No 7.....Schubert

By RUDOLPH ELIE

This has been a season of much-repeated music.

Yesterday's concert, for example, pleasant and even notable as it was, offered two works given by Mr. Monteux himself within three years. In last week's concert he did the Strauss again after only three years as well the Brahms' D major Concerto, which had not only been done here in '53, '54 and '55 but once before in this very season.

Looking back over the programs of the preceding 15 concerts turns up much the same pattern. Work after work has appeared for a new hearing within two and three years, not works especially needing a second performance to help establish their quality, but pieces like Schumann's Second Symphony, Beethoven's Leonore Overture, the Tchaikovsky Fourth and so on. It is not as if radio were silent on these things: all may be heard on what amounts to a daily basis and all, no doubt, are part of the basic record library of everyone.

And Next Week

And next week what? "Romeo and Juliet," given here only last season! This is a situation that is open, it seems to me, to some criticism. Surely, with the fantastic range of the orchestral repertoire, there is little need to repeat the standard classics in such a short order, and a good deal more thought might be given to it for the benefit of all concerned.

Repeated from 1953 was Paul Creston's Second Symphony, a quite unpretentious work in two extended movements suggesting, in the composer's words, "an apotheosis of the two foundations of all music: song and dance." It is, too, the first movement being of a warm lyric character, never aggressively dissonant. On the contrary, in its middle section suggests some of the elegiac lyricism of Rachmaninoff. There are some exceedingly pleasant sounds in the movement as the composer reinforces some of the lines with the piano, and it is all harmless enough. The two ensuing sections, joined as one, are of somewhat sterner stuff so far as the ear is concerned but still anything but difficult. The movement is rhythmically interesting and varied, the atmosphere gay and colorful. It went well with the audience, too.

Ten years is just about the right interval for the hearing of Haydn's Surprise symphony, which fortunately replaced the originally programmed No. 88. In the years the listener forgets just how bright and fresh this ingenious and witty work is and the experience is a delightful one. Mr. Monteux gave it a straightforward reading, letting the music speak for itself and this it does with the greatest charm. His approach to the Schubert was similarly uncluttered, yet there was a spaciousness and liftiness about it that was very winning. Some overly enthusiastic instrumental attacks slightly marred the finale and there were a couple of un-Bostonian errors in the course of the afternoon, but these are small matters indeed. It was a good concert, but surely Mr. Monteux must have other things up his ample sleeves than these thrice familiar things.

Mr. Munch returns next week doing the aforementioned "Romeo and Juliet" Overture and, with Eugene Istomin, the Beethoven Fourth Piano Concerto. It will be an occasion to welcome back the striking Brazilian composer Villa-Lobos, however, who will bring out his Symphony No. 11.

TOLEDO, OHIO
BLADE
Circ. D. 190,612 - S. 166,660

FEB 26 1956

Copland 'Ode' Given New York Premiere

A "Symphonic Ode" by Aaron Copland, celebrating the 75th anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, had a first New York performance in Carnegie Hall recently, conducted by Charles Muench. It was composed originally on commission of the Boston orchestra and the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and dedicated to the memories of Serge and Natalie Koussevitzky. The score was revised a year ago, from the original of 1928-29, intended for the 50th anniversary season of the orchestra. Mr. Koussevitzky first conducted the original Feb. 19, 1932.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 122,000

FEB 25 1956

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,872

FEB 25 1956

Monteux Conducts The Boston Symphony Orchestra

Works by Haydn, Creston, Schubert Characterize Concert

By paraphrasing the jingle about a bride's apparel; something old and something fairly new, many things borrowed, but nothing blue. Haydn was old, and so was the Schubert Symphony of what Robert Schumann claimed was "Heavenly length." The rest of the paraphrase applies to the Second Symphony of Paul Creston.

Upon the two other occasions when this work was played by the Boston Symphony (1945 and 1953) it seems to have been fairly buried under other items more newsworthy at the time. Still less than 15 years old, this large work is fairly new. In aspects of its style it represents borrowings from numerous other composers all the way from the French Impressionists down to Roy Harris, Hindemith and Rachmaninoff. But even in the jazz manner finale, there is nothing of the blues in harmony or tunes. That is one portion of modern popular music from which Creston did not borrow for his Second Symphony.

Yet for all its eclectic nature, the work is far from negligible or uninteresting. The formal layout of Introduction and Song, Interlude and Dance, make a novel two-movements architectural scheme. The four basic themes, introduced at the outset, and which provide the material for the whole Symphony, are not exceptional in themselves, but the way they are brought in and utilized is distinctive.

Creston's Symphony, I suppose, is another proof of that fact that if you have charm and vivacity you don't necessarily have to be original to make friends and influence people. Charm and vivacity are plentiful here, and the sum total of effect is an agreeable half-hour or so. The music has motion, it is never glum or chunky

Works by Haydn

By Harold Rogers

As if personally assuming the role of harbinger of spring Pierre Monteux scheduled three sunny symphonies for the concerts this weekend, and it's doubtful if a single Boston Symphony subscriber could be found who thought he was pushing the season. It was a clear day yesterday, both inside and outside Symphony Hall.

Mr. Monteux happily chose three admirable symphonies with which to conclude his guest appearances this season. He opened with Haydn's "Surprise" Symphony in G major, No. 94, which, in every movement, either a chuckle or a twinkle.

He continued with Paul Creston's Symphony No. 2, a favorite of his. He has justifiably championed it. He conducted it Boston three years ago and continued to play it in cities in the United States. The Boston Symphony was the first transcontinental orchestra I welcomed hearing to see if my impression of it remained constant over a three-year interval. Mr. Creston has wrought out a virile score and inventively and with the two first of the two expressive of such of dance, and in his inspiration music is appealing and orous sound content.

The lyrical in the song movement atively static thony Dwyer Ralph Gombert

Heavenly length is Heaven, where time proceeds not press, but in this world with such beautiful melodies cretion is admired.

Next week Charles Munch will be back, and will conduct kovsky's "Romeo and Juliet" the G major Piano Concerto Beethoven, with Eugene Istomin as soloist. By invitation of Mr. Munch, Heitor Villa-Lobos will conduct the first performance of his own Symphony No. 11, composed for the 75th Anniversary of the Boston Symphony.

LOS ANGELES CALIF.
EXAMINER

FEB 26 1956

Edinburgh Festival to Mark 10th Year

SEVEN symphony orchestras and programs of drama, ballet, opera and chamber music will be featured at the Edinburgh Festival, scheduled for August 19 through September 8, the British Travel Association has announced.

The Scottish capital, sometimes called "the festival city of the world," will celebrate the 10th anniversary of its great music and drama fete. Artists from at least six countries, including the United States, will take part.

Some highlights of the three-week event include five successive concerts by the Boston Symphony, the Ram Gopal Indian Ballet, the Stratford Ontario Festival Company from Canada and the Piccolo Teatro of Italy.

The Boston Symphony will alternately play under the direction of Charles Munch, permanent conductor, and Pierre Monteux, its former maestro. To mark its 75th anniversary and the fifth anniversary of the death of Serge Koussevitsky, the orchestra has commissioned several new works from distinguished composers.

The Royal Philharmonic will [illegible] under the direction [illegible] Beecham, dove[illegible] British Conductor. Other orchestras [illegible] are: Vienna Hofmusikkapelle, London Mozart Players, Scottish National Orchestra, B. B. C. Scottish Orchestra, National Youth Orchestra of Great Britain.

Four productions will be given by the Hamburg State Opera, including Mozart's Die Zauberflote and Strawinsky's Oedipus and Mavra.

On the drama side of the festival, Canada will be represented by the Stratford Ontario Festival Company presenting Shakespeare's Henry IV.

FEB 26 1956

Concerts Set For Tanglewood

Munch to Conduct Boston Symphony

Special to The Standard-Times

BOSTON, Feb. 25—The Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Charles Munch will give the 1956 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox from July 4 to Aug. 12.

The festival, together with the trip to Europe which is to follow, will complete the 75th anniversary season of the Boston orchestra. The Berkshire Festival will consist of six weekends of concerts on Friday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons following the plan of last year, when two weekends of "Bach-Mozart" concerts in the Theater-Concert Hall were followed by four weekends in the Shed.

[illegible] Copland, Piston, Hanson and Villa-Lobos. Mr. Munch will give two all-Wagner programs, including the first act of "The Valkyrie" and the final scene of "The Mastersingers." The music of Mozart will be especially honored in the "Bach-Mozart" concerts in this, the anniversary year of Mozart's birth. Choral works will include Bach's Passion According to Saint John, Martinu's "Field Mass," which will be performed by the visiting Yale Glee Club—the other choral works being performed by the Festival Chorus prepared by its director, Hugh Ross.

Soloists will consist of Rudolf Serkin, Zino Francescatti, Margaret Harshaw, Albert Da Costa, Adele Addison, James Pease, Donald Gramm, David Lloyd, Margaret Willauer and others. Boris Goldovsky, Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff will present a program of piano concertos by Mozart.

FT. LAUDERDALE, FLA.
NEWS & SENTINEL
Circ. D. 27,535 - S. 24,406

FEB 26 1956

Boston Symphony Plays Debussy Compositions

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has made its diamond anniversary memorable with some masterpieces of recorded art on the RCA Victor label. Its newest to reach the record shops, Claude Debussy's "La Mer" and "Nocturnes" on LM-1939 is an achievement in artistry which the company can present with pride.

Pierre Monteux, whose special affinity for his compatriot has made him a Debussian interpreter without equal, leads this orchestra of top musicians to the very heart of the Debussy moods and expresses them with delicacy and conviction.

The recording, in new orthophonic high fidelity sound, was made in Boston with the Berkshire Festival Chorus chanting in the last movement of the Nocturnes. It is encased in an appropriately ornamented cover with liner notes about the sea by such authors as Herman Melville and Thomas Mann.

It is the sea with which Debussy is primarily concerned in these compositions, although two of the three Nocturnes deal with "Clouds" and "Festivals."

Its magnitude and mystery surge throughout the three phases of "La Mer," "From Dawn to Noon at Sea," "Play of the Waves" and "Dialogue of the Wind and the Sea," to create in the listener an impression of timelessness and vastness. The vital interpretation accorded on the record accentuates the moods.

"La Mer," completed in 1905, is called structurally the composer's most ambitious work for orchestra. It also is described as one of the most difficult to analyze because it lacks those fixed points which define a symphony so that conformity with them or departure from them can be noted.

The composer, who spent his 56 years of life in France, was an individualist of the first order and had to write his own kind of music. He became the master of impressionism in his effort to convey mood rather than form, and has never been surpassed, if ever equalled, in this respect.

The Nocturnes include two very well known ones, "Clouds" and "Festivals," plus the third in the series, "Sirens," in which the mystery of the sea again comes to mind. Members of the Berkshire Festival Chorus are heard in this Nocturne, whose song is a wordless chant of eight mezzo-soprano voices. The vocalists were rehearsed and prepared under the direction of Iva Dee Hiatt in association with Hugh Ross.

The composer's own description says: "The sea and its innumerable rhythms; then amid the billows silvered by the moon the mysterious song of the Sirens is heard; they laugh, and the song passes on."

Berenice Parker

PIERRE MONTEUX
. . . Debussy interpreter

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 130,559

FEB 25 1956

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux conducting, gave the 16th program of the 75th season in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. The program:

Symphony No 94 in G "Surprise." Haydn
Symphony No 2, Op. 35.....Creston
Symphony in C, No 7.....Schubert

By RUDOLPH ELIE

This has been a season of much-repeated music.

Yesterday's concert, for example, pleasant and even notable as it was, offered two works given by Mr. Monteux himself within three years. In last week's concert he did the Strauss again after only three years as well the Brahms' D major Concerto, which had not only been done here in '53, '54 and '55 but once before in this very season.

Looking back over the programs of the preceding 15 concerts turns up much the same pattern. Work after work has appeared for a new hearing within two and three years, not works especially needing a second performance to help establish their quality, but pieces like Schumann's Second Symphony, Beethoven's Leonore Overture, the Tchaikovsky Fourth and so on. It is not as if radio were silent on these things: all may be heard on what amounts to a daily basis and all, no doubt, are part of the basic record library of everyone.

And Next Week

And next week what? "Romeo and Juliet," given here only last season! This is a situation that is open, it seems to me, to some criticism. Surely, with the fantastic range of the orchestral repertoire, there is little need to repeat the standard classics in such a short order, and a good deal more thought might be given to it for the benefit of all concerned.

Repeated from 1953 was Paul Creston's Second Symphony, a quite unpretentious work in two extended movements suggesting, in the composer's words, "an apotheosis of the two foundations of all music: song and dance." It is, too, the first movement being of a warm lyric character, never aggressively dissonant. On the contrary, in its middle section suggests some of the elegiac lyricism of Rachmaninoff. There are some exceedingly pleasant sounds in the movement as the composer reinforces some of the lines with the piano, and it is all harmless enough. The two ensuing sections, joined as one, are of somewhat sterner stuff so far as the ear is concerned but still anything but difficult. The movement is rhythmically interesting and varied, the atmosphere gay and colorful. It went well with the audience, too.

Ten years is just about the right interval for the hearing of Haydn's Surprise symphony, which fortunately replaced the originally programmed No. 88. In the years the listener forgets just how bright and fresh this ingenious and witty work is and the experience is a delightful one. Mr. Monteux gave it a straightforward reading, letting the music speak for itself and this it does with the greatest charm. His approach to the Schubert was similarly uncluttered, yet there was a spaciousness and liftiness about it that was very winning. Some overly enthusiastic instrumental attacks slightly marred the finale and there were a couple of un-Bostonian errors in the course of the afternoon, but these are small matters indeed. It was a good concert, but surely Mr. Monteux must have other things up his ample sleeves than these thrice familiar things.

Mr. Munch returns next week doing the aforementioned "Romeo and Juliet" Overture and, with Eugene Istomin, the Beethoven Fourth Piano Concerto. It will be an occasion to welcome back the striking Brazilian composer Villa-Lobos, however, who will bring out his Symphony No. 11,

TOLEDO, OHIO
BLADE
Circ. D. 190,612 - S. 166,660

FEB 26 1956

Copland 'Ode' Given New York Premiere

A "Symphonic Ode" by Aaron Copland, celebrating the 75th anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, had a first New York performance in Carnegie Hall recently, conducted by Charles Muench. It was composed originally on commission of the Boston orchestra and the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and dedicated to the memories of Serge and Natalie Koussevitzky. The score was revised a year ago, from the original of 1928-29, intended for the 50th anniversary season of the orchestra. Mr. Koussevitzky first conducted the original Feb. 19, 1932.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 122,000

FEB 25 1956

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,872

FEB 25 1956

Monteu

...paraphrasing the jingle a... a bride's apparel; something ... and something fairly new, ma... things borrowed, but nothing bl... Haydn was old, and so was ... Schubert Symphony of w... Robert Schumann claimed w... "Heavenly length." The rest ... the paraphrase applies to t... Second Symphony of Paul Cre... ton.

Upon the two other occasion... when this work was played b... the Boston Symphony (1945 an... 1953) it seems to have been fairl... buried under other items mor... newsworthy at the time. Still les... than 15 years old, this large work is fairly new. In aspects of it style it represents borrowings from numerous other composers all the way from the French Impressionists down to Roy Harris, Hindemith and Rachmaninoff. But even in the jazz-manner finale, there is nothing of the blues in harmony or tunes. That is one portion of modern popular music from which Creston did not borrow for his Second Symphony.

Yet for all its eclectic nature, the work is far from negligible or uninteresting. The formal layout of Introduction and Song, Interlude and Dance, make a novel two-movements architectural scheme. The four basic themes, introduced at the outset, and which provide the material for the whole Symphony, are not exceptional in themselves, but the way they are brought in and utilized is distinctive.

Creston's Symphony, I suppose, is another proof of that fact that if you have charm and vivacity you don't necessarily have to be original to make friends and influence people. Charm and vivacity are plentiful here, and the sum total of effect is an agreeable half-hour or so. The music has motion, it is never glum or chunky

...HONY ORCHESTRA

...ays Creston Music

...gave 16th ...atur... or sodden, and its orchestration makes a bright-colored ...

THE CHRIS...

...onducts T...

Works by Hay...

By Harold Rogers

As if personally assuming the role of harbinger of spring Pierre Monteux scheduled three sunny symphonies for the concerts this weekend, and it's doubtful if a single Boston Symphony subscriber could be found who thought he was pushing the season. It was a clear day yesterday, both inside and outside Symphony Hall.

Mr. Monteux happily chose three admirable symphonies with which to conclude his guest appearances this season. He opened with Haydn's "Surprise" Symphony in G major, No. 94, which, in every movement, has either a chuckle or a twinkle.

He continued with Paul Creston's Symphony No. 2, a favorite of his. He has justifiably championed it. He conducted it in Boston three years ago, and continued to play it in cities across the United States when the Boston Symphony was on its first transcontinental tour.

I welcomed hearing it again to see if my impressions of it had remained constant during this three-year interval, and they have. Mr. Creston has turned out a virile score, intelligently and inventively assembled. The first of the two movements is expressive of song, the second of dance, and in both the quality of his inspiration is high. His music is appealing for its vigorous sound and its emotional content.

The lyrical and lovely melody in the song movement was evocatively stated by Doriot Anthony Dwyer's flute and by Ralph Gomberg's oboe. T... No. 11, composed for the 75th Anniversary of the Boston Symphony.

DEAR FERDL:
reading your C...
weeks after re...
tidied, and so...
sight as musi...
ment of old ...
the breeze, ...
of the form...
Schubert c... traordinar...
of such ly...
engage hi...
tention.
Mr. M...
the "Gre... from fir...
the Hay... nearly ...
his effo...
pletely ...
neat ...
the ...
abo...
N...
Bra...

FEB 27 1956

LOS ANGELES CALIF.
EXAMINER

FEB 26 1956

Edinburgh Festival to Mark 10th Year

SEVEN symphony orchestras and programs of drama, ballet, opera and chamber music will be featured at the Edinburgh Festival, scheduled for August 19 through September 8, the British Travel Association has announced.

The Scottish capital, sometimes called "the festival city of the world," will celebrate the 10th anniversary of its great music and drama fete. Artists from at least six countries, including the United States, will take part.

Some highlights of the three-week event include five successive concerts by the Boston Symphony, the Ram Gopal Indian Ballet, the Stratford Ontario Festival Company from Canada and the Piccolo Teatro of Italy.

The Boston Symphony will alternately play under the direction of Charles Munch, permanent conductor, and Pierre Monteux, its former maestro. To mark its 75th anniversary and the fifth anniversary of the death of Serge Koussevitsky, the orchestra has commissioned several new works from distinguished composers.

The Royal Philharmonic will be heard under the direction of Sir Thomas Beecham, doyen of British conductors. Other orchestras scheduled are: Vienna Hofmusikkapelle, London Mozart Players, Scottish National Orchestra, B. B. C. Scottish Orchestra, National Youth Orchestra of Great Britain.

Four productions will be given by the Hamburg State Opera, including Mozart's Die Zauberflote and Strawinsky's Oedipus and Mavra.

On the drama side of the festival, Canada will be represented by the Stratford Ontario Festival Company presenting Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Summer Plans For Tanglewood Are Announced

The Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Charles Munch will give the 1956 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox, from July 4 to Aug. 12. The festival, together with the trip to Europe which is to follow, will complete the 75th anniversary season of the Boston orchestra. The Berkshire Festival will consist of six weekends of concerts on Friday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons following the plan of last year, when two weekends of "Bach-Mozart" concerts in the Theatre-Concert Hall were followed by four weekends in the Shed. In addition there will be a series of six concerts by chamber music groups on Wednesday evenings in the Theatre through this period.

Charles Munch will conduct the majority of the Festival concerts. The guest conductors will be Pierre Monteux, Eleazar de Carvalho, Lukas Foss, Richard Burgin and Leonard Bernstein, Mr. Bernstein dedicating a program to the memory of Serge Koussevitzky. Four new works which have been composed for the 75th anniversary of the orchestra and first performed in the course of the present season, will be introduced at Tanglewood —they are by Copland, Piston, Hanson and Villa-Lobos. Mr. Munch will give two all-Wagner programs, including the first act of "The Valkyrie" and the final scene of "The Mastersingers." The music of Mozart will be especially honored in the "Bach-Mozart" concerts in this, the anniversary year of Mozart's birth. Choral works will include Bach's Passion According to Saint John, Martinu's "Field Mass," which will be performed by the visiting Yale Glee Club—the other choral works being performed by the Festival Chorus prepared by its director, Hugh Ross.

Soloists will consist of Rudolf Serkin, Zino Francescatti, Margaret Harshaw, Albert Da Costa, Adele Addison, James Pease, Donald Gramm, David Lloyd, Margaret Willauer and others. Boris Goldovsky, Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff will present a program of piano concertos by Mozart.

10
Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 179,065

FEB 26 1956

Walter Piston works on musical composition at home. His new Sixth Symphony will be played here by Boston Symphony.

Portrait of a Teacher-Composer

By G. Y. LOVERIDGE

AS I pushed open the iron gate in the stone wall, the door of the house opened, disclosing a French poodle frantically barking around a bone in its mouth. The dog, which probably meant no harm anyway, was being restrained by a gray-haired man in a tweed jacket. He smiled and invited me to come in. His countenance was calm and reflective, and his eyes, I thought, were judicious.

This was my first view of Walter Piston, American composer and teacher, whose Sixth Symphony will be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Veterans Memorial Auditorium Tuesday night. Mr. Piston lives near the top of a rather steep and winding road—at 127 Somerset Street, Belmont, not far from Cambridge—in a house designed by his wife, the artist, Kathryn Nason. She is secretary of the Boston Society of Independent Artists. His sister-in-law, Gertrude Nason, is also a painter, and his brother-in-law, Thomas, is famous for his wood engravings.

The house consists essentially of a studio for Mr. Piston at the left and a studio for his wife at the right, with a "buffer zone," as he calls it, between. The neighborhood is still somewhat rural, but there are constant encroachments by what is loosely known as civilization. Part of the stone wall was knocked down recently, along with a couple of trees, by the driver of a stolen car, who backed up and escaped.

Brown Prevailing Color

We sat in Mr. Piston's studio. At one wall was a long work table with music manuscript paper on it. A piano was handy. There were shelves of books, and some sound equipment and pictures. Beams showed in the high, plastered ceiling. The prevailing color was brown. Mr. Piston himself wore tan shoes and a brown bow tie. A harmonious and peaceful atmosphere, all in all, and Mr. Piston's voice, when he removed his pipe to speak, was consonantly calm.

One thinks of his humor, his seriousness, his work, and himself as rooted in New England, because he was born in Maine, lives and teaches in Massachusetts, and spends his summers in Vermont; but he has had nourishment from Europe, too, not only through the arts but through blood. His paternal grandfather was an Italian seafarer named Pistone, who married a girl named Experience Hamor in Rockland, Maine.

At 62, Mr. Piston is in his 30th year of teaching at Harvard, though this is the first full sabbatical year he has had. He is working on three commissions, including one from the Louisville Symphony Orchestra. His Sixth Symphony was commissioned by the Boston Orchestra and the Koussevitzky Music Foundation for the orchestra's 75th anniversary season.

"I've been putting off the Louisville people for seven years," he said, "but I hope to have this ready for performance in the fall. It's a piece in three movements, called 'Serenade.' I've run out of non-committal titles."

Doesn't Have Time

He seldom uses the piano in composing, unless he is composing for the piano. To touch a note on the piano that is meant to be played by the horn, he remarked, is "perfectly ridiculous." As for playing the piano, he "doesn't really have time."

I asked his views on the problem of the man who wants to do creative work but has to teach for a living.

"I like teaching," he replied. "I think it takes up an awful lot of time and energy and thought. But I think it's an awfully good thing to keep you waked up.

"Yes, I work at night. I work when I feel like it." He paused, smiled, and lighted his pipe again. "And I always feel like it. It's hard to say, really, when you work. You may be composing while you're driving your car. And while you're sleeping."

As to inspiration, he said, "There's nothing like beginning to work. Sometimes I say to the students, 'Take a couple of notes and start working, and pretty soon you may have three.'"

He remarked of his sabbatical freedom, "It is good for a man to be with his thoughts."

His Sixth Symphony, he said, was a "tremendous test of endurance and techniques."

"I had three movements done on Oct. 1," he explained, "and Mr. Munch (Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra) wanted it for Nov. 8. He wanted it to be the first of the series of commissioned works for the season and asked me to put on steam. I told him he'd have it for the second New York trip. I put my foot in it, really. A letter came back saying he wanted to play it in Boston before New York.

"I sat on that thing 24 hours a day, with two copyists at hand. I used to wake up at night thinking whether I could get it done. Munch went ahead and announced it. He hadn't laid eyes on the score. He hadn't seen a note. I had the score finished two weeks before the first rehearsal. But he didn't get the score until the week before the concert, which was last Nov. 25."

I remarked that all this seemed to indicate Mr. Munch's confidence in the powers of Mr. Piston. Mr. Piston, lighting his pipe again, remarked with genial force that it indicated Mr. Munch to be a "damn fool" and that the whole affair had been "a peculiar experiment in human relations." The fact remains that Mr. Munch got his symphony.

"I wrote a Toccata for him," said Mr. Piston, smiling, "and he scheduled it before he saw it and played it in 39 concerts, when he brought an orchestra here from France in the 1948-49 season."

The Toccata is dedicated to Mr. Munch. And, in connection with the playing of his Sixth Symphony, Mr. Piston has written: "I take this occasion to express my immense indebtedness to the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and to the conductors Serge Koussevitzky, Richard Burgin and Charles Munch for the many superb performances of my music."

Came Out the Same

He and Mr. Munch had a slight musical tussle not long ago. Mr. Piston accused the conductor of having played the scherzo of the new symphony faster at a concert on Friday than at one on Saturday. Tape recordings were produced.

"We timed them with a stopwatch," Mr. Piston said. "They came out just the same. Mr. Munch looked at me with one of those looks that means 'Composers are crazy,' or something of the sort." He smiled.

Mr. Piston's musical career had rather odd beginnings. As a youngster, he could look at printed music and hear it sounding in his head, a faculty that he assumed was possessed by everybody else as well.

"I just couldn't avoid becoming a musician, I guess," he said, "though I made several attempts to avoid it. I studied to become a mechanical draftsman first. I went to an art school because it was free and the conservatory cost money. I played violin and piano. All through it, I used to play in all the dives in Boston."

He took up harmony, theory, and counterpoint at Harvard, and later studied with Nadia Boulanger in Paris.

Wrote Several Books

Mr. Piston is the author of several books. He showed me a copy of the fourth, "Orchestration," which inclues drawings of instruments by him and his wife.

Then he showed me an oddity, an edition of his book on harmony pirated by the Chinese Communists. The book was bound in paper covers and had his name in Roman letters inside the cover in the midst of the Chinese letterpress. Since there were also Western dates after the Chinese names of his listed compositions, he could tell what the compositions were.

"The first I knew about this edition," he said, "was when it was discovered by a Chinese student in the Chinese Library at Harvard. Dr. Chou, the librarian, wrote me out a slip that looked like a laundry check and told me to send it to the Oriental Book Company in Hong Kong. So I did, and I got this copy back. It cost $1.40. I think it was pirated from the English edition, because there's a reference to the English edition on the title page.

New Wood Engraving

"There's a Japanese edition coming out. I recently had a flowery letter saying that it was now in proofs."

He showed me, too, a new wood engraving, a pastoral scene, by his brother-in-law, as well as a self-portrait, in which Mr. Nason seems to be amused at having turned his hand to any such subject.

Mr. Piston's sound equipment is a "pure business proposition."

"I have only one or two tapes that aren't my own music," he said, "and I don't even listen to mine very much."

Television has not yet crossed his threshold. Even FM, for which he had some hope, disappoints him. As an example, he mentioned a too-rapidly revolving studio turntable sending out Beethoven's C-minor symphony in C-sharp minor, changing the tone colors of the instruments, and, of course, playing the music too fast.

"After you've done that," he said, "there's not much left."

Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 48,629

FEB 29 1956

Music

Piston Symphony Features Fourth Concert Of Boston Orchestra in Veterans' Memorial

By RUTH TRIPP

The fourth concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra last evening at Veterans' Memorial Auditorium was a gala event. A capacity house was present to hear Charles Munch conduct the first Rhode Island performance of Walter Piston's Symphony No. 6, a work commissioned by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Koussevitzky Music Foundation for the 75th anniversary of the orchestra. The composer was present and he and Dr. Munch were recalled three times to acknowledge the hearty applause.

The opening half of the concert celebrated the Mozart Jubilee in a unique manner. His Adagio and Fugue for String Orchestra, K.546, gave us the opportunity to hear the superb tone quality of the strings of this orchestra. It is doubtful if anywhere at the present time one could hear a more delicately shaded or more perfectly controlled ensemble than we heard in the opening Adagio. The meaning of its lyrical song would be different for every listener but of a sameness in its intimate and immediate communication. The Fugue, with its lively thematic progress and rested the attention and recalled the freshness of Mozart's writing.

Mozart's Sinfonia Concertante, for Oboe, Clarinet, Horn and Bassoon, K.297b, featuring the first desk players, Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Gino Cioffi, clarinet; James Stagliano, horn, and Sherman Walt, bassoon, was gay and amusing, but only because all its difficulties were so easily overcome by the virtuosity of the players. It might have been tedious and boring in spots with players of lesser rank, but Dr. Munch managed to bring the whole thing to life and to keep it moving with alternate wit and charm. The soloists were recalled several times and all concerned showed great enthusiasm for this special tribute to Mozart.

The Piston Symphony No. 6 held the attention throughout. Its start was brusque and virile. The crosscurrents of the counterpoint were very exciting. (Why not, since Mr. Piston is the author of one of the best text books on the subject?) The music gathered great momentum and then subsided to a very delicate pianissimo at the end of the first movement. The second movement exhibited percussion as an important part of orchestral ensemble. Short, incisive bits punctuated the busy conversation of the strings. The entire movement was wonderfully worked out.

The mood of the third movement, an Adagio, was expansive and here the strings were especially effective. The cello solo was beautiful. The final movement was blatant and bold with plenty of motion. The working out of the fugal section, which began in the brass section, was spirited. The composition ended with definite abruptness in a manner which brought quick and spontaneous applause.

Beethoven's Overture to Leonore, No. 2, closed the program with its familiar melodies. The off-stage trumpet, the singing themes, the obvious dramatic effects somehow served to turn one's thoughts back to the Piston work and to the intricate fabric of its writing. Time does strange things to music but, somehow, the Piston No. 6 seemed to be a work solid enough to survive.

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 154,241

FEB 27 1956

STUDYING SCORE for concert to be given in Jordan Hall Wednesday, left to right. Theodore K. Hebert, Netherlands consul; Samuel Mayes, principal cellist of the Boston Symphony orchestra, who will be solist and Jacobus Langendoen, Symphony violincellist. Langendoen's new compositions, "Siciliana" and "Burlesca" will be featured.

Times (e)
PAWTUCKET-
CENTRAL FALLS, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 38,858

FEB 29 1956

Music In Review

Boston Symphony Plays Work Written For 75th Anniversary

The Boston Symphony Orchestra played an enjoyable concert last night in the Veterans Memorial Auditorium, Providence. Charles Munch conducted and introduced the new "Sixth Symphony" by Walter Piston, Maine-born composer, who was commissioned to write the work for the 75th anniversary of the orchestra.

The "Sixth Symphony" had a grandeur without ostentation, and in some of its bombastic passages evoked visions of the rugged coast line and the slash of a nor'easter. The solemness of some of the passages, and the depth of tonal mass in the third movement, adagio sereno, were remindful of the hushed magnitude of the vast pine forests of New England. It is a robust composition and shows a distinct American quality.

The program opened with two Mozart works, "Adagio and Fugue in C-Minor for Strings, K.540," and "Sinfonia Concertante for Oboe, Clarinet, French Horn and Bassoon, K.297b." The four instrumentalists played with great artistry, and the oboe and clarinet passages were thrilling in the lengthy, rapid passages. The first movement, allegro, was a sparkling rhythmic movement, gay, swirling and dancing like a dainty toy ballet.

The second movement, adagio, was almost andante in its serene stateliness, hymnal in development in which the four soloists played as an orchestra separate from the supporting instruments as each one carried the melody in turn accompanied by the other three.

The final movement comprised variation on the preceding movements and the virtuosity of the reed soloists, and their integration with the supporting instruments, was a gay delight to the audience. Even Dr. Munch abandoned his icy coolness and swayed and gestured with the undulating rhythms of the sparkling variations. The soloists were recalled four times by the persisting applause.

The opening Mozart was disappointing as a curtain-raiser. It had a wealth of melody and harmony, strings only, and Dr. Munch brought out the great beauty and depth of the work. It was played with great expressiveness, perhaps a little too much so, for it appeared that the conductor strove too hard for elegance. It was a "churchy" piece, almost religioso, and would be most beautifully presented if incorporated in a mass. It lacked the accustomed verve of Mozart and is, perhaps, one of the many "canons" he wrote.

The program closed with Beethoven's "Overture to Leonore No. 2." It was a pleasing finale to a superior concert.

C. H. L.

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,872

FEB 28 1956

Concerts in Prospect for Boston

Villa-Lobos to Conduct Première of New Symphony

Heitor Villa-Lobos, Brazilian composer, has been invited by Charles Munch to conduct the first performances of his own Symphony No. 11 at the weekend concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday afternoon and Saturday evening.

Mr. Villa-Lobos, who last appeared with the orchestra in February, 1945, has composed his new symphony for the 75th anniversary of the Boston Symphony. In four movements, it is dedicated to the memory of Serge and Natalie Koussevitzky and is dated "New York, 1955."

Mr. Munch will open the program with Tchaikovsky's Overture-Fantasia, "Romeo and Juliet" and after the intermission the pianist, Eugene Istomin, will make his Boston debut with the orchestra in Beethoven's Fourth Concerto in G major.

VARIETY
NEW YORK, N. Y.

FEB 29 1956

IN BOSTON . . .

WEEI began a 13-week series on Friday night broadcasts from Totem Pole Ballroom (24) from 9:05 to 9:30 . . . Carl Moore, WEEI personality, vacationing in Sarasota, Fla. . . . Jesse Buffum, former WEEI farm director, died in North Adams, Feb. 20 . . . Harvey J. Struthers, gen. mgr. WEEI, back from Washington session of NARTB. Struthers is prexy of the Mass. Broadcasters Assn. . . . Carl Dickerman, dean of

(Continued on page 34)

have been bought by Rise shaving cream to intro new economy size . . . WMUR-TV, Manchester, N. H., Channel 9, now competing with the Hub tv stations through increased power, preems a "Farm and Home Digest" program for farmers Friday (2) . . . Curt Gowdy, WHDH and Red Sox sportscaster, received the Winthrop Brotherhood Award at the community's seventh annual observance of Brotherhood Week (22) . . . Arthur C. King, production mgr. WEEI, left Tues. (28) as a member of the Navy Orientation Cruise for Pensacola, Fla.

MUSICAL COURIER
NEW YORK CITY

FEB 1956

. . . Congratulations to the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Maestro Munch. The Symphony is celebrating its 75th (what a year for anniversaries!), so this is a specially good time to hear the great organization. It will be putting its best sound well forward. And its done a good thing, a thing which should endear it to music lovers forever and ever: the Symphony and the Serge Koussevitzky Music Foundation in the Library of Congress have jointly commissioned 15 new (and they mean new) works by top composers. Many are to be heard on NBC broadcasts; Victor's recording others. Eight come from the U.S., one from South America, six from the old country. Loads of luck to everyone involved. And if you should get your Courier before it's off the press, do not forget to tune in tonight (the 30th of January) and watch and listen to the most elaborate music show, the one Hurok's dreamed up via "Producers' Showcase" on NBC TV. He's even snagged Tebaldi, and this time you can see and hear her without fighting your way in. That's all for now. See you closer to spring.

UBIQUITOUS

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,872

MAR 1 - 1956

Lotte Jacobi

Eugene Istomin will make his Boston debut as soloist in Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 4 with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the weekend concerts.

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 397,884

MAR 1 - 1956

Great Choruses at Symphony

The Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society, conducted by G. Wallace Woodworth, will join with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for a program of choral music by Mozart and Faure at the Friday afternoon-Saturday evening concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, March 9 and 10.

Woodworth will conduct three Mozart works: the "Regina Coeli" for chorus, soprano solo and orchestra, K. 108; the "Ave, Verum Corpus" for chorus and string orchestra; and the "Vesperae de Dominca" for chorus and orchestra, with soprano, alto, tenor and bass solo.

BOSTON DA

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 154,241

FEB 27 1956

STUDYING SCORE for concert to be given in Jordan Hall Wednesday, left to right. Theodore K. Hebert, Netherlands consul; Samuel Mayes, principal cellist of the Boston Symphony orchestra, who will be solist and Jacobus Langendoen, Symphony violincellist. Langendoen's new compositions, "Siciliana" and "Burlesca" will be featured.

Times (e)
PAWTUCKET-
CENTRAL FALLS, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 38,858

FEB 29 1956

Music In Review

Boston Symphony Plays Work Written For 75th Anniversary

The Boston Symphony Orchestra played an enjoyable concert last night in the Veterans Memorial Auditorium, Providence. Charles Munch conducted and introduced the new "Sixth Symphony" by Walter Piston, Maine-born composer, who was commissioned to write the work for the 75th anniversary of the orchestra.

The "Sixth Symphony" had a grandeur without ostentation, and in some of its bombastic passages evoked visions of the rugged coast line and the slash of a nor'easter. The solemness of some of the passages, and the depth of tonal mass in the third movement, adagio sereno, were remindful of the hushed magnitude of the vast pine forests of New England. It is a robust composition and shows a distinct American quality.

The program opened with two Mozart works, "Adagio and Fugue in C-Minor for Strings, K.540," and "Sinfonia Concertante for Oboe, Clarinet, French Horn and Bassoon, K.297b." The four instrumentalists played with great artistry, and the oboe and clarinet passages were thrilling in the lengthy, rapid passages. The first movement, allegro, was a sparkling rhythmic movement, gay, swirling and dancing like a dainty toy ballet.

The second movement, adagio, was almost andante in its serene stateliness, hymnal in development in which the four soloists played as an orchestra separate from the supporting instruments as each one carried the melody in turn accompanied by the other three.

The final movement comprised variation on the preceding movements and the virtuosity of the reed soloists, and their integration with the supporting instruments, was a gay delight to the audience. Even Dr. Munch abandoned his icy coolness and swayed and gestured with the undulating rhythms of the sparkling variations. The soloists were recalled four times by the persisting applause.

The opening Mozart was disappointing as a curtain-raiser. It had a wealth of melody and harmony, strings only, and Dr. Munch brought out the great beauty and depth of the work. It was played with great expressiveness, perhaps a little too much so, for it appeared that the conductor strove too hard for elegance. It was a "churchy" piece, almost religioso, and would be most beautifully presented if incorporated in a mass. It lacked the accustomed verve of Mozart and is, perhaps, one of the many "canons" he wrote.

The program closed with Beethoven's "Overture to Leonore No. 2." It was a pleasing finale to a superior concert.

C. H. L.

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,872

FEB 28 1956

Concerts in Prospect for Boston

Villa-Lobos to Conduct Première of New Symphony

Heitor Villa-Lobos, Brazilian composer, has been invited by Charles Munch to conduct the first performances of his own Symphony No. 11 at the weekend concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday afternoon and Saturday evening.

Mr. Villa-Lobos, who last appeared with the orchestra in February, 1945, has composed his new symphony for the 75th anniversary of the Boston Symphony. In four movements, it is dedicated to the memory of Serge and Natalie Koussevitzky and is dated "New York, 1955."

Mr. Munch will open the program with Tchaikovsky's Overture-Fantasia, "Romeo and Juliet" and after the intermission the pianist, Eugene Istomin, will make his Boston debut with the orchestra in Beethoven's Fourth Concerto in G major.

MUSICAL COURIER
NEW YORK CITY

FEB 1956

. . . Congratulations to the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Maestro Munch. The Symphony is celebrating its 75th (what a year for anniversaries!), so this is a specially good time to hear the great organization. It will be putting its best sound well forward. And its done a good thing, a thing which should endear it to music lovers forever and ever: the Symphony and the Serge Koussevitzky Music Foundation in the Library of Congress have jointly commissioned 15 new (and they mean new) works by top composers. Many are to be heard on NBC broadcasts; Victor's recording others. Eight come from the U.S., one from South America, six from the old country. Loads of luck to everyone involved. And if you should get your Courier before it's off the press, do not forget to tune in tonight (the 30th of January) and watch and listen to the most elaborate music show, the one Hurok's dreamed up via "Producers' Showcase" on NBC TV. He's even snagged Tebaldi, and this time you can see and hear her without fighting your way in. That's all for now. See you closer to spring.

UBIQUITOUS

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,872

MAR 1 - 1956

Lotte Jacobi

Eugene Istomin will make his Boston debut as soloist in Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 4 with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the weekend concerts.

VARIETY
NEW YORK CITY

From the Production Centres

Hub announcers, celebrated his 30th anni on the air Fri. (24), on the same station he started with three decades ago, WEEI . . . WBZ-WBZA presented the "Boston Symphony Story" by the Boston Symphony Orchestra Sun. (26) . . . Heavy saturation spots over WNAC-TV have been bought by Rise shaving cream to intro new economy size . . . WMUR-TV, Manchester, N. H., Channel 9, now competing with the Hub tv stations through increased power, preems a "Farm and Home Digest" program for farmers Friday (2) . . . Curt Gowdy, WHDH and Red Sox sportscaster, received the Winthrop Brotherhood Award at the community's seventh annual observance of Brotherhood Week (22) . . . Arthur C. King, production mgr. WEEI, left Tues. (28) as a member of the Navy Orientation Cruise for Pensacola, Fla.

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 397,884

MAR 1 - 1956

Great Choruses at Symphony

The Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society, conducted by G. Wallace Woodworth, will join with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for a program of choral music by Mozart and Faure at the Friday afternoon-Saturday evening concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, March 9 and 10.

Woodworth will conduct three Mozart works: the "Regina Coeli" for chorus, soprano solo and orchestra, K. 108; the "Ave, Verum Corpus" for chorus and string orchestra; and the "Vesperae de Dominca" for chorus and orchestra, with soprano, alto, tenor and bass solo.

BOSTON DAI

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 154,241

FEB 27 1956

STUDYING SCORE for concert to be given in Jordan Hall Wednesday, left to right, Theodore K. Hebert, Netherlands consul; Samuel Mayes, principal cellist of the Boston Symphony orchestra, who will be solist, and Jacobus Langendoen, Symphony violincellist. Langendoen's new compositions, "Siciliana" and "Burlesca" will be featured.

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,872

FEB 28 1956

Concerts in Prospect for Boston

Villa-Lobos to Conduct Première of New Symphony

Heitor Villa-Lobos, Brazilian composer, has been invited by Charles Munch to conduct the first performances of his own Symphony No. 11 at the weekend concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday afternoon and Saturday evening.

Mr. Villa-Lobos, who last appeared with the orchestra in February, 1945, has composed his new symphony for the 75th anniversary of the Boston Symphony. In four movements, it is dedicated to the memory of Serge and Natalie Koussevitzky and is dated "New York, 1955."

Mr. Munch will open the program with Tchaikovsky's Overture-Fantasia, "Romeo and Juliet" and after the intermission the pianist, Eugene Istomin, will make his Boston debut with the orchestra in Beethoven's Fourth Concerto in G major.

VARIE...
NEW...

...the Production Centres

Hub announcers, celebrated his 30th anni on the air Fri. (24), on the same station he started with three decades ago, WEEI . . . WBZ-WBZA presented the "Boston Symphony Story" by the Boston Symphony Orchestra Sun. (26) . . . Heavy saturation spots over WNAC-TV have been bought by Rise shaving cream to intro new economy size . . . WMUR-TV, Manchester, N. H., Channel 9, now competing with the Hub tv stations through increased power, preems a "Farm and Home Digest" program for farmers Friday (2) . . . Curt Gowdy, WHDH and Red Sox sportscaster, received the Winthrop Brotherhood Award at the community's seventh annual observance of Brotherhood Week (22) . . . Arthur C. King, production mgr. WEEI, left Tues. (28) as a member of the Navy Orientation Cruise for Pensacola, Fla.

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 397,884

MAR 1 - 1956

Great Choruses at Symphony

The Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society, conducted by G. Wallace Woodworth, will join with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for a program of choral music by Mozart and Faure at the Friday afternoon-Saturday evening concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, March 9 and 10.

Woodworth will conduct three Mozart works: the "Regina Coeli" for chorus, soprano solo and orchestra, K. 108; the "Ave, Verum Corpus" for chorus and string orchestra; and the "Vesperae de Dominca" for chorus and orchestra, with soprano, alto, tenor and bass solo.

...(e)
PAWTUCKET-
CENTRAL FALLS, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 38,868

FEB 29 1956

Music In Review

Boston Symphony Plays Work Written For 75th Anniversary

The Boston Symphony Orchestra played an enjoyable concert last night in the Veterans Memorial Auditorium, Providence. Charles Munch conducted and introduced the new "Sixth Symphony" by Walter Piston, Maine-born composer, who was commissioned to write the work for the 75th anniversary of the orchestra.

The "Sixth Symphony" had a grandeur without ostentation, and in some of its bombastic passages evoked visions of the rugged coast line and the slash of a nor'easter. The solemness of some of the passages, and the depth of tonal mass in the third movement, adagio sereno, were reminiful of the hushed magnitude of the vast pine forests of New England. It is a robust composition and shows a distinct American quality.

The program opened with two Mozart works, "Adagio and Fugue in C Minor for Strings, K.540," and "Sinfonia Concertante for Oboe, Clarinet, French Horn and Bassoon, K.297b." The four instrumentalists played with great artistry, and the oboe and clarinet passages were thrilling in the lengthy, rapid passages. The first movement, allegro, was a sparkling rhythmic movement, gay, swirling and dancing like a dainty toy ballet.

The second movement, adagio, was almost andante in its serene stateliness, hymnal in development in which the four soloists played as an orchestra separate from the supporting instruments as each one carried the melody in turn accompanied by the other three.

The final movement comprised variation on the preceding movements and the virtuosity of the reed soloists, and their integration with the supporting instruments, was a gay delight to the audience. Even Dr. Munch abandoned his icy coolness and swayed and gestured with the undulating rhythms of the sparkling variations. The soloists were recalled four times by the persisting applause.

The opening Mozart was disappointing as a curtain-raiser. It had a wealth of melody and harmony, strings only, and Dr. Munch brought out the great beauty and depth of the work. It was played with great expressiveness, perhaps a little too much so, for it appeared that the conductor strove too hard for elegance. It was a "churchy" piece, almost religioso, and would be most beautifully presented if incorporated in a mass. It lacked the accustomed verve of Mozart and is, perhaps, one of the many "canons" he wrote.

The program closed with Beethoven's "Overture to Leonore No. 2." It was a pleasing finale to a superior concert. C. H. L.

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,872

MAR 1 - 1956

Lotte Jacobi

Eugene Istomin will make his Boston debut as soloist in Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 4 with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the weekend concerts.

MUSICAL COURIER
NEW YORK CITY

FEB 1956

. Congratulations to the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Maestro Munch. The Symphony is celebrating its 75th (what a year for anniversaries!), so this is a specially good time to hear the great organization. It will be putting its best sound well forward. And its done a good thing, a thing which should endear it to music lovers forever and ever: the Symphony and the Serge Koussevitzky Music Foundation in the Library of Congress have jointly commissioned 15 new (and they mean new) works by top composers. Many are to be heard on NBC broadcasts; Victor's recording others. Eight come from the U.S., one from South America, six from the old country. Loads of luck to everyone involved. And if you should get your Courier before it's off the press, do not forget to tune in tonight (the 30th of January) and watch and listen to the most elaborate music show, the one Hurok's dreamed up via "Producers' Showcase" on NBC TV. He's even snagged Tebaldi, and this time you can see and hear her without fighting your way in. That's all for now. See you closer to spring. UBIQUITOUS

12

MUSICAL COURIER
NEW YORK CITY

MAR 1 1956

Boston Symphony, Feb. 8, E—The highlight of this concert was the New York premiere of Aaron Copland's "Symphonic Ode," a work written a number of years ago but recently revised for the 75th anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It is surprising that Mr. Copland revised an early work instead of composing a new one for the Boston commission. However, the Ode, as it now appears (we are not familiar with the earlier version), is a most effective piece of music. It is built on heroic lines, and while it falls clearly into several sections, it is a lengthy one-movement work. It is strong and powerful but it also has its lighter moments, these might be described as characteristic of Copland's sophisticated folk style. Conductor Munch and the orchestra responded with a vital reading, in fact the best performance of the evening.

The other work of extended proportion, Sibelius' Symphony No. 7, did not fare as well, for there were ensemble irregularities and the interpretation lacked drive. The program opened with a clean, brisk reading of the Leonore Overture No. 2. Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun" received a polished and subtle reading, and Strauss' "Don Juan" was entirely convincing. G. W.

When it comes to size, this "Symphonic Ode" is a substantial piece. . . . It is scored with sure-handed resourcefulness; one is certain that it is now saying what Mr. Copland wants it to say. H. T., N. Y. TIMES

The Ode is a swashbuckling essay in symphonic development everywhere braced by a remarkable expressive inner intensity.
J. S. H., N. Y. HERALD TRIBUNE

tion. In addition, the work's provocative character might have caused antagonism to future performances of contemporary works. Thus, I regretfully, had to change the program."

The program opened with Haydn's Symphony No. 103 in E-flat, which Mr. Mitropoulos conducted in the classical tradition. There was grandeur to it, and heart and the lyric episodes sang in their full lyric beauty. Bizet's "Jeux d'Enfants" Suite closed the first half of the program. These miniatures show in almost every bar the characteristic melodism and rhythmical spiciness of Bizet's Carmen. They also have its flavor of orchestration, its colorfulness and esprit. The performance was greatly appreciated.

After intermission Heifetz played the Beethoven Violin Concerto. Needless to say, the technical execution by the hand of such a master was faultless. It was a magnificent bar-by-bar account of the score. It is, of course, a matter of conception whether this almost impersonal playing of the work is appreciated. The tempi, once set, were pursued without the slightest deviation. There was not much room for emotion or romantic song, even in the second movement. Mr. Mitropoulos and his men, abiding by the soloist's intention, gave most sympathetic assistance. The audience, under the spell of Heifetz's name and personality, gave him an ovation. H. W. L.

Seldom has Mr. Heifetz played with greater penetration. The style was aristocratic without being aloof. . . . Dimitri Mitropoulos gave Mr. Heifetz well-balanced support.
H. T., N. Y. TIMES

Mr. Heifetz's performance of the Beethoven concerto was of the high standard to be expected of an artist of his status.
F. D. P., N. Y. HERALD TRIBUNE

Boston Symphony, Feb. 11, A—After a brilliant interpretation of Berlioz' "Roman Carnival" Overture (Op. 9), Mr. Munch conducted the first New York performance of Howard Hanson's "Elegy to the memory of my friend Serge Koussevitzky," a work commissioned by the Koussevitzky Foundation in honor of the 75th anniversary of the orchestra. The composition is a fitting tribute to the late conductor, who for 25 years guided the orchestra. It sings in long melodic lines a song of proud tristesse. It is not a song of despair, but the mourning for a beautiful world which must be left behind and a consoling poem of a dreamland which one enters through the door of eternal slumber. The magnificent sonorities of the Boston Orchestra were exhibited in the work with great effectiveness. The insistent applause called Dr. Hanson repeatedly to take a bow for his composition, which is a living memento to one of the most important figures in contemporary American music.

After intermission, Mr. Munch gave an inspiring reading of Brahms' Fourth Symphony. H. W. L.

Mr. Hanson's score is a serious, sincere piece of writing in the composer's familiar romantic vein. . . . It may not be music of originality, but it does have integrity in its avoidance of cheap or obvious effects.
H. C. S., N. Y. TIMES

["Elegy"] . . . it had musical unity in addition to the composer's already known orchestral skill . . . a rewarding expansiveness of tone, lucidity and a wide range of color marked the concert as a whole, which found the orchestra at its best.
F. D. P., N. Y. HERALD TRIBUNE

MUSICAL COURIER
NEW YORK CITY

MAR 1 1956

INTERNATIONAL NOTES . . . . . .

Issac Stern, noted American violinist, will play in the Soviet Union this spring at the invitation of the Russian government. Mr. Stern was born in Russia and was brought to the United States when one-year old. The tour calls for five weeks of recitals and orchestral appearances in Moscow, Leningrad, and other major Soviet cities. . . . The Spanish violinist, Leon Alcalay, for some months in 1954 a resident of New York and currently making his home in Rio de Janeiro, is planning a North American tour in the near future. . . . The Boston Symphony Orchestra will tour Europe for five weeks during August and September of this year, in cooperation with the International Exchange Program of ANTA. Charles Munch, Music Director of the Orchestra, and Pierre Monteux will conduct. Countries to be visited include: the British Isles, Scandinavia, Germany, Austria, France, and possibly Italy. . . . Heinz Unger, Musical Director of the York Concert Society in Toronto, recently conducted Mahler's Fourth Symphony with the State Radio Orchestra in Oslo, and the same composer's Second Symphony with the Oslo Philharmonic Society.

MUSICAL COURIER
NEW YORK CITY

MAR 1 1956

THE NATIONAL SCENE

BOSTON

■ A fine point of ethics and correct procedure was raised at the 14th concert of the Boston Symphony's Friday-Saturday series when the program, in between works by Mozart and Brahms, carried the following: "Copland . . . Symphonic Ode. Revised for the 75th Anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; First Performance."

There is nothing wrong, of course, in revising one's works. Stravinsky does this all the time, although one could wish that he and others would leave well enough alone and concentrate their energy on new works instead of rehashing old. A work at a particular period in a composer's life is an indication of his technique and experience at the time he composed it.

What is definitely wrong in the case of Copland's Ode is the fact that this was the work he submitted on commission for the orchestra's 50th anniversary 25 years ago. Very little new material has been added, and the composer states that "the over-all shape and character of the Ode has remained unaltered." The tonality scheme has been somewhat changed, bar lines moved for easier study, and the orchestration has been made fuller in a few parts.

We have every right to question such a procedure. As far as some hearers were concerned, including the writer, this is not far short of a musical swindle. Such shabby treatment for the orchestra that has been such a factor in Mr. Copland's career becomes almost incomprehensible. To receive one commission and then to dish up the same work for another commission with the thin excuse that this is, after all, a first performance of a somewhat revised version, is totally inexcusable.

If Mr. Copland did not have time to write a new work, he should not have accepted the commission in the first place, or, having accepted it and unable to complete it, he should simply have explained the circumstances and either cancelled or deferred the obligation.

To add salt to the wounds, the work itself is far from ranking among the composer's best output. It is overblown, ostentatious, and even somewhat vulgar in style—in a word, typical of the worst brashness and display we associate with the late 'twenties.

This is not to say that we do not have high regard for most of Mr. Copland's other works. But he has gone far since the time he "showed promise" as one of our better young composers from whom much might be expected. The Boston Symphony audience had every right to expect a sampling of today's Copland. If we want yesterday's we can get it from repeated works and we certainly do not want it from a supposedly new commission.

One may hope that Mr. Copland accepted no money for this assignment. If he did, he should return every penny. This may salve his own conscience although it will take quite a while to unruffle the feelings of those Bostonians who reacted as did this writer.

Perhaps it is beside the point to mention here that Mr. Munch and his players did a fine job with the still-difficult score. Regarding Mr. Munch, one wonders just how he felt about all this. There must have been compelling reasons to have prompted Mr. Munch to program a reworked piece as a premiere in honor of a significant occasion. Either that, or Mr. Munch is a remarkably sweet-tempered man.

The reader can be assured that these sentiments were shared by not a few present at the concert. JULES WOLFFERS

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,872

MAR 1 - 1956

Munch Conducts the Zimbler Sinfonie

By Harold Rogers

One world premiere and two United States premières added novelty and interest to a program last night that was entertaining from first to last. It was assembled by Josef Zimbler, artistic director of the Zimbler Sinfonietta, who invited Charles Munch to appear as guest conductor for two of these "firsts." Jordan Hall was nearly filled for this second concert in Mr. Zimbler's annual series.

After the ensemble opened with a spirited reading of Vivaldi's Sinfonia to "Olimpiade"—in three short gemlike movements—Mr. Munch stepped on stage to guide the first American performance of Nikos Skalkotas's Little Suite. This Greek composer wrote more than 100 compositions between 1929 and his passing in 1949. Only one of his works was published during his lifetime.

However unjustly he may have been neglected, such neglect is perhaps understandable if his output in general is as difficult to get hold of as the three-movement item heard last night. Skalkotas was a disciple of Schönberg, and it is impossible to say, after a single hearing of but one of his works, if he was an inspired disciple (such as Berg) or a cerebral mechanic (of which there are too many in the world today).

His Little Suite did not touch my emotions, as good atonal music does, but it did make a slim intellectual appeal. All the parts were far too busy to be easily followed by the ear. It was as if Mr. Munch gave the signal to start, and then each musician raced for the double bar.

* * *

The middle Andante showed some restraint, and was therefore more comprehensible. One would hesitate to say that this is uninspired atonal writing, though it may well be. Skalkotas could be a hero in another 100 years.

Mr. Munch remained on stage to conduct the first performance of Two Pieces for Cello and Strings by Jacobus Langendoen, who is himself a cellist and a long-time member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. This was something of a family party, thoroughly delightful from the standpoint of both music and performance.

* * *

Samuel Mayes, first cellist of the Boston Symphony, was a sensitive soloist. Mr. Langendoen played in the ensemble. The two pieces—Siciliana and Burlesca—are beautifully wrought in a romantic style that has a soupçon of the modern age. The melodies are lyrical, the harmonies rich. The warmth of this music drew a warm response from the listeners, and there were several rounds of handshaking as Mr. Munch, Mr. Mayes, and Mr. Langendoen took their bows.

After the intermission the group played Ernst Toch's arrangement of the first two movements of Bach's third sonata for unaccompanied violin. This Prel-ude and Fugue, as th poser is alleged to have "more Toch than Bach," such it is filled with just stylistic departures to k ear happily intrigued. It if we were hearing a piece through romantic

The last item, an A première, was the Seren Svend Schultz, a Danis poser. It falls into what be called the "easy con rary" style—dry, witty, n rhythmic, and not too harmonically. Though th sicians were not always cise as they might be, th an agile and ingratiatin formance.

It should be evident success of last night's that a program built la contemporary works is midable when wisely ch many in the audience h ervations about the Sk it was obvious from the of many that they were amused. Most of the were eminently entertai

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 185,401

MAR 2 1956

Harvard Club At Symphony

The Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society will join with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for a program of sacred music by Mozart and Faure at next week's Friday afternoon and Saturday night symphony concerts.

On the first half of the program G. Wallace Woodworth will conduct three Mozart works: the "Regina Coeli" for chorus, soprano solo and orchestra, K. 108; the "Ave, verum corpus" for chorus and string orchestra, K. 618, and the "Vesperae de dominica" for chorus and orchestra, with soprano, alto, tenor and bass solo, K. 321.

The second half of the program, conducted by Charles Munch, will consist of the "Requiem" by Gabriel Faure. The soloists will [illegible] soprano; [illegible] soprano; [illegible] and Donald [illegible]

MUSICAL COURIER
NEW YORK CITY

MAR 1 1956

Boston Symphony, Feb. 8, E—The highlight of this concert was the New York premiere of Aaron Copland's "Symphonic Ode," a work written a number of years ago but recently revised for the 75th anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It is surprising that Mr. Copland revised an early work instead of composing a new one for the Boston commission. However, the Ode, as it now appears (we are not familiar with the earlier version), is a most effective piece of music. It is built on heroic lines, and while it falls clearly into several sections, it is a lengthy one-movement work. It is strong and powerful but it also has its lighter moments, these might be described as characteristic of Copland's sophisticated folk style. Conductor Munch and the orchestra responded with a vital reading, in fact the best performance of the evening.

The other work of extended proportion, Sibelius' Symphony No. 7, did not fare as well, for there were ensemble irregularities and the interpretation lacked drive. The program opened with a clean, brisk reading of the Leonore Overture No. 2. Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun" received a polished and subtle reading, and Strauss' "Don Juan" was entirely convincing. G. W.

When it comes to size, this "Symphonic Ode" is a substantial piece. . . . It is scored with sure-handed resourcefulness; one is certain that it is now saying what Mr. Copland wants it to say. H. T., N. Y. TIMES

The Ode is a swashbuckling essay in symphonic development everywhere braced by a remarkable expressive inner intensity.
J. S. H., N. Y. HERALD TRIBUNE

tion. In addition, the work's provocative character might have caused antagonism to future performances of contemporary works. Thus, I regretfully, had to change the program."

The program opened with Haydn's Symphony No. 103 in E-flat, which Mr. Mitropoulos conducted in the classical tradition. There was grandeur to it, and heart and the lyric episodes sang in their full lyric beauty. Bizet's "Jeux d'Enfants" Suite closed the first half of the program. These miniatures show in almost every bar the characteristic melodism and rhythmical spiciness of Bizet's Carmen. They also have its flavor of orchestration, its colorfulness and esprit. The performance was greatly appreciated.

After intermission Heifetz played the Beethoven Violin Concerto. Needless to say, the technical execution by the hand of such a master was faultless. It was a magnificent bar-by-bar account of the score. It is, of course, a matter of conception whether this almost impersonal playing of the work is appreciated. The tempi, once set, were pursued without the slightest deviation. There was not much room for emotion or romantic song, even in the second movement. Mr. Mitropoulos and his men, abiding by the soloist's intention, gave most sympathetic assistance. The audience, under the spell of Heifetz's name and personality, gave him an ovation.
H. W. L.

Seldom has Mr. Heifetz played with greater penetration. The style was aristocratic without being aloof. . . . Dimitri Mitropoulos gave Mr. Heifetz well-balanced support.
H. T., N. Y. TIMES

Mr. Heifetz's performance of the Beethoven concerto was of the high standard to be expected of an artist of his status.
F. D. P., N. Y. HERALD TRIBUNE

Boston Symphony, Feb. 11, A—After a brilliant interpretation of Berlioz' "Roman Carnival" Overture (Op. 9), Mr. Munch conducted the first New York performance of Howard Hanson's "Elegy to the memory of my friend Serge Koussevitzky," a work commissioned by the Koussevitzky Foundation in honor of the 75th anniversary of the orchestra. The composition is a fitting tribute to the late conductor, who for 25 years guided the orchestra. It sings in long melodic lines a song of proud tristesse. It is not a song of despair, but the mourning for a beautiful world which must be left behind and a consoling poem of a dreamland which one enters through the door of eternal slumber. The magnificent sonorities of the Boston Orchestra were exhibited in the work with great effectiveness. The insistent applause called Dr. Hanson repeatedly to take a bow for his composition, which is a living memento to one of the most important figures in contemporary American music.

After intermission, Mr. Munch gave an inspiring reading of Brahms' Fourth Symphony. H. W. L.

Mr. Hanson's score is a serious, sincere piece of writing in the composer's familiar romantic vein. . . . It may not be music of originality, but it does have integrity in its avoidance of cheap or obvious effects.
H. C. S., N. Y. TIMES

["Elegy"] . . . it had musical unity in addition to the composer's already known orchestral skill . . . a rewarding expansiveness of tone, lucidity and a wide range of color marked the concert as a whole, which found the orchestra at its best.
F. D. P., N. Y. HERALD TRIBUNE

MUSICAL COURIER
NEW YORK CITY

MAR 1 1956

INTERNATIONAL NOTES . . . . . .

Issac Stern, noted American violinist, will play in the Soviet Union this spring at the invitation of the Russian government. Mr. Stern was born in Russia and was brought to the United States when one-year old. The tour calls for five weeks of recitals and orchestral appearances in Moscow, Leningrad, and other major Soviet cities. . . . The Spanish violinist, Leon Alcalay, for some months in 1954 a resident of New York and currently making his home in Rio de Janeiro, is planning a North American tour in the near future. . . . The Boston Symphony Orchestra will tour Europe for five weeks during August and September of this year, in cooperation with the International Exchange Program of ANTA. Charles Munch, Music Director of the Orchestra, and Pierre Monteux will conduct. Countries to be visited include: the British Isles, Scandinavia, Germany, Austria, France, and possibly Italy. . . . Heinz Unger, Musical Director of the York Concert Society in Toronto, recently conducted Mahler's Fourth Symphony with the State Radio Orchestra in Oslo, and the same composer's Second Symphony with the Oslo Philharmonic Society.

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,872

MAR 1 - 1956

Munch Conducts the Zimbler Sinfonietta

By Harold Rogers

One world première and two United States premières added novelty and interest to a program last night that was entertaining from first to last. It was assembled by Josef Zimbler, artistic director of the Zimbler Sinfonietta, who invited Charles Munch to appear as guest conductor for two of these "firsts." Jordan Hall was nearly filled for this second concert in Mr. Zimbler's annual series.

After the ensemble opened with a spirited reading of Vivaldi's Sinfonia to "Olimpiade"—in three short gemlike movements—Mr. Munch stepped on stage to guide the first American performance of Nikos Skalkotas's Little Suite. This Greek composer wrote more than 100 compositions between 1929 and his passing in 1949. Only one of his works was published during his lifetime.

However unjustly he may have been neglected, such neglect is perhaps understandable if his output in general is as difficult to get hold of as the three-movement item heard last night. Skalkotas was a disciple of Schönberg, and it is impossible to say, after a single hearing of but one of his works, if he was an inspired disciple (such as Berg) or a cerebral mechanic (of which there are too many in the world today).

His Little Suite did not touch my emotions, as good atonal music does, but it did make a slim intellectual appeal. All the parts were far too busy to be easily followed by the ear. It was as if Mr. Munch gave the signal to start, and then each musician raced for the double bar.

* * *

The middle Andante showed some restraint, and was therefore more comprehensible. One would hesitate to say that this is uninspired atonal writing, though it may well be. Skalkotas could be a hero in another 100 years.

Mr. Munch remained on stage to conduct the first performance of Two Pieces for Cello and Strings by Jacobus Langendoen, who is himself a cellist and a long-time member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. This was something of a family party, thoroughly delightful from the standpoint of both music and performance.

* * *

Samuel Mayes, first cellist of the Boston Symphony, was a sensitive soloist. Mr. Langendoen played in the ensemble. The two pieces—Siciliana and Burlesca—are beautifully wrought in a romantic style that has a soupçon of the modern age. The melodies are lyrical, the harmonies rich. The warmth of this music drew a warm response from the listeners, and there were several rounds of handshaking as Mr. Munch, Mr. Mayes, and Mr. Langendoen took their bows.

After the intermission the group played Ernst Toch's arrangement of the first two movements of Bach's third sonata for unaccompanied violin. This Prelude and Fugue, as the composer is alleged to have said, "more Toch than Bach," and as such it is filled with just enough stylistic departures to keep the ear happily intrigued. It was as if we were hearing a baroque piece through romantic ears.

The last item, an American première, was the Serenade by Svend Schultz, a Danish composer. It falls into what might be called the "easy contemporary" style—dry, witty, melodic, rhythmic, and not too far out harmonically. Though the musicians were not always so precise as they might be, they gave an agile and ingratiating performance.

It should be evident by the success of last night's concert that a program built largely of contemporary works is not formidable when wisely chosen. If many in the audience had reservations about the Skalkotas it was obvious from the remarks of many that they were at least amused. Most of the time we were eminently entertained.

URIER
CITY

1956

NATIONAL SCENE

of ethics and correct aised at the 14th con-on Symphony's Friday-when the program, in y Mozart and Brahms, owing: "Copland . . .
Revised for the 75th
the Boston Symphony
t Performance."
ing wrong, of course,
's works. Stravinsky
e time, although one he and others would gh alone and concen-
gy on new works in-ng old. A work at a l in a composer's life of his technique and time he composed it.
ely wrong in the case
is the fact that this submitted on com-
orchestra's 50th an-ars ago. Very little been added, and the
that "the over-all er of the Ode has rel." The tonality somewhat changed,
or easier study, and as been made fuller

right to question
. As far as some erned, including the far short of a mu-shabby treatment that has been such opland's career beomprehensible. To ission and then to work for another
e thin excuse that first performance
evised version, is lid not have time

rk, he should not commission in the g accepted it and
, he should simply circumstances and deferred the obli-

the wounds, the m ranking among utput. It is over-and even some—in a word, typical of the worst brashness and display we associate with the late 'twenties.

This is not to say that we do not have high regard for most of Mr. Copland's other works. But he has gone far since the time he "showed promise" as one of our better young composers from whom much might be expected. The Boston Symphony audience had every right to expect a sampling of today's Copland. If we want yesterday's we can get it from repeated works and we certainly do not want it from a supposedly new commission.

One may hope that Mr. Copland accepted no money for this assignment. If he did, he should return every penny. This may salve his own conscience although it will take quite a while to unruffle the feelings of those Bostonians who reacted as did this writer.

Perhaps it is beside the point to mention here that Mr. Munch and his players did a fine job with the still-difficult score. Regarding Mr. Munch, one wonders just how he felt about all this. There must have been compelling reasons to have prompted Mr. Munch to program a reworked piece as a premiere in honor of a significant occasion. Either that, or Mr. Munch is a remarkably sweet-tempered man.

The reader can be assured that these sentiments were shared by not a few present at the concert. JULES WOLFFERS

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 185,401

MAR 2 1956

Harvard Club At Symphony

The Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society will join with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for a program of choral music by Mozart and Faure at next week's Friday afternoon and Saturday night symphony concerts.

On the first half of the program G. Wallace Woodworth will conduct three Mozart works: the "Regina Coeli" for chorus, soprano solo and orchestra, K. 108; the "Ave, verum corpus" for chorus and string orchestra, K. 618, and the "Vesperae de dominica" for chorus and orchestra, with soprano, alto, tenor and bass solo, K. 321.

The second half of the program, conducted by Charles Munch, will consist of the "Requiem" by Gabriel Faure. The soloists will be Adele Addison, soprano; Eleanor Davis, mezzo-soprano; Richard Gilley, tenor, and Donald Gramm, bass.

Journal-Courier (m)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 22,107
3 1956

Music, Drama And The Arts

by F. R. J.

Thornton Wilder's comedy "The Matchmaker", played its 100th performance Wednesday at the Royale Theater in New York proving that New Haven's distinguished author and playwright, knew a good play when he wrote one—even if this particular one is a rewrite of a 1938 effort. Starring Ruth Gordon, Eileen Herlie and Loring Smith, "The Matchmaker" is a boisterous comedy full of old-fashioned farcical nonsense which Ruth Gordon revels in.

While Wilder's "The Skin of Our Teeth" had its premiere here in 1942, his new comedy saw the light of day in New York and has been enticing local theater goers to the Royale ever since then.

THORTON WILDER

The play deals with an energetic widow who is asked to arrange a marriage for a wealthy Yonkers' merchant, inasmuch as she has somewhat of a reputation as a matchmaker. She realizes that the merchant would make a very good husband for her, but not until the very last does she reveal her intentions. In the meantime all kinds of things are happening in the best 1880 style.

The merchant's niece, thwarted in a romance by her uncle, elopes with her artist friend; the two trusted clerks fake a fire to get a day off to go to "The City" and a milliner and her helper are drawn into this helter-skelter action when the clerks discover the boss is in town too.

Typically a Wilder touch is the trick of having the actors speak directly to the audience, a traditional feature of plays in the 90's. Ruth Gordon gives the audience some rare philosophy on the subject of money and the other actors also take their turn at speaking their minds. It makes for a great rapport between audience and actors and is all part of the slap happy play's contrived humor. Incidentally, and this is no part of a brief review, investors in the play have already received 100 per cent of their financial stake in the play!

The recoupment of their investment took place only 11 weeks after "The Matchmaker" opened on Broadway, where it has been playing to capacity business at the Royale Theatre since Dec. 5th.

With the film rights to "The Matchmaker" just sold to Paramount Pictures and the comedy, which co-stars Ruth Gordon, Eileen Herlie and Loring Smith continuing to play to standing room only, it looks like a golden harvest of profit from now on.

The prospectors who found the new Broadway gold mine are the producing firm of The Theatre Guild and David Merrick, with author Thornton Wilder, serving as their chief of operations. All this goes on in New York while Thornton Wilder sits writing his first opera in Italy!

Cheryl Crawford, one of the theatre's most successful producers, will bring "Mister Johnson," the new Norman Rosten play based on the Joyce Cary novel of the same title, to the Shubert Theater next Thursday for its world premiere. There is a bronze plaque in the Shubert lobby, which honors Miss Crawford. She has been responsible for producing a number of outstanding productions, including "Porgy and Bess," "The Rose Tattoo," "One Touch of Venus," "Brigadoon," "Regina," "Paint Your Wagon" and "Oh, Men! Oh, Women!"

Elizabeth Beebe Robb was in Lock Haven, Pa., yesterday for the unveiling of her portrait of Dr. Saylor McGhee, veteran physician and school board chairman of that town for many years. In honor of his service to the schools of the town, a new elementary school has been named after him and Mrs. Robb was comissioned to paint Dr. McGhee's portrait.

Four members of the Yale Department of Design, one student and one alumnus will be represented in the exhibit, "Recent Drawings—U. S. A." sponsored by the Junior Council of the Museum of Modern Art in New York City. They were selected out of 5,000 drawings submitted and among the 125 chosen. They include Josef Albert, Berna d Chaet, Sewell Sillman and Gaber Peterdi of the faculty; John Roy, a third year student and Sheila Coulter, B. F. A. '54.

"The Teahouse of the August Moon" Pulitzer prize comedy by John Patrick which had its world premier at the Shubert, plays its 1,000th consecutive performance at the Martin Beck Theatre this week. Closing on Broadway to sellout audiences, the show, which premiered here in September of 1953, now stars Eli Wallach in David Wayne's Sakini role. The company will open at the Colonial Theater in Boston April 2.

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony return here March 20 to conclude the Woolsey Hall Concert series which have been exceptionally fine this season. The cream of top artists have been enjoyed by an overflow audience at each concert and to have the Boston Symphony back for the second time is a rare honor. Very few communities can boast of this double performance in a season.

Another public lecture on the Yale collections will be given Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock in room 231 of the second floor of the new gallery. Mrs. Helen D. Baldwin, assistant docent, will lecture on the Luristan Bronzes and Persian pottery. Next week Miss A. Elizabeth Chase, docent, will lecture on Chinese paintings.

Sunday afternoon at 4 in Sprague Hall, several Yale Music School students will give a recital with the University Orchestra under Howard Boatwright with Keith Wilson as guest conductor. Among the student soloists, is one local boy, Sherman Kahn, a clarinetist. The concert is open to the public without charge.

The New Haven Paint and Clay Club will open its 55th annual exhibition Monday evening in the West Gallery of the Free Public Library with a Varnishing Day reception for members, guests and exhibitors. The exhibition will be open to the public from Tuesday through March 24 from noon to 6 o'clock, with the exception of Sundays.

Original works in oil, watercolor, black-and-white and sculpture will be shown for the first time. During the evening, prizes will be awarded in the various classifications.

Among those in the receiving line will be President Ethel Stauffer and members of the executive committee, Dr. and Mrs. Orban Hess, Dr. and Mrs. Arthur Geiger, Dr. and Mrs. Wilson Powell, Miss Minna W. Smith, Miss Florence Smirnow, Miss Anna H. Pierce, Mr. and Mrs. Kendall Redfield, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Meiss and Mr. and Mrs. Albert Worthen.

The jury of awards is made up of Lewis E. York, chairman, Arnold Strode-Jackson, Mel Crawford, Mary Nelles and John D. Whiting.

A complete reinstallation of the Moore memorial collection of Near and Far Eastern Art is now attracting much interest on the third floor of the new Yale art gallery. The collection in memory of Hobart and Edward Small Moore was added to recently from the estate of Mrs. William Moore. Chinese paintings, bronzes, porcelains, Japanese prints, Persian pottery, Luristan bronzes and textiles, are on exhibit.

Next Thursday evening's shoppers will find great interest in the weekly 8 p. m. lecture at the Yale gallery when Miss A. Elizabeth Chase, will lecture on "Arts of the Ancient Mediterranean."

Dame Myra Hess, on her 25th annual North American tour this year, will be guest artist with the New Haven Symphony on March 13 concluding the 62d season of the orchestra with an all Mozart program which features the Concerto in G Major, No. 453. To those who have enjoyed Dame Myra's exquisite piano playing of Bach and Beethoven in Sprague Hall, and in Woolsey too, this concert should prove most interesting.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 130,559
MAR 3 1956

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, gave the 17th concert of the 75th season in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. Heitor Villa-Lobos was the guest conductor in his own work and Eugene Istomin, pianist, was the soloist. The program:

"Romeo and Juliet" .....Tchaikovsky
Symphony No. 11 .....Villa-Lobos
Concerto No. 4 in G, Op. 58 .....Beethoven

By RUDOLPH ELIE

Of all the new works to be played during the 75th season Villa-Lobos' 11th Symphony will, I imagine, bring out more difference of opinion than any of the others.

It was given its world premiere yesterday afternoon, the composer conducting, and it proved to be a huge work with enough material in it for 11 more symphonies. Indeed, this profusion of material is so concentrated with one idea tumbling after another, the listener is more than likely to get lost in the bewildering profusion of the musical thought. Because of this continuously unfolding musical discourse it is very difficult to find a point of orientation, so to speak. Musical phrases and fragments are repeated within a movement, to be sure, but each time on a different level and in a different vein. The result is undeniably confusing on a first hearing and it would undoubtedly be equally so on a second and third until the ear could begin to pick up the complexities of the composer's musical architecture.

On the other hand, whether or not the form may be easily followed, the sound is endlessly interesting. No composer living today manages such a singularly arresting orchestral fabric: the sound effects are endless and endlessly ingenious. There are movements of great beauty, the slow section of the final movement (which seems far the best of the four), for example, which is of the sheerest lyric intensity. But throughout there are many magical touches, some of them reflecting this composer's exoticism but the overall concept is far removed from some of his previous evocations of the Brazilian scene.

Greatest Skill

The composer conducted the work with the greatest skill. With his long unruly hair, outfitted in a rumpled suit that flapped in time to his motions, he crouched and exhorted the orchestra in a way to bring to mind the curious picture of the rear view of Beethoven conducting an orchestra. But he clearly knew his business and the orchestra traversed the enormously difficult score with great technical assurance. The composer was brought back to the stand three times by the applause of the audience, which may not have liked the piece to a man but certainly recognized its immense creative urgency.

Eugene Istomin, a darkly handsome young man, made his debut with the orchestra in Beethoven's Fourth Concerto at this concert and revealed what seemed to me an extraordinary gift. It is not that his technique is more formidable than anyone else's these days (though the cleaness of his articulation and the perfection of his trills is indeed formidable) but he struck me as having a poetic distinction not given to many of the younger pianists of the day. He did the Beethoven without the least pretense, without ever trying to increase its dimensions for mere display, and the result was a performance of the greatest beauty on a level of the highest musical sensitivity. He was given a reception he well deserved, it may be added.

Mr. Munch opened the concert with a powerful performance of Tchaikovsky's "Romeo and Juliet," informing it at once with romantic tenderness and fiery passion. The orchestra never sounded better, either. Next week's program offers three choral works of Mozart and Faure's "Requiem."

Post (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 285,839
MAR 3 1956

/3

Music Review

By TUCKER KEISER

The Boston Symphony Orchestra continues its streak of bad luck with the new works it had commissioned for its 75th season. Yesterday, Heitor Villa-Lobos was on the podium to lead the premiere of his Symphony No. 11, written for the orchestra's anniversary.

Though the symphony has more to recommend it than some other new pieces which have preceded it, the composition never really caught fire. Thoroughly agreeable from beginning to end, and without disturbing dissonance, even to classically oriented ears, despite some noisy, tone-clusterish cadences, it lacks character.

And very much like other works by the prodigal Brazilian composer, interesting segments are followed by seemingly irrelevant digressions. The listener can recall some passages, such as the opening of the first movement, with its promising fanfare, the fiddle theme of the same movement, and portions of the agitated finale, but what came between remains a blur.

From Villa-Lobos we expect glittering orchestration; this the symphony has, to the fullest degree, but of what use is color if applied to an amorphous mass?

The total impression is that the symphony would make a first-class sound track for the next "Cinerama" travelogue.

The bright spot yesterday was Eugene Istomin's Boston Symphony debut playing Beethoven's Fourth Concerto. The pianist has created a sensitively poetic interpretation of the masterpiece, one concerned with projecting the inherent joy and tenderness in the score, and not one bothered with technical display. Charles Munch's accompaniment was beautifully molded around the solo part.

A searingly brilliant performance of Tchaikovsky's "Romeo and Juliet" opened the program, which, despite the overture's fevered heat, contained not a bit of warmth.

Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Republican
Circ. 130,826
MAR 4 1956

CHARLES MUNCH, brilliant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra who will direct this 105-piece ensemble in the Bushnell Memorial at 8:15 p.m. March 19, in the final concert of this season's Bushnell Symphony Series. The famed orchestra is completing its 75th season and is planning a tour of Europe later this year. A limited number of seats for the local concert are available at the Bushnell box office.

14

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 122,000

MAR 3 1956

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Villa-Lobos' Symphony No. 11

The Boston Symphony Orchestra played yesterday in Symphony Hall the afternoon concert of the 17th pair in the Friday-Saturday series. Charles Munch conducted Tchaikovsky's Overture-Fantasia, "Romeo and Juliet," and the G major Piano Concerto of Beethoven, with Eugene Istomin as soloist. Heitor Villa-Lobos conducted the first performance of his own Symphony No. 11, which had been commissioned for the 75th Anniversary of the orchestra.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Heitor Villa-Lobos, Brazil's eminent composer, practices what he preaches. He believes that music should be enjoyed, and he has written, as his share of the new music during the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 75th Anniversary season, a huge Eleventh Symphony that is thoroughly enjoyable.

There is something reassuringly practical about such a point of view, especially when the composer is both a technician of skill, and a man of so ebullient a disposition. I am sure he would have no objection to dissection of his new work, and remarks about its large proportion, evident solidly of form, bold individuality of idiom and style; its passion, befitting one of Latin ancestry; its buoyant nature, vivacious rhythms, its deft and very expressive use of dissonance that is sometimes piercing, and the fact that he has written tunes, many of them in solo effect.

But Villa-Lobos' primary intention must have been to entertain audiences, and that is just what he has done. Apart from the usual percentage of gripes, the normally conservative Friday afternoon audience buzzed with approval in the lobby, after they had accorded him and his Symphony the honor of recalls and applause. Without doubt, this is among the very best of the 75th Anniversary commissioned music we have heard so far.

A High Point of Season

No matter that the Eleventh Symphony is also a tissue of things that suggest other composers—my mind kept working on this during the performance, and the seeming reminiscences took in such oddly disassociated sources as Vaughan Williams of the "London" Symphony, a good bit of French influence, perhaps Gershwin in the jazz touches, and so on.

This large and busy score is essentially a late romantic expression with contemporary manner, and if it is reminiscent, then that is that. The important point is that here is music pleasant and exciting to listen to, just for the sake of the sounds and the patterns of notes and rhythms, and that it is music of visceral, not cerebral appeal. Such is all too rare these days, and I, for one, am grateful.

Mr. Villa-Lobos has said, in admiration, that "the Boston Symphony just runs by itself," meaning that he liked the performance. Since he is no virtuoso conductor, we all are fortunate that the B. S. O. did its best, for the result was one of the high points of the season.

Although Eugene Istomin appeared here once some years ago, his performance of the Beethoven G major Piano Concerto yesterday was the first chance we have had to hear him, "in the flesh," as a mature artist. He is a fastidious player, as well as intelligent, and he articulates very neatly. I thought his left hand was a shade too timid except where Beethoven marked in staccato and sforzando. His sense of rhythm is good and his style is consistent.

Good "Romeo and Juliet"

This was not a "big" performance of this exacting and expressively none-too-simple part, but it was a very, very able and sensitive one. There was not a trace of showy virtuosity for its own sake. At the end, Mr. Istomin reaped cordial and sustained applause.

Mr. Munch and the orchestra—apart from a little fuzziness in the string ensemble early in Tchaikovsky—were at the top of their form. "Romeo and Juliet" you may or may not like—I happen to think it a masterpiece of its kind—but if it is to be played, it should have the works of blazing intensity. This Mr. Munch brought to it, but without coarseness or exaggeration. The sum total was emotional and tonal brilliance. As for the orchestral share of Beethoven's Concerto, it was precise, clear, forceful, but always within proportion. Always, that is, but for the strings at the opening of the andante. They are supposed to play forte, but they were nearer fortissimo.

Next week that Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society will sing with the Orchestra. G. Wallace Woodworth, their director, will conduct three works of Mozart—"Regina coeli" (K. 108), "Ave, verum corpus" (K. 618), and "Vesperae de dominica" (K. 321); Charles Munch will conduct the Requiem by Faure. Soloists will be Adele Addison, soprano; Eleanor Davis, mezzo-soprano; Richard Gilley, tenor, and Donald Gramm, bass.

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 369,241

MAR 4 1956

Open Rehearsal

In preparation for the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this Friday afternoon and Saturday evening there will be an open rehearsal at Symphony Hall Thursday evening at 7:30. The Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society will join with the orchestra in preparing for performance three works for chorus, soloists and orchestra by Mozart: "Regina coeli," "Ave, verum corpus" and "Vesperae de dominica," to be conducted by G. Wallace Woodworth, and the "Requiem" by Faure, to be conducted by Charles Munch. The vocal soloists for this program are Adele Addison, soprano; Eleanor Davis, mezzo-soprano; Richard Gilley, tenor, and Donald Gramm, bass.

Boxoffice receipts for the open rehearsals benefit the pension fund of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 369,241

MAR 4 1955

Choral Music by Mozart and Faure at Next Boston Symphony Concerts

The Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society, conducted by G. Wallace Woodworth, will join with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch, music director, for a program of choral music by Mozart and Faure at the next pair of Friday afternoon-Saturday evening concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra March 9 and 10.

On the first half of the program Mr. Woodworth will conduct three Mozart works: the "Regina Coeli" for chorus, soprano and orchestra, K. 108; the "Ave, verum corpus" for chorus and string orchestra, K. 618; and the "Vesperae de dominica" for chorus and orchestra, with soprano, alto, tenor and bass solo, K. 321. The second half of the concert, conducted by Mr. Munch, will consist of the Requiem by Gabriel Faure. The soloists will be Adele Addison, soprano; Eleanor Davis, mezzo-soprano; Richard Gilley, tenor, and Donald Gramm, bass.

At Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, this Tuesday evening, Mr. Munch will conduct Mozart's Adagio and Fugue in C Minor for String Orchestra, K. 546; four movements from the same composer's Serenade in B Flat Major for Thirteen Wind Instruments, K. 361; Beethoven's Second Leonore Overture; Debussy's "Prelude to the Afternoon of a Faun"; and Tchaikovsky's Overture-Fantasia, "Romeo and Juliet."

NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
Circ. M. 265,252 - S. 982,681

MAR 4 1956

Award Works Rate

By MILES KASTENDIECK

ONLY two works received the Music Critics Circle awards this year: Bohuslav Martinu's "Fantaisies Symphoniques" and Sir William Walton's opera "Troilus and Cressida." No awards were made for chamber music, the dance, or choral works. The question arises as to when these two works will be heard again, for only through repetition can the public come to appreciate the reason this music was chosen.

Here In Spring

Fortunately "Troilus and Cressida" turns up later this month with the spring season of the N. Y. Opera Company. The Walton opera was first performed here last October and remains in the repertory. Its selection by the critics should whet interest in it, though the public responded too when it was first introduced.

Another performance of the Martinu remains a nice speculation. First heard here when Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony played it in January a year ago, it could wait years to be reheard. The award also focuses attention on the fact that Martinu's five symphonies do not turn up frequently on programs. Yet these were all written in this country and most favorably received at their premieres. What then will be the fate of this one, also known as his Sixth Symphony?

As probably his most original work to date, the "Fantaisies Symphoniques" has considerable imagination and originality. In the course of its three movements it creates a unique atmosphere, suggestive of a vision. My own feeling of being impelled into outer space could be quite in keeping with the character of the music.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
Circ. D. [illegible]

MAR 4

It's Superior

Martinu's symphony was the first work designated for the Boston Symphony's 75th anniversary celebration. Compared to other works since performed in that category, it stands unchallenged to date. No plans for the Berkshire Festival programs have yet been disclosed, but perhaps something in connection with its anniversary pieces may evolve. Certainly this work should receive special attention from the orchestra because of this award.

Perhaps this citation will stir up interest in Martinu. Here is a living composer whose music has been recognized as superior and yet somehow has not been fully appreciated.

Sunday Standard-Times
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 50,234

MAR 4 1956

Symphony Orchestra, Students to Perform

Special to The Standard-Times

BOSTON, March 3 — The Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society, conducted by G. Wallace Woodworth, will join with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for a program of choral music by Mozart and Faure at the next pair of Friday afternoon-Saturday evening concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, March 9 and 10.

On the first half of the program Mr. Woodworth will conduct three Mozart works.

The second half of the concert, conducted by Charles Munch, will consist of the "Requiem" by Gabriel Faure. The soloists will be Adele Addison, soprano; Eleanor Davis, mezzo-soprano; Richard Gilley, tenor; and Donald Gramm, bass.

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,872

MAR 5 1956

WITH OUR COMPLIMENTS . . .

Although this clipping is beyond your order we thought it would interest you.

Please accept it with our compliments.

Sincerely,

NEW ENGLAND NEWSCLIP AGENCY, INC.

[illegible]mposer Offers [illegible]k for Orchestra

[illegible]rold Rogers

with magnificent fortitude.

Villa-Lobos has earned his commission. He has not turned out a little tone poem nor has he warmed over an earlier composition. He has written a major symphony in the full symphonic sense of the word. It has four movements, each of which has a proper sense of length and musical substance. He kept his musicians busy.

♪ ♪ ♪

Villa-Lobos said earlier this week that he makes use of the European forms (this symphony is an excellent example) but that his style is his own. His entire musical education took place in South America. His music has always reflected the colors of his native Brazil. He said that in his Eleventh Symphony he did not make use of Brazilian folk tunes, but that his symphony couldn't help being Brazilian even so. He is Brazilian; his style is set; it is too late to change, and he has no reason or desire to do so.

It is certainly Brazilian—earthy, primitive, energetic, rhythmic, and a riot of tonal colors. One woman was heard exclaiming, "My, it's full of animals!"—and even though I wasn't, one can surely grant her the right to her impression I could see the jungle.

Villa-Lobos is noted as prolific composer whose music is often unruly, perhaps because it is written rapidly and not thoroughly revised. The flaws in his Eleventh Symphony may derive from these sources. The first and last movements, for instance, are so much alike in tempo, mood and color that they appear almost identical.

♪ ♪ ♪

There is not enough dynamic contrast. So much brass is employed that nearly everything sounds off at a triple-forte. His Largo, however, gives us some respite. There are several lightful oases where we hear a simple counterpoint of three or four solo melodies.

One can also praise his original and vital style, his excellent use of the orchestra, his astonishing sonorities, his bold, primary colors, his comprehension of symphonic form. He conducts like a small Titan; and at the conclusion his listeners gave him hearty commendation — whether for his effort or his accomplishment, one can't say. Perhaps a little for each.

Charles Munch opened the program with one of his crystalline, emotionally intense readings of Tchaikovsky's Overture-Fantasia, "Romeo and Juliet." He closed with Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 4, in which Eugene Istomin made his Boston debut as soloist.

If Mr. Istomin has not yet reached his musical maturity, he has certainly a remarkable understanding of style and a sensitive musical spirit. The Fourth will test a pianist's artistry more than Beethoven's other concertos. It is an interior work, thoughtful and at times otherworldly.

Mr. Istomin was careful to keep his playing in this framework from first to last, and he earned the ensuing ovation.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 122,000

MAR 3 1956

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Villa-Lobos' Symphony No. 11

The Boston Symphony Orchestra played yesterday in Symphony Hall the afternoon concert of the 17th pair in the Friday–Saturday series. Charles Munch conducted Tchaikovsky's Overture–Fantasia, "Romeo and Juliet," and the G major Piano Concerto of Beethoven, with Eugene Istomin as soloist. Heitor Villa–Lobos conducted the first performance of his own Symphony No. 11, which had been commissioned for the 75th Anniversary of the orchestra.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Heitor Villa-Lobos, Brazil's eminent composer, practices what he preaches. He believes that music should be enjoyed, and he has written, as his share of the new music during the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 75th Anniversary season, a huge Eleventh Symphony that is thoroughly enjoyable.

There is something reassuringly practical about such a point of view, especially when the composer is both a technician of skill, and a man of so ebullient a disposition. I am sure he would have no objection to dissection of his new work, and remarks about its large proportion, evident solidly of form, bold individuality of idiom and style; its passion, befitting one of Latin ancestry; its buoyant nature, vivacious rhythms, its deft and very expressive use of dissonance that is sometimes piercing, and the fact that he has written tunes, many of them in solo effect.

But Villa-Lobos' primary intention must have been to entertain audiences, and that is just what he has done. Apart from the usual percentage of gripes, the normally conservative Friday afternoon audience buzzed with approval in the lobby, after they had accorded him and his Symphony the honor of recalls and applause. Without doubt, this is among the very best of the 75th Anniversary commissioned music we have heard so far.

A High Point of Season

No matter that the Eleventh Symphony is also a tissue of things that suggest other composers—my mind kept working on this during the performance, and the seeming reminiscences took in such oddly disassociated sources as Vaughan Williams of the "London" Symphony, a good bit of French influence, perhaps Gershwin in the jazz touches, and so on.

This large and busy score is essentially a late romantic expression with contemporary manner, and if it is reminiscent, then that is that. The important point is that here is music pleasant and exciting to listen to, just for the sake of the sounds and the patterns of notes and rhythms, and that it is music of visceral, not cerebral appeal. Such is all too rare these days, and I, for one, am grateful.

Mr. Villa-Lobos has said, in admiration, that "the Boston Symphony just runs by itself," meaning that he liked the performance. Since he is no virtuoso conductor, we all are fortunate that the B. S. O. did its best, for the result was one of the high points of the season.

Although Eugene Istomin appeared here once some years ago, his performance of the Beethoven G major Piano Concerto yesterday was the first chance we have had to hear him, "in the flesh," as a mature artist. He is a fastidious player, as well as intelligent, and he articulates very neatly. I thought his left hand was a shade too timid except where Beethoven marked in staccato and sforzando. His sense of rhythm is good and his style is consistent.

Good "Romeo and Juliet"

This was not a "big" performance of this exacting and expressively none-too-simple part, but it was a very, very able and sensitive one. There was not a trace of showy virtuosity for its own sake. At the end, Mr. Istomin reaped cordial and sustained applause.

Mr. Munch and the orchestra—apart from a little fuzziness in the string ensemble early in Tchaikovsky—were at the top of their form. "Romeo and Juliet" you may or may not like—I happen to think it a masterpiece of its kind—but if it is to be played, it should have the works of blazing intensity. This Mr. Munch brought to it, but without coarseness or exaggeration. The sum total was emotional and tonal brilliance. As for the orchestral share of Beethoven's Concerto, it was precise, clear, forceful, but always within proportion. Always, that is, but for the strings at the opening of the andante. They are supposed to play forte, but they were nearer fortissimo.

Next week that Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society will sing with the Orchestra. G. Wallace Woodworth, their director, will conduct three works of Mozart —"Regina coeli" (K. 108), "Ave, verum corpus" (K. 618), and "Vesperae de dominica" (K. 321); Charles Munch will conduct the Requiem by Faure. Soloists will be Adele Addison, soprano; Eleanor Davis, mezzo-soprano; Richard Gilley, tenor, and Donald Gramm, bass.

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 369,241

MAR 4 1956

Open Rehearsal

In preparation for the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this Friday afternoon and Saturday evening there will be an open rehearsal at Symphony Hall Thursday evening at 7:30. The Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society will join with the orchestra in preparing for performance three works for chorus, soloists and orchestra by Mozart: "Regina coeli," "Ave, verum corpus" and "Vesperae de dominica," to be conducted by G. Wallace Woodworth, and the "Requiem" by Faure, to be conducted by Charles Munch. The vocal soloists for this program are Adele Addison, soprano; Eleanor Davis, mezzo-soprano; Richard Gilley, tenor, and Donald Gramm, bass.

Boxoffice receipts for the open rehearsals benefit the pension fund of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 369,241

MAR 4 1956

Choral Music by Mozart and Faure at Next Boston Symphony Concerts

The Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society, conducted by G. Wallace Woodworth, will join with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch, music director, for a program of choral music by Mozart and Faure at the next pair of Friday afternoon-Saturday evening concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra March 9 and 10.

On the first half of the program Mr. Woodworth will conduct three Mozart works: the "Regina Coeli" for chorus, soprano and orchestra, K. 108; the "Ave, verum corpus" for chorus and string orchestra, K. 618; and the "Vesperae de dominica" for chorus and orchestra, with soprano, alto, tenor and bass solo, K. 321. The second half of the concert, conducted by Mr. Munch, will consist of the Requiem by Gabriel Faure. The soloists will be Adele Addison, soprano; Eleanor Davis, mezzo-soprano; Richard Gilley, tenor, and Donald Gramm, bass.

At Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, this Tuesday evening, Mr. Munch will conduct Mozart's Adagio and Fugue in C Minor for String Orchestra, K. 546; four movements from the same composer's Serenade in B Flat Major for Thirteen Wind Instruments, K. 361; Beethoven's Second Leonore Overture; Debussy's "Prelude to the Afternoon of a Faun"; and Tchaikovsky's Overture-Fantasia, "Romeo and Juliet."

NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
Circ. D. 653,252 S. 982,681
MAR 4 1956

Award Works Rate

By MILES KASTENDIECK

ONLY two works received the Music Critics Circle awards this year: Bohuslav Martinu's "Fantaisies Symphoniques" and Sir William Walton's opera "Troilus and Cressida." No awards were made for chamber music, the dance, or choral works. The question arises as to when these two works will be heard again, for only through repetition can the public come to appreciate the reason this music was chosen.

Here In Spring

Fortunately "Troilus and Cressida" turns up later this month with the spring season of the N. Y. Opera Company.

Another performance of the Martinu remains a nice speculation. First heard here when Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony played it in January a year ago, it could wait years to be reheard. The award also focuses attention on the fact that Martinu's five symphonies do not turn up frequently on programs. Yet these were all written in this country and most favorably received at their premieres. What then will be the fate of this one, also known as his Sixth Symphony?

As probably his most original work to date, the "Fantaisies Symphoniques" has considerable imagination and originality. In the course of its three movements it creates a unique atmosphere, suggestive of a vision. My own feeling of being impelled into outer space could be quite in keeping with the character of the music.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
Circ. D. 653,252 S. 982,681
MAR 4 1956

It's Superior

Martinu's symphony was the first work designated for the Boston Symphony's 75th anniversary celebration. Compared to other works since performed in that category, it stands unchallenged to date. No plans for the Berkshire Festival programs have yet been disclosed, but perhaps something in connection with its anniversary pieces may evolve. Certainly this work should receive special attention from the orchestra because of this award.

Perhaps this citation will stir up interest in Martinu. Here is a living composer whose music has been recognized as superior and yet somehow has not been fully appreciated.

Sunday Standard-Times
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 50,234

MAR 4 1956

Symphony Orchestra, Students to Perform

Special to The Standard-Times

BOSTON, March 3 — The Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society, conducted by G. Wallace Woodworth, will join with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for a program of choral music by Mozart and Faure at the next pair of Friday afternoon-Saturday evening concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, March 9 and 10.

On the first half of the program Mr. Woodworth will conduct three Mozart works.

The second half of the concert, conducted by Charles Munch, will consist of the "Requiem" by Gabriel Faure. The soloists will be Adele Addison, soprano; Eleanor Davis, mezzo-soprano; Richard Gilley, tenor; and Donald Gramm, bass.

Brazilian Composer Offers Major Work for Orchestra

By Harold Rogers

A new symphony by Heitor Villa-Lobos is an event. For almost 40 years he has been acclaimed as South America's leading composer. Today he has talented challengers, but as yet no equals.

His Symphony No. 11, heard for the first time yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall, may have inundated some listeners in a stormy sea of sound; but it was no less an event for all that. It was commissioned by the Boston Symphony Orchestra as part of its 75th anniversary celebration. It was conducted by Villa-Lobos himself. It was played by the musicians with magnificent fortitude.

Villa-Lobos has earned his commission. He has not turned out a little tone poem nor has he warmed over an earlier composition. He has written a major symphony in the full symphonic sense of the word. It has four movements, each of which has a proper sense of length and musical substance. He kept his musicians busy.

* * *

Villa-Lobos said earlier this week that he makes use of the European forms (this symphony is an excellent example) but that his style is his own. His entire musical education took place in South America. His music has always reflected the colors of his native Brazil. He said that in his Eleventh Symphony he did not make use of Brazilian folk tunes, but that his symphony couldn't help being Brazilian even so. He is Brazilian; his style is set; it is too late to change, and he has no reason or desire to do so.

It is certainly Brazilian—earthy, primitive, energetic, rhythmic, and a riot of tonal colors. One woman was heard exclaiming, "My, it's full of animals!"—and even though it wasn't, one can surely grant her the right to her impression I could see the jungle.

Villa-Lobos is noted as prolific composer whose music is often unruly, perhaps because it is written rapidly and not thoroughly revised. The flaws in his Eleventh Symphony may derive from these sources. The first and last movements, for instance, are so much alike in tempo, mood and color that they appear almost identical.

* * *

There is not enough dynamic contrast. So much brass is employed that nearly everything sounds off at a triple-forte. His Largo, however, gives us some respite. There are several lightful oases where we hear a simple counterpoint of three or four solo melodies.

One can also praise his original and vital style, his excellent use of the orchestra, his astonishing sonorities, his bold, primary colors, his comprehension of symphonic form. He conducts like a small Titan; and at the conclusion his listeners gave him hearty commendation — whether for his effort or his accomplishment, one can't say. Perhaps a little for each.

Charles Munch opened the program with one of his crystalline, emotionally intense readings of Tchaikovsky's Overture-Fantasia, "Romeo and Juliet." He closed with Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 4, in which Eugene Istomin made his Boston debut as soloist.

If Mr. Istomin has not yet reached his musical maturity, he has certainly a remarkable understanding of style and a sensitive musical spirit. The Fourth will test a pianist's artistry more than Beethoven's other concertos. It is an interior work, thoughtful and at times otherworldly.

Mr. Istomin was careful to keep his playing in this framework from first to last, and he earned the ensuing ovation.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
Circ. D. 526,215 - S. 1,146,860
MAR 6 1956

MOSCOW INVITING WESTERN ARTISTS

Culture Minister Reports Bids to U. S. Musicians—Would Send Troupes Abroad

Special to The New York Times.

MOSCOW, March 5—The Soviet and American peoples will see more of each other's art and culture in the coming year than ever before if plans now under discussion bear fruit.

The Soviet Union announced today it had invited the Philadelphia Orchestra, "leading singers" of the Metropolitan Opera and artists like Isaac Stern and Artur Rubinstein to come here.

In exchange, Moscow is prepared to send the highly successful folk dance ensemble of Igor Moiseev and the ballet troupe from the Bolshoi Theatre to the United States.

A broad program of artistic exchange with the United States, Great Britain, France and Asian countries was announced here by Nikolai A. Mikhailov, Soviet Culture Minister. Mr. Mikhailov, who recently returned from an official trip to Britain, addressed a news conference attended by more than 150 correspondents in Moscow's plush Sovietskaya Hotel.

The Soviet Government is engaged in correspondence with various American cultural organizations, he said, with a view to arranging a continuing exchange program.

The Soviet Union favors the idea of organizing a one-week festival of American films here this year and similar showing of Soviet films in the United States, Mr. Mikhailov announced. He said exhibitions of fine arts masterpieces should also be exchanged.

These contacts should be supplemented by an exchange of soloists, composers, film workers and other artists, the Minister said.

"Our Ministry is ready to do everything in its power," Mr. Mikhailov declared, "to bring these negotiations to a successful conclusion."

He said officials of the Culture Ministry were ready to go to the United States to "solve some acute questions" connected with the exchange program.

From Britain the Soviet Union has invited the London Philharmonic Orchestra and a troupe of leading soloists led by Arthur Bliss to visit Moscow, Mr. Mikhailov announced. He said a Soviet ballet was prepared to perform in Britain.

Mr. Mikhailov also called for "more constant" cultural links with France. Moscow is considering sending ballet, opera and dramatic groups to France in the near future, he said.

Mr. Mikhailov added that the Soviet Union was also eager to spur cultural ties with Italy, Canada, Yugoslavia, India, Egypt and other Mideastern Arab states. The Belgrade Drama Theatre and the Zagreb instrumental ensemble will perform here, and the Moscow Gorky Art Theatre will visit Yugoslavia. The first showing of Egyptian films in the Soviet Union will take place this month. A Soviet dramatic ensemble will visit Egypt at the same time.

The Minister emphasized that the Soviet people were receptive to everything "progressive" in foreign cultures. Mr. Mikhailov's comments were the most unqualified endorsement of cultural contacts by any high Soviet official since the Geneva Foreign Ministers conference last autumn.

Orchestra Manager Surprised

The news came as a surprise to the manager of the Philadelphia Orchestra, Donald L. Engle, who said he knew of no negotiations for a visit to the Soviet Union. The orchestra has no immediate plans for a European tour, he said.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has been negotiating for a Soviet tour. The American National Theatre and Academy, the State Department agency for facilitating foreign tours of American groups, said it had no word that the Boston Symphony negotiations had been either suspended or brought to a favorable conclusion.

Plans for Mr. Stern's tour of the Soviet Union were announced by his management, Hurok Attractions, Inc., on Jan. 25. His tour will last five weeks, beginning near the end of April. Details will be arranged by S. Hurok, who was expected to arrive in Moscow yesterday.

The Hurok office here had no knowledge of a projected Soviet tour for Mr. Rubinstein. The office pointed out that Mr. Rubinstein has no dates available in his schedule for such a tour this year.

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 20,000
MAR 8 1956

MUSIC IN REVIEW

By GERALD A. BERLIN

BSO: VILLA-LOBOS PREMIERE

Last weekend's symphony concert featured the first performance of [redacted] Symphony No. 11, which the Brazilian composer wrote for the orchestra's 75th anniversary and conducted himself. Informal advance research having revealed that Mr. Villa-Lobos had accomplished such stupendous feats as working out a tune (in less than two hours) for an orchestral piece yclept "New York Skyline" from a photograph silhouette of Manhattan, composing a work for soprano and three metronomes and conducting a chorus of 40,000 singers accompanied by a 1,000-piece orchestra, this reviewer was frankly prepared for practically anything from the new work. Actually, the piece was a quite conservatively constructed symphony in four movements, full of trick instrumental acrobatics and quite reminiscent of Milhaud. Each movement in itself provided an exhibition of virtuosity in orchestration and each had a clinch-line ending. But save for an elaboration on a sort of bird-call theme in the finale that seemed almost a direct quotation from the bird theme in Beethoven's "Pastoral" Symphony, everything beneath that busy pyramid of sound was perfectly straightforward and, with all due respect, rather uninspired. There was, in fact, little or none of Villa-Lobos' usual pungent employment of the Brazilian, Indian, African and popular folk material which is his stock-in-trade. Nevertheless, the new work was well received, but whether because of its intrinsic color or the hospitality due a distinguished foreign visitor or Mr. Villa-Lobos' attractive podium personality is anybody's guess.

Mr. Munch opened the concert with Tchaikowsky's "Romeo and Juliet" Overture—Fantasia. French conductors do not often address their talents to the Russians and one gets to fear after a time that when they do, out of pumpernickel will emerge brioche. Yet, this is by no means always the case, as anyone can attest who recalls Mr. Munch's colossal performance of Tchaikowsky's "Pathetique" Symphony during his very first season here. As for the "Romeo and Juliet," if Mr. Munch feels more at home in the Berlioz incarnation of the same, he yet begat a reading that was notable for the beautiful modelling of the phrases and the clarity of the texture—two French qualities that lend lustre to music of any nationality. Notwithstanding these merits I was somewhat taken aback with the tensionless languor of the long introductory andante depicting Friar Laurence, and with the disproportionate onrush of the Montague-Capulet fracas. Anent the latter, one man's excitement may sound like another man's frenzy.

The program concluded with Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 4 in G Major, Opus 58, with Eugene Istomin as piano soloist. This epitome of elegance and style is often described as a battle-royal between piano and orchestra. On the other hand, it was once characterized by George Bernard Shaw to be "as great in a feminine way as the 5th (concerto) is in a masculine way." Mr. Istomin played delicately, even as women are supposed to play but in fact never do, with the result that the view of Shaw was buttressed. Taken on these terms and in the teeth of a rather jarringly out of context cadenza at the end of the first movement, the performance was filled with affecting, poetic introspection.

This week the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society will present for the first time at these concerts three pieces by Mozart, namely, his "Regina coeli" for Chorus, Soprano Solo and Orchestra; the "Ave, verum corpus" Motet for Chorus and String Orchestra; and the "Vesperae de dominica" for Chorus and Orchestra with Soprano, Alto, Tenor and Bass Solo, all to be conducted by G. Wallace Woodworth. The second half of the program will consist of the Faure Requiem and will be conducted by Mr. Munch. The soloists include Adele Addison, soprano, Eleanor Davis, mezzo-soprano, Richard Gilley, tenor, and Donald Gramm, bass.

Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 12,825
MAR 5 1956

Berkshire Center Summer Plans

Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, announces that the fourteenth session of the orchestra's school, the Berkshire Music Center, will be held at Tanglewood from July 2 to August 12 in connection with the Berkshire Festival concerts. One of Italy's foremost composers, Goffredo Petrassi, has accepted Mr. Munch's invitation to serve as guest teacher of composition. The Composition Department, headed by Aaron Copland, has included in the past such guest composers from other countries as Hindemith, Ibert, Dallapiccola, Honegger, Milhaud and Blacher. Mr. Petrassi's recent work, Fifth Concerto for Orchestra, commissioned for the 75th anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is planned for the Berkshire Festival programs shortly to be announced in full. Mr. Munch continues as director of the school, founded under the direction of the late Serge Koussevitzky in 1940. The Berkshire Music Center's department for orchestra, including conducting, will have as its head the young Brazilian conductor, Eleazar de Carvalho, who returns after five years to serve again on the faculty. He will also appear as guest conductor in the Festival. Instrumental students will also study chamber music under Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, William Kroll, noted violinist, and members of the orchestra.

The choral department, headed by Hugh Ross, will form the Festival Chorus, singing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Charles Munch in Bach's St. John Passion and Wagner's Die Meistersinger, Act III. Leonard Bernstein, long associated with Tanglewood, will conduct the Gloria from Mozart's Mass in C Minor, in a program dedicated to the memory of Serge Koussevitzky. The Opera Department under Boris Goldovsky will again produce several programs of opera. The Tanglewood Study Group for amateur and music enthusiasts participating in general activities will be headed by Ingolf Dahl and may be attended for two, four or six weeks.

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,872
MAR 7 1956

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MAR 1956

Boston Symphony Plays New Hanson Elegy

Boston Symphony, Charles Munch, conductor. Carnegie Hall, Feb. 11, 2:30:

"Roman Carnival" Overture.... Berlioz
"Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky" ..... Howard Hanson
(First New York performance)
"La Mer" ..... Debussy
Symphony No. 4 ..... Brahms

This sort of program offers the Boston instrumentalists a field day; it was no surprise that the afternoon proved one of superb music-making. Charles Munch is a conductor gifted with both passion and proportion. He commands a wonderful body of men, to be sure; but the perception, the justness and elan are all his.

The Hanson "Elegy", revised for the Boston Symphony's 75th anniversary and performed for the first time in New York, is characteristic of its composer's somewhat old-fashioned but very sincere and very personal idiom, a post-romanticism that in its oracular strength often suggestive of Walt Whitman. The piece opens with a juxtaposition of two unrelated minor triads, proceeds through phases of expansive solemnity to a crisis of exaltation, and ends serenely. Whether or not it suggests anything of the personality of the late Serge Koussevitzky, it is sturdy and touching music and deserved the response that Mr. Hanson was on hand to acknowledge.

One must praise Mr. Munch for the suppleness and continuity of his "La Mer", a composition that frequently is made to sound like a string of precious but disconnected fragments, as well as for the fastidious elegance that one expects. Brahms's Fourth Symphony was performed like the monumental achievement that it is; in addition, Mr. Munch brought out a linear clarity and sense of propulsion that are not always the work's share.

—F. M.

Bruce

Eleanor Davis will be the alto soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for its open rehearsal Thursday night and for its weekend concerts. She will also sing with the Handel and Haydn Society in Symphony Hall Sunday night, March 18.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 180,559
MAR 8 - 1956

Open Rehearsal Set By Symphony Tonight

In preparation for the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday afternoon and Saturday evening there will be an Open Rehearsal at Symphony Hall tonight at 7:30. The Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society will join with the Orchestra in preparing for performance three works for chorus, soloists and orchestra by Mozart: "Regina coeli," "Ave, verum corpus" and "Vesperae de monica," to be conducted by G. Wallace Woodworth, and the "Requiem" by Faure, to be conducted by Charles Munch. The vocal soloists for this program are Adele Addison, soprano; Eleanor Davis, mezzo-soprano; Richard Gilley, tenor; and Donald Gramm, bass.

Post (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 285,839
MAR 5 1956

Music in Review

BY TUCKER KEISER

Not since Ellabelle Davis gave the premiere of Lukas Foss' "The Song of Songs" with the Boston Symphony Orchestra nearly eight years ago had I had the pleasure of hearing this excellent artist. At that time her voice was quite beautiful and she made a stunning success.

Yesterday afternoon, Miss Davis sang in Jordan Hall and her voice seemed to me even more beautiful. It is not a large soprano, but the luminous timbre, particularly in the middle range, is exquisite. The purity of sound, like that of the flute, gives the impression that it is a considerably larger instrument that it is.

It is regrettable that the singer did not include a few more French art songs than she did because she has the voice and temperament to sing them extremely well. As it was she chose two songs by Poulenc, a composer whose music displays an uncharacteristically French vitality. These were her finest works of the afternoon, though groups by Brahms and Strauss revealed that she is a singer of depth and style.

Edward Hart was the capable accompanist.

Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 10,000 Free
MAR 8 1956

ncerts
hool es

e Club and ral Society,
conducted by G. Wallace Woodworth, will join with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch, music director, for a program of choral music by Mozart and Faure at the next pair of Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on March 9 and 10.

On the first half of the program, Mr. Woodworth will conduct three Mozart works: The "Regina Coeli" for chorus, soprano solo and orchestra, K. 108; the "Ave, verum corpus" for chorus and string orchestra, K. 618; and the "Vesperae Dominica" for chorus and orchestra with soprano, alto, tenor and bass solo, K. 321.

The second half of the concert, conducted by Mr. Munch, will consist of the Requiem by Gabriel Faure. The soloists will be Adele Addison, soprano; Eleanor Davis, mezzo-soprano; Richard Gilley, tenor; and Donald Gramm, bass.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
Circ. D. 526,215 - S. 1,146,860

MAR 6 1956

MOSCOW INVITING WESTERN ARTISTS

Culture Minister Reports Bids to U. S. Musicians—Would Send Troupes Abroad

Special to The New York Times.

MOSCOW, March 5—The Soviet and American peoples will see more of each other's art and culture in the coming year than ever before if plans now under discussion bear fruit.

The Soviet Union announced today it had invited the Philadelphia Orchestra, "leading singers" of the Metropolitan Opera and artists like Isaac Stern and Artur Rubinstein to come here.

In exchange, Moscow is prepared to send the highly successful folk dance ensemble of Igor Moiseev and the ballet troupe from the Bolshoi Theatre to the United States.

A broad program of artistic exchange with the United States, Great Britain, France and Asian countries was announced here by Nikolai A. Mikhailov, Soviet Culture Minister. Mr. Mikhailov, who recently returned from an official trip to Britain, addressed a news conference attended by more than 150 correspondents in Moscow's plush Sovietskaya Hotel.

The Soviet Government is engaged in correspondence with various American cultural organizations, he said, with a view to arranging a continuing exchange program.

The Soviet Union favors the idea of organizing a one-week festival of American films here this year and similar showing of Soviet films in the United States, Mr. Mikhailov announced. He said exhibitions of fine arts masterpieces should also be exchanged.

These contacts should be supplemented by an exchange of soloists, composers, film workers and other artists, the Minister said.

"Our Ministry is ready to do everything in its power," Mr. Mikhailov declared, "to bring these negotiations to a successful conclusion."

He said officials of the Culture Ministry were ready to go to the United States to "solve some acute questions" connected with the exchange program.

From Britain the Soviet Union has invited the London Philharmonic Orchestra and a troupe of leading soloists led by Arthur Bliss to visit Moscow, Mr. Mikhailov announced. He said a Soviet ballet was prepared to perform in Britain.

Mr. Mikhailov also called for "more constant" cultural links with France. Moscow is considering sending ballet, opera and dramatic groups to France in the near future, he said.

Mr. Mikhailov added that the Soviet Union was also eager to spur cultural ties with Italy, Canada, Yugoslavia, India, Egypt and other Mideastern Arab states. The Belgrade Drama Theatre and the Zagreb instrumental ensemble will perform here, and the Moscow Gorky Art Theatre will visit Yugoslavia. The first showing of Egyptian films in the Soviet Union will take place this month. A Soviet dramatic ensemble will visit Egypt at the same time.

The Minister emphasized that the Soviet people were receptive to everything "progressive" in foreign cultures. Mr. Mikhailov's comments were the most unqualified endorsement of cultural contacts by any high Soviet official since the Geneva Foreign Ministers conference last autumn.

Orchestra Manager Surprised

The news came as a surprise to the manager of the Philadelphia Orchestra, Donald L. Engle, who said he knew of no negotiations for a visit to the Soviet Union. The orchestra has no immediate plans for a European tour, he said.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has been negotiating for a Soviet tour. The American National Theatre and Academy, the State Department agency for facilitating foreign tours of American groups, said it had no word that the Boston Symphony negotiations had been either suspended or brought to a favorable conclusion.

Plans for Mr. Stern's tour of the Soviet Union were announced by his management, Hurok Attractions, Inc., on Jan. 25. His tour will last five weeks, beginning near the end of April. Details will be arranged by S. Hurok, who was expected to arrive in Moscow yesterday.

The Hurok office here had no knowledge of a projected Soviet tour for Mr. Rubinstein. The office pointed out that Mr. Rubinstein has no dates available in his schedule for such a tour this year.

Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 12,825

MAR 5 1956

Berkshire Center Summer Plans

Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, announces that the fourteenth session of the orchestra's school, the Berkshire Music Center, will be held at Tanglewood from July 2 to August 12 in connection with the Berkshire Festival concerts. One of Italy's foremost composers, Goffredo Petrassi, has accepted Mr. Munch's invitation to serve as guest teacher of composition. The Composition Department, headed by Aaron Copland, has included in the past such guest composers from other countries as Hindemith, Ibert, Dallapiccola, Honegger, Milhaud and Blacher. Mr. Petrassi's recent work, Fifth Concerto for Orchestra, commissioned for the 75th anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is planned for the Berkshire Festival programs shortly to be announced in full. Mr. Munch continues as director of the school, founded under the direction of the late Serge Koussevitzky in 1940. The Berkshire Music Center's department for orchestra, including conducting, will have as its head the young Brazilian conductor, Eleazar de Carvalho, who returns after five years to serve again on the faculty. He will also appear as guest conductor in the Festival. Instrumental students will also study chamber music under Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, William Kroll, noted violinist, and members of the orchestra.

The choral department, headed by Hugh Ross, will form the Festival Chorus, singing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Charles Munch in Bach's St. John Passion and Wagner's Die Meistersinger, Act III. Leonard Bernstein, long associated with Tanglewood, will conduct the Gloria from Mozart's Mass in C Minor, in a program dedicated to the memory of Serge Koussevitzky. The Opera Department under Boris Goldovsky will again produce several programs of opera. The Tanglewood Study Group for amateur and music enthusiasts participating in general activities will be headed by Ingolf Dahl and may be attended for two, four or six weeks.

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,872

MAR 7 1956

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N. Y.

MAR 1956

Boston Symphony Plays New Hanson Elegy

Boston Symphony, Charles Munch, conductor. Carnegie Hall, Feb. 11, 2:30:

"Roman Carnival" Overture....Berlioz
"Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky".....Howard Hanson
(First New York performance)
"La Mer".....Debussy
Symphony No. 4.....Brahms

This sort of program offers the Boston instrumentalists a field day; it was no surprise that the afternoon proved one of superb music-making. Charles Munch is a conductor gifted with both passion and proportion. He commands a wonderful body of men, to be sure; but the perception, the justness and elan are all his.

The Hanson "Elegy", revised for the Boston Symphony's 75th anniversary and performed for the first time in New York, is characteristic of its composer's somewhat old-fashioned but very sincere and very personal idiom, a post-romanticism that in its oracular strength often suggestive of Walt Whitman. The piece opens with a juxtaposition of two unrelated minor triads, proceeds through phases of expansive solemnity to a crisis of exaltation, and ends serenely. Whether or not it suggests anything of the personality of the late Serge Koussevitzky, it is sturdy and touching music and deserved the response that Mr. Hanson was on hand to acknowledge.

One must praise Mr. Munch for the suppleness and continuity of his "La Mer", a composition that frequently is made to sound like a string of precious but disconnected fragments, as well as for the fastidious elegance that one expects. Brahms's Fourth Symphony was performed like the monumental achievement that it is; in addition, Mr. Munch brought out a linear clarity and sense of propulsion that are not always the work's share.

—F. M.

Bruno

Eleanor Davis will be the alto soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for its open rehearsal Thursday night and for its weekend concerts. She will also sing with the Handel and Haydn Society in Symphony Hall Sunday night, March 18.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 130,559

MAR 8 - 1956

Open Rehearsal Set By Symphony Tonight

In preparation for the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday afternoon and Saturday evening there will be an Open Rehearsal at Symphony Hall tonight at 7:30. The Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society will join with the Orchestra in preparing for performance three works for chorus, soloists and ochestra by Mozart: "Regina coeli," "Ave, verum corpus" and "Vesperae de moninica," to be conducted by G. Wallace Woodworth, and the "Requiem" by Faure, to be conducted by Charles Munch. The vocal soloists for this program are Adele Addison, soprano; Eleanor Davis, mezzo-soprano; Richard Gilley, tenor; and Donald Gramm, bass.

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 20,000

MAR 8 1956

15

MUSIC IN REVIEW

By GERALD A. BERLIN

BSO: VILLA-LOBOS PREMIERE

Last weekend's symphony concert featured the first performance of ~~Heitor Villa-Lobos'~~ Symphony No. 11, which the Brazilian composer wrote for the orchestra's 75th anniversary and conducted himself. Informal advance research having revealed that Mr. Villa-Lobos had accomplished such stupendous feats as working out a tune (in less than two hours) for an orchestral piece yclept "New York Skyline" from a photograph silhouette of Manhattan, composing a work for soprano and three metronomes and conducting a chorus of 40,000 singers accompanied by a 1,000-piece orchestra, this reviewer was frankly prepared for practically anything from the new work. Actually, the piece was a quite conservatively constructed symphony in four movements, full of trick instrumental acrobatics and quite reminiscent of Milhaud. Each movement in itself provided an exhibition of virtuosity in orchestration and each had a clinch-line ending. But save for an elaboration on a sort of bird-call theme in the finale that seemed almost a direct quotation from the bird theme in Beethoven's "Pastoral" Symphony, everything beneath that busy pyramid of sound was perfectly straightforward and, with all due respect, rather uninspired. There was, in fact, little or none of Villa-Lobos' usual pungent employment of the Brazilian, Indian, African and popular folk material which is his stock-in-trade. Nevertheless, the new work was well received, but whether because of its intrinsic color or the hospitality due a distinguished foreign visitor or Mr. Villa-Lobos' attractive podium personality is anybody's guess.

Mr. Munch opened the concert with Tchaikowsky's "Romeo and Juliet" Overture—Fantasia. French conductors do not often address their talents to the Russians and one gets to fear after a time that when they do, out of pumpernickel will emerge brioche. Yet, this is by no means always the case, as anyone can attest who recalls Mr. Munch's colossal performance of Tchaikowsky's "Pathetique" Symphony during his very first season here. As for the "Romeo and Juliet," if Mr. Munch feels more at home in the Berlioz incarnation of the same, he yet begat a reading that was notable for the beautiful modelling of the phrases and the clarity of the texture—two French qualities that lend lustre to music of any nationality. Notwithstanding these merits I was somewhat taken aback with the tensionless languor of the long introductory andante depicting Friar Laurence, and with the disproportionate onrush of the Montague-Capulet fracas. Anent the latter, one man's excitement may sound like another man's frenzy.

The program concluded with Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 4 in G Major, Opus 58, with Eugene Istomin as piano soloist. This epitome of elegance and style is often described as a battle-royal between piano and orchestra. On the other hand, it was once characterized by George Bernard Shaw to be "as great in a feminine way as the 5th (concerto) is in a masculine way." Mr. Istomin played delicately, even as women are supposed to play but in fact never do, with the result that the view of Shaw was buttressed. Taken on these terms and in the teeth of a rather jarringly out of context cadenza at the end of the first movement, the performance was filled with affecting, poetic intraspection.

This week the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society will present for the first time at these concerts three pieces by Mozart, namely, his "Regina coeli" for Chorus, Soprano Solo and Orchestra; the "Ave, verum corpus" Motet for Chorus and String Orchestra; and the "Vesperae de dominica" for Chorus and Orchestra with Soprano, Alto, Tenor and Bass Solo, all to be conducted by G. Wallace Woodworth. The second half of the program will consist of the Faure Requiem and will be conducted by Mr. Munch. The soloists include Adele Addison, soprano, Eleanor Davis, mezzo-soprano, Richard Gilley, tenor, and Donald Gramm, bass.

Post (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 285,839
MAR 5 1956

Music in Review

BY TUCKER KEISER

Not since Ellabelle Davis gave the premiere of Lukas Foss' "The Song of Songs" with the Boston Symphony Orchestra nearly eight years ago had I had the pleasure of hearing this excellent artist. At that time her voice was quite beautiful and she made a stunning success.

Yesterday afternoon, Miss Davis sang in Jordan Hall and her voice seemed to me even more beautiful. It is not a large soprano, but the luminous timbre, particularly in the middle range, is exquisite. The purity of sound, like that of the flute, gives the impression that it is a considerably larger instrument that it is.

It is regrettable that the singer did not include a few more French art songs than she did because she has the voice and temperament to sing them extremely well. As it was she chose two songs by Poulenc, a composer whose music displays an uncharacteristically French vitality. These were her finest works of the afternoon, though groups by Brahms and Strauss revealed that she is a singer of depth and style.

Edward Hart was the capable accompanist.

Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 10,000 Free

MAR 8 1956

ncerts
hool
es ee Club and oral Society,

conducted by G. Wallace Woodworth, will join with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch, music director, for a program of choral music by Mozart and Faure at the next pair of Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on March 9 and 10.

On the first half of the program, Mr. Woodworth will conduct three Mozart works: The "Regina Coeli" for chorus, soprano solo and orchestra, K. 108; the "Ave, verum corpus" for chorus and string orchestra, K. 618; and the "Vesperae Dominica" for chorus and orchestra with soprano, alto, tenor and bass solo, K. 321.

The second half of the concert, conducted by Mr. Munch, will consist of the Requiem by Gabriel Faure. The soloists will be Adele Addison, soprano; Eleanor Davis, mezzo-soprano; Richard Gilley, tenor; and Donald Gramm, bass.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
Circ. D. 526,215 - S. 1,146,860

MAR 6 1956

MOSCOW INVITING WESTERN ARTISTS

Culture Minister Reports Bids to U. S. Musicians—Would Send Troupes Abroad

Special to The New York Times.

MOSCOW, March 5—The Soviet and American peoples will see more of each other's art and culture in the coming year than ever before if plans now under discussion bear fruit.

The Soviet Union announced today it had invited the Philadelphia Orchestra, "leading singers" of the Metropolitan Opera and artists like Isaac Stern and Artur Rubinstein to come here.

In exchange, Moscow is prepared to send the highly successful folk dance ensemble of Igor Moiseev and the ballet troupe from the Bolshoi Theatre to the United States.

A broad program of artistic exchange with the United States, Great Britain, France and Asian countries was announced here by Nikolai A. Mikhailov, Soviet Culture Minister. Mr. Mikhailov, who recently returned from an official trip to Britain, addressed a news conference attended by more than 150 correspondents in Moscow's plush Sovietskaya Hotel.

The Soviet Government is engaged in correspondence with various American cultural organizations, he said, with a view to arranging a continuing exchange program.

The Soviet Union favors the idea of organizing a one-week festival of American films here this year and similar showing of Soviet films in the United States, Mr. Mikhailov announced. He said exhibitions of fine arts masterpieces should also be exchanged.

These contacts should be supplemented by an exchange of soloists, composers, film workers and other artists, the Minister said.

"Our Ministry is ready to do everything in its power," Mr. Mikhailov declared, "to bring these negotiations to a successful conclusion."

He said officials of the Culture Ministry were ready to go to the United States to "solve some acute questions" connected with the exchange program.

From Britain the Soviet Union has invited the London Philharmonic Orchestra and a troupe of leading soloists led by Arthur Bliss to visit Moscow, Mr. Mikhailov announced. He said a Soviet ballet was prepared to perform in Britain.

Mr. Mikhailov also called for "more constant" cultural links with France. Moscow is considering sending ballet, opera and dramatic groups to France in the near future, he said.

Mr. Mikhailov added that the Soviet Union was also eager to spur cultural ties with Italy, Canada, Yugoslavia, India, Egypt and other Mideastern Arab states. The Belgrade Drama Theatre and the Zagreb instrumental ensemble will perform here, and the Moscow Gorky Art Theatre will visit Yugoslavia. The first showing of Egyptian films in the Soviet Union will take place this month. A Soviet dramatic ensemble will visit Egypt at the same time.

The Minister emphasized that the Soviet people were receptive to everything "progressive" in foreign cultures. Mr. Mikhailov's comments were the most unqualified endorsement of cultural contacts by any high Soviet official since the Geneva Foreign Ministers conference last autumn.

Orchestra Manager Surprised

The news came as a surprise to the manager of the Philadelphia Orchestra, Donald L. Engle, who said he knew of no negotiations for a visit to the Soviet Union. The orchestra has no immediate plans for a European tour, he said.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has been negotiating for a Soviet tour. The American National Theatre and Academy, the State Department agency for facilitating foreign tours of American groups, said it had no word that the Boston Symphony negotiations had been either suspended or brought to a favorable conclusion.

Plans for Mr. Stern's tour of the Soviet Union were announced by his management, Hurok Attractions, Inc., on Jan. 25. His tour will last five weeks, beginning near the end of April. Details will be arranged by S. Hurok, who was expected to arrive in Moscow yesterday.

The Hurok office here had no knowledge of a projected Soviet tour for Mr. Rubinstein. The office pointed out that Mr. Rubinstein has no dates available in his schedule for such a tour this year.

Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 12,825

MAR 5 1956

Berkshire Center Summer Plans

Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, announces that the fourteenth session of the orchestra's school, the Berkshire Music Center, will be held at Tanglewood from July 2 to August 12 in connection with the Berkshire Festival concerts. One of Italy's foremost composers, Goffredo Petrassi, has accepted Mr. Munch's invitation to serve as guest teacher of composition. The Composition Department, headed by Aaron Copland, has included in the past such guest composers from other countries as Hindemith, Ibert, Dallapiccola, Honegger, Milhaud and Blacher. Mr. Petrassi's recent work, Fifth Concerto for Orchestra, commissioned for the 75th anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is planned for the Berkshire Festival programs shortly to be announced in full. Mr. Munch continues as director of the school, founded under the direction of the late Serge Koussevitzky in 1940. The Berkshire Music Center's department for orchestra, including conducting, will have as its head the young Brazillian conductor, Eleazar de Carvalho, who returns after five years to serve again on the faculty. He will also appear as guest conductor in the Festival. Instrumental students will also study chamber music under Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, William Kroll, noted violinist, and members of the orchestra.

The choral department, headed by Hugh Ross, will form the Festival Chorus, singing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Charles Munch in Bach's St. John Passion and Wagner's Die Meistersinger, Act III. Leonard Bernstein, long associated with Tanglewood, will conduct the Gloria from Mozart's Mass in C Minor, in a program dedicated to the memory of Serge Koussevitzky. The Opera Department under Boris Goldovsky will again produce several programs of opera. The Tanglewood Study Group for amateur and music enthusiasts participating in general activities will be headed by Ingolf Dahl and may be attended for two, four or six weeks.

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,872

MAR 7 1956

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N. Y.

MAR 1956

Boston Symphony Plays New Hanson Elegy

Boston Symphony, Charles Munch, conductor. Carnegie Hall, Feb. 11, 2:30:

"Roman Carnival" Overture . . . Berlioz
"Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky" . . . . . Howard Hanson
(First New York performance)
"La Mer" . . . . . Debussy
Symphony No. 4 . . . . . Brahms

This sort of program offers the Boston instrumentalists a field day; it was no surprise that the afternoon proved one of superb music-making. Charles Munch is a conductor gifted with both passion and proportion. He commands a wonderful body of men, to be sure; but the perception, the justness and elan are all his.

The Hanson "Elegy", revised for the Boston Symphony's 75th anniversary and performed for the first time in New York, is characteristic of its composer's somewhat old-fashioned but very sincere and very personal idiom, a post-romanticism that in its oracular strength often suggestive of Walt Whitman. The piece opens with a juxtaposition of two unrelated minor triads, proceeds through phases of expansive solemnity to a crisis of exaltation, and ends serenely. Whether or not it suggests anything of the personality of the late Serge Koussevitzky, it is sturdy and touching music and deserved the response that Mr. Hanson was on hand to acknowledge.

One must praise Mr. Munch for the suppleness and continuity of his "La Mer", a composition that frequently is made to sound like a string of precious but disconnected fragments, as well as for the fastidious elegance that one expects. Brahms's Fourth Symphony was performed like the monumental achievement that it is; in addition, Mr. Munch brought out a linear clarity and sense of propulsion that are not always the work's share.

—F. M.

Bruno

Eleanor Davis will be the alto soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for its open rehearsal Thursday night and for its weekend concerts. She will also sing with the Handel and Haydn Society in Symphony Hall Sunday night, March 18.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 130,559

MAR 8 - 1956

Open Rehearsal Set By Symphony Tonight

In preparation for the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday afternoon and Saturday evening there will be an Open Rehearsal at Symphony Hall tonight at 7:30. The Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society will join with the Orchestra in preparing for performance three works for chorus, soloists and ochestra by Mozart: "Regina coeli," "Ave, verum corpus" and "Vesperae de monnica," to be conducted by G. Wallace Woodworth, and the "Requiem" by Faure, to be conducted by Charles Munch. The vocal soloists for this program are Adele Addison, soprano; Eleanor Davis, mezzo-soprano; Richard Gilley, tenor; and Donald Gramm, bass.

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 20,000

MAR 8 1956

MUSIC IN REVIEW

By GERALD A. BERLIN

BSO: VILLA-LOBOS PREMIERE

Last weekend's symphony concert featured the first performance of ~~Heitor Villa-Lobos'~~ Symphony No. 11, which the Brazilian composer wrote for the orchestra's 75th anniversary and conducted himself. Informal advance research having revealed that Mr. Villa-Lobos had accomplished such stupendous feats as working out a tune (in less than two hours) for an orchestral piece yclept "New York Skyline" from a photograph silhouette of Manhattan, composing a work for soprano and three metronomes and conducting a chorus of 40,000 singers accompanied by a 1,000-piece orchestra, this reviewer was frankly prepared for practically anything from the new work. Actually, the piece was a quite conservatively constructed symphony in four movements, full of trick instrumental acrobatics and quite reminiscent of Milhaud. Each movement in itself provided an exhibition of virtuosity in orchestration and each had a clinch-line ending. But save for an elaboration on a sort of bird-call theme in the finale that seemed almost a direct quotation from the bird theme in Beethoven's "Pastoral" Symphony, everything beneath that busy pyramid of sound was perfectly straightforward and, with all due respect, rather uninspired. There was, in fact, little or none of Villa-Lobos' usual pungent employment of the Brazilian, Indian, African and popular folk material which is his stock-in-trade. Nevertheless, the new work was well received, but whether because of its intrinsic color or the hospitality due a distinguished foreign visitor or Mr. Villa-Lobos' attractive podium personality is anybody's guess.

Mr. Munch opened the concert with Tchaikowsky's "Romeo and Juliet" Overture—Fantasia. French conductors do not often address their talents to the Russians and one gets to fear after a time that when they do, out of pumpernickel will emerge brioche. Yet, this is by no means always the case, as anyone can attest who recalls Mr. Munch's colossal performance of Tchaikowsky's "Pathetique" Symphony during his very first season here. As for the "Romeo and Juliet," if Mr. Munch feels more at home in the Berlioz incarnation of the same, he yet begat a reading that was notable for the beautiful modelling of the phrases and the clarity of the texture—two French qualities that lend lustre to music of any nationality. Notwithstanding these merits I was somewhat taken aback with the tensionless languor of the long introductory andante depicting Friar Laurence, and with the disproportionate onrush of the Montague-Capulet fracas. Anent the latter, one man's excitement may sound like another man's frenzy.

The program concluded with Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 4 in G Major, Opus 58, with Eugene Istomin as piano soloist. This epitome of elegance and style is often described as a battle-royal between piano and orchestra. On the other hand, it was once characterized by George Bernard Shaw to be "as great in a feminine way as the 5th (concerto) is in a masculine way." Mr. Istomin played delicately, even as women are supposed to play but in fact never do, with the result that the view of Shaw was buttressed. Taken on these terms and in the teeth of a rather jarringly out of context cadenza at the end of the first movement, the performance was filled with affecting, poetic intraspection.

This week the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society will present for the first time at these concerts three pieces by Mozart, namely, his "Regina coeli" for Chorus, Soprano Solo and Orchestra; the "Ave, verum corpus" Motet for Chorus and String Orchestra; and the "Vesperae de dominica" for Chorus and Orchestra with Soprano, Alto, Tenor and Bass Solo, all to be conducted by G. Wallace Woodworth. The second half of the program will consist of the Faure Requiem and will be conducted by Mr. Munch. The soloists include Adele Addison, soprano, Eleanor Davis, mezzo-soprano, Richard Gilley, tenor, and Donald Gramm, bass.

Post (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 285,839
MAR 5 1956

and cotton State memb al lives.
nous cloud on the Republic elec-here kes-
well

Boston Symphony Orchestra nearly eight years ago had I had the pleasure of hearing this excellent artist. At that time her voice was quite beautiful and she made a stunning success.

Yesterday afternoon, Miss Davis sang in Jordan Hall and her voice seemed to me even more beautiful. It is not a large soprano, but the luminous timbre, particularly in the middle range, is exquisite. The purity of sound, like that of the flute, gives the impression that it is a considerably larger instrument that it is.

It is regrettable that the singer did not include a few more French art songs than she did because she has the voice and temperament to sing them extremely well. As it was she chose two songs by Poulenc, a composer whose music displays an uncharacteristically French vitality. These were her finest works of the afternoon, though

Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 10,000 Free

MAR 8 1956

Symphony Concerts To Feature School Choral Societies

The Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society, conducted by G. Wallace Woodworth, will join with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch, music director, for a program of choral music by Mozart and Faure at the next pair of Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on March 9 and 10.

On the first half of the program, Mr. Woodworth will conduct three Mozart works: The "Regina Coeli" for chorus, soprano solo and orchestra, K. 108; the "Ave, verum corpus" for chorus and string orchestra, K. 618; and the "Vesperae Dominica" for chorus and orchestra with soprano, alto, tenor and bass solo, K. 321.

The second half of the concert, conducted by Mr. Munch, will consist of the Requiem by Gabriel Faure. The soloists will be Adele Addison, soprano; Eleanor Davis, mezzo-soprano; Richard Gilley, tenor; and Donald Gramm, bass.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,872
MAR 7 1956

Decade of Debuts

Zimbler Sinfonietta has, in ten years, built a reputation for supporting new music.

By Harold Rogers

Music Critic of The Christian Science Monitor

IN TODAY'S MUSIC WORLD, where stability is will-o'-the-wisp, a tenth anniversary is solid achievement.

We salute the gains made by the Zimbler Sinfonietta—the leading chamber music ensemble of its kind in the United States—on the occasion of its tenth season. Founded by Josef Zimbler, a cellist, this group of 19 players (more or less as required) is composed of musicians from the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Mr. Zimbler is a performing member of his Sinfonietta, which usually plays without a conductor. It is he, however, who guides its artistic destinies. He plans the programs for his annual Boston concert series, as he does for appearances in New York and elsewhere. He arranges for recording sessions (the Zimbler Sinfonietta may be heard on Decca Records and Boston Records). When a leader has been needed for the performance of some tricky work, Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony, or Richard Burgin, associate conductor, have made guest appearances.

But important as these functions are, Mr. Zimbler's major contribution to the world of music has been his ardent support of the contemporary composer. He is not satisfied to coast with programs of the traditional, however appealing they might be.

True, he has played much of the standard repertoire, as expected of any chamber ensemble. But he has also presented seven world premières, five United States premières, and 14 Boston premières. Sixteen contemporary composers have been represented at his concerts, ten of whom are American.

Mr. Zimbler understands, as do most serious musicians, that the music of today must be supported in order to have a music of tomorrow. We must strive to eliminate the time lag (set at 40 years by some musicologists) usually existing between the avant-garde composer and the listening public.

This time lag is cut down or eliminated through public education, and there is none better than an opportunity to listen to new music with an open mind. The Zimbler Sinfonietta is doing its part in offering this opportunity. Many a listener is doing his share in providing the open mind.

Among the American composers found on Mr. Zimbler's programs are Aaron Copland, Arthur Berger, Irving Fine, Lukas Foss, Alan Hovhaness, Hubert Lamb, and Gardner Read. Among foreign composers we find Francesco Malipiero of Italy, Nikos Skalkottas of Greece, Alexander Tcherepnin (formerly of Soviet Union, now of the United States), Knudage Riisager and Svend Schultz of Denmark, Paul Hindemith of Germany, Heitor Villa-Lobos of Brazil, Igor Stravinsky (formerly of the Soviet Union, now of the United States), Bohuslav Martinů (formerly of Czechoslovakia, now of the United States), and Ralph Vaughan Williams and Alan Rawsthorne of England.

Many noted soloists have appeared with the Zimbler Sinfonietta, among them Joseph Fuchs, Louis Kaufman, Alexander Schneider, and Ruth Posselt, violinists; Tung Kwong-Kwong, Gregory Tucker, Leonard Bernstein, and Miklos Schwalb, pianists; Zara Nelsova, cellist; Marcel Grandjany, harpist; Daniel Pinkham, Fernando Valenti, and Ralph Kirkpatrick, harpsichordists; Phyllis Curtin, soprano; Vera Zorina and Arnold Moss, narrators; and Anita Alvarez, dancer. One concert performance of opera was presented in association with the New York Chamber Opera Company.

In taking note of this tenth anniversary, the pictures of several composers are presented whose reputations have been strengthened by the Zimbler Sinfonietta. Some of their faces are well known; others will doubtless become better known as their music is more widely played.

1. Lukas Foss, American.
2. Alan Rawsthorne, British.
3. Hubert Lamb, American.
4. Bohuslav Martinů, Czechoslovakian.
5. Heitor Villa-Lobos, Brazilian.
6. Gardner Read, American.
7. Alan Hovhaness, American.
8. Irving Fine, American.
9. Aaron Copland, American.

Photos 1, 7, and 9 by John Brook. Photo 2 by British Information Services. Photo 3 by Margaret Lamb. Photo 4 by Blackstone Studios.

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,872

MAR 8 - 1956

Art Shows — Concerts in Prospect — Beethoven Sonata Cycle

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,872

3-Man Panel To Air Plans For Hub Area

A discussion entitled "For a Greater Boston" will be broadcast over WHDH Friday night at 10 o'clock. Three speakers will appear on the program, Oliver T. Bergstrom, president of the Middlesex County National Bank and chairman of the Metropolitan Affairs Council; William J. Bird, managing director, Greater Boston Chamber of Commerce, and Kevin Lynch, associate professor of city and regional planning at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

The public hearing for the regional planning legislation was held before the Committee on Metropolitan Affairs at the State House on March 7.

J. S. R. Duncan, formerly of the Sudan Government, will join Louis M. Lyons Friday at 6:45 p.m. on Channel 2's "Backgrounds" series. Mr. Duncan will tell his teleview audience "What Is Ahead for the Sudan.

Three works by Mozart will be played for the first time by the Boston Symphony Orchestra this weekend. Under the direction of Charles Munch, the orchestra will play the Regina Coeli for chorus, soloists, and orchestra (K. 108); Ave, Verum Corpus, motet for chorus and string orchestra (K. 68); and Vesperae de dominica for chorus, soloists, and orchestra (K. 321).

Accompanying the orchestra will be the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society, under the direction of G. Wallace Woodworth. The program includes Fauré's Requiem, Op. 48. Soloists will be Adele Addison, soprano, and Donald Gramm, bass. Both concerts will be broadcast as usual over WGBH-FM; Friday at 2:10 p.m. and Saturday at 8:25 p.m.

Edward R. Murrow and his "Person to Person" cameras will visit the homes of actor, producer, and director Raymond Massey and his family in Wilton, Conn., and movie star Rita Gam in her brownstone house on the East Side of Manhattan Friday night at 10:30 on Channels 9 and 12.

Paul Murray Kendall's book, "Richard III," will be analyzed on Channel 2's "I've Been Reading" series Friday at 8:30 p.m. P. Albert Duhamel, professor of English at Boston College, permanent host of the program, will have as his guest Kenneth O. Myrick, Harriet H. Fay Professor of English Literature at Tufts University and Prof. Albert Gilman of Boston University. The discussion will be repeated on WGBH-FM Sunday at 6 p.m. and Wednesday at 8 p.m.

A high light of Friday night's telecast will be the inclusion of excerpts from NBC-TV's "Richard III" starring Sir Laurence Olivier, which will be given its American première Sunday afternoon over Channels 4 and 10. These excerpts from the movie were made available to Channel 2 through the cooperation of NBC-TV and its Boston affiliate, Channel 4.

Betty Grable will play her first dramatic role on television Friday night when she makes her debut in the title role of a comedy called "Cleopatra Collins," on NBC-TV's "Star Stage" at 9:30 p.m. on Channels 4 and 10.

Toshiko, 23-year-old jazz pianist from Japan, now studying at the Berklee School of Music in Boston, Mass., will be guest on the Garry Moore show, which will be telecast on Channels 7 and 12 Friday morning from 10 until 11:30.

Choral Music On Schedule For Symphony

The Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society will join with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for a program of choral music by Mozart and Fauré at the concerts Friday afternoon and Saturday evening by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

On the first half of the program G. Wallace Woodworth will conduct three Mozart works —the "Regina Coeli" for chorus, soprano solo, and orchestra, K. 108; the "Ave, verum corpus" for chorus and string orchestra, K. 618; and the "Vesperae de dominica" for chorus and orchestra, with soprano, alto, tenor, and bass solo, K. 321.

The second half of the concert, conducted by Charles Munch, will consist of the "Requiem" by Gabriel Fauré. The soloists will be Adele Addison, soprano; Eleanor Davis, mezzo-soprano; Richard Gilley, tenor; and Donald Gramm, bass.

This program will be rehearsed tonight at the open rehearsal in Symphony Hall at 7:30. Seats are on sale at the box office.

Lenscraft

Charles Munch and G. Wallace Woodworth, who will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its open rehearsal tonight, and its concerts on Friday afternoon and Saturday night.

Lexington Choral Music

A chorus of 140 voices comprising the Lexington Choral Society and the Mystic Glee Club of Winchester, with a chamber orchestra and soloists directed by Allen C. Lannom, professor of music at Boston University, will present choral works by Bach and Mozart at a free concert in Cary Memorial Hall, Lexington, on Sunday evening at 8:15. The same concert will be presented under the auspices of the Winchester Rotary Club at the Winchester High School Auditorium one week later.

Bach's Cantata No. 4, "Christ Lag in Todesbanden," and Mozart's Requiem Mass in D minor will be performed. Soloists will be Ella Lou Hoyt Dimmock, soprano; Margaret Danforth, alto; Carl Sorensen, tenor, and Stephen Dimmock, bass.

Times
HOLBROOK, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 1,650

MAR 8 1956

Handel And Haydn Society To Present Mozart's Grand Mass

As a contribution to The Mozart Bicentennial Festival, the Handel and Haydn Society will present Mozart's Grand Mass in C Minor in Symphony Hall Sunday evening, March 18th (8 sharp).

The soloists will be Adele Addison, soprano; Eleanor Davis, contralto; Carl Nelson, tenor and John Hornor, bass. Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be a feature of the program which will be under the conductorship of Dr. Thompson Stone.

The Society presented Mozart's C Minor Mass for the first time, on April 12, 1892 in what was then known as Boylston Hall. This presentation was held during the 14th season of the Society which this year celebrates its 141st year.

Tickets for the coming concert are now on sale at Symphony Hall Box Office.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 130,559

MAR 9 1956

Conservation School Plan For Lincoln

The first postgraduate biology school of its type in the western hemisphere will be opened at the Drumlin Farm Wildlife Sanctuary, in Lincoln.

The Massachusetts Audubon Society yesterday named Dr. William H. Drury Jr., assistant professor of biology at Harvard, to organize the field studies unit to be known as the Louise Ayer Hatheway School of Conservation Education. To study similar schools in England and on the continent, Dr. Drury will go to Europe this summer. He is a botanist, ornithologist and geologist whose field studies have carried him to Alaska and the Canadian Arctic.

The Hatheway School will concentrate its courses on ecological studies in fields not offered at any American university.

The board of overseers for the new school will be: Rosario Masseo of Boston, personnel manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; Richard Borden of Concord, president of Borden Productions, Inc.; Clarence E. Allen of Cohasset, former headmaster of Rivers Country Day School; Rachel S. Bruce of Fitchburg State Teachers College; Boardman Bump of Weston, treasurer and trustee of Mt. Holyoke College; C. Russell Mason, executive director of the Massachusetts Audubon Society; and Dr. Ernst Mayr of the Harvard Museum of Comparative Zoology.

Mozart's Grand Mass in C Minor in Symphony Hall Sunday evening, March 18th (8 sharp).

The soloists will be Adele Addison, soprano; Eleanor Davis, contralto; Carl Nelson, tenor and John Hornor, bass. Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be a feature of the program which will be under the conductorship of Dr. Thompson Stone.

The Society presented Mozart's C Minor Mass for the first time, on April 12, 1892 in what was then known as Boylston Hall. This presentation was held during the 14th season of the Society which this year celebrates its 141st year.

Tickets for the coming concert are now on sale at Symphony Hall Box Office.

Bulletin
EASTON, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 1,512

MAR 8 19..

Handel And Haydn Society To Present Mozart's Grand Mass

As a contribution to The Mozart Bicentennial Festival, the Handel and Haydn Society will present

Mozart's Grand Mass in C Minor in Symphony Hall Sunday evening, March 18th (8 sharp).

The soloists will be Adele Addison, soprano; Eleanor Davis, contralto; Carl Nelson, tenor and John Hornor, bass. Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be a feature of the program which will be under the conductorship of Dr. Thompson Stone.

The Society presented Mozart's C Minor Mass for the first time, on April 12, 1892 in what was then known as Boylston Hall. This presentation was held during the 14th season of the Society which this year celebrates its 141st year.

Tickets for the coming concert are now on sale at Symphony Hall Box Office.

Messenger
AVON, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 1,450

MAR 8 1956

Handel And Haydn Society To Present Mozart's Grand Mass

As a contribution to The Mozart Bicentennial Festival, the Handel and Haydn Society will present

Mozart's Grand Mass in C Minor in Symphony Hall Sunday evening, March 18th (8 sharp).

The soloists will be Adele Addison, soprano; Eleanor Davis, contralto; Carl Nelson, tenor and John Hornor, bass. Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be a feature of the program which will be under the conductorship of Dr. Thompson Stone.

The Society presented Mozart's C Minor Mass for the first time, on April 12, 1892 in what was then known as Boylston Hall. This presentation was held during the 14th season of the Society which this year celebrates its 141st year.

Tickets for the coming concert are now on sale at Symphony Hall Box Office.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 130,559
10 1956

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, gave the 18th program of the 75th season in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. G. Wallace Woodworth was the guest conductor in the first half of the program. The soloists were Adele Addison, soprano; Eleanor Davis, mezze; Richard Gilley, tenor and Donald Gramm, bass. Assisting was the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society. The program:

"Regina coeli," (K. 108); "Ave verum corpus" (K. 618); Vesperae de dominica" (K. 321)...Mozart
Requiem, Op 48 ..... Faure

By RUDOLPH ELIE

Yesterday's concert was one of the most unusual to be given in Symphony Hall in a good many years; a program devoted wholly to choral music and choral music of a non secular nature at that.

Three of the works were given their first performance at these concerts and they proved to be, as of course they would, compositions of the most exalted character. The "Ave verum corpus," one of Mozart's last works, is familiar enough but its familiarity hardly diminishes the unique calmness of the music or its deeply felt atmosphere. It was sung, as indeed the whole program was sung, with extraordinary unanimity and in the most beautiful vocal quality by the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society conducted by G. Wallace Woodworth.

The other works were "Regina coeli" an early work, and "Vesperae de dominica" from the middle period of Mozart's life and although neither approaches the grandeur of the C minor Mass or the Requiem, they are remarkably persuasive and beautiful things. It was interesting to note the composer's great advance in polyphonic writing between the "Regina" and the "Vesperae," the last-named being infinitely more subtle in this regard than the first.

Adele Addison, whose continuing maturity as an artist is evident, sang the solo role in "Regina" superbly and outdid herself in the ensuing "Vesperae." In this she was joined by Eleanor Davis, Richard Gilley and Donald Gramm, who all sang splendidly, but the leading role throughout the Mozart is that of the soprano, and Miss Addison projected the deep spirituality of the solos. Mr. Woodworth, it might be added, again demonstrated his crisp mastery of the orchestra as well as the chorus: he lent the orchestral accompaniments great distinction.

It is 18 years since Faure's Requiem has been done at these concerts and it will doubtless be as many before it is done again. Yet it is a work of the utmost refinement and delicacy of expression, almost classic in its restraint yet bursting forth at times in moments of powerful expression. The exquisite concept is everywhere evident, in the subtlety of the vocal line, in the scoring for the orchestra, in the reinforcement of the textures by the organ in the grave though never melancholy character of the melodies themselves.

However, its very restraint and its quality of understatement diminishes its impact and makes it special, spun out, overly serene and subdued in mood. Still, it is a fine experience to hear it done with so much finesse and so much radiance of spirit as it was yesterday, for it is very clear that Mr. Munch understands this music to the bottom of his soul. Again the chorus was in superb form, achieving the fully blended tone coloration the music demands, while Donald Gramm traversed the baritone role in a fine strong voice. Miss Addison again shone in her part, which she sang from the back row of the chorus to attain a singularly unearthly quality in the "Pie Jesu."

Leonard Rose will be the cello soloist in the Dvorak next week, other works on the program being a repeat of Martinu's "Fantaisies symphoniques, Beethoven's Overture to "Coriolanus" and three dances from Falla's "Three Cornered Hat."

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 122,000
MAR 10 1956

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Mozart, Faure Choral Music

By CYRUS DURGIN

The Boston Symphony Orchestra played yesterday at Symphony Hall the afternoon concert of the 18th program in the Friday–Saturday series. G. Wallace Woodworth conducted choral music of Mozart, as follows: "Regina coeli" (K. 108), "Ave, verum corpus" (K. 618), "Vesperae de dominica" (K. 321). Charles Munch conducted the Requiem of Faure. The Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, prepared by Mr. Woodworth, participated. The soloists were Adele Addison, soprano; Eleanor Davis, mezzo–soprano; Richard Gilley, tenor, and Donald Gramm, bass. Willem Friso Frank was the organist.

Both for the nature of the music presented, and the manner of performance, the Symphony concerts this week are quite exceptional. The whole of the program is choral music, with the services of the Harvard and Radcliffe choruses, which G. Wallace Woodworth invariably trains to a high peak of excellence. The portion devoted to Mozart consists of pieces rare enough under most circumstances, and never before performed at these concerts.

Least known to me was the "Vesperae de Rominica," composed in Salzburg in 1779, and which at this performance in-

[illegible] observance of the Mozart bi-centennial. Mr. Woodworth, the most experienced of choral hands, showed as well an impressive authority in conducting the instrumental parts. Beyond the brisk, well-chosen tempi, the clearness of singers and orchestra, and the relaxed simplicity of style, was a true glory of human expression.

Not since 1938, when Nadia Boulanger conducted it, as guest, had the supernally beautiful Faure Requiem been done at these concerts. Like Mozart before him, Faure here created a churchly work of the most intimate personal quality within a liturgical frame. The Faure service for the dead, to my mind, is both a masterpiece of its kind and one of the most tender and profound expressions of a human soul. The grandeurs of the Verdi and Brahms Requiems, and even the Requiem of Mozart, all so moving in their different ways, do not have in such manner and such degree the gentle, inward faith in another world unseen.

Never in my memory had the Faure Requiem been performed with such extreme refinement and sheer purity of sound as Mr. Munch did it yesterday. This performance was a revelation of a side of the conductor of which we have experienced but little, and that mainly in the Passions of Bach, which are far different in style from Faure.

Mr. Munch might have gone just a shade faster in the andante of the Kyrie and in the Sanctus, but otherwise his reading came miraculously close to perfection, in delicacy and a sort of spiritual dedication.

The Harvard and Radcliffe choruses are mostly well balanced among the various sections, this year, although the perennial shortage of tenor sonority was evident. These college men and women have an alert response, an intelligence, a vigor and an innate sense of rhythm.

They have learned Mozart and Faure style quickly and well. In everything save the weight of tone than only physical maturity can bring, the choral singing was wholly pleasurable. When it came to a sustained pianissimo, as at the end of the Requiem, then the fact of youth was plain, and their ethereal tone did not have body enough. But in the more substantial music of Mozart, this youthful sound was admirable.

Miss Addison sang superlatively, both in Mozart and Faure, bringing to each his proper style, and producing a soprano resonance that can only be described as Heavenly. Donald Gramm, a baritone who one day is likely to be in the first rank of great artists, again showed vocal beauty and expressive power of a very rare excellence. Miss Davis and Mr. Gilley had less to do, and did it well enough.

Next week Mr. Munch will conduct Beethoven's "Coriolanus" Overture; the "Symphonic Fantasies" of Martinu; the Dvorak Cello Concerto with Leonard Rose as soloist, and Falla's Dances from "The Three-Cornered Hat."

Post (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 285,839
MAR 10 1956

Music Review

By TUCKER KEISER

Choral works by Mozart and Gabriel Faure made up the entire program by the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon. The Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society sang the vocal parts and their conductor, G. Wallace Woodworth, shared with Charles Munch, conducting chores. Mr. Woodworth led the Mozart pieces and Mr. Munch the Faure "Requiem."

The able quartet of soloists consited of Adele Addison, soprano; Eleanor Davis, mezzo-soprano; Richard Gilley, tenor, and Donald Gramm, bass. Both Miss Addison and Mr. Gramm deserve special praise, not only for their work in the ensemble, but also for the artistic performance each gave in the solo part of the "Requiem."

The three Mozart pieces were, surprisingly enough, first performances for these concerts. They were the "Regina coeli," an early work of engaging forthrightness; "Ave, verum corpus," the well-known motet in the repertory of nearly every church choir, and the "Vesperae de dominica," a sequence of five Psalms and the Magnificat in a musical setting remarkable for its vocal writing and creative inspiration.

While the Harvard-Radcliffe choristers did not possess the tonal mass necessary for the "Regina" and the "Vesperae," they had just the right color for the "Ave, verum" and the "Requiem," and in every other choral department they gave their usual impeccable performance.

However, it was the weightless, ethereal quality and Mr. Munch's sensitive accentuations in the score which gave Faure's uncommonly bland music an admirable degree of poetic feeling. The conductor wisely did not press for exotic effects, but distilled the faint aroma of dying rose petals characteristic of this hothouse production.

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 185,401
MAR 10 1956

Repeat Sixth Symphony

At next week's Friday afternoon and Saturday night concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch will repeat the Sixth Symphony, called Fantaisies Symphoniques, by Bohuslav Martinu. It was commissioned for the orchestra's 75th anniversary and premiered in January of last year.

Subsequent to performing the score in Boston, Mr. Munch and the orchestra performed the symphony in New York last season The New York Critics Circle recently voted the score its award as the best new orchestral work performed there in '55.

At Tuesday's seventh concert of the Tuesday evening series, the program will consist of three works for chorus, orchestra and soloists, by Mozart, to be conducted by G. Wallace Woodworth: Regina Coeli, K. 108; Ave, verum corpus, K. 618, and Vesperae de dominica, K. 321, and the Requiem, by Gabriel Faure, to be conducted by Mr. Munch.

Assisting in this program will be the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society.

Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Republican
Circ. 130,826
MAR 11 1956

Boston Symphony Will Perform New Work, March 19

A forthcoming concert in the Bushnell Memorial by the Boston Symphony Orchestra promises to be an event of special importance, since this is the orchestra's 75th anniversary year. Managing Director William H. Mortensen of the Bushnell indicated yesterday that in observance of the anniversary, Conductor Charles Munch has agreed to give Connecticut its first performance of a new work created for the Boston Symphony by one of the world's foremost living composers, Heitor Villa-Lobos. The work is his Eleventh Symphony.

Other works on the program on March 19 will include Tchaikovsky's "Romeo and Juliet" Overture - Fantsia, and Beethoven's mighty Seventh Symphony.

In celebrating its jubilee year, the Boston Symphony and a foundation established in memory of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky commissioned 15 new works by the world's most renowned composers. The Eleventh Symphony by noted Brazilian Villa - Lobos is one of those works. Mr. Munch conducted the first performance of it in Boston last week, and the audience received it with resounding acclaim. The scherzo particularly was lauded for its melodic line and its unique succession of woodwind solo passages. Hartford will be the second city to enjoy this fresh new work.

The Bushnell has indicated that a limited number of tickets for the March 19 concert remain. The event will be the final concert in this season's Bushnell Symphony Series.

DALLAS, TEX.
TIMES-HERALD
Circ. D. 160,042 - S. 164,564
MAR 11 1956

Brilliant Festival Set in Edinburgh

Last summer, scores of Dallas travelers arranged their European itineraries to include the great music and drama festivals highlighting the season in several countries. One of the most popular every year is the brilliant Edinburgh Festival in Scotland.

Seven symphony orchestras and programs of drama, ballet, opera and chamber music will be featured at the festival this year, Aug. 19 through Sept. 8, the British Travel Association has announced.

TENTH ANNIVERSARY

The Scottish capital, sometimes called the "festival city of the world," will celebrate the 10th anniversary of its great music and drama fete. Artists from at least six countries, including the United States, wil participate.

The Boston Symphony will al ternately play under the direc tion of Charles Munch, perma nent conductor, and Pierre Mor teux, its former maestro. T mark its 75th anniversary an the fifth anniversary of th death of Serge Koussevitsky, the orchestra has commissioned several new works from distinguished composers.

The Royal Philharmonic will be heard under the direction of Sir Thomas Beecham, famed British conductor. Other orchestras to perform include Vienna Hofmusikkapelle, London Mozart Players, Scottish National Orchestra, BBC Scottish Orchestra, and National Youth Orchestra of Great Britain.

Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 179,065
MAR 11 1956

ARTHUR FIEDLER and the Boston Pops Orchestra have recorded for RCA Victo two of the most popular ballet scores in their repertoire. The first, Chopin's "Les Sylphides" and the second, "Graduation Ball" by Strauss. The playing makes one wish for the pops season to arrive, with its easy acceptance of good tunes and informality. Until then, this disk will do very well.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 130,559
10 1956

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, gave the 18th program of the 75th season in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. G. Wallace Woodworth was the guest conductor in the first half of the program. The soloists were Adele Addison, soprano; Eleanor Davis, mezze; Richard Gilley, tenor and Donald Gramm, bass. Assisting was the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society. The program:
"Regina coeli," (K. 108); "Ave verum corpus" (K. 618); Vesperae de dominica" (K. 321)...Mozart
Requiem, Op 48 ..... Faure

By RUDOLPH ELIE

Yesterday's concert was one of the most unusual to be given in Symphony Hall in a good many years; a program devoted wholly to choral music and choral music of a non secular nature at that.

Three of the works were given their first performance at these concerts and they proved to be, as of course they would, compositions of the most exalted character. The "Ave verum corpus," one of Mozart's last works, is familiar enough but its familiarity hardly diminishes the unique calmness of the music or its deeply felt atmosphere. It was sung, as indeed the whole program was sung, with extraordinary unanimity and in the most beautiful vocal quality by the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society conducted by G. Wallace Woodworth.

The other works were "Regina coeli" an early work, and "Vesperae de dominica" from the middle period of Mozart's life and although neither approaches the grandeur of the C minor Mass or the Requiem, they are remarkably persuasive and beautiful things. It was interesting to note the composer's great advance in polyphonic writing between the "Regina" and the "Vesperae," the last-named being infinitely more subtle in this regard than the first.

Adele Addison, whose continuing maturity as an artist is evident, sang the solo role in "Regina" superbly and outdid herself in the ensuing "Vesperae." In this she was joined by Eleanor Davis, Richard Gilley and Donald Gramm, who all sang splendidly, but the leading role throughout the Mozart is that of the soprano, and Miss Addison projected the deep spirituality of the solos. Mr. Woodworth, it might be added, again demonstrated his crisp mastery of the orchestra as well as the chorus: he lent the orchestral accompaniments great distinction.

It is 18 years since Faure's Requiem has been done at these concerts and it will doubtless be as many before it is done again. Yet it is a work of the utmost refinement and delicacy of expression, almost classic in its restraint yet bursting forth at times in moments of powerful expression. The exquisite concept is everywhere evident, in the subtlety of the vocal line in

C—AQ64

The ace of diamonds took the first trick and the DK took the second, drawing all advers trumps. Then the HA wa led and East was in with the ace. East got out of his han with the 10-spot of clubs o which South played the quee and West the king. West re turned a club and the ace wa driven out.

A spade was ruffed b dummy, after which South ru ruffed a heart. Then another spad ruffed with dummy's las

Again the chorus was in superb form, achieving the fully blended tone coloration the music demands, while Donald Gramm traversed the baritone role in a

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 185,401
MAR 10 1956

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 122,000
MAR 10 1956

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Mozart, Faure Choral Music

By CYRUS DURGIN

The Boston Symphony Orchestra played yesterday at Symphony Hall the afternoon concert of the 18th program in the Friday–Saturday series. G. Wallace Woodworth conducted choral music of Mozart, as follows: "Regina coeli" (K. 108), "Ave, verum corpus" (K. 618), "Vesperae de dominica" (K. 321). Charles Munch conducted the Requiem of Faure. The Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, prepared by Mr. Woodworth, participated. The soloists were Adele Addison, soprano; Eleanor Davis, mezzo–soprano; Richard Gilley, tenor, and Donald Gramm, bass. Willem Friso Frank was the organist.

Both for the nature of the music presented, and the manner of performance, the Symphony concerts this week are quite exceptional. The whole of the program is choral music, with the services of the Harvard and Radcliffe choruses, which G. Wallace Woodworth invariably trains to a high peak of excellence. The portion devoted to Mozart consists of pieces rare enough under most circumstances, and never before performed at these concerts.

Least known to me was the "Vesperae de Rominica," composed in Salzburg in 1779, and which at this performance included the Laudate Dominum for solo soprano and chorus from Mozart's "Vesperae solennes de confessore" (K. 339). Both the "Vesperae de dominica" and the "Regina coeli" blend impersonal, churchly elements of style with that personal feeling, that emotional urge in melody and harmony which were so uniquely Mozart. The "Ave, verum corpus," on the other hand, is to me purely out of Mozart's own heart.

These three works, conducted by Mr. Woodworth upon the gracious invitation of Mr. Munch, formed an unusual portion of the orchestra's season-long observance of the Mozart bi-centennial. Mr. Woodworth, the most experienced of choral hands, showed as well an impressive authority in conducting the instrumental parts. Beyond the brisk, well-chosen tempi, the clearness of singers and orchestra, and the relaxed simplicity of style, was a true glory of human expression.

Not since 1938, when Nadia Boulanger conducted it, as guest, had the supernally beautiful Faure Requiem been done at these concerts. Like Mozart before him, Faure here created a churchly work of the most intimate personal quality within a liturgical frame. The Faure service for the dead, to my mind, is both a masterpiece of its kind and one of the most tender and profound expressions of a human soul. The grandeurs of the Verdi and Brahms Requiems, and even the Requiem of Mozart, all so moving in their different ways, do not have in such manner and such degree the gentle, inward faith in another world unseen.

Never in my memory had the Faure Requiem been performed with such extreme refinement and sheer purity of sound as Mr. Munch did it yesterday. This performance was a revelation of a side of the conductor of which we have experienced but little, and that mainly in the Passions of Bach, which are far different in style from Faure.

Mr. Munch might have gone just a shade faster in the andante of the Kyrie and in the Sanctus, but otherwise his reading came miraculously close to perfection, in delicacy and a sort of spiritual dedication.

The Harvard and Radcliffe choruses are mostly well balanced among the various sections, this year, although the perennial shortage of tenor sonority was evident. These college men and women have an alert response, an intelligence, a vigor and an innate sense of rhythm.

They have learned Mozart and Faure style quickly and well. In everything save the weight of tone than only physical maturity can bring, the choral singing was wholly pleasurable. When it came to a sustained pianissimo, as at the end of the Requiem, then the fact of youth was plain, and their ethereal tone did not have body enough. But in the more substantial music of Mozart, this youthful sound was admirable.

Miss Addison sang superlatively, both in Mozart and Faure, bringing to each his proper style, and producing a soprano resonance that can only be described as Heavenly. Donald Gramm, a baritone who one day is likely to be in the first rank of great artists, again showed vocal beauty and expressive power of a very rare excellence. Miss Davis and Mr. Gilley had less to do, and did it well enough.

Next week Mr. Munch will conduct Beethoven's "Coriolanus" Overture; the "Symphonic Fantasies" of Martinu; the Dvorak Cello Concerto with Leonard Rose as soloist, and Falla's Dances from "The Three-Cornered Hat."

Post (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 285,839
MAR 10 1956

Music Review

By TUCKER KEISER

Choral works by Mozart and Gabriel Faure made up the entire program by the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon. The Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society sang the vocal parts and their conductor, G. Wallace Woodworth, shared with Charles Munch, conducting chores. Mr. Woodworth led the Mozart pieces and Mr. Munch the Faure "Requiem."

The able quartet of soloists consited of Adele Addison, soprano; Eleanor Davis, mezzo-soprano; Richard Gilley, tenor, and Donald Gramm, bass. Both Miss Addison and Mr. Gramm deserve special praise, not only for their work in the ensemble, but also for the artistic performance each gave in the solo part of the "Requiem."

The three Mozart pieces were, surprisingly enough, first performances for these concerts. They were the "Regina coeli," an early work of engaging forthrightness; "Ave, verum corpus," the well-known motet in the repertory of nearly every church choir, and the "Vesperae de dominica," a sequence of five Psalms and the Magnificat in a musical setting remarkable for its vocal writing and creative inspiration.

While the Harvard-Radcliffe choristers did not possess the tonal mass necessary for the "Regina" and the "Vesperae," they had just the right color for the "Ave, verum" and the "Requiem," and in every other choral department they gave their usual impeccable performance.

However, it was the weightless, ethereal quality and Mr. Munch's sensitive accentuations in the score which gave Faure's uncommonly bland music an admirable degree of poetic feeling. The conductor wisely did not press for exotic effects, but distilled the faint aroma of dying rose petals characteristic of this hothouse production.

Repeat Sixth Symphony

At next week's Friday afternoon and Saturday night concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch will repeat the Sixth Symphony, called Fantaisies Symphoniques, by Bohuslav Martinu. It was commissioned for the orchestra's 75th anniversary and premiered in January of last year.

Subsequent to performing the score in Boston, Mr. Munch and the orchestra performed the symphony in New York last season The New York Critics Circle recently voted the score its award as the best new orchestral work performed there in '55.

At Tuesday's seventh concert of the Tuesday evening series, the program will consist of three works for chorus, orchestra and soloists, by Mozart, to be conducted by G. Wallace Woodworth: Regina Coeli, K. 108; Ave, verum corpus, K. 618, and Vesperae de dominica, K. 321, and the Requiem, by Gabriel Faure, to be conducted by Mr. Munch.

Assisting in this program will be the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society.

Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Republican
Circ. 130,826
MAR 11 1956

DALLAS, TEX.
TIMES-HERALD
Circ. D. 160,042 - S. 164,564
MAR 11 1956

Brilliant Festival Set in Edinburgh

Last summer, scores of Dallas travelers arranged their European itineraries to include the great music and drama festivals highlighting the season in several countries. One of the most popular every year is the brilliant Edinburgh Festival in Scotland.

Seven symphony orchestras and programs of drama, ballet, opera and chamber music will be featured at the festival this year, Aug. 19 through Sept. 8, the British Travel Association has announced.

TENTH ANNIVERSARY

The Scottish capital, sometimes called the "festival city of the world," will celebrate the 10th anniversary of its great music and drama fete. Artists from at least six countries, including the United States, wil participate.

The Boston Symphony will al ternately play under the direc tion of Charles Munch, perma nent conductor, and Pierre Mor teux, its former maestro. T mark its 75th anniversary an the fifth anniversary of th death of Serge Koussevitsky, the orchestra has commissioned several new works from distinguished composers.

The Royal Philharmonic will be heard under the direction of Sir Thomas Beecham, famed British conductor. Other orchestras to perform include Vienna Hofmusikkapelle, London Mozart Players, Scottish National Orchestra, BBC Scottish Orchestra, and National Youth Orchestra of Great Britain.

HAMBURG OPERA

Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 179,065
MAR 11 1956

ARTHUR FIEDLER and the Boston Pops Orchestra have recorded for RCA Victo two of the most popular ballet scores in their repertoire. The first, Chopin's "Les Sylphides" and the second, "Graduation Ball" by Strauss. The playing makes one wish for the pops season to arrive, with its easy acceptance of good tunes and informality. Until then, this disk will do very well.

Boston Symphony Will Perform New Work, March 19

A forthcoming concert in the Bushnell Memorial by the Boston Symphony Orchestra promises to be an event of special importance, since this is the orchestra's 75th anniversary year. Managing Director William H. Mortensen of the Bushnell indicated yesterday that in observance of the anniversary, Conductor Charles Munch has agreed to give Connecticut its first performance of a new work created for the Boston Symphony by one of the world's foremost living composers, Heitor Villa-Lobos. The work is his Eleventh Symphony.

Other works on the program on March 19 will include Tchaikovsky's "Romeo and Juliet" Overture - Fantsia, and Beethoven's mighty Seventh Symphony.

In celebrating its jubilee year, the Boston Symphony and a foundation established in memory of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky commissioned 15 new works by the world's most renowned composers. The Eleventh Symphony by noted Brazilian Villa - Lobos is one of those works. Mr. Munch conducted the first performance of it in Boston last week, and the audience received it with resounding acclaim. The scherzo particularly was lauded for its melodic line and its unique succession of woodwind solo passages. Hartford will be the second city to enjoy this fresh new work.

The Bushnell has indicated that a limited number of tickets for the March 19 concert remain. The event will be the final concert in this season's Bushnell Symphony Series.

Sunday Post
BRIDGEPORT, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 61,159

MAR 11 1956

TURNING the DIALS

By FRED H. RUSSELL

Bruno Walter will conduct the rarely performed Mozart "Requiem" (K. 626) on CBS radio this afternoon at 2:30 o'clock in the second and final broadcast of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony's Mozart festival. The "Requiem" will be performed by four soloists, Irmgard Seefried, soprano; Jennie Tourel, mezzo-soprano; Leopold Simoneau, tenor; and William Warfield, bass-baritone, with the orchestra and the Westminster Choir directed by Dr. John Finley Williamson.

In addition to the "Requiem," Dr. Walter will lead the orchestra in a performance of the "Little G Minor Symphony" of Mozart, a work which dates from the composer's 17th year and marks an important development in his style and emotional power.

The "Requiem" was Mozart's last composition, and he died before completing it. Full scale concert performances of the work are rare. The only previous performance of the work by the New York Philharmonic-Symphony was in 1941, with Dr. Walter conducting. Two of the soloists, the Canadian tenor Simoneau and the Rochester, N. Y., born Warfield, will be making their debuts with the Philharmonic in this performance. Miss Seefried and Miss Tourel are both familiar to the Philharmonic's CBS radio listeners.

Irish Selections

Siobhan McKenna will read poems and other selections describing Ireland's people and customs, their yearning for freedom, and the Irish countryside. Writers whose works will be read will include Yeats, and Thomas Moore.

Rise of Masters

The posthumous rise to fame of various musical masters sets the theme for tonight's WICC broadcast of "Music for a Sunday Evening," as Ruth Steinkraus provides another three hours of classical music and commentary starting at 8 o'clock.

One of the recordings to be played is "St. Mathew Passion," written by Bach and virtually unknown until long after his death. It was "brought to life" by Felix Mendelssohn when that composer conducted a performance of the work when he was only 20 years old.

Another such instance is the "Ninth Symphony" of Schubert, which was discovered by Schumann when the latter was browsing in a book shop run by the former's brother after the death of the composer.

Miss Steinkraus' commentary will concern such seeming oddities as these which have brought down through the ages works that might easily have perished through lack of knowledge of them.

TWO GUEST SINGERS

Two guest singers are scheduled to be heard on Nino Bellastai's radio program over station WNLK, Norwalk, this afternoon at 1 o'clock. They will be Miss Angela Volpa of Stamford, winner of the "Miss Italian Program of 1956" and Pat Russo, of Old Greenwich. The program will originate in the Bridgeport studio.

Crosby To Tour

Gary Crosby, who returns to CBS radio's "Edgar Bergen Show" tonight after a nationwide tour with Les Brown's orchestra, will absent himself again in April to join the two-week Australian concert tour of Louis Armstrong and his band.

Crosby, the band and the trumpet virtuoso will leave by air on April 1 to fill engagements in Sydney and other leading cities and will return about the middle of the month. This is Crosby's second touring association with Armstrong. On the earlier occasion he played a number of theater engagements with the combo in the United States.

Shares Podium

Charles Munch will share the podium of the Boston Symphony orchestra with Heitor Villa Lobos, the Brazilian composer-conductor on tomorrow night's broadcast over WRCA at 8:15 o'clock. Villa Lobos will conduct the first network radio performance of his new work, "Symphony No. 11," written for the Boston Symphony's 75th anniversary. The work, in four movements, is dedicated to the memory of Serge and Natalie Koussevitzky.

Munch, musical director of the orchestra, will conduct Tshaikovsky's overture - fantasie, "Romeo and Juliet."

New Steele Show

Ted Steele, veteran radio and television personality, will launch his musical crew on a second daily radio series on WOR starting tomorrow evening when they move into the 6:15 to 6:30 o'clock time period.

The music makers, regulars on Ted's radio and television shows, include Lois Bannerman, harpist; Tyree Glenn, trombonist; Corky Robbins, pianist; Bobby Caudana, accordionist; and Tommy Abruzzo, bass fiddler. Ted plays the piano and the organ. The group is also heard weekdays from 1:30 to 2 p.m.

Free World Status

"Where Does the Free World Stand Today?" as viewed by newsmen, will be heard on "America's Town Meeting of the Air" tonight at 8 o'clock over WNAB and WABC.

Moderating the discussion and presenting the United States' viewpoint will be John C. Matcalfe, head of his own news syndicate in Washington, D. C. and former diplomatic correspondent for Time and the New York Herald Tribune.

Camille Chautemps, premiere of France four times, former minister of state and vice president and now a news columnist for European newspapers, will present the views of France.

Arthur Webb, dean of the British correspondents in Washington since 1941, will represent England.

Peter Von Zahn, chief Washington correspondent for the West German radio networks, will present the views of Germany.

The broadcast will originate from Town Hall in New York city.

Program Stays On

Following strong public response to the wekly series, "Of Many Things," on WNYC, the Sunday evening program featuring Dr. Bergen Evans has been extended through June 3. Continuing in the 6:15 to 6:30 o'clock Sunday post, the series will bring provocative commentaries on various topics by the erudite moderate of "Down You Go." The program was launched on WNYC last November.

RICHMOND, VA.
TIMES-DISPATCH
Circ. D. 123,471 - S. 174,705

MAR 11 1956

8:15 P. M., NBC-Radio—Charles Munch will share the podium of the Boston Symphony Orchestra with the Brazilian composer-conductor, Heitor Villa Lobosa. Villa Loboso will conduct the first network performance of his new work, "Symphony No. 11," written for the Boston Symphony's seventy-fifth anniversary. Munch will conduct Tchaikovsky's overture-fantasie, "Romeo and Juliet."

Sunday Post
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 230,930

MAR 11 1956

The Red Failure

The Russians are making a strong new bid for "cultural" exchanges with the free world. They want our Philadelphia Orchestra to play in Moscow. They may even be nice enough to invite our great Boston Symphony, though they have not yet decided this for certain.

In return they may ship their Bolshoi Ballet company outside the Iron Curtain and they will select other safe Red artists to perform in the wicked countries of capitalism.

In so doing, their commissars of culture are demonstrating a naivete which their politicians won't like. Because they are going to prove to the world what is already apparent, that the entire Russian Soviet experiment has never produced a single creative artist.

They have, apparently, talented musicians. They also have, on the word of Westerners who have seen them, one of the great ballet companies of the world.

But their composers, authors, playwrights, painters, sculptors and architects have created absolutely nothing of first quality in the whole course of the Soviet movement. And their ballet company owes its greatness to the traditions of the Imperial Russian Ballet, which was organized under the Tsars.

Even under the Tsars, who were surely guilty of tyranny, the air of Russia was free enough to allow geniuses to find expression and to contribute to the culture of the world. Under the Red commissars, there has been nothing.

They have produced no novelists to match Hemingway or Faulkner or Steinbeck; no dramatists to rank with O'Neill. Even their composers have been stifled. Who knows their poets or painters?

A company composed of American Negroes presented recently in Moscow and Stalingrad the American folk opera "Porgy and Bess." The people of the Russian cities vied with one another to get into the playhouses. They cheered the performers.

It is worth calling to mind that George Gershwin, who wrote "Porgy and Bess," was a product of the American capitalistic system; that his talent grew and developed and was fostered in its atmosphere; that he became rich and famous on our side of the Iron Curtain.

Both of Gershwin's parents came here from Russia, in the time of the Tsars. It is well they did. Under the Soviets, we—and ironically, even they!—would never have had his great works. The Red culture is restrictive and out of its restrictions has produced nothing. In its poisoned atmosphere nothing can grow. It's sterile.

Sunday Post
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 230,930

MAR 11 1956

Handel-Haydn Concert In Tribute to Mozart

By ROSE WALSH

Society Editor

The Handel and Haydn Society will observe the 200th anniversary of the birth of the beloved composer, Mozart, by presenting his Great Mass in C Minor next Sunday evening at 8 o'clock in Symphony Hall. F. Otis Drayton, the society's president, will also be honored that evening. Dr. Thompson Stone will conduct the concert whose soloists will be Adele Addison, soprano; Eleanor Davis, second soprano; Carl Nelson, tenor, and John Hornor, bass. Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will feature in the program.

The patron list headed by Mr. Drayton includes Mrs. Nathaniel E. Adamson, Jr., Miss Barbara S. Albre, Miss Camille L. Audette, Mrs. Clara Beal, Mr. and Mrs. Howard B. Beal, Mrs. C. Alden Belcher, Clarence D. Blake, Miss Ruth Blum, William J. Brothwell, Mrs. Aillie W. Brown, Miss Alison L. Brown, William C. Britton, Theodore R. Cassford, William R. Chafe, Miss Ann Chamberlain, Mrs. James S. Cook, Miss Stella K. Dou

GREENSBORO, N. C.
NEWS
Circ. D. 80,002 - S. 88,930
MAR 11 1956

Record R

BY JAMES SHELLEY

During the last couple of decades we have read enough record criticism to fill a set of the Encyclopedia Brittanica, and during the process had ample opportunity to learn that critics are no more than humans with the normal range of likes and dislikes indigenous to the race. There is no doubt but that a record critic can influence a prospective purchaser, but we are convinced that none should be followed blindly until a similarity of tastes has been established, after which considerable reliance may be placed on the writer's opinions.

Nowhere is this more clearly in evidence than in those cases where the weight of critical opinion is diametrically divided, with a particular record receiving reviews ranging from hysterical praise to outright condemnation, and two recent RCA Victor releases demonstrate the extent of such differences. LM1900 is the long-awaited "Symphonie Fantastique" with the Berlioz specialist, Charles Munch, leading the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Munch, on his post-war tour of this country with the French National Radio Orchestra, drew loud cheers with his performance of the work, a reaction that grew with repeated successes from frequent programming after he became head of the Boston group. Thus his recorded version has been eagerly awaited as a probable worthy successor to the antiquated Monteux-San Francisco holdover from 78 RPM days. It has been greeted with such words as "a landmark in the history of the phonograph" and "it's processing . . . a headache," but the truth, as usual, is probably somewhere in between. Personally, our disappointment is bound up with the expectation of a recorded performance equalling what we have heard Munch do with the work in concert, a standard that we feel is not attained here. In any event, don't depend on any critic but listen for yourself.

Sunday Standard-Times
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 50,234

MAR 11 1956

Orchestra to Repeat Sixth Symphony

Special to The Standard-Times

BOSTON, March 10—At the next pair of Friday afternoon-Saturday evening concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, March 16-17, Charles Munch will repeat the Sixth Symphony, called "Fantaisies Symphoniques," by Bohuslav Martinu which was commissioned for the orchestra's 75th anniversary and premiered in January of last year.

The concert will open with Beethoven's Overture to Collin's drama, "Coriolan," and conclude with three Dances from the Ballet, "The Three-Cornered Hat," by Manuel de Falla. In addition, the cellist, Leonard Rose, will make his first appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, playing the Concerto in B Minor by Dvorak.

At the seventh concert of the Tuesday evening series, next Tuesday, the program will consist of three works for chorus, orchestra and soloists by Mozart to be conducted by G. Wallace Woodworth; "Regina Coeli," "Ave

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 130,559

MAR 12 1956

Social Chatter

By Alison Arnold

SPRING ARRIVED in Boston yesterday with the opening of the 85th annual Spring Flower Show in Mechanics Building. When the doors opened at 1 o'clock, winter-weary Bostonians stood outside in long queues in the chill gray drizzle waiting to step over the threshold into spring. The show will continue through Saturday, from 10 a.m. to 10 p.m. each day. The theme is "Gardens on Parade" and there are all kinds. There are suggestions for lily gardens, rose gardens, rock gardens, spring gardens, gardens by the seashore, and informal terraces and roadside rest areas are given imaginative treatment. The stage on the main hall is given over to a southern garden with magnolias, camellias, azaleas, rhododendrons and boxwood. Two red-billed black swans preened themselves in the pool. At the other end of the hall are masses of the golden acacia of the Robert G. Stones. In complete contrast is the exhibit of rare cacti displayed beautifully against an adobe pink background.

* * *

A CORSAGE FOR EVERY COSTUME could be furnished from the orchid display. It includes Mrs. Edwin S. Webster's marvelous cattleyas, cypripediums and other choice species, as well as the hybrid cymbidiums of the Dunbar Lockwoods, the Dane collection of odontoglossums, and the Richard C. Paines' cymbidiums. Ideas for small gardens are shown in a series of charming exhibits by Garden Clubs under the direction of the Women's Exhibition Committee of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society. Clustered around a fascinating wrought iron gazebo are small gardens arranged by the Garden Clubs of Chestnut Hill, Topsfield, Boxford, Milton, Wenham, Belmont, Groton, Charles River and Cohasset. On the second floor, an old red barn complete with hay in the loft has been transformed into a recreation room as one of the settings of the flower arrangement exhibits of the Garden Club Federation's ideas for suburban living. Arrangements of flowers on a budget for any period home are found in shadow box niches set up on the carriage stalls connecting the barn to the breezeway.

MRS. HERTER

Mrs. Christian A. Herter, in trim tweeds, opened the show and among others we saw were the Oliver Wolcotts, the Robert G. Stones, the Edward Danes, Mrs. Roger Warner, Mrs. John H. Cunningham, Mrs. Chester Cook and Mrs. Albert R. Sharp.

* * *

HARBINGERS OF SPRING are the many committees planning benefit Pops concerts in Symphony Hall each year. Wellesley Night at the Pops will be Saturday, May 12. The proceeds from this musical evening will be used for financial aid to students through the Development Fund and the Student Aid Society. Under a newly established club policy, the proceeds will be divided this year to provide one freshman scholarship to a girl from Greater Boston and for financial aid to students through the Development Fund and the Student Aid Society. Members of the 1956 Boston Wellesley College Club Pops committee will instruct a group of Wellesley undergraduates in the fine art of benefit flower-vending at a tea to be held in the Lounge of the campus Recreation Building, Thursday afternoon, at 3 o'clock. Mrs. Max G. Marple of Wellesley is Pops chairman. Mrs. Kirkbride Patterson of Weston is president of the Boston Wellesley College Club. Others who will be at the meeting are Mrs. Robert W. Canfield, Jr., Mrs. John H. Hinchcliffe, Mrs. Walter R. Hatfield, all of Lexington; Mrs. Edwin D. Amith and Mrs. David R. Porter of Wellesley; and Mrs. Ernest F. Dietz of Newton Center, all members of the Pops committee.

* *

THE ANNUAL RUMMAGE SALE of the All Souls Lend-A-Hand Club will be held Friday at the Elks Club Hall, 12 Kent Street, Brookline Village from 10:30 to 3 o'clock. The purpose of the club is revealed in its name. For more than 60 years the members have raised funds to aid deserving persons. Mrs. Ralph T. Smith and Mrs. Richard A. Winslow are co-chairmen of the sale. Mrs. M. A. Marks is in charge of millinery, assisted by Mrs. Clarence E. Miller, Mrs. William Norcross and Mrs. Otis H. Parker. Miss Thelma R. Harlow is collecting men's clothing. Her assistants are Mrs. Winthrop S. Jameson, Jr., Mrs. C. E. Bellatty, Mrs. W. Allan Andrews, Mrs. Ralph T. Smith, Mrs. Ruth MacDonald and Mrs. Herbert Rogers. Women's clothing is in charge of Mrs. F. G. Sharpe, Jr., assisted by Mrs. John F. Day, Mrs. Paul R. Dunn, Mrs. Henry P. Melzer, Mrs. Harold P. Johnson, Mrs. William Curtis, Jr., Mrs. L. Robert Wagner, Mrs. Louis H. Parrot and Mrs. Sidney S. Ayers.

* * *

CHILDREN'S CLOTHING will be sold by Mrs. Alexis A. Mahan, assisted by Mrs. Harry L. Sutton, Mrs. Kenneth B. Osborne and Mrs. Irving L. Seiler. Chairman of books is Mrs. James L. Stoddard. Her helper is Miss Anne Cameron. White elephants are in charge of Mrs. Frank H. Mahoney, whose assistants are Mrs. Hubert C. Cookman, Miss Corinne Davies, and Mrs. Fred A. Simmons, Jr. Miss Celina H. Lewis has charge of household goods, with Mrs. Harry N. Sandell, Mrs. Chester Atkins, Mrs. George B. Howes and Mrs. O. J. Thomas as helpers. Shoes will be sold by Mrs. Donald Richardson, Mrs. Winthrop S. Jameson, Mrs. Richard A. Winslow and Mrs. Richard Currier. Selling bric a brac and jewelry will be Mrs. Florence Morgan, Mrs. Bernard R. Smith, Mrs. Carl Everberg, Mrs. Harry R. Healey, Miss Elsie C. Hazzard, Mrs. Harry B. McCracken and Mrs. Mortimer Prescott, the club's president. Coffee for the club members will be furnished by Mrs. Irving L. Seiler.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 122,000

MAR 12 1956

SOCIETY: Children's Art Centre Here Offers Unusual Training

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER
Circ. D. 647,807 - S. 1,146,321

MAR 13 1956

Ormandy, Munch To Trade Places

The first exchange of conductors between two of the country's major symphony orchestras will take place next March when Eugene Ormandy goes to Boston to direct two concerts for the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He will be replaced on the Academy of Music podium by Charles Munch, the Boston conductor.

Ormandy, who has had a close musical relationship with Munch since the latter came to this country a decade ago, suggested the exchange to C. Wanton Balis, president of the Philadelphia Orchestra Association, who completed the negotiations with Henry B. Cabot, president of the board of trustees of the Boston Symphony.

PHILADELPHIA PA.
BULLETIN

MAR 13 1956

Ormandy to Exchange With Boston Conductor

The Philadelphia Orchestra will exchange conductors with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for two concerts next year, it was announced today.

Eugene Ormandy suggested the plan with Charles Munch, his musical friend of ten years.

The dates set are March 1 and 2, 1957, and the programs have been selected but will not be announced because of the possibility of changes.

"If this plan is a success, I sincerely hope it will be the beginning of a long series of such exchanges," Ormandy declared.

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 185,401

MAR 13 1956

Symphony Programs

Charles Munch will repeat the Sixth Symphony, called "Fantaisies Symphoniques," by Bohuslav Martinu, at the Friday afternoon and Saturday night concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall.

The concert will open with Beethoven's Overture to Collin's dream, "Coriolan," and conclude with three dances from the ballet, "The Three-Cornered Hat," by Manuel de Falla. In addition, the cellist, Leonard Rose, will make his first appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, playing the concerto in B Minor by Dvorak.

At tonight's seventh concert of the Tuesday evening series, the program will consist of three works for chorus, orchestra and soloists by Mozart to be conducted by G. Wallace Woodworth: "Regina Coeli," K. 108; "Ave, verum corpus," K. 618; and "Vesperae de dominica," K. 321; and the "Requiem" by Gabriel Faure, to be conducted by Mr. Munch.

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 369,241

Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 101,022

MAR 1[illegible]

TO SWITCH CONDUCTORS

PHILADELPHIA, March 13 (AP)—The Philadelphia Orchestra and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will exchange conductors briefly next year.

The Philadelphia orchestra announced that its conductor, Eugene Ormandy, has agreed to lead the Boston Symphony next March in a pair of concerts and that Charles Munch will come here to lead the Quaker City group at the same time.

It will mark the first such exchange between the groups, two of the best of the nation's symphony orchestras.

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,872

MAR 13 1956

Munch and Ormandy

By the Associated Press

Philadelphia

The Philadelphia Orchestra and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will exchange conductors briefly next year.

The Philadelphia Orchestra announced that its conductor, Eugene Ormandy, has agreed to lead the Boston Symphony next March in a pair of concerts and that Charles Munch will come here to lead the Quaker City group at the same time.

MAR 11 1956

Three Symphony Concerts This Week

On Friday afternoon and Saturday evening the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Charles Munch will repeat the Sixth Symphony, called "Fantaisies Symphoniques," by Bohuslav Martinu which was commissioned for the Orchestra's 75th anniversary and premiered in January of last year.

Subsequent to performing the score in Boston, Mr. Munch and the Orchestra performed the Symphony in New York last season and the New York Music Critics Circle recently voted the score its award as the best new orchestral work performed there in the year 1955.

The concert will open with Beethoven's Overture to Collin's drama, "Coriolan," and conclude with three Dances from the Ballet, "The Three-Cornered Hat," by Manuel de Falla. In addition, the cellist, Leonard Rose, will make his first appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, playing the Concerto in B Minor by Dvorak.

At next Tuesday evening's concert, the program will consist of three works for chorus, orchestra and soloists by Mozart, to be conducted by G. Wallace Woodworth: "Regina Coeli," K. 108; "Ave, verum corpus," K. 618; and "Vesperae de dominica," K. 321; and the "Requiem" by Gabriel Faure, to be conducted by Mr. Munch. Assisting artists in this program will be the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, with Adele Addison, soprano; Eleanor Davis, mezzo-soprano; Richard Gilley, tenor; and Donald Gramm, bass.

"children" is starting a new term this month.

The Children's Art Centre at 36 Rutland st. has a simple catalogue which announces the unusual kind of service it offers through United Community Service funds and private contributions, but its students, from 4-year-olds up, tell the real story. They come back as volunteer teachers—and established artists, many of them—to share in the program of offering free training in sculpture and painting.

One of the features of this term's plans, in addition to regular classes from 3 to 5 from Monday through Friday and from 9 to 12 on Saturday mornings, will be visitors from foreign countries who will tell the children about the customs and arts of their native background. Also scheduled for the children who attend either regularly or at will are sketching trips, projects with scrap material (collage) and working with clay.

Miss Charlotte Dempsey and Mrs. John Wetherbee head the professional staff. Volunteer teachers work with Mrs. Harry Spectre. Children under 12 are given instruction at their individual pace every day but Wednesday. Their efforts are exhibited at the Museum in the South End or in sidewalk shows and travelling exhibits sent all over the world.

Philip H. Sherwood is president of the Centre, serving on the executive board with Arthur W. Heintzelman, Mrs. Roger Warner, John O. Wilson and Miss Marion C. Shorley.

FIRST POPS PLANS are being completed by Wellesley College Club members, whose annual Wellesley Night at Pops will be Saturday, May 12, at Symphony Hall. Proceeds from this pleasant occasion will mean financial aid to students through the Development Fund and the Student Aid Society. This year, it will help provide a freshman scholarship for a girl from Greater Boston. Undergraduates, who will do their share by selling flowers, plan to meet this Thursday, March 15, with the senior Pops committee. Present will be Mrs. Max G. Marple of Wellesley, Pops chairman, and Mrs. Kirkbride Patterson of Weston, president of the Boston Wellesley College Club, Mrs. Robert W. Canfield Jr., Mrs. John H. Hinchcliffe, Mrs. Walter R. Hatfield, Mrs. Edwin D. Smith, Mrs. David R. Porter and Mrs. Ernest F. Dietz.

(Boris)

NEXT MONTH—Miss Florence Miciek, daughter of Frank J. Miciek of Elizabeth, N. J., and William F. Rowe, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick V. Rowe of Melrose, plan to be married. She graduated from Montclair State Teachers College. Her fiance graduated from Colgate.

ONE HUNDRED Radcliffe alumnae from all over the country will return to Cambridge Thursday for a three-day biennial meeting of the Radcliffe College Alumnae Council.

Representing clubs from as far away as San Francisco and classes from 1895 on up, the council delegates will reacquaint themselves with college life and discuss common problems and projects.

Working with Mrs. LeRoy M. Hersum, chairman of the council, are Mrs. George B. Redding, president of the alumnae association; Mrs. Robert O. Gilmore, vice president in charge of clubs; Mrs. Erwin H. Schell, treasurer; Mrs. Charles Rossiter, president of the Radcliffe Club of Boston; Mrs. Gordon G. Hill, executive secretary of the association; and Miss Mildred P. Sherman, Radcliffe's Dean of College Relations.

In addition to attending classes in the Radcliffe and Harvard Yards, the alumnae will hear news of the college from W. K. Jordan, president of Radcliffe, Prof. Sterling Dow of Harvard, Mrs. Leonard W. Cronkhite, Mrs. Charles Kerby-Miller, Miss Constance Ballou, Miss Emily B. Lacey, Dean Sherman and Dudley Meek, new director of the Harvard-Radcliffe Program in Business Administration.

Mrs. Carl J. Gilbert, chairman of the Radcliffe trustees, will address the alumnae at a luncheon in Agassiz House Saturday to conclude the meeting.

A TELEPHONE BRIDGE next Thursday will help raise money for the Winchester Hospital, thanks to the enterprise of the friends of the hospital who are joining their neghbors in opening their homes or "visiting" for the afternoon. Committee members include Mrs. Harold Wheeler, Mrs. Warren Jackson and Mrs. Richard Preston. Mrs. Edward Rendall is chairman. Parties will be given by Mrs. Malcolm Burr, Mrs. James M. Beale, Mrs. John W. Harrison, Mrs. Stanley Day, Mrs. Robert Ingraham and many others.

(Bachrach)

A SUMMER WEDDING is planned by Miss Pheobe E. Driscoll, daughter of Charles F. Driscoll of Lawrence, who is announcing her engagement to Frank K. Ward of Brockton. She is a Simmons graduate and he is working for his Ph. D. at M. I. T.

CLEVELAND, OHIO
PRESS
Circ. D. 314,247
MAR 15 1956

CHARLES MUNCH brings his Boston Symphony to Cleveland in October.

GERMAN SOPRANO Elisabeth Schwarzkopf sings here next December.

Orchestras, Ballets Top Bernardi Program

Five ballet companies, two opera troupes and two symphony orchestras top the list of music attractions announced for the 1956-57 season by G. Bernardi.

One soloist will make her Cleveland debut. Elisabeth Schwarzkopf, Germany's most famous soprano, sings here Dec. 1.

The orchestras are two of the best-known in the world. The Boston Symphony under Charles Munch performs Friday, Oct. 19. The Vienna Philharmonic, under Andre Cluytens, plays Saturday, Nov. 10.

The NBC Opera will replace the New York Opera Co. for two years. The TV troupe is here Nov. 23 and 24 as part of its first tour with "Marriage of Figaro" and "Madam Butterfly."

The De Paur Opera Gala will be staged Mar. 23, 1957. Leonard De Paur, chief of the Infantry Chorus," will direct his singers in "Carmen Jones" and "Porgy and Bess."

Ballet organizations scheduled: the Yugoslav State (Kolo) company, Oct. 20 and 21; Ballet Russe, Nov. 2, 3 and 4; Ruth Page's Chicago Opera Ballet, Dec. 2; Ballet Theater, Mar. 8 and 9, 1957; the Ballet Basque of Biarritz, Mar. 30, 1957. The Ruth Page and Biarritz troupes are new to Cleveland.

Other attractions: Mantovani and his band, Oct. 7, at Masonic Hall; The Carbinieri Band of Rome, Nov. 18, at the Arena; The Little Gaelic Singers, Dec. 7, and the Little Singers of Paris, Mar. 10, 1957.

Besides these set dates, Bernardi is dickering for programs at Lakewood Civic Auditorium. Except for Mantovani and the Rome band, all announced events will be in Music Hall.

Bernardi again will feature a bargain-priced series that includes the Boston and Vienna orchestras, the NBC Opera, Miss Schwarzkopf, Little Singers of Paris and the Biarritz Ballet.

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 185,401
MAR 16 1956

Passion by Symphony

During the coming week, Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play concerts in Hartford, New Haven, New York, New Brunswick and Brooklyn, introducing in the first three cities the new Symphony No. 11 by Heitor Villa-Lobos. The composer recently conducted it here.

When the orchestra returns to Boston, Mr. Munch will repeat a former custom of conducting one of the Bach Passions during Holy Week. This year it is to be the "Passion According to Saint John." It will be performed on Thursday afternoon (March 29) rather than on Good Friday, and Saturday night (March 31).

Assisting in the performances will be the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor, and Adele Addison, soprano; Betty Allen, contralto; David Lloyd, tenor, and Mac Morgan and James Joyce, basses.

An extra Open Rehearsal in advance of these concerts has been scheduled for Wednesday night, March 28.

ORANGE, N. J.
TRANSCRIPT
Circ. W. 3,560
MAR 15 1956

'Symphony On Air' Comes To Mosque

Griffith To Present Leonard Bernstein

Lenoard Bernstein's talents as a conductor, composer and pianist will be brought into play in the program which has been chosen by the "Symphony of the Air" (formerly the NBC Orchestra) for its appearance at the Mosque Theater, Newark, on Thursday evening, April 19, as a final event of the Griffith Music Foundation 1955-1956 season.

The program will include Bernstein's own "Serenade for Violin Solo and String Orchestra with Percussion," a symphonic composition which is said to have found its inspiration in Plat's famed "Symposium." This work was very favorably received when given its world premiere at the Venice Festival on September 12, 1954, with Bernstein conducting, and again at its American premiere by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Charles Munch on April 15 of last year. The "Serenade" is in five movements. Isaac Stern, the eminent violinist, who was soloist on both occasions will again be soloist when it is presented at the Mosque.

Stern will also be soloist in a performance of Bach's Concerto for Piano, Flute and Violin. Here Bernstein will be the piano soloist as well as conductor. Paul Renzi, Jr. will be flutist. This work is thefifth of the six now famous Brandenberg concertos in which Bach explored te possibilities of writing music for orchestra and solo instruments other than strings. The concertos have been termed the purest products of Bach's polyphonic style."

Brahms great Symphony No. 1 in C. Minor, Opus 68, will occupy the last half of the program. A work of musing tenderness and epic sweep, the grandeur of its style and architectural design have been favorably compared with Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

CALDWELL, N. J.
Progress-Verona News
Circ. W. 4,066
MAR 16 1956

Sypmphony Planned At Mosque Theatre

Leonard Bernstein's talents as a conductor, composer and pianist will be brought into play in the program which has been chosen by the "Symphony of the Air" (formerly the NBC Orchestra) for its appearance at the Mosque Theater, Newark, on Thursday evening, April 19, as a final event of the Griffith Music Foundation 1955-56 season.

The program will include Bernstein's own "Serenade for Violin Solo and String Orchestra with Percussion," symphonic composition which is said to have found its inspiration in Plato's famed "Symposium." This work was very favorably received when given its world premiere at the Venice Festival on September 12, 1954, with Bernstein conducting, and again at its American premiere by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Charles Munch on April 15 of last year. The "Serenade" is in five movements. Isaac Stern, the eminent violinist, who was soloist on both occasions will again be soloist when it is presented at the Mosque.

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,872
MAR 15 1956

21

Bruno

Leonard Rose will be the cello soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for its weekend concerts.

Leonard Rose to Be Soloist At Symphony This Weekend

Bohuslav Martinů's Sixth Symphony, "Fantaisies Symphoniques" — commissioned for the 75th anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and given its premiere in January, 1955—will be repeated at the Symphony Hall concerts Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. This score was recently voted by the New York Music Critics Circle as the best new orchestral work performed in New York in 1955.

Charles Munch will open these concerts with Beethoven's Overture to Collin's drama, "Coriolan," and conclude with three dances from Falla's ballet, "The Three-Cornered Hat." Leonard Rose, cellist, will make his first appearance with the Boston Symphony, playing the Concerto in B minor by Dvořák.

Post (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 285,839
MAR 17 1956

Music Review

By TUCKER KEISER

When the Boston Symphony concert began yesterday, it was obvious that the snowstorm had taken its toll, because the auditorium was less than half full. I have never seen such a small crowd at any symphony concert before. Even after intermission, there were large sections of unoccupied seats.

I sincerely hope that the absentees were listening to the broadcast, for the music played was first rate.

Mr. Munch opened with a virile performance of Beethoven's Overture to "Coriolan" and continued with Martinu's "Fantaisies Symphoniques" (Symphony No. 6), a work written for the 75th anniversary celebration now in progress. The Martinu had its premiere last season and was received with great acclaim; it has since won the award for the best "new orchestral work" in 1955 given by the New York Music Critics Circle.

Full of striking effects, bewitching colors and ingratiating themes, set forth with consummate craftsmanship, the symphony may well prove to be THE significant score among the newly commissioned pieces. Despite some too eager entrances, Mr. Munch and the orchestra gave the score an exciting reading.

Leonard Rose, cellist, made his first appearance with the orchestra, playing Dvorak's Cello Concerto. That he succeeded in making the concerto almost interesting is high tribute to the soloist's artistry; the work, not very stirring even when new, has faded beyond the power of any great artist to restore. All the beautiful tone, imaginative interpretation and olympian technique in Mr. Rose's performance went for naught because he was licked by Dvorak before he began.

Three dances from deFalla's "Three Cornered Hat" gave Mr. Munch his customary rousing finale. As a B. S. O. Extra, the conductor did a beautiful tango conducting the first dance.

Post (e)
BRIDGEPORT, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 76,589
MAR 17 1956

The Seventh Flute

How often we speak in belittling terms of those among us whose role in life is a minor one, Playing "second fiddle" we say. Being a "fifth wheel" or a mere "cog" in the machine. And so on.

But is there really an unimportant job anywhere?

The late Dr. William L. Stidger never thought so, and told the following story of Walter Damrosch to prove it. This famous conductor once stopped his orchestra during rehearsal, when everything seemed to be going nicely, to shout, "Where is the seventh flute?"

Even the seventh flute, last man in the line and probably the newest player in the ensemble, had an important part to play in creating the effect the maestro desired, said Dr. Stidger, and went on to apply the lesson:

"We may feel inferior, untalented, and some of us uneducated or at least not as competent as others. We may lack grace of manner and good looks, and think of ourselves as quite insignificant to anybody or anything. But each has a part to play, and we should each play it well."

He then went on to describe the contribution of a friend of his who played the triangle with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Much of the time this musician would sit idle, waiting. But it was purposeful waiting. For every now and then the man would stand and with perfect timing deftly touch his instrument, producing just the right effect called for.

There will be readers of this piece who are doing exactly that—adding just the right contribution needed, and at the right time and place.

Let them not despise the day of small things, nor the work of seeming small importance. Even a thundering orchestra was not performing up to its potential without the seventh flute!

Day (e)
NEW LONDON, Conn.
Independent Republican
Circ. 23,095
MAR 16 1956

College Series

Two Orchestras, Violinist, Ballet Theatre Coming Here

The 1956-57 Connecticut College Concert Series will bring to music lovers of Eastern Connecticut two symphony orchestras, the Boston and Pittsburgh; a brilliant young violinist, Ruggiero Ricci, and as an added special feature, the world famous Ballet Theatre.

The series opens in the Frank Loomis Palmer Auditorium Oct. 9, with Ruggiero Ricci, renowned young American violin virtuoso.

Few young concert artists have a record of achievement comparable to that of Ricci, who is recognized in Europe and Latin America as well as in the United States as one of the foremost violinists of the day. Born in San Francisco in 1920, second of seven children in a musical family, Ricci began violin study with his father at the age of five. A year later he became the pupil of Louis Persinger, and at eight appeared in a concert, playing the Mendelsohn E minor Concerto. At nine he gave brilliant performances in New York's Mecca Temple and Carnegie Hall, and at 12 and 13 toured Europe and South America. While known 25 years ago as a child prodigy, Ricci, now at 36, is recognized as one of the brilliant violinists of the generation.

First Appearance Here

The Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra, with William Steinberg conducting, will make its first appearance before a New London audience Nov. 14. The orchestra, now in its 60th season, has reached new heights of eminence among the country's leading orchestras during the past five years.

It has had a long and interesting history dating back to 1896 when its conductor was Victor Herbert. During his six years as musical conductor he not only composed many of his famed operettas, but also brought the orchestra into an enviable position among the nation's top musical units.

The present conductor, William Steinberg, who has been with the orchestra since 1950, was brought to this country by Arturo Toscanini as guest conductor for the NBC Symphony. For seven years prior to taking over the Pittsburgh Symphony, Steinberg was guest conductor for most of the major orchestras in America and Europe. Last summer he was honored by being invited to conduct the world-famous Concertgebouw Orchestra of Amsterdam (heard in Palmer Auditorium Oct. 12, 1954) in its Beethoven cycle of eight concerts. Late in the summer he went to Rome and conducted a series of programs with the St. Cecelia Orchestra.

Boston Symphony Jan. 8

The annual visit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Charles Munch, will come Jan. 8, 1957, marking its 16th appearance in Palmer Auditorium.

The Ballet Theatre, presented by the Ballet Theatre Foundation, Inc., Blevins Davis, president, and under the management of S. Hurok, will close the series Feb. 12, 1957. In a company of 100 classical dancers and instrumentalists will be found many names high in the field of ballet—Sonia Arova, Erik Bruhn, Scott Douglas, Rosella Hightower, Catherine Horn, Nora Kay, Ruth Ann Koesum, John Kriza, Hugh Laing, Michael Lland, Barbara Lloyd, Enrique Martinez, Christine Mayer, Fernand Nault, Job Sanders, Lupe Serrano and Anthony Tudor.

Serving as musical director is Joseph Levine. Dimitri Romanoff is the regisseur. Lucia Chase and Oliver Smith are the codirectors of the troupe. This is their first appearance in Eastern Connecticut and the first dance group to be offered on the college concert series since the 1939-40 series.

Announcements of the coming series have been mailed to subscribers of the 1955-56 series who will have until May 1 to renew their subscriptions.

ROSELLA HIGHTOWER

CHARLES MUNCH

WILLIAM STEINBERG

RUGGIERO RICCI

NEWARK, N. J.
NEWS
Circ. D. 268,862 - S. 288,382
MAR 18 1956

Gabriel Faure's "Requiem for Chorus and Orchestra" with soprano and baritone solo will be presented on the broadcast of the

ADELE ADDISON

Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow on WRCA at 8:15 p.m. Charles Munch will conduct the work with the combined Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society. Adele Addison, soprano, and Donald Gramm bass-baritone, will be the soloists. The "Requiem" is in seven sections: Introit and Kyrie, Offertorium, Sanctus, Pie Jesu, Agnus Dei, Libera Me and In Paradisum.

* * *

Patricia Connor, Irish soprano, will sing a medley of Irish songs in a salute to St. Patrick's Day on The American-Jewish Caravan on WMGM today at 12:30. J. S.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
Circ. D. 653,252 - S. 982,681
MAR 18 1956

Boston Concert To End Season

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give its final concert of the season at the Brooklyn Academy of Music next Friday evening, at 8:30 o'clock, with Charles Munch, music director, conducting.

A feature of the evening will be the performance of Bohuslav Martinu's latest symphony, his sixth, "Fantaisies Symphoniques," which was composed for the 75th anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The Brooklyn concerts of the Boston Symphony are held under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, acting in cooperation with the Philharmonic Society of Brooklyn and a women's committee.

BALTIMORE, MD.
AMERICAN
Circ. S. 317,397
MAR 18 1956

Records

By REC

The original soundtrack of the complete Laurence Olivier's motion picture of "Richard III," which was the three-hour-long telecast last Sunday afternoon, is now available on records.

RCA-Victor released the soundtrack, which stars Sir Laurence Olivier in the title role, Sir John Gielgud, Sir Ralph Richardson, Claire Bloom, Sir Cedric Hardwicke and Pamela Brown, with a musical score by Sir William Walton, in three 12-inch long-play disks.

Another release in observance of the Boston Symphony's seventy-fifth anniversary is Debussy's "La Mer" and "Nocturnes," an RCA 12-inch LP conducted by Pierre Monteux. It was made in Boston with the Berkshire Festival Chorus chanting in the last movement of the Nocturnes.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 122,000
MAR 17 1956

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Martinu Fantasies Repeated

The Boston Symphony Orchestra played at Symphony Hall yesterday the first concert of the 19th program in the Friday afternoon-Saturday evening series. Charles Munch conducted the following program: Beethoven: "Coriolanus" Overture; Martinu: Symphonic Fantasies; Dvorak: 'Cello Concerto in B minor (Leonard Rose, soloist, Boston debut); Falla: Three Dances from the Ballet, "The Three-Cornered Hat."

By CYRUS DURGIN

The blizzard which sneaked up on us yesterday even had its effect upon the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the concert given at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. Not only were there sizable gaps of empty seats in the auditorium, but for a time there were some unoccupied chairs on the stage. A few of the musicians had a bad time getting in town, and not until the second half of the program were they all able to be present.

Yet I doubt that this was a factor in what, for the most part, was an off-day for the orchestra. Not that there was any poor playing, but, like the day, the general spirits seemed to be down. Until it came the turn of Falla's delicious and delightful Spanish dances, there was not full measure of the Boston Symphony's incisive dynamics and rich glory of sound. Beethoven's Overture was not what it could have been, either tonally or in drama, and the Dvorak, Cello Concerto, while it went well enough, scarcely had the intensity to rouse one.

All the same, it was a rewarding experience to hear again the Symphonic Fantasies of Martinu, one of the 75th anniversary scores and first performed a year ago last January. It seemed impressive then, and yesterday the score sounded larger and more engrossing still. Here, I think, is music of genuine substance and stature, music of and in this time which yet has the passion, the clear order and the points of repose which not infrequently are missing in contemporary scores—especially the more academic among them.

The curious and startling "whirring" theme which you hear at the outset and then in each succeeding movement, is no eccentricity, but a musical idea of both design and color. The whole of the Symphonic Fantasies are extremely well organized, and though I dislike to use the same imagery Martinu himself used (in the previous book) in talking about Mr. Munch's conducting, I must say that these Fantasies seem naturally and inevitably to "flow" out of one another.

Ovation for Martinu

Mr. Martinu was present yesterday afternoon, and shared conspicuously in a notably sustained ovation from the audience. Seldom is a living composer welcomed so demonstratively.

Leonard Rose, successively first 'cellist of the N. B. C., Cleveland and New York Philharmonic-Symphony orchestras, is a competent technician and an artist of his instrument. But that, as solo performer, he has any exceptional qualities of personality, was something not proved by his playing yesterday. It was an estimable reading, refined and pleasant, but never more than that. His 'cello is said to be an Amati. I thought it afforded a perculiarly shrill, muffled sonority. Mr. Rose was cordially received by the Friday audience.

Matters came to life with the iridescent, voluptuous rhythmically impetuous dances from "The Three-Cornered Hat." Here Mr. Munch and the orchestra alike achieved a vigor and a sensual passion which, up to then, had been missing.

Next week the orchestra will go to New York. At the Boston concerts of March 29 (Thursday, by exception, to avoid Good Friday), and 31, Mr. Munch will conduct the St. John Passion of Bach. A chorus from the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society will participate, and the soloists will be Adele Addison, Betty Allen, David Lloyd, Mac Morgan and James Joyce.

Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Republican
Circ. 130,826
MAR 18 1956

Boston Symphony Will Offer Strong Program Monday

Works by Tchaikovsky, Beethoven and the contemporary Brazilian, Heitor Villa - Lobos, will be performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra when it comes to the Bushnell Memorial at 8:15 p.m. tomorrow. Its concert will be the last in this season's Bushnell Symphony Series. Charles Munch will conduct.

The "Romeo and Juliet" overture - fantasia, which was the first ambitious work that Tchaikovsky in his maturer years was willing to acknowledge without reservations, will open the program. Following it, the orchestra will give the first performance outside of Boston of Villa-Lobos' Symphony No. 11, a work commissioned in celebration of the Boston Symphony's seventy-fifty anniversary year and given its world premiere early this month. In Boston the work won accalim as an outstanding new offering of a composer whom "The Musical Courier'f refers to as "the most brilliant musical light yet to emerge from the western hemisphere."

Beethoven's Seventh Symphony will be performed following the intermission. Completed in the summer of 1812, the work was not given its first performance until Dec. 8 of the following year. Although he was then so deaf that he could hear only the loudest notes of the orchestra, Beethoven himself conducted. It is recorded that while the concert itself was handled without a slip, at one time during rehearsals the violinists laid down their bows and refused to play a passage which they considered impossible. Beethoven persuaded them to take their parts home to study, and all went well the next day.

A limited number of tickets for the Boston Symphony concert are available at the Bushnell box office.

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 106,753
MAR 18 1956

BOSTON SYMPHONY IN FAURE'S 'REQUIEM'

Gabriel Faure's "Requiem for Chorus and Orchestra" with soprano and baritone solo will be presented on the broadcast of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow (NBC Radio, 8.15 p. m., EST). Charles Munch will conduct the work with the combined Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society.

Adele Addison, soprano, and Donald Gramm, bass-baritone, will be the soloists. G. Wallace Woodworth is choral director. The "Requiem" is in seven sections: Introit and Kyrie, Offertorium, Sanctus, Pie Jesu, Agnus Dei, Libera Me and In Paradisum.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
Circ. D. 526,215 - S. 1,146,860
MAR 18 1956

WEDNESDAY

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Carnegie Hall, 8:15 P. M. Conductor, Charles Munch.
Romeo and Juliet Overture-Fantasy.....Tchaikovsky
Symphony No. 11 (first New York performance).....Villa-Lobos
Symphony No. 7.....Beethoven

JEAN HOERNER, pianist, Town Hall, 8:30 P. M.
Sonata in D minor.....Cimarosa
Grande Gigue.....Hassler
Sonata in C sharp minor.....Soler
Toccata.....Czerny
Sonata in B flat minor, Op. 35.....Chopin
Menuet and Toccata from Le Tombeau de Couperin.....Ravel
Second Sonata (first New York performance).....Ludmila Ulehla
Variations on a Theme by Paganini (Book II).....Brahms

BRASS ENSEMBLE, Third Street Music School Settlement, 8:30 P. M. Conductor, Simon Karasick. Admission free.

CLAREMONT STRING QUARTET, Brooklyn Academy, 8:30 P. M.
Quartet in G (K. 387).....Mozart
Quartet, Op. 8.....Creston
Quartet, Op. 41, No. 1.....Schumann

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Indep. Republican
Circ. 248,071

MAR 13 1956

SYMPHONY REHEARSAL ACTUALLY DOTTING i'S AND CROSSING t'S

By FRED BRADY

It would be nice if some presently uncommissioned composer would do a Suite For The Sport Coat Or Even The Shirtsleeve and dedicate it to the Boston Symphony Orchestra on certain Thursday nights.

Those are the Thursday nights of the open rehearsal when you can see the orchestra as the same superb instrument it is in its formal concerts but are somehow more aware of its skilled human parts.

ALL FAIR

Because on those Thursday nights the skilled human parts wear what they want to but it's all fair because so does the audience.

Charles Munch is fond of a grey casual jacket and a sport shirt without necktie. Pierre Monteux appeared last month in a jacket with a flaming stripe across the shoulders.

The audience is a study in itself. All seats are rush and if you don't believe it, stand back when they open the doors at 6:45 p.m. If you've been to many of the rehearsals you get to know the regulars.

CLIMB ALL WAY

They come streaming in and make a bee-line for the main cross-aisle in the orchestra or they pound up the stairs to the first or second balcony. Nothing will ever settle their disputes about the best place to sit in Symphony Hall.

You'll notice some fairly elderly men and women who will climb all the way to the second balcony. And that's because they hold—"This is the best place to hear the music."

If you're looking for little touches of drama, they're at the rehearsal, too. You don't know it but that little old lady who just went past us is like a good many who come on rehearsal nights.

They were regular subscribers for years but, well, they have to practice economies now. But a $2 ticket for the rehearsal, as one said, "keeps us in touch with the orchestra."

But mostly, of course, it's a college crowd and that's why Munch started the open rehearsals six years ago. Harvard and MIT students had written complaining that they couldn't get seats for the regular series and asked if the orchestra couldn't do a special students' series.

ONE LOOK

Munch and Symphony officials took one look at the crowded calendar and found no room for such a series. Then the maestro suggested: "Why not let them come to the rehearsal."

So they've been coming for six years and packing the place as they did the other night despite a blowing snowstorm.

Many of the students who rush down front on the floor or for the overhanging edge of the balconies are music students. Many of them glue their eyes on the man who plays the instrument they're studying and watch his techniques all night.

BUDDING COMPOSERS

There have been young students of conducting, too. One of the former rehearsal regulars is Russell Stanger, now conductor of the Boston University orchestra, who recently appeared as guest conductor with the Philadelphia orchestra.

And of course there are budding composers and the intense young people who hold the scores. But if that frightens you, I noticed at least several people who seemed like me and I don't know the 12-tone technique from a riff on a dulcimer.

But there's a definite air—perhaps it could be a theme in the Suite For The Sport Coat—about the rehearsals which makes them as good theater as they are good music.

Munch is a one-man drama when he rehearses the orchestra. The other night he also rehearsed the Harvard and Radcliffe glee clubs in the Faure Requiem.

When the Radcliffe girls gave him just the entrance he wanted at one point, he blew them a kiss.

LUNGED ON TIPTOE

And when he wanted a "Hosanna in Excelsis" out of the Harvard boys he didn't hold up a pale hand for it. He lunged on tiptoes toward them and pulled it out of them.

It strikes me that rehearsal is hardly the word for the Thursday nights. I think Laning Humphrey of the Symphony staff hit it the other night when he called it "just dotting the i's and crossing the t's."

It's quite a night really. Some of the Harvard boys tell me that in their recondite idiom it's known as "Symphony Lab."

And the regulars all claim that "we're the real firstnighters." And that's true, of course, because if there's a new work or a new soloist then Thursday night is actually the premiere.

Quite by accident the other night I happened on an unprogrammed premiere. I happened to go out into the first balcony corridor during the Mozart "Regina Coeli" and there was this young man kissing a pretty girl.

And I couldn't help thinking that that young man would go far. It isn't every girl who gets kissed with an accompaniment of Mozart played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Republican
Circ. 130,826

MAR 18 1956

Noted Musicians Coming In Next Bushnell Series

Two brilliant young musicians will be presented as assisting soloists with two of the great American orchestras that will make up the 1956-1957 Bushnell Symphony Series, it has been announced by Managing Director William H. Mortensen of the Bushnell Memorial. Leon Fleisher, pianist heard recently in a coast-to-coast concert broadcast with the New York Philharmonic, will perform here with the Cleveland Orchestra. Raphael Druian, who is rapidly gaining renown for his violin recordings, will be guest soloist with the Minneapolis Symphony. Both will perform classical works for orchestra and soloist.

Now accepting subscription renewals and new applications for its 27th annual season, the Bushnell Symphony Series will present the following orchestras and conductors between November and April: New York Philharmonic - Symphony, Dimitri Mitropoulos; Cleveland Orchestra, George Szell; Minneapolis Symphony, making its first appearance here, with Antal Dorat conducting; Boston Symphony Charles Munch, Philadelphia Orchestra, Eugene Ormandy.

The Bushnell series has long been rated one of the finest symphonic courses in the United States. Under the Bushnell's policy of making the greatest in music available to the greatest possible number of persons symphony tickets are so priced that a saving up to 35 per cent is possible through obtaining seats for the series.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Post
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 230,930

MAR

Ormandy Conducts Here in '57

By TUCKER KEISER

The Philadelphia Orchestra announced this week that its conductor, Eugene Ormandy, will lead the Boston Symphony in a pair of concerts next season, and that at the same time Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony, will take over conducting chores with the Philadelphians.

On the surface, this may sound like a perfectly normal operation, because conductors are constantly making guest appearances with orchestras other than their own. In fact, many famous maestros make a living in guest spots, being without permanent orchestral jobs.

However, this indicates a closer tie between two of the big three orchestras and one which augurs well. Relations between Philadelphia, New York, and Boston orchestras have in the past been polite and even at times cordial—but always distant. Rivalries between the three develop, sometimes becoming intense.

The spectacular playing of the Philadelphia Orchestra three years ago, when the group appeared in Symphony Hall for the first time in 14 years, was prompted by this artistic competition. The Philadelphians, still smarting from the ecstatic praise heaped on the visiting Bostonians under Koussevitzky at the Academy of Music some years ago, where determined to show Hub audiences—and their own hometown patrons—that they too could draw equally enthusiastic acclaim. It was indeed a memorable event.

What will be most interesting to the regular concert-goers will be the way each conductor handles his new orchestra. We can expect not only new aural sensations but visual ones as well. In temperament and method, Munch and Ormandy are diametrically opposed. One could guess that since both organizations are such virtuoso instruments the response to the guest conductors will be swift.

Considerable Difference

This being true we look for Mr. Munch to add a certain brilliance to the Philadelphians' playing and for Mr. Ormandy to bring back a measure of tonal opulence to the Bostonians.

Let us hope that Mr. Munch will carry his Berlioz to the Quaker City and that Mr. Ormandy will bring us his Sibelius.

A comparison of the conductors' methods reveals considerable difference. Mr. Munch's is personal dynamics; he drinks deeply of every note, transmitting every ounce of emotion to his players in the broadest physical terms who, in turn, mirror his every expression and reaction. At the end of a concert he is exhausted not only because of the physical exertion but also because of the emotional tension he has endured.

Mr. Ormandy's performances seem almost stolid and workmanlike in contrast. His projection of a score is developed fully in rehearsal; the musicians know precisely what to expect from the conductor at the performance. An Ormandy interpretation will remain virtually the same no matter whether it is heard in Philadelphia, Ann Arbor, or Boston. At the conclusion of a concert Mr. Ormandy seems as fresh as when he started and often joins some informal social affair until the wee hours.

Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 109,680

MAR 17 1956

Boston Concludes Bushnell Series

Managing Director William H. Mortensen of the Bushnell Memorial announced yesterday that special arrangements have been made for the Boston Symphony Orchestra to perform in its concert here Monday a new symphony recently completed to honor the orchestra's 75th anniversary year.

The work is the Eleventh Symphony of Heitor Villa-Lobos, the Brazilian composer.

Conductor Charles Munch gave this new work its world premiere in Boston two weeks ago and Hartford will be among the first cities to hear it. The symphony was acclaimed for its rhythmic melody by the critics at its premiere.

Two classical works that are longstanding favorites among music lovers will be included in the program prepared by Mr. Munch for what will be the final concert in this season's Bushnell Symphony Series.

They are the Overture-Fantasia from Tchaikovsky's "Romeo and Juliet," and Beethoven's Seventh Symphony.

A limited number of seats for the Boston concert are available at the box office.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
Circ. D. 336,443 - S. 528,253

MAR 18 1956

Bostonians

By FRANCIS D. PERKINS

Two of the fifteen works commissioned by the Boston Symphony Orchestra for its seventy-fifth anniversary will be heard in its last Carnegie Hall concerts of the season. Heitor Villa-Lobos' Symphony No. 11, the sixth and latest work in this list to reach the public thus far, will have its local premiere Wednesday night. Bohuslav Martinu's "Symphonic Fantasies" (Symphony No. 11), first played in Boston and New York in January, 1955, will be repeated Saturday afternoon. It won the New York Music Critics' Circle award for orchestral works introduced here last year, and the Circle's chairman, Miles Kastendieck, of "The New York Journal-American," will give the award scroll to Mr. Martinu in the hall's green room during Saturday's intermission.

Villa-Lobos' latest symphony, completed in 1955, has four movements taking twenty-six minutes to play; the Brazilian composer has announced no extra-musical sources of inspiration. Both composers are well over sixty—Mr. Villa-Lobos was born in 1881 and Mr. Martinu in 1890—but there has been no recent slackening of their activities in this field. Meanwhile there are nine more commissioned works which will have to await next season or its successor for New York hearings.

* * *

More Novelties

Benjamin Britten's "Sinfonia da Requiem," Op. 20, to be played by the Philharmonic under Guido Cantelli this Thursday, Friday and Saturday, has not been played here for fourteen years. It had its first public hearings by this orchestra under Bohuslav Martinu.

Courant (m)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Republican
Circ. 86,944

MAR 19 1956

Boston Symphony To Perform At Bushnell Today

Charles Munch will bring his Boston Symphony Orchestra to the Bushnell Memorial today at 8:15 p.m. for a concert that will close the twenty-sixth annual Bushnell Symphony Series. For his program, the Boston music director and conductor has selected Tchaikovsky's Overture-Fantasia to "Romeo and Juliet"; Beethoven's Seventh Symphony; and Villa - Lobos' Eleventh Symphony.

The Villa-Lobos work was commissioned by the Boston Symphony and the Koussevitzky Music Foundation in commemoration of the orchestra's seventy-fifth anniversary season, now drawing to its close. Its first performance took place in Boston earlier this month when it won the acclaim of reviewers. Villa-Lobos is rated by many the greatest living composer in the Western Hemisphere.

A limited number of seats for tonight's concert are available at the Bushnell Memorial box office.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
Circ. D. 526,215 - S. 1,146,860
MAR 18 1956

34

BRAZILIAN COMPOSER

Jerry A. Tiffany

Heitor Villa-Lobos, whose Symphony No. 11 will have its first performance here by Boston Symphony on Wednesday.

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 369,241
MAR 18 1956

Munch Conducts St. John Passion at Next Concerts

During the coming week Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play concerts in Hartford, New Haven, New York, New Brunswick, and Brooklyn.

When the orchestra returns to Boston next week, Mr. Munch will conduct Bach's "Passion According to Saint John," on Thursday afternoon (March 29), rather than on Good Friday, and Saturday evening, March 31.

Assisting in the performances will be the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor, and Adele Addison, soprano; Betty Allen, contralto; David Lloyd, tenor, and Mac Morgan and James Joyce, bases.

An extra open rehearsal in advance of these concerts has been scheduled for Wednesday evening, March 28, when the combined forces will be rehearsing for the performances. Proceeds of ticket sales for the open rehearsals benefit the Pension Fund of the orchestra, and tickets for the March 28 open rehearsal are now on sale at the Symphony Hall box office.

Sunday Post
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 230,930
MAR 18 1956

Hi Fi Developments

By BEN DRISKO

It has happened again. And I find myself unable to resist the opportunity to indulge in a little chest thumping. This time he was even too excited to wait for the end of the conecrt. Last Saturday, about 9:30, literally seconds after the end of the first half of the BSO concert the phone rang. It was Archie Spaulding bubbling over with ecstasy over his enjoyment of the concert.

047

Both he and Mrs. S. had attended the Friday afternoon concert at Symphony Hall and both found themselves enjoying the Saturday concert at home by radio "twice as much." Much clearer, he went on to say, you could hear more of the singers [illegible] between singers [illegible] inded, their equipment is as follows: The tuner is a Zenith, Model 723, with feedback added as per detailed instructions given in a previous column. The amplifier is a dual channel 10 watt pentode job that was described in "Electronics" eight or 10 years ago. Woofer is a Lansing Signature, D130, in a folded horn of 12 square feet mouth area and flat within 3db from 43 cycles to 600. Tweeter is also Lansing, a D175, with a special plywood horn to extend its low end down to 400 cycles to match the woofer. Its performance is within 3db to 17,000 cycles and also provides 90 degree distribution over this range.

This, however, is far from the whole story. The speaker is properly located in a hard corner of the dining room and is directed in to the living room through an outsize double door so big as to be really one room. The living room is offset slightly from the dining room and is well supplied with fireplace, furniture, rugs, drapes and general acoustic diffusion.

Another important ingredient is the fact that good music always improves with a second hearing. Although the Mozart numbers in the first half of the program are old they had never been done before here in Boston.

Another very important ingredient is one of the acoustical facts of life which has only been learned within the last five or 10 years. It has long been known that a large closely seated audience provides very high acoustic absorption. The recent discovery is that it has a drooping frequency response. As a member of such an audience you hear markedly less highs than you would if, for instance, you were to stand up so that your ears were a couple of feet above the heads of all the people around you. This is true if and only if the principal sound is coming toward you from a low angle such as from an orchestra on a stage which is only slightly above the audience.

High End Important

This effect can be corrected by skillful design of the ceiling of the auditorium. You make it a large sloping reflector which catches the music and bounces it down over the audience so that now the principal sound is coming from directly overhead. MIT's new Kresge Auditorium partakes of some of this.

If you want to holler at somebody who is last in the woods it doesn't matter much whether the high frequency response is good or bad. But if you want to understand every syllable of an important message, then the high end is very important. Most speech, and singing, intelligibility is carried by the highs and WGBH's microphone has been very skillfully placed and adjusted to catch all of them. As Archie couldn't help but notice, the microphone heard a lot more of them than he did sitting in the eighth row.

Further evidence that WGBH should receive the major portion of Archie's bouquets comes from the fact that he listens to many other programs both off the air and on records and yet is rarely thrilled as he consistently is by the WGBH-BSO combination.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will give the final concert of the Woolsey Hall series Tuesday at 8:30 p. m., is pictured above, in rehearsal with Charles Munch conducting.

Sunday Register
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 95,115
MAR 18 1956

MUSIC

Woolsey Series Ends With Boston Symphony

By GORDON E. ARMSTRONG

The Boston Symphony will be here on Tuesday evening at 8:30 to give the final concert of the Woolsey series. Charles Munch, now in his seventh year as the conductor of the celebrated orchestra, will be on the podium for this concert which signals the end of our major concert programs for this season. The New Haven Symphony Orchestra wound up its series with a Mozart Anniversary Concert last Tuesday evening and the Sprague Hall Chamber Music series ended on March 6 with a concert by the accomplished Hungarian Quartet.

In its final appearance here on Tuesday evening, the Boston Orchestra will make no concessions in its program to the current Mozart celebration. However, in its earlier Woolsey Hall concert last November, the program included Mozart's Masonic Funeral Music, a rarely heard work of the composer.

Listener interest in the Hub musicians' concert this week will center in a first hearing of the Symphony No. 11 by the Brazilian composer, Villa-Lobos. This new work is one of 15 orchestral compositions commissioned by the orchestra and the Serge Koussevitzky Music Foundation for the 75th anniversary of the Boston Symphony this season. Woolsey Hall listeners heard another of these commissioned works, Milhaud's Symphony No. 6, in the orchestra's previous concert this season. Other works to be heard on Tuesday evening include Tchaikovsky's "Romeo and Juliet" Overture-Fantasia and Beethoven's Symphony No. 7.

Last week the Boston Symphony made its first announcements concerning this year's Berkshire Music Festival, with particular reference to the orchestra's school there, the Berkshire Music Center. Among the highlights of scheduled student events this summer will be performances of several great choral and operatic works by the Festival Chorus with the orchestra. These are to include Bach's St. John's Passion, the Gloria from Mozart's Mass in C minor, and Wagner's Die Meistersinger, Act III. Goffredo Petrassi, one of Italy's foremost composers who was also commissioned to write a work for the orchestra's 75th anniversary, is to be a guest teacher of composition at the Berkshire Music Center this year.

At the conclusion of the coming Berkshire Musical Festival, the Boston Symphony will go abroad to participate in the Edinburgh Festival during the latter part of August. The Bostonians will give five concerts as a windup to the Festival and then go on to fill return engagements in London and Paris. It will be remembered that the celebrated orchestra made its first European tour in 1952. The coming trip across the Atlantic may possibly be extended to include concerts in as widely separated cities as Moscow and Israel.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
Circ. D. 526,215 - S. 1,146,860
MAR 18 1956

BRAZILIAN COMPOSER

Jerry A. Tiffany

Heitor Villa-Lobos, whose Symphony No. 11 will have its first performance here by Boston Symphony on Wednesday.

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 369,241
MAR 18 1956

Munch Conducts St. John Passion at Next Concerts

During the coming week Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play concerts in Hartford, New Haven, New York, New Brunswick, and Brooklyn.

When the orchestra returns to Boston next week, Mr. Munch will conduct Bach's "Passion According to Saint John," on Thursday afternoon (March 29), rather than on Good Friday, and Saturday evening, March 31.

Assisting in the performances will be the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor, and, about narrowing down to personal interviews, I find almost no one with sufficient dramatic potentials to warrant our taking such a long gamble. I haven't given up the idea entirely, of course, but I do feel after reading my mail and talking to many amateurs that some actual train-

Sunday Post
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 230,930
MAR 18 1956

Hi Fi Developments

By BEN DRISKO

It has happened again. And I find myself unable to resist the opportunity to indulge in a little chest thumping. This time he was even too excited to wait for the end of the conecrt. Last Saturday, about 9:30, literally seconds after the end of the first half of the BSO concert the phone rang. It was Archie Spaulding bubbling over with ecstasy over his enjoyment of the concert.

047

Both he and Mrs. S. had attended the Friday afternoon concert at Symphony Hall and both found themselves enjoying the Saturday concert at home by radio "twice as much." Much clearer, he went on to say, you could hear more of the singers and the balance between singers and orchestra was better. The Spauldings have been seasoned concert goers for years and from them this is high praise.

Their Equipment

For the technically minded, their equipment is as follows: The tuner is a Zenith, Model 723, with feedback added as per detailed instructions given in a previous column. The amplifier is a dual channel 10 watt pentode job that was described in "Electronics" eight or 10 years ago. Woofer is a Lansing Signature, D130, in a folded horn of 12 square feet mouth area and flat within 3db from 43 cycles to 600. Tweeter is also Lansing, a D175, with a special plywood horn to extend its low end down to 400 cycles to match the woofer. Its performance is within 3db to 17,000 cycles and also provides 90 degree distribution over this range.

This, however, is far from the whole story. The speaker is properly located in a hard corner of the dining room and is directed in to the living room through an outsize double door so big as to be really one room. The living room is offset slightly from the dining room and is well supplied with fireplace, furniture, rugs, drapes and general acoustic diffusion.

Another important ingredient is the fact that good music always improves with a second hearing. Although the Mozart numbers in the first half of the program are old they had never been done before here in Boston.

Another very important ingredient is one of the acoustical facts of life which has only been learned within the last five or 10 years. It has long been known that a large closely seated audience provides very high acoustic absorption. The recent discovery is that it has a drooping frequency response. As a member of such an audience you hear markedly less highs than you would if, for instance, you were to stand up so that your ears were a couple of feet above the heads of all the people around you. This is true if and only if the principal sound is coming toward you from a low angle such as from an orchestra on a stage which is only slightly above the audience.

High End Important

This effect can be corrected by skillful design of the ceiling of the auditorium. You make it a large sloping reflector which catches the music and bounces it down over the audience so that now the principal sound is coming from directly overhead. MIT's new Kresge Auditorium partakes of some of this.

If you want to holler at somebody who is last in the woods it doesn't matter much whether the high frequency response is good or bad. But if you want to understand every syllable of an important message, then the high end is very important. Most speech, and singing, intelligibility is carried by the highs and WGBH's microphone has been very skillfully placed and adjusted to catch all of them. As Archie couldn't help but notice, the microphone heard a lot more of them than he did sitting in the eighth row.

Further evidence that WGBH should receive the major portion of Archie's bouquets comes from the fact that he listens to many other programs both off the air and on records and yet is rarely thrilled as he consistently is by the WGBH-BSO combination.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will give the final concert of the Woolsey Hall series Tuesday at 8:30 p. m., is pictured above, in rehearsal with Charles Munch conducting.

Sunday Register
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 96,115
MAR 18 1956

MUSIC

Woolsey Series Ends With Boston Symphony

By GORDON E. ARMSTRONG

The Boston Symphony will be here on Tuesday evening at 8:30 to give the final concert of the Woolsey series. Charles Munch, now in his seventh year as the conductor of the celebrated orchestra, will be on the podium for this concert which signals the end of our major concert programs for this season. The New Haven Symphony Orchestra wound up its series with a Mozart Anniversary Concert last Tuesday evening and the Sprague Hall Chamber Music series ended on March 6 with a concert by the accomplished Hungarian Quartet.

In its final appearance here on Tuesday evening, the Boston Orchestra will make no concessions in its program to the current Mozart celebration. However, in its earlier Woolsey Hall concert last November, the program included Mozart's Masonic Funeral Music, a rarely heard work of the composer.

Listener interest in the Hub musicians' concert this week will center in a first hearing of the Symphony No. 11 by the Brazilian composer, Villa-Lobos. This new work is one of 15 orchestral compositions commissioned by the orchestra and the Serge Koussevitzky Music Foundation for the 75th anniversary of the Boston Symphony this season. Woolsey Hall listeners heard another of these commissioned works, Milhaud's Symphony No. 6, in the orchestra's previous concert this season. Other works to be heard on Tuesday evening include Tchaikovsky's "Romeo and Juliet" Overture-Fantasia and Beethoven's Symphony No. 7.

Last week the Boston Symphony made its first announcements concerning this year's Berkshire Music Festival, with particular reference to the orchestra's school there, the Berkshire Music Center. Among the highlights of scheduled student events this summer will be performances of several great choral and operatic works by the Festival Chorus with the orchestra. These are to include Bach's St. John's Passion, the Gloria from Mozart's Mass in C minor, and Wagner's Die Meistersinger, Act III. Goffredo Petrassi, one of Italy's foremost composers who was also commissioned to write a work for the orchestra's 75th anniversary, is to be a guest teacher of composition at the Berkshire Music Center this year.

At the conclusion of the coming Berkshire Musical Festival, the Boston Symphony will go abroad to participate in the Edinburgh Festival during the latter part of August. The Bostonians will give five concerts as a windup to the Festival and then go on to fill return engagements in London and Paris. It will be remembered that the celebrated orchestra made its first European tour in 1952. The coming trip across the Atlantic may possibly be extended to include concerts in as widely separated cities as Moscow and Israel.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J.
HOME NEWS
Circ. D. 32,120
MAR 19 1956

New Composition Scheduled In Boston Symphony Concert

A new composition written in honor of the Boston Symphony's 75th anniversary, will be the highlight of the concert Thursday when the Boston group, directed by Charles Munch, presents the fourth program in the Rutgers University Concert Series.

"Fantaisies symphoniques" by Martinu, and selections by Beethoven, Dvorak and de Falle, will comprise the program which will be presented in the College avenue gymnasium beginning at 8:30 p. m. Leonard Rose will be cello soloist.

Overture to "Coriolan", Op. 62 by Beethoven, will open the concert. It will be followed by Martinu's new work, a symphony in three movements. After intermision, Rose will join the Boston group in a presentation of Dvorak's Concerto for Violoncello, in B minor, Op. 104. Dances from "The Three Cornered Hat" by de Falle will conclude the program.

Martinu's symphony is one of fifteen new works which the Boston orchestra will present for the first time this season. In line with the orchestra's introduction - of - new works policy and in commemoration of the anniversary, they were jointly commisioned by the orchestra, Munch and the Serge Koussevitzky Music Foundation.

Since its founding in 1881 by Henry Lee Higginson, the Boston Symphony has been famed for the role it has played in the offering of new works. Under Serge Koussevitsky, conductor for 25 years, and Munch, the present director, the orchestra has shown a continued interest in new music and in the past five years its repertoire has included almost 30 premieres.

The Boston Symphony made its Rutgers debut in 1935 and has since been an annual feature of the University concert program. Although many famous stars and musical groups have performed at Rutgers, the Boston orchestra has attracted the largest concert series audiences.

On April 23 the series will present as its final offering the Mozarteum Orchestra from Salzburg, under the baton of Ernst Marzendorfer. Emmy Loose, soprano, Richard Holm, tenor, and Walter Barylli, violinist, will be soloists. This program will be part of the world-wide celebration of Mozart's 200th anniversary.

Courant (m)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Republican
Circ. 86,944
MAR 20 1956

'Stormy Weather' Isn't In Symphony Repertoire

Nero fiddled while Rome burned, but the Boston Symphony Orchestra thought twice about playing at the Bushnell Memorial Monday night.

Instead, Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the orchestra, called the Bushnell Monday morning and postponed the concert which was to have closed the Memorial's Symphony Series.

The chances of the orchestra personnel and carload of instruments getting through to Hartford in the midst of the heavy snowstorm seemed no bigger than a one-bar rest, he said in effect.

Francis L. Quinlan, assistant manager of Bushnell, said that the auditorium immediately began negotiations for a new date for the concert, suggesting April 4. The Boston orchestra has yet to confirm the proposal.

The Bushnell, searching its memory, could not recall any previous season in its 26 years existence when it had had to cancel a Symphony Series concert. This year, however, weather postponed not only the closing program set for Wednesday night, but also the first concert in the series, which the New York Philharmonic was to have played in October. Floods washed that event out.

Stopped By Assassinotion

On the October occasion, the New York Philharmonic said that in its more-than-a-hundred-years history, it had canceled only two concerts, one on the death of a conductor, and the other one the day President Lincoln was assassinated.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Republican (m)
WATERBURY, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 21,295
MAR 20 1956

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,872
MAR 20 1956

Movies and Breakfast Food —

1-56

Union Leader (m)
MANCHESTER, N. H.
Independent
Circ. 43,546
MAR 20 1956

Boston Symphony Cancels Concert Trip

BOSTON — (UP)—The Boston Symphony orchestra yesterday canceled a scheduled concert for the third time in its 75-year history because of a storm - caused transportation tieup.

Last night's concert at Hartford, Conn., was called off. But orchestra officials said they will try to make it up later. The symphony will try to meet an engagement in New Haven tonight.

The Boston Symphony was forced into its first cancellation by the famous blizzard of 1888 when it was marooned in Connecticut en route to New York.

The second cancellation came on Lincoln's birthday in February, 1946, when Mayor William O'Dwyer ordered all New York City public halls closed to save fuel during a longshoremen's walkout.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Republican
Circ. 55,423
MAR 20 1956

Munch Plans Choral Work By J. S. Bach

When the Boston Symphony Orchestra returns from its trip to New York, Charles Much will revive one of his former customs of conducting one of the Bach Passions during the Easter season. This year he has chosen the "Passion According to St. John," scheduled for Thursday afternoon, March 29 (rather than Friday afternoon, as usual), and Saturday evening, March 31.

The Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, trained by their conductor, G. Wallace Woodworth, will assist. The soloists will be Adele Addison, soprano, Betty Allen, contralto, David Lloyd, tenor, and Mac Morgan and James Joyce, basses.

An extra open rehearsal in advance of these concerts will be held Wednesday evening, March 28. Tickets for this rehearsal, which will begin at 7:30, are on sale at the box office.

* * *

1956-57 Celebrity Series

The 1956-57 Celebrity Series, to be presented by Aaron Richmond next season under the auspices of Boston University, will be as follows:

Royal Danish Ballet, a company of 130, week of Oct. 2.

Berlin Philharmonic, Herbert von Karajan conducting, Sunday evening, Oct. 14.

Adele Addison, soprano, Sunday afternoon, Oct. 21.

New York City Opera Company, beginning Oct. 31.

Michael Rabin, violinist, Sunday afternoon, Nov. 11.

Elisabeth Schwarzkopf, soprano, Sunday afternoon, Nov. 18.

Leon Fleisher, pianist, Sunday afternoon, Nov. 25.

Budapest Quartet, Wednesday evening, Nov. 28.

Vienna Philharmonic, André Cluytens conducting, Sunday evening, Dec. 2.

Golden Age Singers, Sunday afternoon, Dec. 9.

Solomon, pianist, Sunday afternoon, Jan. 13.

Destiné and his Haitian Dancers, Friday and Saturday evenings, Jan. 25-26.

Renata Tebaldi, soprano, Sunday afternoon, Feb. 3.

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,872
MAR 20 1956

Symphony Cancellation

By the Associated Press

Yesterday's storm forced the cancellation of a Boston Symphony Orchestra concert last night at Hartford, Conn.—the third cancellation in the orchestra's 75-year history.

News of the cancellation arrived before the orchestra personnel — Charles Munch, 101 men, and two women—boarded a train in Boston. They were notified that departure had been postponed 24 hours.

The first cancellation in the symphony's history was occasioned by the blizzard of 1888, when the orchestra was marooned en route to New York. The second occurred in February, 1946, when Mayor William O'Dwyer closed public auditoriums in New York to conserve fuel during a waterfront strike.

Quartetto Italiano, Wednesday evening, Feb. 13.

Artur Rubinstein, pianist, Sunday afternoon, Feb. 24.

Gerald Moore, pianist, Sunday afternoon, March 3.

Eileen Farrell and the Bach Aria Group, Sunday afternoon, March 17.

Rudolf Firkusny, pianist, Sunday afternoon, March 24.

Current subscribers will have the opportunity to renew their present seat locations or to improve them until April 5. New applications are being received at 143 Newbury Street, Boston.

* * *

Symphony Fri.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give its final concert of the season at the Brooklyn Academy of Music next Friday evening, March 23, at 8:30 o'clock. Charles Munch, music director, will conduct. A feature of the evening will be the performance of Bohuslav Martinu's latest symphony, his sixth, "Fantaisies Symphoniques," which was composed for the 75th anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Another feature of the program will be the appearance of Leonard Rose as soloist in Concerto for Violoncello and Orchestra in B minor by Dvorak. The evening will pone with Bethoven's Overture to "Coriolan" and will close with Wagner's Prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg."

Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 48,629
MAR 20 1956

Third in History

Boston — (UP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday canceled a scheduled concert for the third time in its 75-year history because of a storm-caused transportation tieup.

Last night's concert at Hartford, Conn., was called off

The Boston Symphony was forced into its first cancellation by the famous blizzard of 1888. The second cancellation came in February, 1946, when Mayor William O'Dwyer ordered all New York City public halls closed to save fuel during a longshoremen's walkout.

Storm Forces Cancellation Of Concert

Boston, March 19—(AP)—Today's heavy storm forced cancellation of a Boston Symphony Orchestra concert tonight at Hartford, Conn.—the third cancellation in the orchestra's 75-year history.

Eight tons of baggage had been shipped to Hartford after Saturday night's concert here. Orchestra officials were not sure whether it had been moved from the railroad station to the concert hall; if so, it must be loaded again for New Haven.

News of the cancellation arrived before the orchestra personnel—Conductor Charles Munch, 101 men and two women—boarded a train here. They were notified that departure had been postponed 24 hours.

Barring unforeseen complications, the orchestra will play Tuesday night at New Haven, Wednesday at New York, Thursday at New Brunswick, N. J., Friday in Brooklyn, N. Y., and Saturday back in New York.

The first cancellation in the symphony's history was occasioned by the famed blizzard of 1888, when the orchestra was marooned en route to New York. The second occurred in February, 1946, when Mayor William O'Dwyer closed public auditoriums in New York to conserve fuel because of a waterfront strike.

O'Dwyer's ban was lifted before the date of the concert but too late to reinstate arrangements.

Boston Symphony Cancels 3rd Concert in 75 Years

BOSTON (AP)— Yesterday's heavy storm forced cancellation of a Boston Symphony Orchestra concert last night at Hartford, Conn. — The third cancellation in the orchestra's 75-year history.

Eight tons of baggage had been shipped to Hartford after Saturday night's concert here. Orchestra officials were not sure whether it had been moved from the railroad station to the concert hall, if so, it must be loaded again for New Haven, Conn.

News of the cancellation arrived before the orchestra personnel — Conductor Charles Munch, 101 men and two women — boarded a train here. They were notified that departure had been postponed 24 hours.

Barring unforeseen complications, the orchestra will play tonight at New Haven, tomorrow at New York, Thursday at New Brunswick, N. J., Friday in Brooklyn, N. Y., and Saturday back in New York.

The first cancellation in the Symphony's history was occasioned by the famed Blizzard of 1888, when the orchestra was marooned en route to New York. The second occurred in February, 1946, when Mayor William O'Dwyer closed public auditoriums in New York to conserve fuel because of a waterfront strike.

PLAINFIELD, N. J.
COURIER-NEWS
Circ. D. 29,985
MAR 19 1956

Boston Symphony To Play New Work

New Brunswick—A new composition written in honor of the Boston Symphony's 75th anniversary, will be the highlight of the concert Thursday evening, when the Boston group, directed by Charles Munch, presents the fourth program in the Rutgers University Concert Series.

"Fantaisies symphoniques" by Martinu, and selections by Beethoven, Dvorak and de Falle, will comprise the program which will be presented in the College Ave. gymnasium beginning at 8:30 p.m. Leonard Rose will be cello soloist.

25

New Composition Scheduled In B — Drama on Disks — Concerts in Prospect

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J.
HOME NEWS
Circ. D. 32,120

MAR 19 1956

A new composition written in honor of the Boston Symphony's 75th anniversary, will be the highlight of the concert Thursday when the Boston group, directed by Charles Munch, presents the fourth program in the Rutgers University Concert Series.

"Fantaisies symphoniques" by Martinu, and selections by Beethoven, Dvorak and de Falle, will comprise the program which will be presented in the College avenue gymnasium beginning at 8:30 p. m. Leonard Rose will be cello soloist.

Overture to "Coriolan", Op. 62 by Beethoven, will open the concert. It will be followed by Martinu's new work, a symphony in three movements. After intermision, Rose will join the Boston group in a presentation of Dvorak's Concerto for Violoncello. in B minor, Op. 104. Dances from "The Three Cornered Hat" by de Falle will conclude the program.

Martinu's symphony is one of fifteen new works which the Boston orchestra will present for the first time this season. In line with the orchestra's introduction - of - new works policy and in commemoration of the anniversary, they were jointly commisioned by the orches-

Since its founding in 1881 by Henry Lee Higginson, the Boston Symphony has been famed for the role it has played in the offering of new works. Under Serge Koussevitsky, conductor for 25 years, and Munch, the present director, the orchestra has shown a continued interest in new music and in the past five years its repertoire has included almost 30 premieres.

The Boston Symphony made its Rutgers debut in 1935 and has since been an annual feature of the University concert program. Although many famous stars and musical groups have performed at Rutgers, the Boston orchestra has attracted the largest concert series audiences.

On April 23 the series will present as its final offering the Mozarteum Orchestra from Salzburg, under the baton of Ernst Marzendorfer. Emmy Loose, soprano, Richard Holm, tenor, and Walter Barylli, violinist, will be soloists. This program will be part of the world-wide celebration of Mozart's 200th anniversary.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,872

MAR 20 1956

1-56

Union Leader (m)
MANCHESTER, N. H.
Independent
Circ. 43,546

MAR 20 1956

Boston Symphony Cancels Concert Trip

BOSTON — (UP)—The Boston Symphony orchestra yesterday canceled a scheduled concert for the third time in its 75-year history because of a storm - caused transportation tieup.

Last night's concert at Hartford, Conn., was called off. But orchestra officials said they will try to make it up later. The symphony will try to meet an engagement in New Haven tonight.

The Boston Symphony was forced into its first cancellation by the famous blizzard of 1888 when it was marooned in Connecticut en route to New York.

The second cancellation came on Lincoln's birthday in February, 1946, when Mayor William O'Dwyer ordered all New York City public halls closed to save fuel during a longshoremen's walkout.

Munch Plans Choral Work By J. S. Bach

When the Boston Symphony Orchestra returns from its trip to New York, Charles Much will revive one of his former customs of conducting one of the Bach Passions during the Easter season. This year he has chosen the "Passion According to St. John," scheduled for Thursday afternoon, March 29 (rather than Friday afternoon, as usual), and Saturday evening, March 31.

The Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, trained by their conductor, G. Wallace Woodworth, will assist. The soloists will be Adele Addison, soprano, Betty Allen, contralto, David Lloyd, tenor, and Mac Morgan and James Joyce, basses.

An extra open rehearsal in advance of these concerts will be held Wednesday evening, March 28.

Saturday night had one of his worst nights, scoring only three points on one of four field goal attempts and a foul conversion. Sharman was the victim of some great defensive work on the part of the Nats' Capt. Paul Seymour. The Syracuse sparkplug pressed the Celtics sharpshooter all over the court and as a result Bill was forced to hurry his shots. He connected on only three of 12, plus two foul conversions.

Cousy tried to take up the slack but couldn't do it alone, although he was at his brilliant best, as he usually is in playoff competition, netting 28 points on nine of 18 field goals and 10 day afternoon, Oct. 21.

New York City Opera Company, beginning Oct. 31.

Michael Rabin, violinist, Sunday afternoon, Nov. 11.

Elisabeth Schwarzkopf, soprano, Sunday afternoon, Nov. 18.

Leon Fleisher, pianist, Sunday afternoon, Nov. 25.

Budapest Quartet, Wednesday evening, Nov. 28.

Vienna Philharmonic, André Cluytens conducting, Sunday evening, Dec. 2.

Golden Age Singers, Sunday afternoon, Dec. 9.

Solomon, pianist, Sunday afternoon, Jan. 13.

Destiné and his Haitian Dancers, Friday and Saturday evenings, Jan. 25-26.

Renata Tebaldi, soprano, Sunday afternoon, Feb. 3.

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,872

MAR 20 1956

Symphony Cancellation

By the Associated Press

Yesterday's storm forced the cancellation of a Boston Symphony Orchestra concert last night at Hartford, Conn.—the third cancellation in the orchestra's 75-year history.

News of the cancellation arrived before the orchestra personnel — Charles Munch, 101 men, and two women—boarded a train in Boston. They were notified that departure had been postponed 24 hours.

The first cancellation in the symphony's history was occasioned by the blizzard of 1888, when the orchestra was marooned en route to New York. The second occurred in February, 1946, when Mayor William O'Dwyer closed public auditoriums in New York to conserve fuel because of a waterfront strike.

Courant (m)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Republican
Circ. 86,944

MAR 20 1956

'Stormy Weather' Isn't In Symphony Repertoire

Nero fiddled while Rome burned, but the Boston Symphony Orchestra thought twice about playing at the Bushnell Memorial Monday night.

Instead, Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the orchestra, called the Bushnell Monday morning and postponed the concert which was to have closed the Memorial's Symphony Series.

The chances of the orchestra personnel and carload of instruments getting through to Hartford in the midst of the heavy snowstorm seemed no bigger than a one-bar rest, he said in effect.

Francis L. Quinlan, assistant manager of Bushnell, said that the auditorium immediately began negotiations for a new date for the concert, suggesting April 4. The Boston orchestra has yet to confirm the proposal.

The Bushnell, searching its memory, could not recall any previous season in its 26 years existence when it had had to cancel a Symphony Series concert. This year, however, weather postponed not only the closing program set for Wednesday night, but also the first concert in the series, which the New York Philharmonic was to have played in October. Floods washed that event out.

Stopped By Assassination

On the October occasion, the New York Philharmonic said that in its more-than-a-hundred-years history, it had canceled only two concerts, one on the death of a conductor, and the other one the day President Lincoln was assassinated.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Republican (m)
WATERBURY, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 21,295

MAR 20 1956

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Republican
Circ. 55,423

MAR 20 1956

NEW YORK, N. Y.
DAILY WORKER

MAR 20 1956

Final Concert of Boston Symphony Fri.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give its final concert of the season at the Brooklyn Academy of Music next Friday evening, March 23, at 8:30 o'clock. Charles Munch, music director, will conduct. A feature of the evening will be the performance of Bohuslav Martinu's latest symphony, his sixth, "Fantaisies Symphoniques," which was composed for the 75th anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Another feature of the program will be the appearance of Leonard Rose as soloist in Concerto for Violoncello and Orchestra in B minor by Dvorak. The evening will pone with Bethoven's Overture to "Coriolan" and will close with Wagner's Prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg."

Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 48,629

MAR 20 1956

Third in History

Boston — (UP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday canceled a scheduled concert for the third time in its 75-year history because of a storm-caused transportation tieup.

Last night's concert at Hartford, Conn., was called off

The Boston Symphony was forced into its first cancellation by the famous blizzard of 1888. The second cancellation came in February, 1946, when Mayor William O'Dwyer ordered all New York City public halls closed to save fuel during a longshoremen's walkout.

Storm Forces Cancellation Of Concert

Boston, March 19—(AP)—Today's heavy storm forced cancellation of a Boston Symphony Orchestra concert tonight at Hartford, Conn.—the third cancellation in the orchestra's 75-year history.

Eight tons of baggage had been shipped to Hartford after Saturday night's concert here. Orchestra officials were not sure whether it had been moved from the railroad station to the concert hall; if so, it must be loaded again for New Haven.

News of the cancellation arrived before the orchestra personnel—Conductor Charles Munch, 101 men and two women—boarded a train here. They were notified that departure had been postponed 24 hours.

Barring unforeseen complications, the orchestra will play Tuesday night at New Haven, Wednesday at New York, Thursday at New Brunswick, N. J., Friday in Brooklyn, N. Y., and Saturday back in New York.

The first cancellation in the symphony's history was occasioned by the famed blizzard of 1888, when the orchestra was marooned en route to New York. The second occurred in February, 1946, when Mayor William O'Dwyer closed public auditoriums in New York to conserve fuel because of a waterfront strike.

O'Dwyer's ban was lifted before the date of the concert but too late to reinstate arrangements.

Boston Symphony Cancels 3rd Concert in 75 Years

BOSTON (AP)— Yesterday's heavy storm forced cancellation of a Boston Symphony Orchestra concert last night at Hartford, Conn. — The third cancellation in the orchestra's 75-year history.

Eight tons of baggage had been shipped to Hartford after Saturday night's concert here. Orchestra officials were not sure whether it had been moved from the railroad station to the concert hall, if so, it must be loaded again for New Haven, Conn.

News of the cancellation arrived before the orchestra personnel — Conductor Charles Munch, 101 men and two women — boarded a train here. They were notified that departure had been postponed 24 hours.

Barring unforeseen complications, the orchestra will play tonight at New Haven, tomorrow at New York, Thursday at New Brunswick, N. J., Friday in Brooklyn, N. Y., and Saturday back in New York.

The first cancellation in the Symphony's history was occasioned by the famed Blizzard of 1888, when the orchestra was marooned en route to New York. The second occurred in February, 1946, when Mayor William O'Dwyer closed public auditoriums in New York to conserve fuel because of a waterfront strike.

PLAINFIELD, N. J.
COURIER-NEWS
Circ. D. 29,985

MAR 19 1956

Boston Symphony To Play New Work

New Brunswick—A new composition written in honor of the Boston Symphony's 75th anniversary, will be the highlight of the concert Thursday evening, when the Boston group, directed by Charles Munch, presents the fourth program in the Rutgers University Concert Series.

"Fantaisies symphoniques" by Martinu, and selections by Beethoven, Dvorak and de Falle, will comprise the program which will be presented in the College Ave. gymnasium beginning at 8:30 p.m. Leonard Rose will be cello soloist.

BALTIMORE, MD.
EVENING SUN
Circ. D. 200,797
MAR 20 1956

The Week's Music

By George Kent Bellows

Three visiting orchestras will give concerts in Baltimore during the week, while on Saturday night, the Baltimore Symphony will play the last of its pop concerts, with Herbert Grossman as the guest conductor.

The first of two events for tonight will be the annual Festival of Synagogue Music of the Chizuk Amuno Congregation, which this year will stress the music of conservative Judaism.

The Congregation's Choral Society will be under the direction of Hugo Weisgall, and the guest soloist will be Raymond Smolover, who recently founded the Westchester Opera Theater.

Composers Listed

Musical compositions will include those of the Viennese Cantor, Solomon Sulzer and the Parisian, Edward Naumbourg, as well as the great German Jewish composer, Louis Lewandowski.

In addition, some of the more important music of the "Choir Synagogues" of Odessa, Kiev, and Wilner will be presented, with a final group of music which has been created for the Conservative Synagogue in America.

The second event scheduled for tonight is the last concert of the National Symphony Orchestra at the Lyric, with Leonard Bernstein as the guest conductor and piano soloist.

The program:

Overture to "The Magic Flute" . Mozart
Concerto No. 17, in G Minor, for Piano and Orchestra . . . . . Mozart
Symphony No. 5, in B flat Major, Prokofieff

Mr. Bernstein frequently appears in the dual role of conductor-pianist, harking back to the tradition of another century when the composer or soloist led the orchestra from the keyboard.

Mr. Bernstein is one of America's most versatile younger musicians, whose ballet and Broadway scores are as well-known as his reputation as a pianist and composer.

Herbert Grossman, talented young American conductor who is on the staff of both NBC's TV Opera and the New York City Opera, will be in charge of the Baltimore Symphony's last Pop concert at 8.30 P.M. Saturday.

Mr. Grossman

Mr. Grossman has chosen an all-Gershwin program, and of especial interest will be the appearance of one of the city's popular pianists, Frederick Griesinger.

The complete program and soloists:

Cuban Overture
Three Preludes
Rhapsody In Blue
—Frederick Griesinger, pianist
Strike Up The Band
Embraceable You
'S Wonderful
Selections from "Porgy and Bess"
I Got Plenty O' Nuttin'
My Man's Gone Now
It Ain't Necessarily So
Summertime
Bess, You Is My Woman Now
—Mathilde Sarrand, soprano
—Jack Russell, baritone
An American In Paris

The Philadelphia Orchestra under Eugene Ormandy will give the seventh of its concerts at the Lyric at 8.30 P.M. Wednesday, and because of the illness of Zino Francescatti, violinist, Mr. Ormandy has substituted Brahms's Second Symphony.

The complete program:

Credendum . . . . . William Schuman
(First performance in Baltimore)
(Commissioned by UNESCO)
Symphony No. 7, in C Major . . Sibelius
(Commemorating the ninetieth birthday of the composer)
Symphony No. 2, in D Major . . . Brahms

The Boston Pops Tour Orchestra conducted by Arthur Fiedler, will give a concert at 8.30 Thursday night at the Lyric.

Now on its third American tour, the Boston Pops will play:

Polonaise from "Eugene Onegin," . Tchaikovsky
Overture to "The Barber of Seville," Rossini
Fantasia on "Greensleeves," Vaughan Williams
Suite from "Graduation Ball," Strauss
Intermission
Rhapsody on a Theme of Paganini, Rachmaninoff
for Piano and Orchestra
Ruth Slenczynska
"The Sorcerer's Apprentice" . . . . Dukas
Intermission
Popsorama . . . . . arranged by Mason
On the Trail, from
'Grand Canyon Suite" . . . . . Grofe
Look Sharp—Be Sharp, Merrick-Bennett

DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS
Circ. D. 190,894 - S. 197,563
MAR 20 1956

Ormandy, Munch Trading Podiums

Special to The News

PHILADELPHIA, Pa.—Next season the orchestras of Philadelphia and Boston will swap conductors, Eugene Ormandy and Charles Munch respectively.

Each will conduct the other's orchestra at a pair of concerts March 1 and 2. The arrangement is described as the first exchange of conductors ever made between two of the country's major symphony orchestras.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 196,593
MAR 21 1956

Easter Entertainment Offers Many Attractions

By VIRGINIA BOHLIN

Easter and its ensuing week of entertainment is just around the corner now that spring has arrived officially — despite snow drifts.

For movie goers there's several big treats in store, including the New England premiere of "The Man In The Gray Flannel Suit." Twentieth-Century-Fox's screen version of Sloan Wilson's best-selling novel opens Friday, March 30, at the Metropolitan Theatre.

This revealing story of mid-20th century society casts Gregory Peck in the role of a man with struggles in his change to civvies from a paratrooper's uniform.

Jennifer Jones is his wife, Betsy. Fredric March is the tycoon who gives Peck a $10,000 a year job in return for white-collar-slavery.

Marisa Pavan plays the winsome Italian girl with whom Peck had an affair during the war. Ann Harding and Gigi Perreau appear as neglected wife and daughter of money-making March.

Another happy Easter package is "Anything Goes," Paramount's musical extravaganza starring Bing Crosby, Donal O'Connor, Jeanmaire, Mitzi Gaynor and Phil Harris. It opens week from tomorrow at th Paramount and Fenway Theatres.

Six of Cole Porter's greates song hits are included in this tale of two musical comedy stars who comb Europe for a leading lady. A merry mix-up follows when they sign two girls for the same role.

An Easter week attraction on Boston's theatre scene will be the April 2 opening of "The Teahouse of the August Moon," at the Colonial.

The prize-winning comedy comes to Boston after a record-breaking run in New York.

The 1,027 performances on Broadway grossed $4,052,407.19. It established both a money and longevity record for the Martin Beck Theatre which has housed some of Broadway's greatest stage successes.

In contrast, on the serious side will be the presentation by Conductor Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra of Bach's "Passion According to Saint John" during the Holy Week.

It will be performed a week from tomorrow afternoon, Holy Thursday, and Saturday evening, March 31.

Assisting will be the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society with G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor. Soloists will be Adele Addison, Betty Allen, David Lloyd, Mac Moran and James Joyce.

Journal-Courier (m)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 22,107
MAR 21 1956

Last Night's Concert

by F. R. J.

Woolsey Hall Series Conclude With Brilliant Concert

The current series of Woolsey Hall Concerts concluded in brilliant fashion last night with the second appearance her of the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Charles Munch conducting.

Always an exciting event, last night's program, brought out an audience that very nearly filled the hall to capacity. Unfortunately, the icy payments and difficult parking facilities, made some 200 people late. It was the largest number to have missed an entire first part of a Woolsey program. In this case it was the delightfully romantic "Romeo and Juliet," overture by Tchaikovsky, a lovely fanciful work, given exquisite coloring by Munch and his men.

The Villa-Lobos Symphony No. 11 was commissioned in celebration of the 75th anniversary of the Boston Symphony and received its first performance in Boston on the second of this month. It is of heroic proportions, with the second movement having a strangely weird section for the winds, followed by a beautiful solo by the first violin. Each of the four movements had a most spectacular ending, a musical flourish that perhaps emphasized the brilliant performances of the orchestra through the years, a sharp accent of victory.

Munch apparently enjoyed conducting this new addition to his repertoire and frequently smiled and nodded to his men as they proceeded with the intricate harmonies and decisive themes of the new wrork which is dedicated to the memory of Serge and Natalie Koussevitzky.

The concert's second half was devoted to the music of Beethoven; his Symphony No. 7 in A major, thrilling the audience as the grandeur of the work unfolded. The beautiful second movement with its enchanting rhythmic motif, followed by the brisk third movement and the furious pace of the fourth and final movement, moved the audience to exhibit an intensely enthusiastic reaction, with applause and calls and a standing ovation for the brilliant man and his fine musical organization.

As wonderful as it is to listen to the Boston Symphony, it is no less a treat to watch Charles Munch direct his orchestra. And there is something special in the manner in which he first bows to his men, thanking them for a job well done, before he turns to the audience to acknowledge the tumult of applause. New Haven is indeed fortunate to hear this extraordinary musical organization twice each year.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
POST
Circ. D. 372,583 - S. 247,755
MAR 22 1956

WORDS and MUSIC

By Harriett Johnson

Munch Leads Villa-Lobos at Carnegie

The audacious, dynamic Villa-Lobos was represented on last night's concert of the Boston Symphony in Carnegie Hall by a new symphony, listed as No. 11. In four movements, the work was commissioned by the Bostonians in celebration of the ensemble's 75th season, and is dedicated to the memory of Serge and Natalie Koussevitzky. It was completed in 1955, and this was its first New York performance.

The Brazilian combines an energetic, adventurous personality with a prolific creative gift. He is immensely versatile, musical and otherwise. Though he has written a mountain of music, his symphonies are little known, and are played more infrequently than his compositions, which are more closely related to Brazilian folk idioms, such as the 12 "Choros" and the Seven "Bachianas Brasileiras."

The current symphony is not long, as such works go, but it is more tightly knit architecturally than he has manifested with similar pieces. There were interesting ideas, especially in the first two movements, developed with cohesion and a spontaneous, if unconventional, sense of building. The scherzo is short and not too impressive, while the final "molto allegro" whirls along at top speed toward a brilliant conclusion. The orchestration was, as usual with Villa-Lobos, picturesque, even bizarre; but attractively so.

Charles Munch, who conducted the concert, performed the work superbly, giving it a dramatic flair which brought the primitive, uninhibited quality, inherent in this composer's style, right to the fore. The music did not sound profound but was often exciting, which is to say, probably, that it sounded, under the ebullient Frenchman's direction, its best.

The concert closed with a vividly joyous performance of Beethoven's Seventh Symphony which, in this type of interpretation, illustrated Wagner's description of the piece as "The apotheosis of the dance."

Munch and his impressive ensemble play tomorrow night at the Brooklyn Academy of Music and Saturday afternoon in Carnegie Hall. At both of these concerts, Leonard Rose, cellist, will play the Concerto in B Minor by Dvorak. The Martinu "Fantaisies Symphoniques," which won the Music Critics' Circle Award for 1955 as the best new orchestral work played here, will also be performed on both occasions.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
Circ. D. 526,215 - S. 1,146,860
MAR 18 1956

IDENTITY

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, New York Philharmonic-Symphony and Arturo Toscanini have given R. C. A. Victor permission to use their names in connection with reissue of their records on the company's Camden label.

Recordings by the Boston orchestra, under the direction of the late Serge Koussevitzky, have heretofore been identified as made by the "Centennial Symphony."

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
Brooklyn Heights Press
Circ. W. 1,600
MAR 22 1956

Boston Symphony in Final Concert at Academy Fri.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give its final concert of the season at the Brooklyn Academy of Music next Friday evening, March 23, at 8:30 o'clock. Charles Munch, music director, will conduct. A feature of the evening will be the performance of Bohuslav Martinu's latest symphony, his sixth, "Fantaisies Symphoniques," which was composed for the 75th anniversary of the Boston Symphony.

Another feature of the program will be the appearance of Leonard Rose as soloist in the Concerto for Violoncello and Orchestra in B minor by Dvorak. The evening will open with Beethoven's Overture to "Coriolan" and will close with Wagner's Prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg."

VARIETY
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MAR 21 1956

Pops Orch Readies Fifth Trek in 260G/275G Tour

The Boston Pops Tour Orchestra, under Arthur Fiedler, has been set for its fifth U. S. tour by the Judson, O'Neill & Judd diviison of Columbia Artists Mgt. Unit will tour 10 weeks, in January-March, 1957, for 65 dates from Florida and Texas to Canada, paying its first visit to eastern Canada. Tour should bring in from $260,000 to $275,000.

The Pops is winding up its fourth tour Saturday (24) in White Plains, N. Y., when it will have done 82 dates over a 12-week period since January. Group went as far as the Coast for the first time. It has established itself as a regular annual concert attraction, with a number of repeat dates pointing to its consistency of appeal. It sells between $4,000 and $4,500.

Pops $7,000, Omaha

Omaha, March 20.

Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops Orch grossed a handsome $7,000 at the new City Aud Music Hall last Wednesday (14). The 2,610-seater, at $1.80-$3.85 scale, was three-quarters capacity.

It was the third straight year for Fiedler here, for promoter Dick Walter, and he's proved a money-maker every time.

BALTIMORE, MD.
EVENING SUN
Circ. D. 200,797
MAR 20 1956

The Week's Music

By George Kent Bellows

Three visiting orchestras will give concerts in Baltimore during the week, while on Saturday night, the Baltimore Symphony will play the last of its pop concerts, with Herbert Grossman as the guest conductor.

The first of two events for tonight will be the annual Festival of Synagogue Music of the Chizuk Amuno Congregation, which this year will stress the music of conservative Judaism.

The Congregation's Choral Society will be under the direction of Hugo Weisgall, and the guest soloist will be Raymond Smolover, who recently founded the Westchester Opera Theater.

Composers Listed

Musical compositions will include those of the Viennese Cantor, Solomon Sulzer and the Parisian, Edward Naumbourg, as well as the great German Jewish composer, Louis Lewandowski.

In addition, some of the more important music of the "Choir Synagogues" of Odessa, Kiev, and Wilner will be presented, with a final group of music which has been created for the Conservative Synagogue in America.

The second event scheduled for tonight is the last concert of the National Symphony Orchestra at the Lyric, with Leonard Bernstein as the guest conductor and piano soloist.

The program:

Overture to "The Magic Flute" Mozart
Concerto No. 17, in G Minor, for Piano and Orchestra ..... Mozart
Symphony No. 5, in B flat Major, Prokofieff

Mr. Bernstein frequently appears in the dual role of conductor-pianist, harking back to the tradition of another century when the composer or soloist led the orchestra from the keyboard.

Mr. Bernstein is one of America's most versatile younger musicians, whose ballet and Broadway scores are as well-known as his reputation as a pianist and composer.

Herbert Grossman, talented young American conductor who is on the staff of both NBC's TV Opera and the New York City Opera, will be in charge of the Baltimore Symphony's last Pop concert at 8.30 P.M. Saturday.

Mr. Grossman

Mr. Grossman has chosen an all-Gershwin program, and of especial interest will be the appearance of one of the city's popular pianists, Frederick Griesinger.

The complete program and soloists:

Cuban Overture
Three Preludes
Rhapsody In Blue
—Frederick Griesinger, pianist
Strike Up The Band
Embraceable You
'S Wonderful
Selections from "Porgy and Bess"
I Got Plenty O' Nuttin'
My Man's Gone Now
It Ain't Necessarily So
Summertime
Bess, You Is My Woman Now
—Mathilde Sarrand, soprano
—Jack Russell, baritone
An American In Paris

The Philadelphia Orchestra under Eugene Ormandy will give the seventh of its concerts at the Lyric at 8.30 P.M. Wednesday, and because of the illness of Zino Francescatti, violinist, Mr. Ormandy has substituted Brahms's Second Symphony.

The complete program:

Credendum ..... William Schuman
(First performance in Baltimore)
(Commissioned by UNESCO)
Symphony No. 7, in C Major ... Sibelius
(Commemorating the ninetieth birthday of the composer)
Symphony No. 2, in D Major ... Brahms

The Boston Pops Tour Orchestra conducted by Arthur Fiedler, will give a concert at 8.30 Thursday night at the Lyric.

Now on its third American tour, the Boston Pops will play:

Polonaise from "Eugene Onegin," Tchaikovsky
Overture to "The Barber of Seville," Rossini
Fantasia on "Greensleeves," Vaughan Williams
Suite from "Graduation Ball," Strauss
Intermission
Rhapsody on a Theme of Paganini, Rachmaninoff
for Piano and Orchestra
Ruth Slenczynska
"The Sorcerer's Apprentice" .... Dukas
Intermission
Popsorama ..... arranged by Mason
On the Trail, from
'Grand Canyon Suite" ..... Grofe
Look Sharp—Be Sharp, Merrick-Bennett

DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS
Circ. D. 190,894 - S. 197,563
MAR 20 1956

Ormandy, Munch Trading Podiums

Special to The News

PHILADELPHIA, Pa.—Next season the orchestras of Philadelphia and Boston will swap conductors, Eugene Ormandy and Charles Munch respectively.

Each will conduct the other's orchestra at a pair of concerts March 1 and 2. The arrangement is described as the first exchange of conductors ever made between two of the country's major symphony orchestras.

New England N... Box 2078, Boston 6 - Richmond 2-4...
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 196,598
MAR 21 1956

Easter Entertainment Offers Many Attractions

By VIRGINIA BOHLIN

Easter and its ensuing week of entertainment is just around the corner now that spring has arrived officially—despite snow drifts.

For movie goers there's several big treats in store, including the New England premiere of "The Man In The Gray Flannel Suit." Twentieth-Century-Fox's screen version of Sloan Wilson's best-selling novel opens Friday, March 30, at the Metropolitan Theatre.

This revealing story of mid-20th century society casts Gregory Peck in the role of a man with struggles in his change to civvies from a paratrooper's uniform.

Jennifer Jones is his wife, Betsy. Fredric March is the tycoon who gives Peck a $10,000 a year job in return for white-collar-slavery.

Marisa Pavan plays the winsome Italian girl with whom Peck had an affair during the war. Ann Harding and Gigi Perreau appear as neglected wife and daughter of money-making March.

Another happy Easter package is "Anything Goes," Paramount's musical extravaganza starring Bing Crosby, Donald O'Connor, Jeanmaire, Mitzi Gaynor and Phil Harris. It opens a week from tomorrow at the Paramount and Fenway Theatres.

Six of Cole Porter's greatest song hits are included in this tale of two musical comedy stars who comb Europe for a leading lady. A merry mix-up follows when they sign two girls for the same role.

An Easter week attraction in Boston's theatre scene will be the April 2 opening of "The Teahouse of the August Moon," at the Colonial.

The prize-winning comedy comes to Boston after a record-breaking run in New York.

The 1,027 performances on Broadway grossed $4,052,407.19. It established both a money and longevity record for the Martin Beck Theatre which has housed some of Broadway's greatest stage successes.

In contrast, on the serious side will be the presentation by Conductor Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra of Bach's "Passion According to Saint John" during the Holy Week.

It will be performed a week from tomorrow afternoon, Holy Thursday, and Saturday evening, March 31.

Assisting will be the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society with G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor. Soloists will be Adele Addison, Betty Allen, David Lloyd, Mac Moran and James Joyce.

Journal-Courier (m)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 22,107
MAR 21 1956

Last Night's Concert

by F. R. J.

Woolsey Hall Series Conclude With Brilliant Concert

The current series of Woolsey Hall Concerts concluded in brilliant fashion last night with the second appearance her of the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Charles Munch conducting.

Always an exciting event, last night's program, brought out an audience that very nearly filled the hall to capacity. Unfortunately, the icy payments and difficult parking facilities, made some 200 people late. It was the largest number to have missed an entire first part of a Woolsey program. In this case it was the delightfully romantic "Romeo and Juliet," overture by Tchaikovsky, a lovely fanciful work, given exquisite coloring by Munch and his men.

The Villa-Lobos Symphony No. 11 was commissioned in celebration of the 75th anniversary of the Boston Symphony and received its first performance in Boston on the second of this month. It is of heroic proportions, with the second movement having a strangely weird section for the winds, followed by a beautiful solo by the first violin. Each of the four movements had a most spectacular ending, a musical flourish that perhaps emphasized the brilliant performances of the orchestra through the years, a sharp accent of victory.

Munch apparently enjoyed conducting this new addition to his repertoire and frequently smiled and nodded to his men as they proceeded with the intricate harmonies and decisive themes of the new wrork which is dedicated to the memory of Serge and Natalie Koussevitzky.

The concert's second half was devoted to the music of Beethoven; his Symphony No. 7 in A major, thrilling the audience as the grandeur of the work unfolded. The beautiful second movement with its enchanting rhythmic motif, followed by the brisk third movement and the furious pace of the fourth and final movement, moved the audience to exhibit an intensely enthusiastic reaction, with applause and calls and a standing ovation for the brilliant man and his fine musical organization.

As wonderful as it is to listen to the Boston Symphony, it is no less a treat to watch Charles Munch direct his orchestra. And there is something special in the manner in which he first bows to his men, thanking them for a job well done, before he turns to the audience to acknowledge the tumult of applause. New Haven is indeed fortunate to hear this extraordinary musical organization twice each year.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
POST
Circ. D. 372,583 - S. 247,755
MAR 22 1956

WORDS and MUSIC

By Harriett Johnson

Munch Leads Villa-Lobos at Carnegie

The audacious, dynamic Villa-Lobos was represented on last night's concert of the Boston Symphony in Carnegie Hall by a new symphony, listed as No. 11. In four movements, the work was commissioned by the Bostonians in celebration of the ensemble's 75th season, and is dedicated to the memory of Serge and Natalie Koussevitzky. It was completed in 1955, and this was its first New York performance.

The Brazilian combines an energetic, adventurous personality with a prolific creative gift. He is immensely versatile, musical and otherwise. Though he has written a mountain of music, his symphonies are little known, and are played more infrequently than his compositions, which are more closely related to Brazilian folk idioms, such as the 12 "Choros" and the Seven "Bachianas Brasileiras."

The current symphony is not long, as such works go, but it is more tightly knit architecturally than he has manifested with similar pieces. There were interesting ideas, especially in the first two movements, developed with cohesion and a spontaneous, if unconventional, sense of building. The scherzo is short and not too impressive, while the final "molto allegro" whirls along at top speed toward a brilliant conclusion. The orchestration was, as usual with Villa-Lobos, picturesque, even bizarre, but attractively so.

Charles Munch, who conducted the concert, performed the work superbly, giving it a dramatic flair which brought the primitive, uninhibited quality, inherent in this composer's style, right to the fore. The music did not sound profound but was often exciting, which is to say, probably, that it sounded, under the ebullient Frenchman's direction, its best.

The concert closed with a vividly joyous performance of Beethoven's Seventh Symphony which, in this type of interpretation, illustrated Wagner's description of the piece as "The apotheosis of the dance."

Munch and his impressive ensemble play tomorrow night at the Brooklyn Academy of Music and Saturday afternoon in Carnegie Hall. At both of these concerts, Leonard Rose, cellist, will play the Concerto in B Minor by Dvorak. The Martinu "Fantaisies Symphoniques," which won the Music Critics' Circle Award for 1955 as the best new orchestral work played here, will also be performed on both occasions.

VARIETY
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MAR 21 1956

Pops Orch Readies Fifth Trek in 260G/275G Tour

The Boston Pops Tour Orchestra, under Arthur Fiedler, has been set for its fifth U. S. tour by the Judson, O'Neill & Judd division of Columbia Artists Mgt. Unit will tour 10 weeks, in January-March, 1957, for 65 dates from Florida and Texas to Canada, paying its first visit to eastern Canada. Tour should bring in from $260,000 to $275,000.

The Pops is winding up its fourth tour Saturday (24) in White Plains, N. Y., when it will have done 82 dates over a 12-week period since January. Group went as far as the Coast for the first time. It has established itself as a regular annual concert attraction, with a number of repeat dates pointing to its consistency of appeal. It sells between $4,000 and $4,500.

Pops $7,000, Omaha

Omaha, March 20.

Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops Orch grossed a handsome $7,000 at the new City Aud Music Hall last Wednesday (14). The 2,610-seater, at $1.80-$3.85 scale, was three-quarters capacity.

It was the third straight year for Fiedler here, for promoter Dick Walter, and he's proved a money-maker every time.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
Circ. D. 526,215 - S. 1,146,860
MAR 18 1956

IDENTITY

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, New York Philharmonic-Symphony and Arturo Toscanini have given R. C. A. Victor permission to use their names in connection with reissue of their records on the company's Camden label.

Recordings by the Boston orchestra, under the direction of the late Serge Koussevitzky, have heretofore been identified as made by the "Centennial Symphony."

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
Brooklyn Heights Press
Circ. W. 1,600
MAR 22 1956

Boston Symphony in Final Concert at Academy Fri.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give its final concert of the season at the Brooklyn Academy of Music next Friday evening, March 23, at 8:30 o'clock. Charles Munch, music director, will conduct. A feature of the evening will be the performance of Bohuslav Martinu's latest symphony, his sixth, "Fantaisies Symphoniques," which was composed for the 75th anniversary of the Boston Symphony.

Another feature of the program will be the appearance of Leonard Rose as soloist in the Concerto for Violoncello and Orchestra in B minor by Dvorak. The evening will open with Beethoven's Overture to "Coriolan" and will close with Wagner's Prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg."

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
Circ. D. 526,215 - S. 1,146,860
MAR 22 1956

Music: New Symphony

Villa-Lobos' Eleventh Has Premiere Here

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Charles Munch conducting. At Carnegie Hall.
Romeo and Juliet Overture ..... Tchaikovsky
Symphony No. 11 (first New York performance) ..... Villa-Lobos
Symphony No. 7 ..... Beethoven

By HOWARD TAUBMAN

HEITOR VILLA - LOBOS, Brazil's best-known man of music, may well be the most prolific composer alive. His total output must be close to 2,000 pieces, and it is not surprising that his latest symphony, introduced to New York at Carnegie Hall last night, is his eleventh. Presumably there are ten predecessors, though one cannot recall hearing any of them in many years.

•

The Eleventh was played last night by the Boston Symphony under Charles Munch. This symphony is one of fifteen scores commissioned jointly by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and the Boston Symphony in observance of the orchestra's current seventy-fifth season. Seven of these pieces have now been heard in New York, and the others should be along next season.

The Villa-Lobos work is marked by its energy and luxuriant use of orchestral colors. The composer pitches in with enthusiasm and the expertness of a man who knows he can make use of the full orchestral apparatus. He is good at building up climaxes, and he knows how to bring a movement to an end decisively. In fact, a couple of the four movements close so precipitately that you wonder if the composer did not exclaim suddenly, "Enough of this movement, on to the next!"

Mr. Villa-Lobos once said, "I do not walk in company with routine." This symphony is clearly an effort at individual expression. But the uncomfortable fact must be recorded that its essential material is superficial, even banal, suitable for some popular medium, not for a symphony. Mr. Villa-Lobos' scoring generates sufficient excitement to make one forget that the work does not add up to much of a communication.

Mr. Villa-Lobos paid the Boston Symphony the compliment of providing all of its sections, and many of its soloists, with opportunities to show their virtuosity. They played the piece with brilliance under Mr. Munch's rousing direction.

•

The evening began with a dramatic reading of Tchaikovsky's "Romeo and Juliet" Overture-Fantasy. Mr. Munch, an intense man, poured a lot of feeling into this product of late romanticism. He and his orchestra ended the evening with a solid work, Beethoven's Seventh Symphony, whose Dionysian moods they know how to convey.

Heitor Villa-Lobos

Jean Hoerner Heard in Piano Recital

JEAN HOERNER, who last played here in 1951, gave a piano recital last night in Town Hall. She remains a very talented young artist, and her current playing is a decided notch above what one heard the last time around.

She still lacks sufficient differentiation in her musical approach, and played pieces by such early composers as Cimarosa, Haesler, Soler and Czerny with much the same force and romanticism that she applied to the Chopin B flat minor Sonata. But once she was past that opening group her playing took on stature and life.

•

In any case, it was an enterprising gesture to program those early composers in lieu of the usual Bach or Scarlatti. Several musical surprises were present. The Haesler Grand Gigue was amazingly Beethovenesque, and a Toccata by Czerny was reminiscent of a later and greater Toccata by Robert Schumann. Both are studies in double notes, and the Czerny, which one does not remember having heard in years, is extremely effective.

Miss Hoerner's poise and assurance stood her in good stead for the Chopin work. She has fine technical equipment, and she addressed herself to the music with considerable spirit. Somewhat marring the general good work was a too-heavy left hand, which thickened the bass to almost an unpleasant extent, and a tempo in the trio of the "Funeral March" that made a real cortège of it.

Nevertheless, this was a performance far more interesting and musical than one encounters among most pianists of Miss Hoerner's generation.

•

She also programmed a new work, Ludmila Ulehla's Sonata No. 2, a three-movement, twenty-minute work. Miss Ulehla, a New York composer and teacher, has composed a pianistically effective work that has its cyclic aspects, in that a prominent theme from the first movement is re-introduced toward the end of the finale.

The musical idiom is largely romantic and favors chromatic harmonies, with an occasional touch suggesting twentieth-century developments. A logical mind is at work in this sonata, but one could wish that its content were a little more original.

H. C. S.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
Circ. D. 653,252 - S. 982,681
MAR 22 1956

At Carnegie Hall:

Villa-Lobos' Symphony No. 7

By MILES KASTENDIECK

WHAT VILLA-LOBOS wrote for the Boston Symphony's 75th anniversary will add nothing to his reputation. The first N. Y. performance of his Symphony No. 11 in Carnegie Hall last night simply occupied time and kept the orchestra very busy. Charles Munch and his musicians played it handsomely, but to no avail.

Perhaps a lack of unity in style and in purpose contributed most to the generally ineffectual nature of the score. It actually sounded well because Villa-Lobos generates all kinds of interesting sounds.

When he finally went native, mostly in the finale, interest picked up. It had gone quite astray during a singularly empty scherzo.

That this music sounded as though written for the movies became a persistent impression. Through all four movements it was hard to escape.

Thanks to the beautifully played solos for the woodwinds and other orchestra resourcefulness, the performance was well worth the listening. The music almost became incidental.

Villa-Lobos' fertility persists. Like some other recent works, this one would profit from discipline. Its diffuseness robs it of inner strength.

The concert opened with Tchaikovsky's "Romeo and Juliet" and closed with Beethoven's Seventh Symphony. They were smoothly and strikingly played.

Bit Too Eager

Munch appeared a bit too eager to get through the Tchaikovsky and accelerated his tempo beyond a certain lushness befitting the score. Though he lost the impact of the culminating point, he made the final pages most effective.

Except for the trumpets the first movement of the Beethoven sounded beautifully balanced. It set the keynote for the whole interpretation which had bits of insight and emphasis characteristic of Munch. The orchestra was in excellent form for this final Thursday concert.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
Circ. D. 336,443 - S. 528,253
MAR 22 1956

MUSIC

Boston Symphony

By PAUL HENRY LANG

CARNEGIE HALL
Conductor, Charles Munch. The program: "Romeo and Juliet," Overture-Fantasia, Tchaikovsky
Symphony No. 11 (first New York performance) ..... Villa-Lobos
Symphony No. 7 in A major, Op. 92, Beethoven

VILLA LOBOS is a good composer who has a number fine compositions, but he also is a variable one and, judging by the symphony heard last night at the concert given by the Boston Symphony, not a symphonist by nature. The juxtaposition of his work with Beethoevn's Seventh Symphony was unfortunate.

Now I do not believe in comparing a twentieth century composed with a classic symphonist, for as a dule such comparisons are meaningless. If the composer has his own mind, proudly acknowledges his own time, and goes about his work with conviction, he does not have to fear anyone's neighborhood. We have heard this season two or three American (North) symphonies that generously fulfill these specifications. But Beethoven's work following Villa Lobos' inevitably recalled the days, of which the poet has us, when a single can could easily pick up and hurl a stone which nowadays a hundred men have hardly the strength to lift.

• • •

There are worse things in this new symphony than "folkloristic" clichés arranged in a design a la mode. What disenchants is its fundamental triviality. The symphony is not even entertaining; it becomes tedious by exhaustion of emphasis, and there were signs of exclamatory hysteria. It was well played, though, and the magnificent orchestra and its able conductor deserve high praise for the conscientiousness with which all new works commissioned in celebration of the seventy-fifth season of the Boston Symphony have been rehearsed and presented.

• • •

Nothing could have better illustrated the spirit of the symphony, which calls not for improvisation but for exploitation of ideas, than Beethoven's Seventh. Its first movement has not ideas but essentially ONE idea, a little tune that seems like an echo from the Pastoral Symphony. Beethoven proceeds to subject this lilting bit of music to the most searching metamorphoses. Wild noise alternates with idyllic calm, exalted and festive gestures with somewhat threatening ones only to be relieved by humorous accents.

The same dogged and audacious thematic consistency fills the last movement; in fact, this movement is driving to such excesses that at times its clarity suffers from the unrestrained forcefulness of the composer's personality. This is the stuff for the virtuoso conductor.

Mr. Munch started the magnificent introduction with whip-lash chords that were a little exaggerated, but after that he settled down to a solid and forth-right interpretation. I should not say "settled down," because he kept the orchestra moving at a good pace, with bouncing rhythm, and wonderfully balanced sound. The strings were ample without being lush, the woodwinds played their solos with beautiful tone and phrasing, and the horns were sonorous without being rough. Surprisingly enough, the trumpets had a bad day; they projected a nasty, pinched and sharp tone that hurt the fine ensemble.

The concert began with Tchaikowsky's noisy "Romeo and Juliet" overture which was played to the hilt.

Heitor Villa-Lobos, whose Symphony No. 11 had its first New York performance last night.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR
Circ. D. 245,642 - S. 273,244
MAR 23 1956

Hundreds Sign For Concerts

National Symphony Orchestra officials were enthusiastic today over the rush of subscription renewals for next season's new "package" concert series.

Ralph Black, manager of the orchestra, reported 516 patrons signed up at Wednesday night's concert, the kickoff for subscription renewal orders. This was a 500 per cent increase over a first-night drive last year. Some 85 more subscribed yesterday.

The women's committee of the National Symphony signed up the music-lovers at the rate of one subscriber every three seconds during intermission time Wednesday night.

Mr. Black said the response shows the acceptance here of the new plan of subscription concerts, which will include appearances on Tuesdays and Wednesdays by the Boston and Philadelphia orchestras and the Royal Danish Ballet, along with National Symphony artists during the next October-to-April season.

The goal is 5,000 subscriptions. Present ticket-holders are being given the first opportunity to renew their subscriptions.

Eugene Ormandy, conductor of the Philadelphia orchestra, commented that he was "happy to share in this new union of the National, Boston and Philadelphia orchestras." The manager of the Boston Symphony orchestra, Thomas D. Perry, jr., predicted the new series plan will be "a fruitful relationship" for the three orchestras.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
World-Telegram & Sun
Circ. D. 518,809 - Sat. 172,502
MAR 22 1956

27

Music

Boston Magnificent At Carnegie

By LOUIS BIANCOLLI

As has been its practice for many decades, the Boston Symphony came to town last night with its luggage full of beautiful sounds.

Directed by Charles Munch, the orchestra played with refreshing vigor and that unity of response this is the hallmark of both distinction and long association.

They also played with a smoothness of tone that must have come from endless rehearsal as much as from endless resources of technic.

Villa-Lobos Work.

In short, everything sounded good at Carnegie Hall last night, even though everything wasn't quite as good as it sounded. I mean, specifically, Heitor Villa-Lobos's new symphony.

The symphony is No. 11 among the thousand and one compositions turned out in the last half century by this one-man-music industry of Brazil.

It again shows the prodigious facility of the man, but it doesn't quite show the power and fascination of his best music.

There is a ceaseless unrest about the score. Mr. Villa-Lobos doesn't stay long enough with any one idea, being forever off on some tangent or other.

In an age of surpluses, this is one more bursting granary of material—too much of it at one time in any one place.

But the orchestra made it sound as it had been tailor-made for its superlative strings and brasses, drums and windwinds.

Special Occasion.

Which was almost literally the truth since the symphony was commissioned to celebrate the orchestra's 75th birthday. Mr. Villa-Lobos's heart was in the right place—and perhaps his ears too.

The number preceding the novelty—Tschaikowsky's "Romeo and Juliet"—and the number following it—Beethoven's Seventh Symphony—were both rendered magnificently.

In fact, Mr. Villa-Lobos had everything in his favor last night—everything except a better Symphony No. 11.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
Circ. D. 526,215 - S. 1,146,860
MAR 23 1956

MUSIC NOTES

Events today: Corpus Christi Choir, William McDonald, conductor, at William Knabe & Co., 10 East Forty-eighth Street, 12:30 P. M.; Verdi's "Rigoletto," students matinee, Metropolitan Opera, 1 P. M.; Philharmonic-Symphony, Guido Cantelli, conductor, Walter Gieseking, pianist, Carnegie Hall, 2:30; Excerpts from Mendelssohn's "Elijah," Frederick Lechner, conductor, Central Synagogue, 5:30.

Also Mozart's "Cosi fan tutte," Metropolitan Opera, 8:15; Joseph Locke, tenor, Carnegie Hall; Schrafft's Choral Group; New York Sinfonia Chamber Orchestra, Clayton Westermann, conductor, Helen Merritt, soprano, Carnegie Recital Hall; Bruce Simonds, pianist, Turtle Bay Music School, all at 8:30.

In addition Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch, conductor, Leonard Rose, 'cellist, Brooklyn Academy, 8:30; Ellen Edwards, pianist, Greenwich House Music School, 8:30; Swapping Song Fair, Circle in the Square Theatre, midnight.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
Circ. D. 336,443 - S. 528,253
28 MAR 23 1956

MUSIC

Boston Symphony

By PAUL HENRY LANG

CARNEGIE HALL

Conductor, Charles Munch. The program: "Romeo and Juliet," Overture-Fantasia, Tchaikovsky
Symphony No. 11 (first New York performance) ..... Villa-Lobos
Symphony No. 7 in A major, Op. 92, Beethoven

VILLA LOBOS is a good composer who has a number of fine compositions, but he also is a variable one and, judging by the symphony heard Wednesday night at the concert given by the Boston Symphony, not a symphonist by nature. The juxtaposition of his work with Beethoevn's Seventh Symphony was unfortunate.

Now I do not believe in comparing a twentieth-century composer with a classic symphonist, for as a rule such comparisons are meaningless. If the composer has his own mind, proudly acknowledges his own time, and goes about his work with conviction, he does not have to fear anyone's neighborhood. We have heard this season two or three American (North) symphonies that generously fulfill these specifications. But Beethoven's work following Villa Lobos' inevitably recalled the days, of which the poet has told us, when a single man could easily pick up and hurl a stone which nowadays a hundred men have hardly the strength to lift.

* * *

There are worse things in this new symphony than "folkloristic" clichés arranged in a design à la mode. What disenchants is its fundamental triviality. The symphony is not even entertaining; it becomes tedious by exhaustion of emphasis, and there were signs of exclamatory hysteria. It was well played, though, and the magnificent orchestra and its able conductor deserve high praise for the conscientiousness with which all new works commissioned in celebration of the seventy-fifth season of the Boston Symphony have been rehearsed and presented.

Nothing could have better illustrated the spirit of the symphony, which calls not for improvisation but for exploitation of ideas, than Beethoven's Seventh. Its first movement has not ideas but essentially ONE idea, a little tune that seems like an echo from the Pastoral Symphony. Beethoven proceeds to subject this lilting bit of music to the most searching metamorphoses. Wild noise alternates with idyllic calm, exalted and festive gestures with somewhat threatening ones only to be relieved by humorous accents.

The same dogged and audacious thematic consistency fills the last movement; in fact, this movement is driven to such excesses that at times its clarity suffers from the unrestrained forcefulness of the composer's personality. This is the stuff for the virtuoso conductor.

Mr. Munch started the magnificent introduction with whiplash chords that were a little exaggerated, but after that he settled down to a solid and forth-right interpretation. I should not say "settled down," because he kept the orchestra moving at a good pace, with bouncing rhythm, and wonderfully balanced sound. The strings were ample without being lush, the woodwinds played their solos with beautiful tone and phrasing, and the horns were sonorous without being rough. Surprisingly enough, the trumpets had a bad day; they projected a nasty, pinched and sharp tone that hurt the fine ensemble.

The concert began with Tchaikovsky's noisy "Romeo and Juliet" overture which was played to the hilt.

Heitor Villa-Lobos, whose Symphony No. 11 had its first New York performance last night.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
Circ. D. 526,215 - S. 1,146,860
MAR 24 1956

MUSIC NOTES

Events today: Excerpts from Mendelssohn's "Elijah," Central Synagogue, 10:30 A. M.; Little Orchestra Society, Young People's Concert, Thomas Scherman, conductor, Max Leavitt's Chinese marionettes, Hunter College Auditorium, 11 A. M.

Also, Wagner's "Parsifal," Metropolitan Opera, 1 P. M.; Brass ensemble, Simon Karasick, conductor, Mannes College of Music, 2; Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch, conductor, Leonard Rose, 'cellist, Carnegie Hall, 2:30; Colby College Concert Choir, Peter Re, conductor, Town Hall, 3; Mary Gale Hartford, violinist, children's program, New York College of Music, 3; Guillermo Helguera, 'cellist, and Joyce Flissler, violinist, New York Public Library, 20 West Fifty-third Street, 4; Robert Dean, baritone, Carnegie Recital Hall, 5:30.

In addition Verdi's "Il Trovatore," Metropolitan Opera, 8:15; Mascagni's "Cavalleria Rusticana" and Leoncavallo's "Pagliacci," Amato Opera Theatre, 159 Bleecker Street, 8:15; Philharmonic-Symphony, Guido Cantelli, conductor, Carnegie Hall, 8:45.

Also, all at 8:30, Irmgard Seefried, soprano, Hunter College Auditorium; Helvetia Maennerchor, Paul Isler, conductor, Fernando Corena, bass, Town Hall; International Music Lovers Guild, Carnegie Recital Hall; American Chamber Orchestra, Robert Scholz, conductor, Helen Kwalwasser, violinist, Ronald Roseman, oboist, High School of Fashion Industries; Budapest String Quartet, New York Society for Ethical Culture.

Also Roland Hayes, tenor, Ninety-second Street Young Men's and Young Women's Hebrew Association, 8:40; Swapping Song Fair, Circle in the Square Theatre, 12 midnight.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
Circ. D. 653,252 - S. 982,681
MAR 24 1956

Scroll to Martinu Presented Today

The N. Y. Music Critics' Circle will present its award for the best orchestral work of 1955 to composer Bohuslav Martinu on the stage of Carnegie Hall, during the season's final concert this afternoon by Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Miles Kastendieck, music critic of the N. Y. Journal-American, in his capacity as chairman of the Circle, will present the Circle's illuminated scroll to the Czech-born composer. It will take place on stage immediately following the Boston Symphony's performance of Mr. Martinu's prize-winning work, "Fantaisies Symphoniques."

THE NATION
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MAR 24 1956

Music

B. H. Haggin

AT A Boston Symphony concert in 1930, after a performance of the Ode that Aaron Copland wrote for the orchestra's fiftieth anniversary, I was amused to hear a sweet old Jewish woman exclaim: "And when we do get a Jewish composer he shames his race!" If she was in the audience to hear his revision of the piece for the orchestra's seventy-fifth anniversary when it was played in New York recently I would guess that she felt no happier about it. For it is still an unattractive and inaccessible work in the angular and harsh idiom that Copland has continued to use in instrumental music at the same time as he has used a simpler and attractive idiom in his engaging and often lovely scores for stage and films.

This writing of music in two different styles has been paralleled by Copland's two different lines of thought about the music. On the one hand he has—for example in his book Our New Music—attacked the idea that modern music is emotionally arid, over-complicated and ugly, and has described and explained the changes in expressive content and the extensions of vocabulary in the music in order that we might hear in it our music, as natural and acceptable to our ears, as interesting and significant to our minds, as people a hundred and two hundred years ago found their music. But Our New Music was published in 1941, three years after Billy the Kid, the first of the ballet and film scores which Arthur Berger, in his book on Copland, tells us represented Copland's decision not to go on writing only esoteric music for a small special public, but to write simpler, accessible music that would interest the general music public. Berger quotes Copland's own statements to this effect—statements which imply his recognition that music like von Webern's in Europe or his own Ode here was not as natural and acceptable to our ears, as interesting to our minds, as people a hundred years ago found their music.

At the first performances of its spring season the New York City Ballet has exhibited its clear, beautiful and brilliant dancing, and has presented the first of three new works, Balanchine's Allegro Brillante, a setting of the one completed movement of Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 3. This piece, composed in the last year of Tchaikovsky's life, begins magnificently and excitingly with some of his most arresting ideas, and continues with effective writing to the end of the exposition, but becomes aimless and diffuse in the development. And it is interesting that in Balanchine's piece, another of his recent "concentrated essays in . . . extended classic vocabulary," it is the beginning, too—the placing of the dancers on the stage, the establishing of the style of their dancing—that is most impressive. After that what is interesting is the resourceful ingenuity that keeps things going with coherence even to music which is diffuse and aimless, and that makes beautiful use of the individual capacities of the dancers—in particular Tallchief's capacity for movement of marvelous delicacy in quiet.

I must add that this is a capacity which Tallchief shows off with the same disregard for momentary fitness as other dancers betray in their more spectacular exhibitionism. The finale of Swan Lake begins with agitated movements of the corps, which are interrupted by Tallchief's demonstration of her delicacy in quiet in a progression diagonally across the stage. This is as unsuitable here—though not as destructive and absurd—as the great smiling hello to the audience, instead of to his companions on the stage, with which Eglevsky makes his first entrance in that ballet.

UNABLE to attend one of the early performances of the Metropolitan's new production of The Magic Flute, I listened to the Saturday afternoon broadcast, and was struck immediately, during the overture, by the lack of lightness, grace, vivacity and brilliance that I continued to be aware of in the work as it was paced and shaped by Bruno Walter—notably in Pamina's Ach, ich fuehl's and the trio Soll ich dich, Teurer, nicht mehr sehen, which plodded on soggily in tempos that would never have led anyone to suspect Mozart's direction of Andante. Next I was struck by the inadequacy of much of the singing: after the beautiful and suitably youthful voices of the Tamino and Pamina in the recent NBC-televised Magic Flute it was disturbing to hear the voices of Brian Sullivan and Lucine Amara, which were neither youthful nor even beautiful; though Roberta Peters produced brilliantly crystalline notes in the Queen of the Night's high florid passages, her voice was unattractively rough and edged in the melodic passages of the Queen's first-act aria. But Theodor Uppman (Papageno), Laurel Hurley (Papagena), Jerome Hines (Sarastro) and George

March 24, 1956

ORLANDO, FLA.
SENTINEL
Circ. D. 43,682 - S. 58,625
MAR 25 1956

Ocoee Women Hold Meeting

OCOEE—The Woman's Club of Ocoee met Tuesday afternoon at the clubhouse. The meeting opened with the salute to the flag. Twenty-seven members answered to roll call.

They voted to sponsor a political rally and barbecue, if a suitable date could be arranged.

Mrs. Walter F. Locherer had charge of the program. She gave a musical history of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, commemorating its 70 years in existence. She gave the history of the composers of music to follow. She then played a record of excerpts from their symphony concerts. Another record was played of various selections from their pops concerts, with also the history of those composers.

Following the program a social hour was enjoyed with Mrs. Charles Fain, Mrs. Washie Hudson, and Ernest Dann as hostesses.

NEW YORKER
NEW YORK CITY
MAR 24 1956

ORCHESTRAS AND CHORUSES

PHILHARMONIC-SYMPHONY—At Carnegie Hall, Guido Cantelli conducting—Thursday, March 22, at 8:45, and Friday, March 23, at 2:30 (both with Walter Gieseking, piano); Saturday, March 24, at 8:45 (no soloists); Sunday, March 25, at 2:30 (with Walter Gieseking); and Thursday, March 29, at 8:45; Friday, March 30, at 2:30; and Saturday, March 31, at 8:45 (all with Martha Lipton, mezzo-soprano, and the Westminster Choir).

BOSTON SYMPHONY—Final performances of the season here—Charles Munch conducting, with Leonard Rose, cello. (Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Ave. ST 3-6700. Friday, March 23, at 8:30. . . . ¶ Carnegie Hall. Saturday, March 24, at 2:30.)

AMERICAN CHAMBER ORCHESTRA—Robert Scholz conducting. (Central High School of Needle Trades, 225 W. 24th St. Saturday, March 24, at 8:15. For tickets, call GR 3-1391.)

EMORY GLEE CLUB—Malcolm H. Dewey directing this university group from Georgia. (Town Hall. Thursday, March 22, at 8:30.)

COLBY COLLEGE CONCERT CHOIR—Peter Re directing. (Town Hall. Saturday, March 24, at 3.)

HELVETIA MAENNERCHOR—A Swiss male chorus, directed by Paul Isler, with Fernando Corena, bass. (Town Hall. Saturday, March 24, at 8:30.)

BACH CHOIR OF BETHLEHEM—Ifor Jones directing a performance of Bach's Mass in B Minor, with Phyllis Curtin, soprano; Eunice Alberts, contralto; John McCollum, tenor; Mack Harrell, baritone; Vernon de Tar, organ; and members of the Philadelphia Orchestra. (Carnegie Hall. Tuesday, March 27, at 7:30.)

OBERLIN COLLEGE CHOIR—Robert Fountain directing. (Town Hall. Saturday, March 31, at 2:30.)

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
Circ. D. 336,443 - S. 528,253
MAR 23 1956

MUSIC

Boston Symphony

By PAUL HENRY LANG

CARNEGIE HALL

Conductor, Charles Munch. The program: "Romeo and Juliet," Overture-Fantasia, Tchaikovsky
Symphony No. 11 (first New York performance) ..... Villa-Lobos
Symphony No. 7 in A major, Op. 92. Beethoven

VILLA LOBOS is a good composer who has a number of fine compositions, but he also is a variable one and, judging by the symphony heard Wednesday night at the concert given by the Boston Symphony, not a symphonist by nature. The juxtaposition of his work with Beethoven's Seventh Symphony was unfortunate.

Now I do not believe in comparing a twentieth-century composer with a classic symphonist, for as a rule such comparisons are meaningless. If the composer has his own mind, proudly acknowledges his own time, and does about his work with conviction, he does not have to fear anyone's neighborhood. We have heard this season two or three American (North) symphonies that generously fulfill these specifications. But Beethoven's work following Villa Lobos' inevitably recalled the days, of which the poet has told us, when a single man could easily pick up and hurl a stone which nowadays a hundred men have hardly the strength to lift.

* * *

There are worse things in this new symphony than "folkloristic" clichés arranged in a design à la mode. What disenchants is its fundamental triviality. The symphony is not even entertaining; it becomes tedious by exhaustion of emphasis, and there were signs of exclamatory hysteria. It was well played, though, and the magnificent orchestra and its able conductor deserve high praise for the conscientiousness with which all new works commissioned in celebration of the seventy-fifth season of the Boston Symphony have been rehearsed and presented.

Nothing could have better illustrated the spirit of the symphony, which calls not for improvisation but for exploitation of ideas, than Beethoven's Seventh. Its first movement has not ideas but essentially ONE idea, a little tune that seems like an echo from the Pastoral Symphony. Beethoven proceeds to subject this lilting bit of music to the most searching metamorphoses. Wild noise alternates with idyllic calm, exalted and festive gestures with somewhat threatening ones only to be relieved by humorous accents.

The same dogged and audacious thematic consistency fills the last movement; in fact, this movement is driven to such excesses that at times its clarity suffers from the unrestrained forcefulness of the composer's personality. This is the stuff for the virtuoso conductor.

Mr. Munch started the magnificent introduction with whiplash chords that were a little exaggerated, but after that he settled down to a solid and forth-right interpretation. I should not say "settled down," because he kept the orchestra moving at a good pace, with bouncing rhythm, and wonderfully balanced sound. The strings were ample without being lush, the woodwinds played their solos with beautiful tone and phrasing, and the horns were sonorous without being rough. Surprisingly enough, the trumpets had a bad day; they projected a nasty, pinched and sharp tone that hurt the fine ensemble.

The concert began with Tchaikovsky's noisy "Romeo and Juliet" overture which was played to the hilt.

Heitor Villa-Lobos, whose Symphony No. 11 had its first New York performance last night.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
Circ. D. 526,215 - S. 1,146,860
MAR 24 1956

MUSIC NOTES

Events today: Excerpts from Mendelssohn's "Elijah," Central Synagogue, 10:30 A. M.; Little Orchestra Society, Young People's Concert, Thomas Scherman, conductor, Max Leavitt's Chinese marionettes, Hunter College Auditorium, 11 A. M.

Also, Wagner's "Parsifal," Metropolitan Opera, 1 P. M.; Brass ensemble, Simon Karasick, conductor, Mannes College of Music, 2; Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch, conductor, Leonard Rose, 'cellist, Carnegie Hall, 2:30; Colby College Concert Choir, Peter Re, conductor, Town Hall, 3; Mary Gale Hartford, violinist, children's program, New York College of Music, 3; Guillermo Helguera, 'cellist, and Joyce Flissler, violinist, New York Public Library, 20 West Fifty-third Street, 4; Robert Dean, baritone, Carnegie Recital Hall, 5:30.

In addition Verdi's "Il Trovatore," Metropolitan Opera, 8:15; Mascagni's "Cavalleria Rusticana" and Leoncavallo's "Pagliacci," Amato Opera Theatre, 159 Bleecker Street, 8:15; Philharmonic-Symphony, Guido Cantelli, conductor, Carnegie Hall, 8:45.

Also, all at 8:30, Irmgard Seefried, soprano, Hunter College Auditorium; Helvetia Maennerchor, Paul Isler, conductor, Fernando Corena, bass, Town Hall; International Music Lovers Guild, Carnegie Recital Hall; American Chamber Orchestra, Robert Scholz, conductor, Helen Kwalwasser, violinist, Ronald Roseman, oboist, High School of Fashion Industries; Budapest String Quartet, New York Society for Ethical Culture.

Also Roland Hayes, tenor, Ninety-second Street Young Men's and Young Women's Hebrew Association, 8:40; Swapping Song Fair, Circle in the Square Theatre, 12 midnight.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
Circ. D. 653,252 - S. 982,681
MAR 24 1956

Scroll to Martinu Presented Today

The N. Y. Music Critics' Circle will present its award for the best orchestral work of 1955 to composer Bohuslav Martinu on the stage of Carnegie Hall, during the season's final concert this afternoon by Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

[redacted], music critic of the N. Y. Journal-American, in his capacity as chairman of the Circle, will present the Circle's illuminated scroll to the Czech-born composer. It will take place on stage immediately following the Boston Symphony's performance of Mr. Martinu's prize-winning work, "Fantaisies Symphoniques."

THE NATION
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MAR 24 1956

Music

B. H. Haggin

AT A Boston Symphony concert in 1930, after a performance of the Ode that Aaron Copland wrote for the orchestra's fiftieth anniversary, I was amused to hear a sweet old Jewish woman exclaim: "And when we do get a Jewish composer he shames his race!" If she was in the audience to hear his revision of the piece for the orchestra's seventy-fifth anniversary when it was played in New York recently I would guess that she felt no happier about it. For it is still an unattractive and inaccessible work in the angular and harsh idiom that Copland has continued to use in instrumental music at the same time as he has used a simpler and attractive idiom in his engaging and often lovely scores for stage and films.

This writing of music in two different styles has been paralleled by Copland's two different lines of thought about the music. On the one hand he has—for example in his book Our New Music—attacked the idea that modern music is emotionally arid, over-complicated and ugly, and has described and explained the changes in expressive content and the extensions of vocabulary in the music in order that we might hear in it our music, as natural and acceptable to our ears, as interesting and significant to our minds, as people a hundred and two hundred years ago found their music. But Our New Music was published in 1941, three years after Billy the Kid, the first of the ballet and film scores which Arthur Berger, in his book on Copland, tells us represented Copland's decision not to go on writing only esoteric music for a small special public, but to write simpler, accessible music that would interest the general music public. Berger quotes Copland's own statements to this effect—statements which imply his recognition that music like von Webern's in Europe or his own Ode here was not as natural and acceptable to our ears, as interesting to our minds, as people a hundred years ago found their music.

At the first performances of its spring season the New York City Ballet has exhibited its clear, beautiful and brilliant dancing, and has presented the first of three new works, Balanchine's Allegro Brillante, a setting of the one completed movement of Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 3. This piece, composed in the last year of Tchaikovsky's life, begins magnificently and excitingly with some of his most arresting ideas, and continues with effective writing to the end of the exposition, but becomes aimless and diffuse in the development. And it is interesting that in Balanchine's piece, another of his recent "concentrated essays in . . . extended classic vocabulary," it is the beginning, too—the placing of the dancers on the stage, the establishing of the style of their dancing—that is most impressive. After that what is interesting is the resourceful ingenuity that keeps things going with coherence even to music which is diffuse and aimless, and that makes beautiful use of the individual capacities of the dancers—in particular Tallchief's capacity for movement of marvelous delicacy in quiet.

I must add that this is a capacity which Tallchief shows off with the same disregard for momentary fitness as other dancers betray in their more spectacular exhibitionism. The finale of Swan Lake begins with agitated movements of the corps, which are interrupted by Tallchief's demonstration of her delicacy in quiet in a progression diagonally across the stage. This is as unsuitable here—though not as destructive and absurd—as the great smiling hello to the audience, instead of to his companions on the stage, with which Eglevsky makes his first entrance in that ballet.

UNABLE to attend one of the early performances of the Metropolitan's new production of The Magic Flute, I listened to the Saturday afternoon broadcast, and was struck immediately, during the overture, by the lack of lightness, grace, vivacity and brilliance that I continued to be aware of in the work as it was paced and shaped by Bruno Walter—notably in Pamina's Ach, ich fuehl's and the trio Soll ich dich, Teurer, nicht mehr sehen, which plodded on soggily in tempos that would never have led anyone to suspect Mozart's direction of Andante. Next I was struck by the inadequacy of much of the singing: after the beautiful and suitably youthful voices of the Tamino and Pamina in the recent NBC-televised Magic Flute it was disturbing to hear the voices of Brian Sullivan and Lucine Amara, which were neither youthful nor even beautiful; though Roberta Peters produced brilliantly crystalline notes in the Queen of the Night's high florid passages, her voice was unattractively rough and edged in the melodic passages of the Queen's first-act aria. But Theodor Uppman (Papageno), Laurel Hurley (Papagena), Jerome Hines (Sarastro) and George

ORLANDO, FLA.
SENTINEL
Circ. D. 43,682 - S. 58,625
MAR 25 1956

Ocoee Women Hold Meeting

OCOEE—The Woman's Club of Ocoee met Tuesday afternoon at the clubhouse. The meeting opened with the salute to the flag. Twenty-seven members answered to roll call.

They voted to sponsor a political rally and barbecue, if a suitable date could be arranged.

Mrs. Walter F. Locherer had charge of the program. She gave a musical history of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, commemorating its 70 years in existence. She gave the history of the composers of music to follow. She then played a record of excerpts from their symphony concerts. Another record was played of various selections from their pops concerts, with also the history of these composers.

Following the program a social hour was enjoyed with Mrs. Charles Fain, Mrs. Washie Hudson, and Ernest Dann as hostesses.

[redacted]

ORCHESTRAS AND CHORUSES

PHILHARMONIC-SYMPHONY—At Carnegie Hall, Guido Cantelli conducting—Thursday, March 22, at 8:45, and Friday, March 23, at 2:30 (both with Walter Gieseking, piano); Saturday, March 24, at 8:45 (no soloists); Sunday, March 25, at 2:30 (with Walter Gieseking); and Thursday, March 29, at 8:45; Friday, March 30, at 2:30; and Saturday, March 31, at 8:45 (all with Martha Lipton, mezzo-soprano, and the Westminster Choir).

BOSTON SYMPHONY—Final performances of the season here—Charles Munch conducting, with Leonard Rose, cello. (Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Ave. ST 3-6700. Friday, March 23, at 8:30. . . . ¶ Carnegie Hall. Saturday, March 24, at 2:30.)

AMERICAN CHAMBER ORCHESTRA—Robert Scholz conducting. (Central High School of Needle Trades, 225 W. 24th St. Saturday, March 24, at 8:15. For tickets, call GR 3-1391.)

EMORY GLEE CLUB—Malcolm H. Dewey directing this university group from Georgia. (Town Hall. Thursday, March 22, at 8:30.)

COLBY COLLEGE CONCERT CHOIR—Peter Re directing. (Town Hall. Saturday, March 24, at 3.)

HELVETIA MAENNERCHOR—A Swiss male chorus, directed by Paul Isler, with Fernando Corena, bass. (Town Hall. Saturday, March 24, at 8:30.)

BACH CHOIR OF BETHLEHEM—Ifor Jones directing a performance of Bach's Mass in B Minor, with Phyllis Curtin, soprano; Eunice Alberts, contralto; John McCollum, tenor; Mack Harrell, baritone; Vernon de Tar, organ; and members of the Philadelphia Orchestra. (Carnegie Hall. Tuesday, March 27, at 7:30.)

OBERLIN COLLEGE CHOIR—Robert Fountain directing. (Town Hall. Saturday, March 31, at 2:30.)

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Post
BRIDGEPORT, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 61,159

MAR 25 1956

TURNING the DIALS

By FRED H. RUSSELL

Walter Gieseking, the renowned pianist, will play his first broadcast in the United States, as soloist with the New York Philharmonic-Symphony orchestra on CBS radio this afternoon at 2:30 o'clock. Guido Cantelli will conduct the orchestra, in the second of four broadcast performances as a guest conductor. Mr. Gieseking, one of the great keyboard artists of our time, will perform the Beethoven "Emperor" Concerto, No. 5 in E flat major. Following the broadcast, he will leave New York for a number of recitals and orchestrals performances throughout the country.

Maestro Cantelli will open the program with the Vivaldi Concerto Grosso for String Orchestra, No. 11 in D minor. Bach valued this work so highly that he arranged it for organ, and other composers, including Siloti, have re-arranged the Bach transcription for piano.

The concert will close with Richard Strauss' tone poem, "Don Juan," first published of Strauss' several tone poems. The composer himself conducted its initial performance in Weimer in 1889. James Fassett is music commentator on the program.

Hague To Speak

The talk of Dr. Gabriel Hague before a dinner meeting of the Fairfield County Republican Women's Association on Wednesday night will be broadcast by WICC from 10 to 10:30 o'clock. Dr. Hague is administrative assistant to President Eisenhower for economic affairs and his talk is expected to be of great value as an assessment of the country's economic status. Mrs. D. Verner Smythe, of Fairfield, program director for the association, will introduce the speaker.

Easter Dramas

Two Easter dramas will be presented on "The Greatest Story Ever Told" today and next Sunday over WNAB and WABC at 5:30 p.m.

This afternoon, "The Betrayal and the Crucifixion" will tell the story of Judas Iscariot, the delivery of Christ into the hands of the Roman soldiers. His audience with Pontius Pilate and His crucifixion on the cross at Calvary.

"The Resurrection," on April 1, will recount the story of Christ's entombment behind an enormous rock and the fulfillment of His prophecy that He would arise in three days.

Work By Martinu

Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony orchestra in the "Fantaisies Symphoniques" by Bohuslav Martinu tomorrow night at 8:15 o'clock over WRCA radio. This work, which is Martinu's "Sixth Symphony," was selected by the New York Music Critics Circle as the best new orchestral work played in 1955. It was introduced by the Boston Symphony, for whose 75th anniversary it was composed. The symphony is in three sections: (a) lento, allegro, lento; (b) allegero; and (c) lento, allegro.

The program will open with Beethoven's dramatic "Coriolanus Overture."

Eileen Farrell Sings

Eileen Farrell will be soloist on the "Telephone Hour's" Easter program tomorrow night at 9 o'clock over WRCA radio. Miss Farrell will sing devotional music and selections from opera, accompanied by the symphonic orchestra and chorus under the direction of Donald Voorhees.

The climax of the program will be Cesar Franck's "Panis Angelicus" for soprano soloist, chorus and orchestra. Miss Farrell also will sing the spiritual "Were You There?" Her operatic numbers are "Du Bist Der Lenz" (You Are the Spring) from Wagner's "Die Walkure" and "Magda's Air" from Puccini's "La Rondine."

The chorus will introduce a new work, "Prayer of St. Francis," by the California composer Ross Hastings. Other choral selections will be two numbers from Gounod's oratorio "The Redemption:" "While Her Watch She is Keeping" and "For Us The Christ is Made a Victim."

Begins Sixth Year

WOR radio's "Festival of Opera," the only New York radio series presenting uninterrupted full-length versions of great operas, begins its sixth year of broadcasting this afternoon.

The anniversary program will be Rosini's "The Barber of Seville," which was the first opera presented on the series when it debuted March 24, 1951. The program is heard at 1:30 o'clock.

Dead Sea Scrolls

"What Do the Dead Sea Scrolls Mean?", a discussion of ancient writings discovered in 1947 and still being translated by world scholars, will be heard on "America's Town Meeting of the Air," tonight at 8 o'clock over WNAB and WABC.

Millar Burrows, chairman of the Department of near Eastern Languages and Literature, Yale university, and author of the book, "The Dead Sea Scrolls;" dean of students at Bexley Hall, The Very Rev. Gorwin C. Roach, Gambir, Ohio; Monsignor John J. Doughrty, professor of secred scriptures, Immaculate Conception Seminary, Ramsey, N. J.; and Bernard Cherrick, director general of the board of governors of Hebrew university, Jerusalem, will be the speakers.

Dr. Shepherd L. Witman, director of Residential Seminrs on World Affairs, will moderate the program which will originate in New York City.

The Dead Sea Scrolls are being translated and studied at Hebrew University. They date to the period 20-79 A.D., and are interpreted as having been written by an ancient Hebrew people known as the Essenes.

WNAB to Broadcast Easter Eve Mass

The solemn pontifical Mass to be celebrated on Easter Eve at midnight by Bishop Lawrence J. Sheehan in St. Augustine's Cathedral will be broadcast exclusively by radio station WNAB. Joseph Barbér will serve as narrator for the broadcast.

WNAB was the first local station to broadcast a Christmas Eve Mass back in 1946 and now becomes the first local station to air the "new" Easter Eve midnight Mass.

Serving as archpriest will be the Rt. Rev. Msgr. James F. Murphy, Ph. D. Deacons of honor will be the Rev. Mr. John Gaughan, C.S. Sp., and the Rev. Mr. Norman Hannahs, C.S.Sp. Deacon of the Mass will be the Rev. Frederick Trumbull, C.S.Sp., and sub-deacon, the Rev. Mr. Pierre Bergeron, C.S.Sp. Masters of ceremonies will be the Rt. Rev. Msgr. George B. Curtis and the Very Rev. James J. McLaughlin.

Register (e)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 93,030
MAR 21 1956

Music

BOSTON SYMPHONY IMPRESSIVE IN VARIED PROGRAM

Concerts should start on time though they rarely do! But last evening's concert here by the Boston Symphony caught an unusually large number of latecomers short because of its promptness in starting. This was most unfortunate, as the program's opening work was Tchaikovsky's Overture-Fantasia, "Romeo and Juliet." The writer has it on good authority that the Bostonians performed this melodious work with great finesse. That, of course, was to be expected for this orchestra has always had a pronounced affinity for the music of the great Russian composer.

And so it was that the program for many of us started in anything but the expected romantic vein. The crashing sonorities of the contemporary Symphony No. 11, by the Brazilian, Villa-Lobos, riveted our attention immediately and latecomers forgot their chagrin over missing the Tchaikovsky work.

This new symphony is one of 15 works commissioned for the Boston Orchestra's 75th anniversary this season. Dedicated to the memory of Serge and Natalie Koussevitzky (the former Boston conductor and his wife), the work had it's world premiere in Boston only a few weeks ago with the composer himself conducting. The symphony is in four movements—Allegro moderato, Largo, Scherzo (molto vivace), and the final Molto allegro.

One can easily imagine that the Brazilian composer has tailored his new symphony to fit the virtoso needs and propensities of the Boston Orchestra. It is one of those rare modern works in which a listener can follow somewhat the thematic material in its development at a first hearing. This is a compliment to both the composer's skillful orchestration and the conducting genius of Charles Munch. The work is aggresive in dissonance throughout but it stays within the framework of tonality though the amazing brutality of the final chord in he first movement would indicate otherwise. The characteristic and fanciful touches are to be found in the exotic colors and the basic rhythms of the symphony which is certainly among the composer's most impressive efforts to date. The work was well received by last evening's audience.

At this point, we have come to realize that a Munch Beethoven interpretation is nothing if not dramatic by way of bright tempos and by extremities in matters of dynamics. Some may have found these "faults" in the performance of the Seventh Symphony but to the writer, the Munch interpretation was lucid and unified. The performance, to me, was cumulative in its musical and psychological effect. My only quarrel with fast tempos is when they result in distortion. There was none of this last evening.

G. E. A.

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 369,241
MAR 25 1956

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
Circ. D. 526,215 - S. 1,146,860
MAR 25 1956

Martinu Is Honored by Music Critics

Wins Circle's Award for Sixth Symphony

THE concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Charles Munch at Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon was a happy one on several counts.

Bohuslav Martinu was on hand to receive the New York Music Critics Circle award for "the symphonic work of most outstanding excellence performed in this city for the first time during the year 1955." This was Mr. Martinu's Sixth Symphony, which was repeated on yesterday's program.

•

Miles Kastendieck, music critic of The New York Journal-American and chairman of the Critics Circle, congratulated Mr. Martinu, as well as the players and Mr. Munch, for having participated in the creation of such stimulating music. Congratulations were also due Mr. Munch and the Boston Symphony for having commissioned the work for the celebration of the orchestra's seventy-fifth anniversary.

After the intermission, Leonard Rose joined the orchestra as soloist in the Dvorak B minor 'Cello Concerto, and more congratulations were in order. Mr. Munch and his men played a beautifully restrained introduction, but one that nevertheless had the full flavor of romanticism. The nostalgic song of the solo French horn was a typically sensitive touch.

•

Mr. Rose set off with a rather astringent tone. But that was not his only vein. He warmed as he went along and, when his opening theme returned in the lovely sentimental duet with the flute, he made a glowing sound. In short, he commanded light and shade and other nuances like a master.

In the brilliant finale, Mr. Rose was in top shape to cap an exciting performance.

The program opened with Beethoven's "Coriolanus" Overture, in which the orchestra sounded a bit tired. Falla's Three Dances from his ballet "The Three Cornered Hat," ended the afternoon in an explosion of somewhat heavy brilliance.

E. D.

The New York Times

Charles Munch, left, and Bohuslav Martinu, as Mr. Martinu received the award of the New York Music Critics Circle.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
Circ. D. 336,443 - S. 528,253
MAR 25 1956

2 Czech Works Mark Final Boston Orchestra Concert

By Francis D. Perkins

Two works by composers of Czech origin, both partly written in the United States, occupitd most of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's last New York concert of the season under Charles Munch's direction yesterday afternoon in Carnegie Hall. Bohuslav Martinu listened to his "Fantaisies Symphoniques" (Symphony No. 6) and then came tot the stage to receive the award of the New York Music Critics' Circle for the most outstanding orchestral composition introduced here in 1955. After the intermissions the musicians reassembled to play Dvorak's Cello Concerto in B minor, with Leonard Rose as the soloist.

The Circle's chairman, Miles Kastendieck of "The New York Journal-American," gave the illustrated award scroll to Mr. Martinu after a short congratulatory speech. Yesterday's performance was the fourth here of the "Fantaisies Symphoniques," which was the first to be made public of the fifteen works commissioned for this orchestra's seventy-fifth anniversary. The Bostonians had played it in both Carnegie Hall series last season, and introduced it to Brooklyn last Friday night.

Balance of Moods

Reheard, it continues to be impressive. The sense of emotional impact may be somewhat lessened by a repetition, but it has a pervasive emotional persuation which corresponds to its expressive range and breadth. A balance between darkness and light in its moods and musical hues seemed more apparent than before; the first statement of the broad lyric theme of Slavic savor which makes several later appearances in differing guises emereged luminously while orchestral clouds dissolved.

"Fantaisies" is an appropriate designation, both for the atmosphere and the structure; the latter is episodic, rather than a steady progress to a predictable close. But the work holds attention throughout, with its imagination, coherence of musical iedas and masterly orchestration. Mr. Munch and his musicians fully revealed its instrumental and expressive resources in a performance of both vivid and subtle color, complete clarity and emotional intentness.

After 60 Years

Dvorak's cello concerto, which had its premiere sixty years (plus six days) ago, again seemed melodically spacious, structurally well ordered: generally gratifying, while slightly on the lengthy side. Mr. Rose, always the sure master of its technical demands, played it with appealingly lyric, warm, fluent and lucid tone, apart from a few athletic measures; there were only a few transient exceptions in his disclosure of the music's moods and atmosphere. The orchestral share of the performance as laudable, especially for its dynamic proportions. Beethoven's "Coriolanus" Overture had a satisfying interpretation at the start of the concert; the three familiar dances from Manuel de Falla's "The Three Cornered Hat" had a vigorous, but rather overweighted performance at the close.

The orchestra under Mr. Munch will be back at Carnegie Hall next season for the usual Wednesday night and Saturday afternoon series of five concerts each, Nov. 14 to March 23.

Bach's "Saint John Passion" at Symphony

Charles Munch will conduct Bach's "Passion According to Saint John" at the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this week. The matinee concert will be given Thursday afternoon rather than Friday (Good Friday), while the evening concert will be played Saturday as usual. Assisting in the performances will be the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, conducted by G. Wallace Woodworth, with Adele Addison soprano; Betty Allen, mezzo soprano; David Lloyd, tenor, and Mac Morgan and James Joyce, basses.

An extra open rehearsal, with admission open to the general public, has been scheduled for this Wednesday evening at 7:30. Proceeds from this open rehearsal will benefit the pension fund of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and tickets are now on sale at the Symphony Hall box office.

Mr. Munch will conduct the final concert in this season's Cambridge series in Sanders Theatre Tuesday evening. The program will be comprised of the "Coriolan" Overture and Seventh Symphony by Beethoven, and the Fourth Symphony by Brahms.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
Circ. D. 526,215 - S. 1,146,860
MAR 25 1956

HEMIDEMISEMIQUAVERS: When it plays in Paris on Sept. 19, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Charles Munch, will make its program a "Homage à Koussevitzky." . . . Edwin

NEW YORK, N. Y.
World-Telegram & Sun
Circ. D. 518,809 - Sat. 172,502

MAR 26 1956

Music

Met Presents 'Parsifal' With New Scenery

By LOUIS BIANCOLLI.

A spacious mood of pious meditation settled on the Metropolitan audience Saturday afternoon with the season's first hearing of Wagner's "Parsifal."

One of the greatest musical works ever inspired by a religious theme, the opera unwound its generous length in a deeply reverent performance conducted by Fritz Stiedry.

On the scenic side the production was a completely new one, the designer being Leo Kerz, most recently remembered for his work on the San Francisco premiere of Walton's "Troilus and Cressida" last autumn.

Mr. Kerz's innovations were mostly on the side of austere dignity and the imaginative use of lighting devices to create illusions of awesome mystery and miracle.

Whether the high priests of the Wagner cult would approve of every aspect of Mr. Kerz's centralized staging is doubtful. I rather liked it for its concentrated vision.

Certainly the scenery is a welcome change from the Joseph Urban sets in use at the Met since 1920. It was refreshing to have something new to watch along with something old to hear.

Mr. Stiedry's tempi have a tendency to fall slightly behind everybody else's and they did once more on Saturday. But "Parsifal" isn't exactly a track meet, so the slackened pace almost served to heighten the devotional mood.

Except for his propulsive way of hurling top-tones, Set Svanholm was again an impressive Parsifal. Margaret Harshaw sang Kundry with depth of feeling, and Otto Edelmann was an excellent new Gurnemanz—a hard role to stay awake with.

Compliments for good taste and style are also in order for Paul Schoeffler (Amfortas), Nicola Moscona (Titurel), and Gerhard Pechner (Klingsor). Herbert Graf rates praise for the persuasive piety of the staging.

Composer Martinu Wins Critics' Prize

The three C's of music—conductor, composer and critic—linked arms in a prize-awarding ceremony on the stage of Carnegie Hall Saturday afternoon.

The occasion was the regular matinee visit of the Boston Symphony; the conductor was Charles Munch; the composer was Bohuslav Martinu, whose Sixth Symphony was being repeated as last year's prize-winning score.

Presenting the citation on behalf of the Music Critics Circle was chairman Miles Kastendieck, New York Journal-American critic.

In a brief and gracious speech, Mr. Kastendieck made the award to Mr. Martinu for "the symphonic work of most outstanding excellence performed in this city for the first time during the year 1955."

The work, which was commissioned by the Boston Symphony for its 75th anniversary, was again given a vivid and glowing reading fully exploring its vast fund of fresh idea and somber poetry.

L. B.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
Circ. D. 336,443 - S. 528,253

MAR 26 1956

2 Czech Works Mark Final Boston Orchestra Concert

By Francis D. Perkins

Two works by composers of Czech origin, both partly written in the United States, occupied most of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's last New York concert of the season under Charles Munch's direction Saturday afternoon in Carnegie Hall. Bohuslav Martinu listened to his "Fantaisies Symphoniques" (Symphony No. 6) and then went to the stage to receive the award of the New York Music Critics' Circle for the most outstanding orchestral composition introduced here in 1955. After the intermission the musicians reassembled to play Dvorak's Cello Concerto in B minor, with Leonard Rose as the soloist.

The Circle's chairman, Miles Kastendieck of "The New York Journal-American," gave the illustrated award scroll to Mr. Martinu after a short congratulatory speech. Yesterday's performance was the fourth here of the "Fantaisies Symphoniques," which was the first to be made public of the fifteen works commissioned for this orchestra's seventy-fifth anniversary. The Bostonians had played it in both Carnegie Hall series last season, and introduced it to Brooklyn last Friday night.

Balance of Moods

Reheard, it continues to be impressive. The sense of emotional impact may be somewhat lessened by a repetition, but it has a pervasive emotional persuasion which corresponds to its expressive range and breadth. A balance between darkness and light in its moods and musical hues seemed more apparent than before; the first statement of the broad lyric theme of Slavic savor which makes several later appearances in differing guises emerged luminously while orchestral clouds dissolved.

"Fantaisies" is an appropriate designation, both for the atmosphere and the structure; the latter is episodic, rather than a steady progress to a predictable close. But the work holds attention throughout, with its imagination, coherence of musical ideas and masterly orchestration. Mr. Munch and his musicians fully revealed its instrumental and expressive resources in a performance of both vivid and subtle color, complete clarity and emotional intentness.

After 60 Years

Dvorak's cello concerto, which had its premiere sixty years (plus six days) ago, again seemed melodically spacious, structurally well ordered; generally gratifying, while slightly on the lengthy side. Mr. Rose, always the sure master of its technical demands, played it with appealingly lyric, warm, fluent and lucid tone, apart from a few athletic measures; there were only a few transient exceptions in his disclosure of the music's moods and atmosphere. The orchestral share of the performance was laudable, especially for its dynamic proportions. Beethoven's "Coriolanus" Overture had a satisfying interpretation at the start of the concert; the three familiar dances from Manuel de Falla's "The Three Cornered Hat" had a vigorous, but rather overweighted performance at the close.

The orchestra under Mr. Munch will be back at Carnegie Hall next season for the usual Wednesday night and Saturday afternoon series of five concerts each, Nov. 14 to March 23.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
Circ. D. 336,443 - S. 528,253

MAR 25 1956

2 Czech Works Mark Final Boston Orchestra Concert

By Francis D. Perkins

Two works by composers of Czech origin, both partly written in the United States, occupitd most of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's last New York concert of the season under Charles Munch's direction yesterday afternoon in Carnegie Hall. Bohuslav Martinu listened to his "Fantaisies Symphoniques" (Symphony No. 6) and then came tot the stage to receive the award of the New York Music Critics' Circle for the most outstanding orchestral composition introduced here in 1955. After the intermissions the musicians reassembled to play Dvorak's Cello Concerto in B minor, witb Leonard Rose as the soloist.

The Circle's chairman, Miles Kastendieck of "The New York Journal-American," gave the illustrated award scroll to Mr. Martinu after a short congratulatory speech. Yesterday's performance was the fourth here of the "Fantaisies Symphoniques," which was the first to be made public of the fifteen works commissioned for this orchestra's seventy-fifth anniversary. The Bostonians had played it in both Carnegie Hall series last season, and introduced it to Brooklyn last Friday night.

Balance of Moods

Reheard, it continues to be impressive. The sense of emotional impact may be somewhat lessened by a repetition, but it has a pervasive emotional persuasion which corresponds to its expressive range and breadth. A balance between darkness and light in its moods and musical hues seemed more apparent than before; the first statement of the broad lyric theme of Slavic savor which makes several later appearances in differing guises emereged luminously while orchestral clouds dissolved.

"Fantaisies" is an appropriate designation, both for the atmosphere and the structure; the latter is episodic, rather than a steady progress to a predictable close. But the work holds attention throughout, with its imagination, coherence of musical iedas and masterly orchestration. Mr. Munch and his musicians fully revealed its instrumental and expressive resources in a performance of both vivid and subtle color, complete clarity and emotional intentness.

After 60 Years

Dvorak's cello concerto, which had its premiere sixty years (plus six days) ago, again seemed melodically spacious, structurally well ordered; generally gratifying, while slightly on the lengthy side. Mr. Rose, always the sure master of its technical demands, played it with appealingly lyric, warm, fluent and lucid tone, apart from a few athletic measures; there were only a few transient exceptions in his disclosure of the music's moods and atmosphere. The orchestral share of the performance as laudable, especially for its dynamic proportions. Beethoven's "Coriolanus" Overture had a satisfying interpretation at the start of the concert; the three familiar dances from Manuel de Falla's "The Three Cornered Hat" had a vigorous, but rather overweighted performance at the close.

The orchestra under Mr. Munch will be back at Carnegie Hall next season for the usual Wednesday night and Saturday afternoon series of five concerts each, Nov. 14 to March 23.

Eagle (e)
CLAREMONT, N. H.
Independent
Circ. 8,780

MAR 26 1956

Music Festival's Dramatic Close Attracts 1800

The New England Music Festival came to a dramatic close here Saturday when the orchestra, chorus and band played to about 1800 people in the afternoon and evening concerts.

The concerts were oustandingly good, with the young musicians turning in performances of professional quality.

Dr. Moshe Paranov, conductor, returning for a final bow with the orchestra at the conclusion of its opening portion of the program expressed the feeling of many when, indicating the orchestra, he said, "You are looking at the future Boston Symphony orchestra."

The matinee drew about 550 people but the evening performance filled the auditorium-gymnasium with an audience estimated at 1250.

Dr. Paranov, who is director of the Julius Hartt Musical Foundation and is a well-known pianist as well as conductor, teacher and recitalist, led the orchestra, composed of talented high school instrumentalists from all over New England, through a varied program and brought forth polished interpretations. Selections included "Overture to Rosamunde," (Schubert - Weaver); Mozart's "Allegro — Eine Kleine Nachtmusick" for string orchestra; "Song of Jupiter" (Handel-Anderson); "A Tribute to Romberg" (MacLean) and "American Salute" (Gould).

The New England Festival chorus of some 221 voices gave an equally accomplished performance with John D. Raymond of Lafayette college as conductor. The group demonstrated the scope of its talent in a program which ranged from Bach to modern arrangements. Particular favorites with the audience were "Hospodi Pomilui" (Lvovsky), the negro spirtual, "I Hear A Voice A-Prayin' " (Bright), "A Melodic Caravan" of popular songs arranged by Wilson, and an appealing modern arrangement of "Red Wing" by Simeone.

The lovely "Sheep May Safely Graze" by Bach, "Heavenly Light" by Kopylow, "One God" arranged by Ringwald, and "America the Beautiful" arranged by Peery were also well line, and the chorus presentation was climaxed by "The Creation" by Richter.

The festival band thrilled the audience with its interpretation of "Chorale and Alleluia," by Hanson. Keith Wilson of Yale university, conductor, explained that most such music, written especially for band, is so difficult that only the most accomplished groups may try it, testifying to the skill of the New England Concert band of 1956.

The remainder of the band's selections, although somewhat eclipsed by the "Chorale and Alleluia," were well-played and included Bach's "Prelude and Fugue in F Minor," "Suite No. III" (Fischer), "Trumpet [illegible]

Union Leader (m)
MANCHESTER, N. H.
Independent
Circ. 43,546

MAR 26 1956

Three Recordings Over 50 Years Become Unit

BOSTON — (UP) — A recording commemorating the 75th anniversary season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra features the group playing the same piece under the batons of three conductors.

Three recordings of Berlioz' "Hungarian March" made over a period of nearly half a century were dubbed together electronically to sound as one continuous performance.

Karl Muck, who became conductor in 1906, starts the march. The late Serge Koussevitzky "takes over" in the middle section and Charles Munch, the present director concludes the piece.

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 106,753

MAR 25 1956

BOSTON SYMPHONY IN MARTINU WORK

Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the "Fantaisies Symphoniques" by Bohuslav Martinu, tomorrow (NBC Radio, 8.15 p. m., EST). This work, which is Martinu's sixth symphony, was [illegible] usic new 5. Bos- 5th ied. ec- to; lle- ith an-

Argus (e)
MONTPELIER, Vt.
Independent
Circ. 4,977

MAR 26 1956

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 397,884

MAR 26 1956

SYMPHONY PLAYS BACH 'PASSION'

Charles Munch will conduct Bach's "Passion According to Saint John" at the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this week. The matinee concert will be given on Thursday afternoon instead of Friday (Good Friday). The evening concert will remain on Saturday. Assisting in the performances will be the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, with Adele Addison, soprano; Betty Allen, mezzo-soprano; David Lloyd, tenor; and Mac Morgan and James Joyce, basses.

An extra open rehearsal is scheduled for this Wednesday evening, March 28, at 7:30. Proceeds will benefit the pension fund.

Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Republican
Circ. 130,826

MAR 25 1956

Boston Symphony Plays Here April 4

Unable to come to Hartford for a scheduled concert March 19, because of severe blizzard conditions, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be here on Wednesday, April 4, to perform the postponed concert in the Bushnell Memorial. The event will be the final concert in this season's Bushnell Symphony Series.

Holders of tickets for the March 19 date will use the same ticket on April 4 when they will be honored at the Bushnell. A limited number of seats for the concert are available, it has been announced at the Bushnell box office.

Music Teacher Dies In Dublin

BOSTON (AP) — George L. Foote, 70, of Dublin, N.H., music teacher and composer of symphony music, died yesterday at a hospital after a long illness.

A former resident of Boston, he was president of the South End Music Center for 19 years. He was a senior warden, organist and choir-master at the Emmanuel Church, Dublin.

One of his compositions, "Little Symphony," was played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1940, another, "We Go Forward," was played in town hall, New York, in 1941.

30

NEW YORK, N. Y.
World-Telegram & Sun
Circ. D. 518,809 - Sat. 172,502

MAR 26 1956

Music

Met Presents 'Parsifal' With New Scenery

By LOUIS BIANCOLLI.

A spacious mood of pious meditation settled on the Metropolitan audience Saturday afternoon with the season's first hearing of Wagner's "Parsifal."

One of the greatest musical works ever inspired by a religious theme, the opera unwound its generous length in a deeply reverent performance conducted by Fritz Stiedry.

On the scenic side the production was a completely new one, the designer being Leo Kerz, most recently remembered for his work on the San Francisco premiere of Walton's "Troilus and Cressida" last autumn.

Mr. Kerz's innovations were mostly on the side of austere dignity and the imaginative use of lighting devices to create illusions of awesome mystery and miracle.

Whether the high priests of the Wagner cult would approve of every aspect of Mr. Kerz's centralized staging is doubtful. I rather liked it for its concentrated vision.

Certainly the scenery is a welcome change from the Joseph Urban sets in use at the Met since 1920. It was refreshing to have something new to watch along with something old to hear.

Mr. Stiedry's tempi have a tendency to fall slightly behind everybody else's and they did once more on Saturday. But "Parsifal" isn't exactly a track meet, so the slackened pace almost served to heighten the devotional mood.

Except for his propulsive way of hurling top-tones, Set Svanholm was again an impressive Parsifal. Margaret Harshaw sang Kundry with depth of feeling, and Otto Edelmann was an excellent new Gurnemanz—a hard role to stay awake with.

Compliments for good taste and style are also in order for Paul Schoeffler (Amfortas), Nicola Moscona (Titurel), and Gerhard Pechner (Klingsor). Herbert Graf rates praise for the persuasive piety of the staging.

Composer Martinu Wins Critics' Prize

The three C's of music—conductor, composer and critic—linked arms in a prize-awarding ceremony on the stage of Carnegie Hall Saturday afternoon.

The occasion was the regular matinee visit of the Boston Symphony; the conductor was Charles Munch; the composer was Bohuslav Martinu, whose Sixth Symphony was being repeated as last year's prize-winning score.

Presenting the citation on behalf of the Music Critics Circle was chairman Miles Kastendieck, New York Journal-American critic.

In a brief and gracious speech, Mr. Kastendieck made the award to Mr. Martinu for "the symphonic work of most outstanding excellence performed in this city for the first time during the year 1955."

The work, which was commissioned by the Boston Symphony for its 75th anniversary, was again given a vivid and glowing reading fully exploring its vast fund of fresh idea and somber poetry.

L. B.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
Circ. D. 336,443 - S. 528,253

MAR 26 1956

2 Czech Works Mark Final Boston Orchestra Concert

By Francis D. Perkins

Two works by composers of Czech origin, both partly written in the United States, occupied most of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's last New York concert of the season under Charles Munch's direction Saturday afternoon in Carnegie Hall. Bohuslav Martinu listened to his "Fantaisies Symphoniques" (Symphony No. 6) and then went to the stage to receive the award of the New York Music Critics' Circle for the most outstanding orchestral composition introduced here in 1955. After the intermission the musicians reassembled to play Dvorak's Cello Concerto in B minor, with Leonard Rose as the soloist.

The Circle's chairman, Miles Kastendieck of "The New York Journal-American," gave the illustrated award scroll to Mr. Martinu after a short congratulatory speech. Yesterday's performance was the fourth here of the "Fantaisies Symphoniques," which was the first to be made public of the fifteen works commissioned for this orchestra's seventy-fifth anniversary. The Bostonians had played it in both Carnegie Hall series last season, and introduced it to Brooklyn last Friday night.

Balance of Moods

Reheard, it continues to be impressive. The sense of emotional impact may be somewhat lessened by a repetition, but it has a pervasive emotional persuasion which corresponds to its expressive range and breadth. A balance between darkness and light in its moods and musical hues seemed more apparent than before; the first statement of the broad lyric theme of Slavic savor which makes several later appearances in differing guises emerged luminously while orchestral clouds dissolved.

"Fantaisies" is an appropriate designation, both for the atmosphere and the structure; the latter is episodic, rather than a steady progress to a predictable close. But the work holds attention throughout, with its imagination, coherence of musical ideas and masterly orchestration. Mr. Munch and his musicians fully revealed its instrumental and expressive resources in a performance of both vivid and subtle color, complete clarity and emotional intentness.

After 60 Years

Dvorak's cello concerto, which had its premiere sixty years (plus six days) ago, again seemed melodically spacious, structurally well ordered; generally gratifying, while slightly on the lengthy side. Mr. Rose, always the sure master of its technical demands, played it with appealingly lyric, warm, fluent and lucid tone, apart from a few athletic measures; there were only a few transient exceptions in his disclosure of the music's moods and atmosphere. The orchestral share of the performance was laudable, especially for its dynamic proportions. Beethoven's "Coriolanus" Overture had a satisfying interpretation at the start of the concert; the three familiar dances from Manuel de Falla's "The Three Cornered Hat" had a vigorous, but rather overweighted performance at the close.

The orchestra under Mr. Munch will be back at Carnegie Hall next season for the usual Wednesday night and Saturday afternoon series of five concerts each, Nov. 14 to March 23.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
Circ. D. 336,443 - S. 528,253

MAR 25 1956

2 Czech Works Mark Final Boston Orchestra Concert

By Francis D. Perkins

Two works by composers of Czech origin, both partly written in the United States, occupitd most of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's last New York concert of the season under Charles Munch's direction yesterday afternoon in Carnegie Hall. Bohuslav Martinu listened to his "Fantaisies Symphoniques" (Symphony No. 6) and then came tot the stage to receive the award of the New York Music Critics' Circle for the most outstanding orchestral composition introduced here in 1955. After the intermissions the musicians reassembled to play Dvorak's Cello Concerto in B minor, with Leonard Rose as the soloist.

The Circle's chairman, Miles Kastendieck of "The New York Journal-American," gave the illustrated award scroll to Mr. Martinu after a short congratulatory speech. Yesterday's performance was the fourth here of the "Fantaisies Symphoniques," which was the first to be made public of the fifteen works commissioned for this orchestra's seventy-fifth anniversary. The Bostonians had played it in both Carnegie Hall series last season, and introduced it to Brooklyn last Friday night.

Balance of Moods

Reheard, it continues to be impressive. The sense of emotional impact may be somewhat lessened by a repetition, but it has a pervasive emotional persuation which corresponds to its expressive range and breadth. A balance between darkness and light in its moods and musical hues seemed more apparent than before; the first statement of the broad lyric theme of Slavic savor which makes several later appearances in differing guises emereged luminously while orchestral clouds dissolved.

"Fantaisies" is an appropriate designation, both for the atmosphere and the structure; the latter is episodic, rather than a steady progress to a predictable close. But the work holds attention throughout, with its imagination, coherence of musical iedas and masterly orchestration. Mr. Munch and his musicians fully revealed its instrumental and expressive resources in a performance of both vivid and subtle color, complete clarity and emotional intentness.

After 60 Years

Dvorak's cello concerto, which had its premiere sixty years (plus six days) ago, again seemed melodically spacious, structurally well ordered; generally gratifying, while slightly on the lengthy side. Mr. Rose, always the sure master of its technical demands, played it with appealingly lyric, warm, fluent and lucid tone, apart from a few athletic measures; there were only a few transient exceptions in his disclosure of the music's moods and atmosphere. The orchestral share of the performance as laudable, especially for its dynamic proportions. Beethoven's "Coriolanus" Overture had a satisfying interpretation at the start of the concert; the three familiar dances from Manuel de Falla's "The Three Cornered Hat" had a vigorous, but rather overweighted performance at the close.

The orchestra under Mr. Munch will be back at Carnegie Hall next season for the usual Wednesday night and Saturday afternoon series of five concerts each, Nov. 14 to March 23.

Eagle (e)
CLAREMONT, N. H.
Independent
Circ. 8,780

MAR 26 1956

Music Festival's Dramatic Close Attracts 1800

The New England Music Festival came to a dramatic close here Saturday when the orchestra, chorus and band played to about 1800 people in the afternoon and evening concerts.

The concerts were oustandingly good, with the young musicians turning in performances of professional quality.

Dr. Moshe Paranov, conductor, returning for a final bow with the orchestra at the conclusion of its opening portion of the program expressed the feeling of many when, indicating the orchestra, he said, "You are looking at the future Boston Symphony orchestra."

The matinee drew about 550 people but the evening performance filled the auditorium-gymnasium with an audience estimated at 1250.

Dr. Paranov, who is director of the Julius Hartt Musical Foundation and is a well-known pianist as well as conductor, teacher and recitalist, led the orchestra, composed of talented high school instrumentalists from all over New England, through a varied program and brought forth polished interpretations. Selections included "Overture to Rosamunde," (Schubert - Weaver); Mozart's "Allegro — Eine Kleine Nacht-

[redacted]

ar of Merrill residence and (Bizet), "Beguiner's Luck" (Wilder) and "Father of Victory March" (Ganne).

Special note should be made of the impressive percussion sections of both band and orchestra.

C. W. McK.

Union Leader (m)
MANCHESTER, N. H.
Independent
Circ. 43,546

MAR 26 1956

Three Recordings Over 50 Years Become Unit

BOSTON — (UP) — A recording commemorating the 75th anniversary season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra features the group playing the same piece under the batons of three conductors.

Three recordings of Berlioz' "Hungarian March" made over a period of nearly half a century were dubbed together electronically to sound as one continuous performance.

Karl Muck, who became conductor in 1906, starts the march. The late Serge Koussevitzky "takes over" in the middle section and Charles Munch, the present director concludes the piece.

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 106,753

MAR 25 1956

BOSTON SYMPHONY IN MARTINU WORK

Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the "Fantaisies Symphoniques" by Bohuslav Martinu, tomorrow (NBC Radio, 8.15 p. m., EST). This work, which is Martinu's sixth symphony, was chosen by the New York Music Critics Circle as the best new orchestral work played in 1955.

It was introduced by the Boston Symphony, for whose 75th anniversary it was composed. The spmphony is in three section: (a) lento, allegro, lento; (b) allegro; and (c) lento, allegro.

The program will open with Beethoven's dramatic "Coriolanus Overture."

Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Republican
Circ. 130,826

MAR 25 1956

Boston Symphony Plays Here April 4

Unable to come to Hartford for a scheduled concert March 19, because of severe blizzard conditions, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be here on Wednesday, April 4, to perform the postponed concert in the Bushnell Memorial. The event will be the final concert in this season's Bushnell Symphony Series.

Holders of tickets for the March 19 date will use the same ticket on April 4 when they will be honored at the Bushnell. A limited number of seats for the concert are available, it has been announced at the Bushnell box office.

Argus (e)
MONTPELIER, Vt.
Independent
Circ. 4,977

MAR 26 1956

Music Teacher Dies In Dublin

BOSTON (AP) — George L. Foote, 70, of Dublin, N.H., music teacher and composer of symphony music, died yesterday at a hospital after a long illness.

A former resident of Boston, he was president of the South End Music Center for 19 years. He was a senior warden, organist and choir-master at the Emmanuel Church, Dublin.

One of his compositions, "Little Symphony," was played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1940, another, "We Go Forward," was played in town hall, New York, in 1941.

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 397,884

MAR 26 1956

SYMPHONY PLAY BACH 'PASSIO

Charles Munch will co Bach's "Passion Accordin Saint John" at the concerts Boston Symphony Orchestr week. The matinee concer be given on Thursday afte instead of Friday (Good F The evening concert will on Saturday. Assisting in formances will be the H Glee Club and Radcliffe Society, with Adele Addi prano; Betty Allen, m prano; David Lloyd, ten Mac Morgan and Jame basses.

An extra open rehe scheduled for this W evening, March 28, at 7 ceeds will benefit the fund.

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 185,401

MAR 27 1956

My Boston

By ALAN FRAZER

I SEND my love letters
By larks on the wing;
My love sends me letters
When nightingales sing.

"Without reading or writing
Their burden we know;
They only say, 'Love me,
Who love you so.'"
—ANDREW LANG, "French Peasant Song."

Lots for Sale, 'Dirt Cheap'

MIXED GRILL.—The Florida real estate boom has never ended. Between Fort Meyers and Sarasota, for example, you can buy a house lot for as little as $1 down and $1 a week . . . According to RUTH BEDROSSIAN, her home town, Belmont, does things the hard way. It had to have a U. S. ambassador, a Presidential heart specialist and a GRACE KELLY bridesmaid-to-be before it gets a dial system, next month . . . The Boston Symphony Orchestra will fly over via KLM, Royal Dutch Airlines, for its European triumphs this summer . . . The Duchess of WINDSOR writes, in McCall's, that an astrologer rightly predicted three marriages for her and "considerable power of some kind" between the ages of 40 and 50 . . . The seer also predicted she would "die unexpectedly and in an unusual place." Remains to be seen.

Marciano Fan Goes Poetic

COLUMBIA'S new picture, "The Harder They Fall," which stars HUMPHREY BOGART, gives the fight "game" a rough going over. But in spite of the current exposures, a champion like Brockton's pride, ROCKY MARCIANO, will always retain an army of loyal fans. Among them is a reader, PARKE GRINDELL of Bath, Me. His wide-eyed admiration of Rocky led him to mail the following tribute:

"He powered his way to the apex of fame,
He's rough and he's tough and can sock;
His record speaks volumes, you all know his name,
He's known to the world as 'The Rock.'

"In two of his battles, he rose from the floor
And, though bloodied, he rallied his camp;
He charged back to kayo both WALCOTT and MOORE—
The mark of a truly great champ!

"His strength is prodigious, his courage renown,
He's a block-buster, pile-driver, scythe;
He's never been beaten, the Toast of the Town,
He's really a wonderful guy.

"So, here's a salute to a truly great king,
Though a power, he's humble, sincere;
Let's honor this two-fisted man of the ring
And fling him our costliest gear!"

'Forgiveness Is Fragrance'

THE MENTOR, published by the inmates of State Prison, is out in a new format—that of a newspaper instead of a magazine—in the prison's new location. The contents, however, will be much the same as in the past. Vol. 1, No. 1 of the new Mentor carries a rare quotation from MARK TWAIN: "Forgiveness is the fragrance the violet sheds on the heel that crushes it."

Of the thousands who have written to the Shubert Theater for seats for "The Most Happy Fella," many have grasped the chance to work that title into their requests. "If you'll fill this mail-order, you'll make me 'The Most Happy Fella,'" is the burden of their pleas . . . Author-composer FRANK LOESSER is to cut 10 minutes more out of this show before Broadway.

Our Food Is Defended

BAND-LEADER AL DONAHUE phoned in to defend New England's dietary habits in the controversy that has been raging. Al, a product of Dorchester but making his home in California, has visited all the states of the Union, many times over. "New England's the best for food, especially in hotels and restaurants," said Al. "It's cooked better, for one thing; and there's a greater variety of vegetables" . . . Al didn't mention that he raises avocadoes—which haven't yet caught-on here in a big way.

I'll have to blame RUBY NEWMAN for this error: MRS. ANN SWIADON of Dorchester, whose son, Bob, is among Ruby's musicians at The Whitehall, Palm Beach, writes me that it's not she but BOB MILLER'S mother who is down there. Ruby got the two Bobs mixed-up . . . But he's forgiven. He and Mrs. Newman were the greatest of hosts during an evening I spent at The Whitehall.

'Mr. Wonderful' Proves It

A BOW TO SAMMY DOVIS, JR., for keeping the WILL MASTIN Trio intact when he went into his Broadway legit vehicle, "Mr. Wonderful." The trio comprises the youthful Sammy, his aging father and oldster uncle. They broke Sammy in when he was a mere tot. The trio played Chinese restaurants here—at lunch time. To cover the law and give Sammy a start, they claimed he was a midget. Now the trio is given top-billing, even over the star, Sammy, himself. That's Sammy's doing. Such loyalty is rare in show business.

TIM KELLY of Lynn wrote and directed "Bright Boy," which was produced last week at Emerson College and which will be presented in summer theaters under another name, "The Bigger They Come" . . . "The Harder They Fall" should be a sequel.

ISOBEL GRASSIE of the Cohasset Dramatic Club is not only rehearsing for a principal role in "Bell, Book and Candle," to be presented at Town Hall, April 13-14, but directing "The King's Balcony" for the Hingham Children's Theater, April 27-28.

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,872

MAR 27 1956

– Fiedler Talks About His Tour

1-56

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 27,538

MAR 27 1956

BSO Recording Spans 50 Years

BOSTON (UP) — A recording commemorating the 75th anniversary season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra features the group playing the same piece under the batons of three conductors.

Three recordings of Berlioz "Hungarian March" made over a period of nearly half a century were dubbed together electronically to sound as one continuous performance.

Karl Muck, who became conductor in 1906, starts the march. The late Serge Koussevitzky "takes over" in the middle section and Charles Munch, the present director, concludes the piece.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
NEWS
Circ. D. 138,778

MAR 29 1956

HARMONIOUS NOTE

THE National Symphony Orchestra Association embarks next season upon a new concert format.

The association has discarded the 20-concert Odd and Even series in favor of 15 pair of concerts, including two pair by the Philadelphia Orchestra and one by the Boston Symphony.

This series change is a drastic break with tradition. Some concertgoers have been pessimistic, and suspect the visiting orchestras are being set up for a freeze-out. The visiting orchestras, however, have given the plan whole hearted approval.

The community has a considerable stake in the National Symphony, founded amid such hardships by Dr. Hans Kindler 25 years ago.

The new series arrangement—giving the same program on Tuesday and Wednesday—will allow conductor Howard Mitchell to devote more time to rehearsal. This should improve the orchestra and make it possible for works to be played that cannot be properly prepared under the present schedule.

The National Symphony is gambling that the 15-pair series will lead to bigger and better seasons. It's up to Washington concert-goers to make that gamble pay off.

Enterprise (e)
MARLBORO, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 5,165

MAR 29 1956

THREE RECORDINGS OVER 50 YEARS BECOME UNIT

Boston—(UP) — A recording commemorating the 75th anniversary season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra features the group playing the same piece under the batons of three conductors.

Three recordings of Berlioz' "Hungarian March" made over a period of nearly half a century were dubbed together electronically to sound as one continuous performance.

Karl Muck, who became conductor in 1906, starts the march. The late Serge Koussevitzky "takes over" in the middle section and Charles Munch, the present director, concludes the piece.

Conductor Completes Series Of Coast-to-Coast Concerts

Arthur Fiedler believes he has achieved a record of some kind for taking an orchestra on a transcontinental tour. At least he is willing to challenge anyone to produce a set of figures that equals—or exceeds—what he chalked up while making his fourth annual journey with the Boston Pops Tour Orchestra.

The genial, sun-tanned conductor, just back from a trek of 13,700 miles, came to Symphony Hall yesterday to talk things over with the press. The figures are simply stated: he conducted 81 concerts in 83 days in 79 cities in 22 states and Canada. He did not miss a concert, nor was he even late.

This was his first coast-to-coast tour. He had good weather all the way (until he returned to Boston, he said). In one instance in California there was an earthquake not long after they left the area. The men of the orchestra traveled in two busses, while Mr. Fiedler drove his own car. In the mountains of Washington State the snow was piled so high on either side of the road they could not see over it. They were compelled by law to use chains.

He said that his audiences (which nearly always filled the auditoriums) were very much alike, though he noted a distinct difference between adult audiences and collegiate groups, the latter being more alert in their responses. He had prepared two-and-a-half programs for the tour, and he said that it was not at all dull to play the same music night after night. On the contrary, it always presented a stimulating challenge.

Ruth Slenczynska, San Francisco pianist, was his soloist for the third consecutive season. She played two works — the Mendelssohn G minor Concerto and the Rachmaninov Fantasy on a Theme of Paganini.

One of Mr. Fiedler's favorite encore numbers was a Bach fugue, which always made a hit. "A tour like this," he said, "makes a lot of friends for music."

H. R.

International Fund

Herald News (e)
FALL RIVER, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 39,447

MAR 29 1956

Symphony Felicitated

[SPECIAL TO THE HERALD NEWS]

BOSTON — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, observing its Diamond Jubilee, was congratulated on its 75th anniversary in a resolution adopted by the Senate. The resolution cited the international reputation of the musical organization.

Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE. Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 26,246

MAR 29 1956

SYMPHONY — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, observing its Diamond Jubilee, was congratulated on its 75th birthday in a resolution adopted by the Senate. The resolution cited the international reputation of the musical organization.

Post (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 285,839

MAR 30 1956

Music Review

By TUCKER KEISER

For this week end pair of concerts, Charles Munch has revived the practice of presenting one of the Bach Passions appropriate to the Easter season. Yesterday we had the "St. John Passion." Soloists included a number of B.S.O. regulars, Adele Addison, Mac Morgan, David Lloyd and James Joyce. Not so familiar was Betty Allen, who sang the alto part. The Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society contributed the choral passages.

The orchestra made several ragged entrances, the singers developed pitch trouble, Mr. Morgan got left behind in his "Haste, Haste" aria, and Miss Allen, who by the way has a very lovely contralto, appeared quite timid about her songs.

I feel confident, however, that Saturday night's performance will go much more smoothly.

As it was, there were many effective moments in yesterday's "St. John." Mr. Munch built the opening chorus to towering proportions and created a sense of magnificent repose in the closing "Lie still, O sacred limbs." The short dramatic choruses, which make the "St. John" infinitely more theatrical than the "St. Matthew," had genuine drive and bite as sung by the Harvard-Radcliffe choristers. The conductor no longer demands that the stately chorales be crooned as he once did. Indeed, these were some of the finest moments of the performance, full-throated but infinitely expressive.

It might be well for Mr. Munch to restore some of the passages and arias he has now cut and to take out some he now includes. "Beloved Saviour" instead of "Ah! My Soul" and "Lord Jesus, Ah! Thy Bitter Pain" for "Haste, Haste" would be rewarding.

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,872

MAR 31 1956

Music News

Leonard Bernstein, who has not conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Boston since the 1951-52 season, will appear as guest conductor for the open rehearsal in Symphony Hall Thursday evening at 7:30, and for the four subsequent concerts—Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, April 6-7; Sunday afternoon, April 8; and Tuesday evening, April 10.

Appearing with Mr. Bernstein as piano soloist will be Jesús María Sanromá, who will be heard in the Capriccio for Piano and Orchestra by Stravinsky. Mr. Bernstein also will conduct Mozart's Symphony in A major, No. 29; the Variations for Orchestra by Robert Moevs (first performances by this orchestra); and Prokofiev's Symphony No. 5. He will conduct the same program at all concerts.

87
New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Mattapan Tribune
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 8,500

MAR 29 1956

Hyde Park Tribune
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 9100

MAR 29 1956

Dorchester Citizen
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 29,300

MAR 29 1956

Jamaica Plain Citizen
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 11,800

MAR 29 1956

Roxbury Citizen
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 19,000 Free

MAR 29 1956

Dorchester Argus-News
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 22,195

MAR 29 1956

INDUSTRY HELPS BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA — Seventy-five years ago when the Boston Symphony Orchestra began its career, and for nearly forty years afterward, only one wealthy man —its founder, Henry Lee Higginson—made up its deficits. He could foresee its contribution to Boston's culture and musical knowledge. Today the tax situation being what it is, the Boston Symphony Orchestra is relying more and more on industry for help. An example of this cooperation is the outdoor advertisement contributed by Boston Envelope Company of Dedham to commemorate the 75th anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Here Charles Munch, conductor of the orchestra, and Henry B. Cabot, President of Board of Trustees, are approving a sketch of the outdoor tribute being shown them by James G. MacDonald, Vice-President of Boston Envelope Company. The outdoor spectacular is to be erected at the junction of the Riverview and Brookline avenue in Boston.

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
Circ. D. 86,944 - S. 130,826

APR 1 1956

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 130,559

MAR 30 1956

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, gave the 20th program of the season in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, performing Bach's "Passion According to St. John." The soloists were David Lloyd tenor; Mac Morgan, bass; Adele Addison, soprano; Betty Allen, contralto, James Joyce, bass; Alfred Zighera, viola da gamba. Assisting were Daniel Pinkham, harpsichord; Edouard Niewa-Berger, organ and the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society.

By RUDOLPH ELIE

The wonders of Bach's Passion According to St. John are almost beyond comprehension in the limitless glories of the music itself but even more so in the spirit of religious awe this stupendous music-religious work evoke. Indeed if ever there were a divine musical revelation this is it.

It is the third time Mr. Munch, who approaches this music as if it were a musical altar, has performed it since he reintroduced it in his first year in Boston, and while it may be said there were minor flaws in the performance, it rose to a level of emotional communication that held the audience enthralled in a cough-less contact.

Miracle of Form

The work itself is one to contemplate as a miracle of form and expression. Earlier than the more contemplative Passion According to St. Matthew, which gains its momentum from the development of great choral fantasies drawn from the chorales, the St. John Passion is a series of vivid scenes as in a drama. And as the drama is the narrative of Christ's arrest, trial and Crucifixion it is of unparalleled significance.

These scenes sometimes violently intrude on the narrative of the Evangelist, are often mob scenes: the crowd howls Pilate down as he tries to understand its fury; it demands the death of Christ in terrifying outbursts; it accuses and mocks and fall silent only after its murderous mission is accomplished. Between these outbursts are scenes of lyric meditations by personalities viewing the action from the distance of ages, contemplating the tragedy of the action.

These are less liturgical in character with their ornate obligatos but Bach's piety shines through in every line. In the complete version of the work, Bach stalls the movement of the Passion itself with too many arias, and if it weren't for the presence of the Evangelist to pick up the thread a contemporary audience might lose contact. So it is that cuts are not only permissible but obligatory, and it seemed to me that Mr. Munch, who omitted eight or ten numbers not only did just the right thing but chose the right omissions. Even so the running time of this work is well over an hour and a half. Yet so gripping the narrative and so complet the musical communication it didn't seem in the least over long.

Cast of Soloists

The cast of soloists was exceedingly distinguished. David Lloyd's Evangelist is a remarkably effective conception as he conveys, in a fine, clear and beautifully grained tenor, the emotional involvement of the narrator as if he were there. He sang his arias beautifully, too. Adele Addison could not have been more perfect as she captured the poignancy of her arias and Betty Allen sounded well, though she might have had a little more force of expression. Mac Morgan gave the role of Jesus great expressivity, singing in a warm, rich baritone, and James Joyce was a powerful, fine sounding singer in the roles of Peter and Pilate. It may be added that the viola de gamba of Alfred Zighera was of unearthly beauty.

I was not quite so impressed with the chorus in this performance. Its traversal of the music was letter perfect and it had flexibility and tone, but the soprano attacks were occasionally less than we have come to expect of this body of singers and there was imbalance from time to time. Other reservations may be made about the harpsichord in the great lute accompaniment of one of the arias, as it could hardly be heard at all, and about the organ, which ciphered frequently in the first half. Otherwise this was a memorable experience.

Leonard Bernstein returns next week in a program of Mozart, Moeves and Prokofieff. Jesus Maria Sanroma will be the soloist in Stravinsky's Capriccio.

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 185,401

MAR 30 1956

Symphony Favorites To Return

The post-Easter concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to Symphony Hall two musicians long connected with the orchestra but missing in the Boston series of concerts for several seasons.

As the last of this season's great conductors, Leonard Bernstein will conduct the orchestra for the first time since the 1951-52 season. The soloist will be Jesue Maria Sanroma, former official pianist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who last played with the orchestra here in Oct., 1948.

Messrs. Bernstein and Sanroma will appear in all five of the orchestra's series in the Friday afternoon-Saturday evening series (April 6-7); in the Sunday afternoon series Sunday, April 8, and in the Tuesday evening series, April 10.

In addition there will be an Open Rehearsal in Symphony Hall Thursday, at 7:30 p. m., for which admission is open to the general public with proceeds of the ticket sale going to the Pension Fund of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

News (e)
NEWBURYPORT, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 6,504

MAR 30 1956

SYMPHONY—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, observing its Diamond Jubilee, was congratulated on its 75th birthday in a resolution adopted by the Senate. The resolution cited the international reputation of the musical organization.

Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Republican
Circ. 130,826

APR 1 1956

Boston Symphony Offers New Work Here Wednesday

When the Boston Symphony Orchestra comes to the Bushnell Memorial next Wednesday to perform a concert postponed from March 19 because of a blizzard, it will give Connecticut music lovers a first opportunity to hear a new work. Music Director Charles Munch, who will conduct, has included in the program to be played the Sixth Symphony of Walter Piston, a work commissioned by the orchestra in commemoration of its seventy-fifth anniversary this year and never before performed here.

Two classical works will also be included in the program, the Overture - Fantasia from Tchaikovsky's "Romeo and Juliet"; Brahms' Fourth Symphony.

No composer is more typical of New England than Piston, who has achived fame throughout the world as one of the greatest living American writers of fine music. He was born in Maine 62 years ago, summers in Vermont and makes his home in Massachusetts. As a young man he was proficient with the violin and piano that he earned a living in cafes around Boston. Playing in a World War I service band, he learned how to play most wind instruments. Later he taught at Harvard, studied music two years in Paris. It was upon the insistance of Serge Koussevitzky that he first composed serious music.

Boston Symphony Offers New Work Here Wednesday

When the Boston Symphony Orchestra comes to the Bushnell Memorial next Wednesday to perform a concert postponed from March 19 because of a blizzard, it will give Connecticut music lovers a first opportunity to hear a new work. Music Director Charles Munch, who will conduct, has included in the program to be played the Sixth Symphony of Walter Piston, a work commissioned by the orchestra in commemoration of its seventy-fifth anniversary this year and never before performed here.

Two classical works will also be included in the program, the Overture - Fantasia from Tchaikovsky's "Romeo and Juliet"; Brahms' Fourth Symphony.

No composer is more typical of New England than Piston, who has achived fame throughout the world as one of the greatest living American writers of fine music. He was born in Maine 62 years ago, summers in Vermont and makes his home in Massachusetts. As a young man he was proficient with the violin and piano that he earned a living in cafes around Boston. Playing in a World War I service band, he learned how to play most wind instruments. Later he taught at Harvard, studied music two years in Paris. It was upon the insistance of Serge Koussevitzky that he first composed serious music.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 ● RIchmond 2-4200

Super-Right Hams are selected from young, tender, corn-fed porkers . . .
and work. Get set now, for Easter feasting at its best with a Super-Right.

COOKED HAMS

SHANK

Super-Right—Center Slices Included
Shank Half
49¢ LB

Super-Right—Center Slices Included
Butt Half
59¢ LB

Super-Right Tender, Economical Favorite Butt Portion
47¢ LB

Super-Ri
To Bake,
Centerpiece
LB

Delicious
With Ham . . .
OCEAN SPRAY CRANBERRY SAUCE
2 1 LB CANS 37¢

INDUSTRY HELPS BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA — Seventy-five years ago when the Boston Symphony Orchestra began its career, and for nearly forty years afterward, only one wealthy man —its founder, Henry Lee Higginson—made up its deficits. He could foresee its contribution to Boston's culture and musical knowledge. Today the tax situation being what it is, the Boston Symphony Orchestra is relying more and more on industry for help. An example of this cooperation is the outdoor advertisement contributed by Boston Envelope Company of Dedham to commemorate the 75th anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Here Charles Munch, conductor of the orchestra, and Henry B. Cabot, President of Board of Trustees, are approving a sketch of the outdoor tribute being shown them by James G. MacDonald, Vice-President of Boston Envelope Company. The outdoor spectacular is to be erected at the junction of the Riverview and Brookline avenue in Boston.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 130,559

MAR 30 1956

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, gave the 20th program of the season in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, performing Bach's "Passion According to St. John." The soloists were David Lloyd, tenor; Mac Morgan, bass; Adele Addison, soprano; Betty Allen, contralto, James Joyce, bass; Alfred Zighera, viola da gamba. Assisting were Daniel Pinkham, harpsichord; Edouard Niews-Berger, organ and the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society.

By RUDOLPH ELIE

The wonders of Bach's Passion According to St. John are almost beyond comprehension in the limitless glories of the music itself but even more so in the spirit of religious awe this stupendous music-religious work evoke. Indeed if ever there were a divine musical revelation this is it.

It is the third time Mr. Munch, who approaches this music as if it were a musical altar, has performed it since he reintroduced it in his first year in Boston, and while it may be said there were minor flaws in the performance, it rose to a level of emotional communication that held the audience enthralled in a cough-less contact.

Miracle of Form

The work itself is one to contemplate as a miracle of form and expression. Earlier than the more contemplative Passion According to St. Matthew, which gains its momentum from the development of great choral fantasies drawn from the chorales, the St. John Passion is a series of vivid scenes as in a drama. And as the drama is the narrative of Christ's arrest, trial and Crucifixion it is of unparalleled significance.

These scenes sometimes violently intrude on the narrative of the Evangelist, are often mob scenes: the crowd howls Pilate down as he tries to understand its fury; it demands the death of Christ in terrifying outbursts; it accuses and mocks and fall silent only after its murderous mission is accomplished. Between these outbursts are scenes of lyric meditations by personalities viewing the action from the distance of ages, contemplating the tragedy of the action.

These are less liturgical in character with their ornate obligatos but Bach's piety shines through in every line. In the complete version of the work, Bach stalls the movement of the Passion itself with too many arias, and if it weren't for the presence of the Evangelist to pick up the thread a contemporary audience might lose contact. So it is that cuts are not only permissible but obligatory, and it seemed to me that Mr. Munch, who omitted eight or ten numbers not only did just the right thing but chose the right omissions. Even so the running time of this work is well over an hour and a half. Yet so gripping the narrative and so complet the musical communication it didn't seem in the least over long.

Cast of Soloists

The cast of soloists was exceedingly distinguished. David Lloyd's Evangelist is a remarkably effective conception as he conveys, in a fine, clear and beautifully grained tenor, the emotional involvement of the narrator as if he were there. He sang his arias beautifully, too. Adele Addison could not have been more perfect as she captured the poignancy of her arias and Betty Allen sounded well, though she might have had a little more force of expression. Mac Morgan gave the role of Jesus great expressivity, singing in a warm, rich baritone, and James Joyce was a powerful, fine sounding singer in the roles of Peter and Pilate. It may be added that the viola de gamba of Alfred Zighera was of unearthly beauty.

I was not quite so impressed with the chorus in this performance. Its traversal of the music was letter perfect and it had flexibility and tone, but the soprano attacks were occasionally less than we have come to expect of this body of singers and there was imbalance from time to time. Other reservations may be made about the harpsichord in the great lute accompaniment of one of the arias, as it could hardly be heard at all, and about the organ, which ciphered frequently in the first half. Otherwise this was a memorable experience.

Leonard Bernstein returns next week in a program of Mozart, Moeves and Prokofieff. Jesus Maria Sanroma will be the soloist in Stravinsky's Capriccio.

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 185,401

MAR 30 1956

Symphony Favorites To Return

The post-Easter concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to Symphony Hall two musicians long connected with the orchestra but missing in the Boston series of concerts for several seasons.

As the last of this season's great conductors, Leonard Bernstein will conduct the orchestra for the first time since the 1951-52 season. The soloist will be Jesue Maria Sanroma, former official pianist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who last played with the orchestra here in Oct., 1948.

Messrs. Bernstein and Sanroma will appear in all five of the orchestra's series in the Friday afternoon-Saturday evening series (April 6-7); in the Sunday afternoon series Sunday, April 8, and in the Tuesday evening series, April 10.

In addition there will be an Open Rehearsal in Symphony Hall Thursday, at 7:30 p. m., for which admission is open to the general public with proceeds of the ticket sale going to the Pension Fund of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

News (e)
NEWBURYPORT, Mass
Independent Republican
Circ. 6,504

MAR 30 1956

SYMPHONY—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, observing its Diamond Jubilee, was congratulated on its 75th birthday in a resolution adopted by the Senate. The resolution cited the international reputation of the musical organization.

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
Circ. D. 86,944 - S. 130,826

APR 1 1956

Boston Symphony Offers New Work Here Wednesday

When the Boston Symphony Orchestra comes to the Bushnell Memorial next Wednesday to perform a concert postponed from March 19 because of a blizzard, it will give Connecticut music lovers a first opportunity to hear a new work. Music Director Charles Munch, who will conduct, has included in the program to be played the Sixth Symphony of Walter Piston, a work commissioned by the orchestra in commemoration of its seventy-fifth anniversary this year and never before performed here.

Two classical works will also be included in the program, the Overture - Fantasia from Tchaikovsky's "Romeo and Juliet"; Brahms' Fourth Symphony.

No composer is more typical of New England than Piston, who has achived fame throughout the world as one of the greatest living American writers of fine music. He was born in Maine 62 years ago, summers in Vermont and makes his home in Massachusetts. As a young man he was proficient with the violin and piano that he earned a living in cafes around Boston. Playing in a World War I service band, he learned how to play most wind instruments. Later he taught at Harvard, studied music two years in Paris. It was upon the insistance of Serge Koussevitzky that he first composed serious music.

Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Republican
Circ. 130,826

APR 1 1956

Boston Symphony Offers New Work Here Wednesday

When the Boston Symphony Orchestra comes to the Bushnell Memorial next Wednesday to perform a concert postponed from March 19 because of a blizzard, it will give Connecticut music lovers a first opportunity to hear a new work. Music Director Charles Munch, who will conduct, has included in the program to be played the Sixth Symphony of Walter Piston, a work commissioned by the orchestra in commemoration of its seventy-fifth anniversary this year and never before performed here.

Two classical works will also be included in the program, the Overture - Fantasia from Tchaikovsky's "Romeo and Juliet"; Brahms' Fourth Symphony.

No composer is more typical of New England than Piston, who has achived fame throughout the world as one of the greatest living American writers of fine music. He was born in Maine 62 years ago, summers in Vermont and makes his home in Massachusetts. As a young man he was proficient with the violin and piano that he earned a living in cafes around Boston. Playing in a World War I service band, he learned how to play most wind instruments. Later he taught at Harvard, studied music two years in Paris. It was upon the insistance of Serge Koussevitzky that he first composed serious music.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 130,559

MAR 30 1956

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, gave the 20th program of the season in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, performing Bach's "Passion According to St. John." The soloists were David Lloyd tenor; Mac Morgan, bass; Adele Addison, soprano; Betty Allen, contralto, James Joyce, bass; Alfred Zighera, viola da gamba. Assisting were Daniel Pinkham, harpsichord; Edouard Niews-Berger, organ and the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society.

By RUDOLPH ELIE

The wonders of Bach's Passion According to St. John are almost beyond comprehension in the limitless glories of the music itself but even more so in the spirit of religious awe this stupendous music-religious work evoke. Indeed if ever there were a divine musical revelation this is it.

It is the third time Mr. Munch, who approaches this music as if it were a musical altar, has performed it since he reintroduced it in his first year in Boston, and while it may be said there were minor flaws in the performance, it rose to a level of emotional communication that held the audience enthralled in a cough-less contact.

Miracle of Form

The work itself is one to contemplate as a miracle of form and expression. Earlier than the more contemplative Passion According to St. Matthew, which gains its momentum from the development of great choral fantasies drawn from the chorales, the St. John Passion is a series of vivid scenes as in a drama. And as the drama is the narrative of Christ's arrest, trial and Crucifixion it is of unparalleled significance.

These scenes sometimes violently intrude on the narrative of the Evangelist, are often mob scenes: the crowd howls Pilate down as he tries to understand its fury; it demands the death of Christ in terrifying outbursts; it accuses and mocks and fall silent only after its murderous mission is accomplished. Between these outbursts are scenes of lyric meditations by personalities viewing the action from the distance of ages, contemplating the tragedy of the action.

These are less liturgical in character with their ornate obligatos but Bach's piety shines through in every line. In the complete version of the work, Bach stalls the movement of the Passion itself with too many arias, and if it weren't for the presence of the Evangelist to pick up the thread a contemporary audience might lose contact. So it is that cuts are not only permissible but obligatory, and it seemed to me that Mr. Munch, who omitted eight or ten numbers not only did just the right thing but chose the right omissions. Even so the running time of this work is well over an hour and a half. Yet so gripping the narrative and so complet the musical communication it didn't seem in the least over long.

Cast of Soloists

The cast of soloists was exceedingly distinguished. David Lloyd's Evangelist is a remarkably effective conception as he conveys, in a fine, clear and beautifully grained tenor, the emotional involvement of the narrator as if he were there. He sang his arias beautifully, too. Adele Addison could not have been more perfect as she captured the poignancy of her arias and Betty Allen sounded well, though she might have had a little more force of expression. Mac Morgan gave the role of Jesus great expressivity, singing in a warm, rich baritone, and James Joyce was a powerful, fine sounding singer in the roles of Peter and Pilate. It may be added that the viola de gamba of Alfred Zighera was of unearthly beauty.

I was not quite so impressed with the chorus in this performance. Its traversal of the music was letter perfect and it had flexibility and tone, but the soprano attacks were occasionally less than we have come to expect of this body of singers and there was imbalance from time to time. Other reservations may be made about the harpsichord in the great lute accompaniment of one of the arias, as it could hardly be heard at all, and about the organ, which ciphered frequently in the first half. Otherwise this was a memorable experience.

Leonard Bernstein returns next week in a program of Mozart, Moeves and Prokofieff. Jesus Maria Sanroma will be the soloist in Stravinsky's Capriccio.

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 185,401

MAR 30 1956

Symphony Favorites To Return

The post-Easter concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to Symphony Hall two musicians long connected with the orchestra but missing in the Boston series of concerts for several seasons.

As the last of this season's great conductors, Leonard Bernstein will conduct the orchestra for the first time since the 1951-52 season. The soloist will be Jesue Maria Sanroma, former official pianist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who last played with the orchestra here in Oct., 1948.

Messrs. Bernstein and Sanroma will appear in all five of the orchestra's series in the Friday afternoon-Saturday evening series (April 6-7); in the Sunday afternoon series Sunday, April 8, and in the Tuesday evening series, April 10.

In addition there will be an Open Rehearsal in Symphony Hall Thursday, at 7:30 p. m., for which admission is open to the general public with proceeds of the ticket sale going to the Pension Fund of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

INDUSTRY HELPS BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA — Seventy-five years ago when the Boston Symphony Orchestra began its career, and for nearly forty years afterward, only one wealthy man—its founder, Henry Lee Higginson—made up its deficits. He could foresee its contribution to Boston's culture and musical knowledge. Today the tax situation being what it is, the Boston Symphony Orchestra is relying more and more on industry for help. An example of this cooperation is the outdoor advertisement contributed by Boston Envelope Company of Dedham to commemorate the 75th anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Here Charles Munch, conductor of the orchestra, and Henry B. Cabot, President of Board of Trustees, are approving a sketch of the outdoor tribute being shown them by James G. MacDonald, Vice-President of Boston Envelope Company. The outdoor spectacular is to be erected at the junction of the Riverview and Brookline avenue in Boston.

Roxbury Boys Club Anniversary "OPERATION JUVENILE"
The Outstanding Civic Asset of Roxbury, Mass.
VOL. XXII NO. 3
Hard-working Representative Lynch over current legislative goes over current legislative Three weeks. Shown with the mer and James H. Kelly of aker Michael F. Skerry and Bill
SHANK
Super-Right Tender, To Baker,

News (e)
NEWBURYPORT, Mass
Independent Republican
Circ. 6,504

MAR 30 1956

SYMPHONY—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, observing its Diamond Jubilee, was congratulated on its 75th birthday in a resolution adopted by the Senate. The resolution cited the international reputation of the musical organization.

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
Circ. D. 86,944 - S. 130,826

APR 1 1956

Boston Symphony Offers New Work Here Wednesday

When the Boston Symphony Orchestra comes to the Bushnell Memorial next Wednesday to perform a concert postponed from March 19 because of a blizzard, it will give Connecticut music lovers a first opportunity to hear a new work. Music Director Charles Munch, who will conduct, has included in the program to be played the Sixth Symphony of Walter Piston, a work commissioned by the orchestra in commemoration of its seventy-fifth anniversary this year and never before performed here.

Two classical works will also be included in the program, the Overture - Fantasia from Tchaikovsky's "Romeo and Juliet"; Brahms' Fourth Symphony.

No composer is more typical of New England than Piston, who has achived fame throughout the world as one of the greatest living American writers of fine music. He was born in Maine 62 years ago, summers in Vermont and makes his home in Massachusetts. As a young man he was proficient with the violin and piano that he earned a living in cafes around Boston. Playing in a World War I service band, he learned how to play most wind instruments. Later he taught at Harvard, studied music two years in Paris. It was upon the insistance of Serge Koussevitzky that he first composed serious music.

Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Republican
Circ. 130,826

APR 1 1956

Boston Symphony Offers New Work Here Wednesday

When the Boston Symphony Orchestra comes to the Bushnell Memorial next Wednesday to perform a concert postponed from March 19 because of a blizzard, it will give Connecticut music lovers a first opportunity to hear a new work. Music Director Charles Munch, who will conduct, has included in the program to be played the Sixth Symphony of Walter Piston, a work commissioned by the orchestra in commemoration of its seventy-fifth anniversary this year and never before performed here.

Two classical works will also be included in the program, the Overture - Fantasia from Tchaikovsky's "Romeo and Juliet"; Brahms' Fourth Symphony.

No composer is more typical of New England than Piston, who has achived fame throughout the world as one of the greatest living American writers of fine music. He was born in Maine 62 years ago, summers in Vermont and makes his home in Massachusetts. As a young man he was proficient with the violin and piano that he earned a living in cafes around Boston. Playing in a World War I service band, he learned how to play most wind instruments. Later he taught at Harvard, studied music two years in Paris. It was upon the insistance of Serge Koussevitzky that he first composed serious music.

Jamaica Plain Citizen
The Outstanding Civic Asset Of
VOL. XXI NO. 13 JAMAICA PLAIN, MASS.

Boys Club "OPERATION JUVENILE" Anniversary

INDUSTRY HELPS BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA — Seventy-five years ago when the Boston Symphony Orchestra began its career, and for nearly forty years afterward, only one wealthy man —its founder, Henry Lee Higginson—made up its deficits. He could foresee its contribution to Boston's culture and musical knowledge. Today the tax situation being what it is, the Boston Symphony Orchestra is relying more and more on industry for help. An example of this cooperation is the outdoor advertisement contributed by Boston Envelope Company of Dedham to commemorate the 75th anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Here Charles Munch, conductor of the orchestra, and Henry B. Cabot, President of Board of Trustees, are approving a sketch of the outdoor tribute being shown them by James G. MacDonald, Vice-President of Boston Envelope Company. The outdoor spectacular is to be erected at the junction of the Riverview and Brookline avenue in Boston.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 130,559
MAR 30 1956

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, gave the 20th program of the season in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, performing Bach's "Passion According to St. John." The soloists were David Lloyd tenor; Mac Morgan, bass; Adele Addison, soprano; Betty Allen, contralto, James Joyce, bass; Alfred Zighera, viola da gamba. Assisting were Daniel Pinkham, harpsichord; Edouard Niewz-Berger, organ and the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society.

By RUDOLPH ELIE

The wonders of Bach's Passion According to St. John are almost beyond comprehension in the limitless glories of the music itself but even more so in the spirit of religious awe this stupendous music-religious work evoke. Indeed if ever there were a divine musical revelation this is it.

It is the third time Mr. Munch, who approaches this music as if it were a musical altar, has performed it since he reintroduced it in his first year in Boston, and while it may be said there were minor flaws in the performance, it rose to a level of emotional communication that held the audience enthralled in a cough-less contact.

Miracle of Form

The work itself is one to contemplate as a miracle of form and expression. Earlier than the more contemplative Passion According to St. Matthew, which gains its momentum from the development of great choral fantasies drawn from the chorales, the St. John Passion is a series of vivid scenes as in a drama. And as the drama is the narrative of Christ's arrest, trial and Crucifixion it is of unparalleled significance.

These scenes sometimes violently intrude on the narrative of the Evangelist, are often mob scenes: the crowd howls Pilate down as he tries to understand its fury; it demands the death of Christ in terrifying outbursts; it accuses and mocks and fall silent only after its murderous mission is accomplished. Between these outbursts are scenes of lyric meditations by personalities viewing the action from the distance of ages, contemplating the tragedy of the action.

These are less liturgical in character with their ornate obligatos but Bach's piety shines through in every line. In the complete version of the work, Bach stalls the movement of the Passion itself with too many arias, and if it weren't for the presence of the Evangelist to pick up the thread a contemporary audience might lose contact. So it is that cuts are not only permissible but obligatory, and it seemed to me that Mr. Munch, who omitted eight or ten numbers not only did just the right thing but chose the right omissions. Even so the running time of this work is well over an hour and a half. Yet so gripping the narrative and so complet the musical communication it didn't seem in the least over long.

Cast of Soloists

The cast of soloists was exceedingly distinguished. David Lloyd's Evangelist is a remarkably effective conception as he conveys, in a fine, clear and beautifully grained tenor, the emotional involvement of the narrator as if he were there. He sang his arias beautifully, too. Adele Addison could not have been more perfect as she captured the poignancy of her arias and Betty Allen sounded well, though she might have had a little more force of expression. Mac Morgan gave the role of Jesus great expressivity, singing in a warm, rich baritone, and James Joyce was a powerful, fine sounding singer in the roles of Peter and Pilate. It may be added that the viola de gamba of Alfred Zighera was of unearthly beauty.

I was not quite so impressed with the chorus in this performance. Its traversal of the music was letter perfect and it had flexibility and tone, but the soprano attacks were occasionally less than we have come to expect of this body of singers and there was imbalance from time to time. Other reservations may be made about the harpsichord in the great lute accompaniment of one of the arias, as it could hardly be heard at all, and about the organ, which ciphered frequently in the first half. Otherwise this was a memorable experience.

Leonard Bernstein returns next week in a program of Mozart, Moeves and Prokofieff. Jesus Maria Sanroma will be the soloist in Stravinsky's Capriccio.

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 185,401
MAR 30 1956

Symphony Favorites To Return

The post-Easter concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to Symphony Hall two musicians long connected with the orchestra but missing in the Boston series of concerts for several seasons.

As the last of this season's great conductors, Leonard Bernstein will conduct the orchestra for the first time since the 1951-52 season. The soloist will be Jesue Maria Sanroma, former official pianist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who last played with the orchestra here in Oct., 1948.

Messrs. Bernstein and Sanroma will appear in all five of the orchestra's series in the Friday afternoon-Saturday evening series (April 6-7); in the Sunday afternoon series Sunday, April 8, and in the Tuesday evening series, April 10.

In addition there will be an Open Rehearsal in Symphony Hall Thursday, at 7:30 p. m., for which admission is open to the general public with proceeds of the ticket sale going to the Pension Fund of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

News (e)
NEWBURYPORT, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 6,504
MAR 30 1956

SYMPHONY—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, observing its Diamond Jubilee, was congratulated on its 75th birthday in a resolution adopted by the Senate. The resolution cited the international reputation of the musical organization.

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
Circ. D. 86,944 - S. 130,826
APR 1 1956

Boston Symphony Offers New Work Here Wednesday

When the Boston Symphony Orchestra comes to the Bushnell Memorial next Wednesday to perform a concert postponed from March 19 because of a blizzard, it will give Connecticut music lovers a first opportunity to hear a new work. Music Director Charles Munch, who will conduct, has included in the program to be played the Sixth Symphony of Walter Piston, a work commissioned by the orchestra in commemoration of its seventy-fifth anniversary this year and never before performed here.

Two classical works will also be included in the program, the Overture - Fantasia from Tchaikovsky's "Romeo and Juliet"; Brahms' Fourth Symphony.

No composer is more typical of New England than Piston, who has achived fame throughout the world as one of the greatest living American writers of fine music. He was born in Maine 62 years ago, summers in Vermont and makes his home in Massachusetts. As a young man he was proficient with the violin and piano that he earned a living in cafes around Boston. Playing in a World War I service band, he learned how to play most wind instruments. Later he taught at Harvard, studied music two years in Paris. It was upon the insistance of Serge Koussevitzky that he first composed serious music.

Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Republican
Circ. 130,826
APR 1 1956

Boston Symphony Offers New Work Here Wednesday

When the Boston Symphony Orchestra comes to the Bushnell Memorial next Wednesday to perform a concert postponed from March 19 because of a blizzard, it will give Connecticut music lovers a first opportunity to hear a new work. Music Director Charles Munch, who will conduct, has included in the program to be played the Sixth Symphony of Walter Piston, a work commissioned by the orchestra in commemoration of its seventy-fifth anniversary this year and never before performed here.

Two classical works will also be included in the program, the Overture - Fantasia from Tchaikovsky's "Romeo and Juliet"; Brahms' Fourth Symphony.

No composer is more typical of New England than Piston, who has achived fame throughout the world as one of the greatest living American writers of fine music. He was born in Maine 62 years ago, summers in Vermont and makes his home in Massachusetts. As a young man he was proficient with the violin and piano that he earned a living in cafes around Boston. Playing in a World War I service band, he learned how to play most wind instruments. Later he taught at Harvard, studied music two years in Paris. It was upon the insistance of Serge Koussevitzky that he first composed serious music.

INDUSTRY HELPS BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA — Seventy-five years ago when the Boston Symphony Orchestra began its career, and for nearly forty years afterward, only one wealthy man — founder, Henry Lee Higginson—made up its deficits. He could foresee its contribution to Boston's culture and musical knowledge. Today the tax situation being what it is, the Boston Symphony Orchestra is relying more and more on industry for help. An example of this cooperation is the outdoor advertisement contributed by Boston Envelope Company of Dedham to commemorate the 75th anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Here Charles Munch, conductor of the orchestra, and Henry B. Cabot, President of Board of Trustees, are approving a sketch of the outdoor tribute being shown them by James G. MacDonald, Vice-President of Boston Envelope Company. The outdoor spectacular is to be erected at the junction of the Riverview and Brookline avenue in Boston.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 130,559

MAR 30 1956

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, gave the 20th program of the season in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, performing Bach's "Passion According to St. John." The soloists were David Lloyd tenor; Mac Morgan, bass; Adele Addison, soprano; Betty Allen, contralto, James Joyce, bass; Alfred Zighera, viola da gamba. Assisting were Daniel Pinkham, harpsichord; Edouard Niews-Berger, organ and the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society.

By RUDOLPH ELIE

The wonders of Bach's Passion According to St. John are almost beyond comprehension in the limitless glories of the music itself but even more so in the spirit of religious awe this stupendous music-religious work evoke. Indeed if ever there were a divine musical revelation this is it.

It is the third time Mr. Munch, who approaches this music as if it were a musical altar, has performed it since he reintroduced it in his first year in Boston, and while it may be said there were minor flaws in the performance, it rose to a level of emotional communication that held the audience enthralled in a cough-less contact.

Miracle of Form

The work itself is one to contemplate as a miracle of form and expression. Earlier than the more contemplative Passion According to St. Matthew, which gains its momentum from the development of great choral fantasies drawn from the chorales, the St. John Passion is a series of vivid scenes as in a drama. And as the drama is the narrative of Christ's arrest, trial and Crucifixion it is of unparalleled significance.

These scenes sometimes violently intrude on the narrative of the Evangelist, are often mob scenes: the crowd howls Pilate down as he tries to understand its fury; it demands the death of Christ in terrifying outbursts; it accuses and mocks and fall silent only after its murderous mission is accomplished. Between these outbursts are scenes of lyric meditations by personalities viewing the action from the distance of ages, contemplating the tragedy of the action.

These are less liturgical in character with their ornate obligatos but Bach's piety shines through in every line. In the complete version of the work, Bach stalls the movement of the Passion itself with too many arias, and if it weren't for the presence of the Evangelist to pick up the thread a contemporary audience might lose contact. So it is that cuts are not only permissible but obligatory, and it seemed to me that Mr. Munch, who omitted eight or ten numbers not only did just the right thing but chose the right omissions. Even so the running time of this work is well over an hour and a half. Yet so gripping the narrative and so complet the musical communication it didn't seem in the least over long.

Cast of Soloists

The cast of soloists was exceedingly distinguished. David Lloyd's Evangelist is a remarkably effective conception as he conveys, in a fine, clear and beautifully grained tenor, the emotional involvement of the narrator as if he were there. He sang his arias beautifully, too. Adele Addison could not have been more perfect as she captured the poignancy of her arias and Betty Allen sounded well, though she might have had a little more force of expression. Mac Morgan gave the role of Jesus great expressivity, singing in a warm, rich baritone, and James Joyce was a powerful, fine sounding singer in the roles of Peter and Pilate. It may be added that the viola de gamba of Alfred Zighera was of unearthly beauty.

I was not quite so impressed with the chorus in this performance. Its traversal of the music was letter perfect and it had flexibility and tone, but the soprano attacks were occasionally less than we have come to expect of this body of singers and there was imbalance from time to time. Other reservations may be made about the harpsichord in the great lute accompaniment of one of the arias, as it could hardly be heard at all, and about the organ, which ciphered frequently in the first half. Otherwise this was a memorable experience.

Leonard Bernstein returns next week in a program of Mozart, Moeves and Prokofieff. Jesus Maria Sanroma will be the soloist in Stravinsky's Capriccio.

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 185,401

MAR 30 1956

Symphony Favorites To Return

The post-Easter concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to Symphony Hall two musicians long connected with the orchestra but missing in the Boston series of concerts for several seasons.

As the last of this season's great conductors, Leonard Bernstein will conduct the orchestra for the first time since the 1951-52 season. The soloist will be Jesue Maria Sanroma, former official pianist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who last played with the orchestra here in Oct., 1948.

Messrs. Bernstein and Sanroma will appear in all five of the orchestra's series in the Friday afternoon-Saturday evening series (April 6-7); in the Sunday afternoon series Sunday, April 8, and in the Tuesday evening series, April 10.

In addition there will be an Open Rehearsal in Symphony Hall Thursday, at 7:30 p. m., for which admission is open to the general public with proceeds of the ticket sale going to the Pension Fund of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

News (e)
NEWBURYPORT, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 6,504

MAR 30 1956

SYMPHONY—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, observing its Diamond Jubilee, was congratulated on its 75th birthday in a resolution adopted by the Senate. The resolution cited the international reputation of the musical organization.

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
Circ. D. 86,944 - S. 130,826

APR 1 1956

Boston Symphony Offers New Work Here Wednesday

When the Boston Symphony Orchestra comes to the Bushnell Memorial next Wednesday to perform a concert postponed from March 19 because of a blizzard, it will give Connecticut music lovers a first opportunity to hear a new work. Music Director Charles Munch, who will conduct, has included in the program to be played the Sixth Symphony of Walter Piston, a work commissioned by the orchestra in commemoration of its seventy-fifth anniversary this year and never before performed here.

Two classical works will also be included in the program, the Overture - Fantasia from Tchaikovsky's "Romeo and Juliet"; Brahms' Fourth Symphony.

No composer is more typical of New England than Piston, who has achived fame throughout the world as one of the greatest living American writers of fine music. He was born in Maine 62 years ago, summers in Vermont and makes his home in Massachusetts. As a young man he was proficient with the violin and piano that he earned a living in cafes around Boston. Playing in a World War I service band, he learned how to play most wind instruments. Later he taught at Harvard, studied music two years in Paris. It was upon the insistance of Serge Koussevitzky that he first composed serious music.

Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Republican
Circ. 130,826

APR 1 1956

Boston Symphony Offers New Work Here Wednesday

When the Boston Symphony Orchestra comes to the Bushnell Memorial next Wednesday to perform a concert postponed from March 19 because of a blizzard, it will give Connecticut music lovers a first opportunity to hear a new work. Music Director Charles Munch, who will conduct, has included in the program to be played the Sixth Symphony of Walter Piston, a work commissioned by the orchestra in commemoration of its seventy-fifth anniversary this year and never before performed here.

Two classical works will also be included in the program, the Overture - Fantasia from Tchaikovsky's "Romeo and Juliet"; Brahms' Fourth Symphony.

No composer is more typical of New England than Piston, who has achived fame throughout the world as one of the greatest living American writers of fine music. He was born in Maine 62 years ago, summers in Vermont and makes his home in Massachusetts. As a young man he was proficient with the violin and piano that he earned a living in cafes around Boston. Playing in a World War I service band, he learned how to play most wind instruments. Later he taught at Harvard, studied music two years in Paris. It was upon the insistance of Serge Koussevitzky that he first composed serious music.

INDUSTRY HELPS BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA — Seventy-five years ago when the Boston Symphony Orchestra began its career, and [illegible] forty years afterward, only one wealthy man —its founder, Henry Lee Higginson—made up its deficits. He could foresee its contribution to Boston's culture and musical knowledge. Today the tax situation being what it is, the Boston Symphony Orchestra is relying more and more on industry for help. An example of this cooperation is the outdoor advertisement contributed by Boston Envelope Company of Dedham to commemorate the 75th anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Here Charles Munch, conductor of the orchestra, and Henry B. Cabot, President of Board of Trustees, are approving a sketch of the outdoor tribute being shown them by James G. MacDonald, Vice-President of Boston Envelope Company. The outdoor spectacular is to be erected at the junction of the Riverview and Brookline avenue in Boston.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 130,559

MAR 30 1956

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony orchestra, Charles [illegible] conducting, gave the 20th program of the season in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, performing Bach's "Passion According to St. John." The soloists were David Lloyd tenor; Mac Morgan, bass; Adele Addison, soprano; Betty Allen, contralto, James Joyce, bass; Alfred Zighera, viola da gamba. Assisting were Daniel Pinkham, harpsichord; Edouard Niews-Berger, organ and the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society.

By RUDOLPH ELIE

The wonders of Bach's Passion According to St. John are almost beyond comprehension in the limitless glories of the music itself but even more so in the spirit of religious awe this stupendous music-religious work evoke. Indeed if ever there were a divine musical revelation this is it.

It is the third time Mr. Munch, who approaches this music as if it were a musical altar, has performed it since he reintroduced it in his first year in Boston, and while it may be said there were minor flaws in the performance, it rose to a level of emotional communication that held the audience enthralled in a cough-less contact.

Miracle of Form

The work itself is one to contemplate as a miracle of form and expression. Earlier than the more contemplative Passion According to St. Matthew, which gains its momentum from the development of great choral fantasies drawn from the chorales, the St. John Passion is a series of vivid scenes as in a drama. And as the drama is the narrative of Christ's arrest, trial and Crucifixion it is of unparalleled significance.

These scenes sometimes violently intrude on the narrative of the Evangelist, are often mob scenes: the crowd howls Pilate down as he tries to understand its fury; it demands the death of Christ in terrifying outbursts; it accuses and mocks and fall silent only after its murderous mission is accomplished. Between these outbursts are scenes of lyric meditations by personalities viewing the action from the distance of ages, contemplating the tragedy of the action.

These are less liturgical in character with their ornate obligatos but Bach's piety shines through in every line. In the complete version of the work, Bach stalls the movement of the Passion itself with too many arias, and if it weren't for the presence of the Evangelist to pick up the thread a contemporary audience might lose contact. So it is that cuts are not only permissible but obligatory, and it seemed to me that Mr. Munch, who omitted eight or ten numbers not only did just the right thing but chose the right omissions. Even so the running time of this work is well over an hour and a half. Yet so gripping the narrative and so complet the musical communication it didn't seem in the least over long.

Cast of Soloists

The cast of soloists was exceedingly distinguished. David Lloyd's Evangelist is a remarkably effective conception as he conveys, in a fine, clear and beautifully grained tenor, the emotional involvement of the narrator as if he were there. He sang his arias beautifully, too. Adele Addison could not have been more perfect as she captured the poignancy of her arias and Betty Allen sounded well, though she might have had a little more force of expression. Mac Morgan gave the role of Jesus great expressivity, singing in a warm, rich baritone, and James Joyce was a powerful, fine sounding singer in the roles of Peter and Pilate. It may be added that the viola de gamba of Alfred Zighera was of unearthly beauty.

I was not quite so impressed with the chorus in this performance. Its traversal of the music was letter perfect and it had flexibility and tone, but the soprano attacks were occasionally less than we have come to expect of this body of singers and there was imbalance from time to time. Other reservations may be made about the harpsichord in the great lute accompaniment of one of the arias, as it could hardly be heard at all, and about the organ, which ciphered frequently in the first half. Otherwise this was a memorable experience.

Leonard Bernstein returns next week in a program of Mozart, Moeves and Prokofieff. Jesus Maria Sanroma will be the soloist in Stravinsky's Capriccio.

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 185,401

MAR 30 1956

Symphony Favorites To Return

The post-Easter concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to Symphony Hall two musicians long connected with the orchestra but missing in the Boston series of concerts for several seasons.

As the last of this season's great conductors, Leonard Bernstein will conduct the orchestra for the first time since the 1951-52 season. The soloist will be Jesue Maria Sanroma, former official pianist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who last played with the orchestra here in Oct., 1948.

Messrs. Bernstein and Sanroma will appear in all five of the orchestra's series in the Friday afternoon-Saturday evening series (April 6-7); in the Sunday afternoon series Sunday, April 8, and in the Tuesday evening series, April 10.

In addition there will be an Open Rehearsal in Symphony Hall Thursday, at 7:30 p. m., for which admission is open to the general public with proceeds of the ticket sale going to the Pension Fund of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

News (e)
NEWBURYPORT, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 6,504

MAR 30 1956

SYMPHONY—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, observing its Diamond Jubilee, was congratulated on its 75th birthday in a resolution adopted by the Senate. The resolution cited the international reputation of the musical organization.

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
Circ. D. 86,944 - S. 130,826

APR 1 1956

Boston Symphony Offers New Work Here Wednesday

When the Boston Symphony Orchestra comes to the Bushnell Memorial next Wednesday to perform a concert postponed from March 19 because of a blizzard, it will give Connecticut music lovers a first opportunity to hear a new work. Music Director Charles Munch, who will conduct, has included in the program to be played the Sixth Symphony of Walter Piston, a work commissioned by the orchestra in commemoration of its seventy-fifth anniversary this year and never before performed here.

Two classical works will also be included in the program, the Overture - Fantasia from Tchaikovsky's "Romeo and Juliet"; Brahms' Fourth Symphony.

No composer is more typical of New England than Piston, who has achived fame throughout the world as one of the greatest living American writers of fine music. He was born in Maine 62 years ago, summers in Vermont and makes his home in Massachusetts. As a young man he was proficient with the violin and piano that he earned a living in cafes around Boston. Playing in a World War I service band, he learned how to play most wind instruments. Later he taught at Harvard, studied music two years in Paris. It was upon the insistance of Serge Koussevitzky that he first composed serious music.

Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Republican
Circ. 130,826

APR 1 1956

Boston Symphony Offers New Work Here Wednesday

When the Boston Symphony Orchestra comes to the Bushnell Memorial next Wednesday to perform a concert postponed from March 19 because of a blizzard, it will give Connecticut music lovers a first opportunity to hear a new work. Music Director Charles Munch, who will conduct, has included in the program to be played the Sixth Symphony of Walter Piston, a work commissioned by the orchestra in commemoration of its seventy-fifth anniversary this year and never before performed here.

Two classical works will also be included in the program, the Overture - Fantasia from Tchaikovsky's "Romeo and Juliet"; Brahms' Fourth Symphony.

No composer is more typical of New England than Piston, who has achived fame throughout the world as one of the greatest living American writers of fine music. He was born in Maine 62 years ago, summers in Vermont and makes his home in Massachusetts. As a young man he was proficient with the violin and piano that he earned a living in cafes around Boston. Playing in a World War I service band, he learned how to play most wind instruments. Later he taught at Harvard, studied music two years in Paris. It was upon the insistance of Serge Koussevitzky that he first composed serious music.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 122,000

MAR 30 1956

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Bach's St. John Passion Sung

The Passion According to St. John by Johann Sebastian Bach, is presented this week by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, taking the choice of the 20th program in the "regular" series at Symphony Hall. Charles Munch conducts. The choruses are the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, prepared by G. Wallace Woodworth. The soloists are Adele Addison, soprano; Betty Allen, contralto; David Lloyd, tenor; Mac Morgan, baritone, and James Joyce, bass. Harpsichord: Daniel Pinkham. Viola da gamba: Alfred Zighera. Organ: Edouard Nies-Berger.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Charles Munch has resumed, this year, his admirable custom of presenting one of the J. S. Bach Passions at the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts, which occur just before Easter. In the years 1954 and 1955 it was not feasible to program either of these master-works. The St. Matthew Passion having been done in 1953, it is now the turn of the St. John Passion. The afternoon concert of the series was by tradition moved ahead to Thursday to avoid giving it on Good Friday. The evening performance will be as usual on Saturday.

As I have noted before, the music of Bach, especially his religious music, seems to emphasize a side of Mr. Munch less evident in the general run of the symphonic repertory. It is almost what one might call a "German" side; the volatile temperament of the conductor is noticeably subdued to the reverent style of Bach, and all proceeds with the greatest of dignity in a truly devotional mood.

On such occasions, moreover, Mr. Munch will acknowledge no applause; he left the stage at intermission and at the conclusion of the Passion, without bowing to the audience, and he did not return. Most of the listeners respected his views, and did not applaud, but as always at a public gathering, there were some who could not restrain their urge, and you heard a flurry of handclapping. That, apparently, is one of the unalterable facts of life.

Unfortunate Failings

The manner and the mood of this performance of the St. John Passion were wholly suitable, but several things went wrong. Musically this was not the best or the smoothest account of the work we have heard. The chorus was very good, as you might expect from Wallace Woodworth's meticulous preparation. They sang well in rhythm and in dynamic shadings. Their tone was clean, clear, youthfully bright if not of enough weight where the music was soft. It takes adults to manage that.

Yet, somehow the chorus as well as everyone of the soloists had bad moments with the pitch, not in long stretches but enough to be evident. There was also, near the beginning a sustained "cipher" tone in the organ—something always unpredictable with this complex instrument—and Mr. Nies-Berger was put to it to eliminate the disturbing sound.

Mr. Lloyd has developed a superb mastery of style, over the years, in singing the narrative role of the Evangelist. It is an explicit style, and properly dramatic, yet well within the general manner of Bach. Expressively, Mr. Lloyd was again splendid, although his tenor resonance frequently showed a very wide vibrato which prevented the pitch from being exact.

Second Arias Best

Miss Addison had her difficulties with her first aria, and she was not always on the beat with the orchestra. Her second aria went much better in all respects. Miss Allen, who has a fine, dark-colored voice, also was more successful with her second aria than in her first: "Es ist vollbracht" she delivered with true nobility. Mac Morgan and James Joyce—the latter appearing for the first time with the Boston Symphony—were satisfactory in their parts, although they, too, were occasionally wide of the pitch.

The St. John Passion, shorter, more compact, more dramatic and having less monumental grandeur than the St. Matthew Passion, requires only a few minutes more than a conventional symphony concert. It was interesting to note that some of the audience left, as some always do, before the end, but that most remained.

The afternoon was not without extraneous and unwelcome incidents. They were four heavy rumbles from somewhere which momentarily distracted attention. A photographer (by his jacket a college youth, not a professional) got into the first balcony and was about to get a picture during the final chorus, when an usher adroitly removed the flashbulb from the mechanism.

Next week Leonard Bernstein will be guest conductor, and Jesus Maria Sanroma piano soloist in the Capriccio of Stravinsky. The other numbers will be Mozart's A major Symphony (K. 201), Four-teen Variations for Orchestra (first Boston performances) by Robert Moevs, and the Fifth Symphony of Prokofieff.

Messrs. Bernstein and Sanroma will appear in all five of the orchestra's series: in the Friday afternoon-Saturday evening series next week-end; in the Sunday afternoon series next Sunday; and in the Tuesday evening series on April 10. In addition there will be an Open Rehearsal in Symphony Hall this Thursday evening at 7:30 for which admission is open to the general public. Proceeds of the ticket sale go to the Pension Fund of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The program for all these concerts will be the same: Mozart's Symphony in A Major, Number 29; the Variations for Orchestra by Robert Moevs, in their first performances by this orchestra; the Capriccio for Piano and Orchestra by Stravinsky, with Mr. Sanroma as soloist; and the Symphony No. 5, Opus 100, by Prokofieff.

...na Return to Boston; ...ve Symphony Concerts

Sym-
e next
Sym-
s long a who Boston
al seas guest rnstein in Bosice the will be er offic-mphony
d with October,

Post (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 285,839

MAR 30 1956

The Observant Citizen

Good Friday:

This is the most solemn day of the Christian year. It is observed as the anniversary of the passion and crucifixion of Jesus Christ.

Christians have from the earliest days of their church kept Fridays as fast days, even as Sundays are kept as feast days.

The origin of the term "Good Friday" is not clear. Some say it comes from "God's Friday," others hold it is a corruption of the German "Gute Freitag." In Denmark the day is called "Long Friday," and the descriptive term "Sorrowful Friday," is also applied.

Today Christian's the world over will flock to their churches between noon and 3 p. m. to commemorate Christ's three hours of agony on the Cross.

+ + + +

Regarding our yesterday's note on the custom of visiting seven churches: The visits are made in commemoration of the ancient custom of the Romans who visited the seven principal basilicas of their city on Holy Thursday, but there is no more indulgence to be gained by visiting seven than by visiting one. A plenary indulgence may be gained at anytime the Sacrament is exposed by remaining at least 15 minutes in a church, making confession and receiving communion.

+ + + +

This is the anniversary of one of Uncle Sam's most remarkable real estate deals. He bought Alaska from the Russians in 1867. Uncle Sam got some 599,446 square miles loaded with untold riches for $7,200,000. It was a fabulous deal! But Uncle wasn't at all sure he wanted to buy. He wouldn't have bought if his Secretary of State William Henry Seward hadn't insisted.

If Uncle Sam had gone through with a couple of other deals. Seward rigged, it would have saved the United States a lot of embarrassment: 1—He arranged a treaty with Colombia by which the United States would control the Isthmus of Panama. 2—He arranged for the purchase of the Danish West Indies. Uncle Sam's Senate would ratify. The United States later had to insist it be allowed to build the canal and insist that Denmark sell the islands.

Oh, yes! The Russian ambassador claimed it cost him $200,000 to enlist legislative support for the purchase of Alaska. The charged was never proved.

+ + + +

The Boston Symphony Orchestra was organized this date in 1881.

You may still be thinking of snowdrifts, but I'll bet the Symphony has its programs for next summer's Berkshire Music Festival all made up.

+ + + +

I have a note from Mrs. Georgia Somes Stanley of Mount Dessert (Somerville), Me., asking me to thank all you kind readers who have mailed her pictures and information on the seven-masted schooner Thomas W. Lawson. Mrs. Stanley says she is keeping all the information in her scrapbook which already had several pages devoted to the Lawson family.

Mrs. Stanley retired from the postal service last fall after a half-century's service with the Mount Desert postoffiice, as assistant postmaster and as postmaster, and sometimes as telephone operator as well.

+ + + +

L. E. M. of Arlington thinks the MTA should have buses for men only during the rush hours. She says that a woman's life isn't safe in the rush members of the stronger sex make for the vehicles.

+ + + +

Wednesday morning was chilly, but the wind had dropped, and the sunshine was spreading itself like warm butter. Pedestrian traffic, which since the eve of St. Patrick's, had been scurrying along in hurried manner, strolled.

One commuter noted he spent a full two minutes longer walking from the North Station to his office than is his custom. Everyone was gratefully soaking up the sun.

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,872

MAR 30 1956

Easter Music at Symphony—

Bach's St. John Passion Under Direction of Munch

By Harold Rogers

This Easter Charles Munch has resumed his practice, set aside for several seasons, of performing one of the Bach Passions, either according to St. Matthew or to St. John. This year he has chosen the St. John.

Yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall there was no applause after the first part, and only sparse applause after the second. This was appropriate and understandable. Mr. Munch succeeded so well in evoking the deep spiritual qualities of the work that his listeners did not wish to dispel the devotional mood.

The choral forces, as usual on these occasions, were the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society, trained to near perfection by their conductor, G. Wallace Woodworth. Only one entrance was tentative and ragged. Otherwise these college singers responded to Mr. Munch's guidance with chorales that floated serenely on a buoyant tone, or with dramatic commentary, incisively enunciated, on Jesus' trial and crucifixion.

* * *

Edouard Nies-Berger was put to some consternation during the first part when the Symphony Hall organ developed a cipher, a note that wilfully insisted on having its off-harmony way. He couldn't locate the stop that controlled it until the intermission, and then he weeded it out.

The five soloists, all of superior quality, were headed by David Lloyd, who carried the burden of the singing as the Evangelist. It was a joy to hear his lucid, ringing tenor again, since his Boston appearances have been rather rare in recent seasons. Adele Addison, who has had three major Symphony Hall appearances since Christmas, sang the soprano solos with her usual eloquent musicality and spiritual insight.

* * *

Mac Morgan sang the words of Jesus with dignity and the artistic use of his rich baritone. His handling of the phrase, "It is finished," was especially impressive and meaningful. If Betty Allen's contralto arias were less imbued with the inner meaning of the words, the gorgeous quality of her voice offered much by way of compensation.

The roles of Peter and Pilate were sung by James Joyce, a basso we know well through his many roles with the New England Opera Theater. There was added interest, therefore, in hearing him yesterday as a serious oratorio singer, rather than a buffo, and the results were commendable on all counts. His voice is powerful, accurate, and of pleasing tone.

Mr. Munch will conduct a second performance Saturday night in Symphony Hall.

Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 113,081

APR 2 - 1956

Boston Symphony ...ere Wednesday

Arrangements have been completed by Managing Director William H. Mortensen of the Bushnell Memorial to present the Boston Symphony Orchestra Wednesday, Apr. 4, in a postponed concert.

Originally scheduled for Mar. 9, the concert, last event in his season's Bushnell Symphony series, was postponed because of a blizzard.

Charles Munch, music director and conductor, has selected the following program for the approaching concert:

Tchaikovsky's Overture-Fantasia to "Romeo and Juliet;" Walter Piston's Sixth Symphony, a work commissioned by the Boston Symphony in celebration of its 75th anniversary year and never before performed in Hartford; Brahm's Fourth Symphony.

A limited number of tickets for the Wednesday concert are available at the box office.

Sunday Standard-Times
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 50,234

APR 1 1956

Bernstein, Sanroma Are Featured

Special to The Standard-Times

BOSTON, March 31—The concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra during the next 10 days will bring back to Symphony Hall two musicians long connected with the orchestra who have not appeared in the Boston series of concerts for several seasons. As the last of this season's guest conductors, Leonard Bernstein will conduct this orchestra in Boston for the first time since the 1951-52 season.

The soloist will be Jesus Maria Sanroma, former official pianist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who last played with the orchestra in Boston in October 1948.

Messrs. Bernstein and Sanroma will appear in all five of the orchestra's series: In the Friday afternoon-Saturday evening series next weekend, in the Sunday afternoon series April 8, and in the April 10 evening series. In addition there will be an open rehearsal in Symphony Hall this Thursday night at 7:30 for which admission is open to the general public with proceeds of the ticket sale going to the pension fund of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The program for all these concerts will be the same Mozart's "Symphony in A Major, Number 29;" the "Variations for Orchestra" by Robert Moevs, in their first performances by this orchestra; the "Capriccio for Piano and Orchestra" by Stravinsky, with Mr. Sanroma as soloist, and "Symphony No. 5, Opus 100," by Prokofieff.

Sunday Telegram
PORTLAND, Me.
Independent Republican
Circ. 94,348

APR 1 1956

Memorial Recording Spans Half Century

BOSTON, March 31 (UP)—A recording commemorating the 75th anniversary season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra features the group playing the same piece under the batons of three conductors.

Three recordings of Berlioz' "Hungarian March" made over a period of nearly half a century were dubbed together electronically to sound as one continuous performance.

Karl Muck, who became conductor in 1906, starts the march. The late Serge Koussevitzky "takes over" in the middle section and Charles Munch, the present director, concludes the piece.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 122,000

MAR 3 0 1956

BOSTON SYMPH

Bach's St. Jo

The Passion According to St. John by Johann Sebastian Bach, is presented this week by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, taking the whole of the 20th program in the "regular" series at Symphony Hall. Charles Munch conducts. The choruses are the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, prepared by G. Wallace Woodworth. The soloists are Adele Addison, soprano; Betty Allen, contralto; David Lloyd, tenor; Mac Morgan, baritone, and James Joyce, bass. Harpsichord: Daniel Pinkham. Viola da gamba: Alfred Zighera. Organ: Edouard Nies-Berger.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Charles Munch has resumed, this year, his admirable custom of presenting one of the J. S. Bach Passions at the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts, which occur just before Easter. In the years 1954 and 1955 it was not feasible to program either of these master-works. The St. Matthew Passion having been done in 1953, it is now the turn of the St. John Passion. The afternoon concert of the series was by tradition moved ahead to Thursday to avoid giving it on Good Friday. The evening performance will be as usual on Saturday.

As I have noted before, the music of Bach, especially his religious music, seems to emphasize a side of Mr. Munch less evident in the general run of the symphonic repertory. It is almost what one might call a "German" side; the volatile temperament of the conductor is noticeably subdued to the reverent style of Bach, and all proceeds with the greatest of dignity in a truly devotional mood.

On such occasions, moreover, Mr. Munch will acknowledge no applause; he left the stage at intermission and at the conclusion of the Passion, without bowing to the audience, and he did not return. Most of the listeners respected his views, and did not applaud, but as always at a public gathering, there were some who could not restrain their urge, and you heard a flurry of handclapping. That, apparently, is one of the unalterable facts of life.

Unfortunate Failings

The manner and the mood of this performance of the St. John Passion were wholly suitable, but several things went wrong. Musically this was not the best or the smoothest account of the work we have heard. The chorus was very good, as you might expect from Wallace Woodworth's meticulous preparation. They sang well in rhythm and in dynamic shadings. Their tone was clean, clear, youthfully bright if not of enough weight where the music was soft. It takes adults to manage that.

Yet, somehow the chorus as well as everyone of the soloists had bad moments with the pitch, not in long stretches but enough to be her first, "Is it vollbracht," she delivered with true nobility. Mac Morgan and James Joyce—the latter appearing for the first time with the Boston Symphony—perb mastery of style, over the years, in singing the narrative role of the Evangelist. It is an explicit style, and properly dramatic, yet well within the general manner of Bach. Expressively, Mr. Lloyd was again splendid, although his tenor resonance frequently showed a very wide vibrato which prevented the pitch from being exact.

Second Arias Best

Miss Addison had her difficulties with her first aria, and she was not always on the beat with the orchestra. Her second aria went much better in all respects. Miss Allen, who has a fine, dark-colored voice, also was more successful with her second aria than in

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 369,241

APR 1 1956

Bernstein, Sanroma Return to Boston; to Appear in Five Symphony Concerts

The concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra during the next 10 days will bring back to Symphony Hall two musicians long connected with the orchestra who have not appeared in the Boston series of concerts for several seasons.

As the last of this season's guest conductor's, Leonard Bernstein will conduct this orchestra in Boston for the first time since the 1951-52 season. The soloist will be Jesus Maria Sanroma, former official pianist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who last played with the orchestra in Boston in October, 1948.

Messrs. Bernstein and Sanroma will appear in all five of the orchestra's series: in the Friday afternoon-Saturday evening series next week-end; in the Sunday afternoon series next Sunday; and in the Tuesday evening series on April 10. In addition there will be an Open Rehearsal in Symphony Hall this Thursday evening at 7:30 for which admission is open to the general public. Proceeds of the ticket sale go to the Pension Fund of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The program for all these concerts will be the same: Mozart's Symphony in A Major, Number 29; the Variations for Orchestra by Robert Moevs, in their first performances by this orchestra; the Capriccio for Piano and Orchestra by Stravinsky, with Mr. Sanroma as soloist; and the Symphony No. 5, Opus 100, by Prokofieff.

Post (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 285,839

MAR 3 0 1956

The Observant Citizen

Good Friday:

This is the most solemn day of the Christian year. It is observed as the anniversary of the passion and crucifixion of Jesus Christ.

Christians have from the earliest days of their church kept Fridays as fast days, even as Sundays are kept as feast days.

The origin of the term "Good Friday" is not clear. Some say it comes from "God's Friday," others hold it is a corruption of the German "Gute Freitag." In Denmark the day is called "Long Friday," and the descriptive term "Sorrowful Friday," is also applied.

Today Christian's the world over will flock to their churches between noon and 3 p. m. to commemorate Christ's three hours of agony on the Cross.

+ + + +

Regarding our yesterday's note on the custom of visiting seven churches: The visits are made in commemoration of the ancient custom of the Romans who visited the seven principal basilicas of their city on Holy Thursday, but there is no more indulgence to be gained by visiting seven than by visiting one. A plenary indulgence may be gained at anytime the Sacrament is exposed by remaining at least 15 minutes in a church, making confession and receiving communion.

+ + + +

This is the anniversary of one of Uncle Sam's most remarkable real estate deals. He bought Alaska from the Russians in 1867. Uncle Sam got some 599,446 square miles loaded with untold riches for $7,200,000. It was a fabulous deal! But Uncle wasn't at all sure he wanted to buy. He wouldn't have bought if his Secretary of State William Henry Seward hadn't insisted.

If Uncle Sam had gone through with a couple of other deals. Seward rigged, it would have saved the United States a lot of embarrassment: 1—He arranged a treaty with Colombia by which the United States would control the Isthmus of Panama. 2—He arranged for the purchase of the Danish West Indies. Uncle Sam's Senate would ratify. The United States later had to insist it be allowed to build the canal and insist that Denmark sell the islands.

Oh, yes! The Russian ambassador claimed it cost him $200,000 to enlist legislative support for the purchase of Alaska. The charged was never proved.

+ + + +

The Boston Symphony Orchestra was organized this date in 1881.

You may still be thinking of snowdrifts, but I'll bet the Symphony has its programs for next summer's Berkshire Music Festival all made up.

+ + + +

I have a note from Mrs. Georgia Somes Stanley of Mount Dessert (Somerville), Me., asking me to thank all you kind readers who have mailed her pictures and information on the seven-masted schooner Thomas W. Lawson. Mrs. Stanley says she is keeping all the information in her scrapbook which already had several pages devoted to the Lawson family.

Mrs. Stanley retired from the postal service last fall after a half-century's service with the Mount Desert postoffiice, as assistant postmaster and as postmaster, and sometimes as telephone operator as well.

+ + + +

L. E. M. of Arlington thinks the MTA should have buses for men only during the rush hours. She says that a woman's life isn't safe in the rush members of the stronger sex make for the vehicles.

+ + + +

Wednesday morning was chilly, but the wind had dropped, and the sunshine was spreading itself like warm butter. Pedestrian traffic, which since the eve of St. Patrick's, had been scurrying along in hurried manner, strolled.

One commuter noted he spent a full two minutes longer walking from the North Station to his office than is his custom. Everyone was gratefully soaking up the sun.

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,872

MAR 3 0 1956

Easter Music at Symphony—

Bach's St. John Passion Under Direction of Munch

By Harold Rogers

This Easter Charles Munch has resumed his practice, set aside for several seasons, of performing one of the Bach Passions, either according to St. Matthew or to St. John. This year he has chosen the St. John.

Yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall there was no applause after the first part, and only sparse applause after the second. This was appropriate and understandable. Mr. Munch succeeded so well in evoking the deep spiritual qualities of the work that his listeners did not wish to dispel the devotional mood.

The choral forces, as usual on these occasions, were the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society, trained to near perfection by their conductor, G. Wallace Woodworth. Only one entrance was tentative and ragged. Otherwise these college singers responded to Mr. Munch's guidance with chorales that floated serenely on a buoyant tone, or with dramatic commentary, incisively enunciated, on Jesus' trial and crucifixion.

* * *

Edouard Nies-Berger was put to some consternation during the first part when the Symphony Hall organ developed a cipher, a note that wilfully insisted on having its off-harmony way. He couldn't locate the stop that controlled it until the intermission, and then he weeded it out.

The five soloists, all of superior quality, were headed by David Lloyd, who carried the burden of the singing as the Evangelist. It was a joy to hear his lucid, ringing tenor again, since his Boston appearances have been rather rare in recent seasons. Adele Addison, who has had three major Symphony Hall appearances since Christmas, sang the soprano solos with her usual eloquent musicality and spiritual insight.

* * *

Mac Morgan sang the words of Jesus with dignity and the artistic use of his rich baritone. His handling of the phrase, "It is finished," was especially impressive and meaningful. If Betty Allen's contralto arias were less imbued with the inner meaning of the words, the gorgeous quality of her voice offered much by way of compensation.

The roles of Peter and Pilate were sung by James Joyce, a basso we know well through his many roles with the New England Opera Theater. There was added interest, therefore, in hearing him yesterday as a serious oratorio singer, rather than a buffo, and the results were commendable on all counts. His voice is powerful, accurate, and of pleasing tone.

Mr. Munch will conduct a second performance Saturday night in Symphony Hall.

Sunday Standard-Times
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 50,234

APR 1 1956

Bernstein, Sanroma Are Featured

Special to The Standard-Times

BOSTON, March 31—The concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra during the next 10 days will bring back to Symphony Hall two musicians long connected with the orchestra who have not appeared in the Boston series of concerts for several seasons. As the last of this season's guest conductors, Leonard Bernstein will conduct this orchestra in Boston for the first time since the 1951-52 season.

The soloist will be Jesus Maria Sanroma, former official pianist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who last played with the orchestra in Boston in October 1948.

Messrs. Bernstein and Sanroma will appear in all five of the orchestra's series: In the Friday afternoon-Saturday evening series next weekend, in the Sunday afternoon series April 8, and in the April 10 evening series. In addition there will be an open rehearsal in Symphony Hall this Thursday night at 7:30 for which admission is open to the general public with proceeds of the ticket sale going to the pension fund of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The program for all these concerts will be the same Mozart's "Symphony in A Major, Number 29;" the "Variations for Orchestra" by Robert Moevs, in their first performances by this orchestra; the "Capriccio for Piano and Orchestra" by Stravinsky, with Mr. Sanroma as soloist, and "Symphony No. 5, Opus 100," by Prokofieff.

Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 113,081

APR 2 - 1956

Boston Symphony Here Wednesday

Arrangements have been completed by Managing Director William H. Mortensen of the Bushnell Memorial to present the Boston Symphony Orchestra Wednesday, Apr. 4, in a postponed concert.

Originally scheduled for Mar. 9, the concert, last event in this season's Bushnell Symphony series, was postponed because of a blizzard.

Charles Munch, music director and conductor, has selected the following program for the approaching concert:

Tchaikovsky's Overture-Fantasia to "Romeo and Juliet;" Walter Piston's Sixth Symphony, a work commissioned by the Boston Symphony in celebration of its 75th anniversary year and never before performed in Hartford; Brahm's Fourth Symphony.

A limited number of tickets for the Wednesday concert are available at the box office.

Sunday Telegram
PORTLAND, Me.
Independent Republican
Circ. 94,348

APR 1 1956

Memorial Recording Spans Half Century

BOSTON, March 31 (UP)—A recording commemorating the 75th anniversary season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra features the group playing the same piece under the batons of three conductors.

Three recordings of Berlioz' "Hungarian March" made over a period of nearly half a century were dubbed together electronically to sound as one continuous performance.

Karl Muck, who became conductor in 1906, starts the march. The late Serge Koussevitzky "takes over" in the middle section and Charles Munch, the present director, concludes the piece.

34

TAMPA, FLA.
TRIBUNE
Circ. D. 121,133 - S. 134,840

APR 1 1956

Networks To Air Sunrise Rites Across U. S.

By PHIL BARNEY
Tribune Staff Writer

Easter sunrise services from many famous sources across the country will be heard on the network broadcasts, at different hours, from East to West, this morning, as listed in the radio program tables.

Besides these special broadcasts, several of the regular broadcasts will offer timely Easter features.

Vivian diela Chiesa, operatic and concert soprano; Thomas L. Thomas, noted baritone; Kay Armen, recording star, and Bill Hayes, popular young singer, will join in an Easter program on What's New in Music today (WDAE—1 o'clock.) Percy Faith is conductor.

The Brahms Alto Rhapsody, excerpts from Wagner's opera Parsifal and two religious choral works will make up the program of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony today (WDAE-FM — 2:30 o'clock.) Martha Lipton, mezzo-soprano of the Metropolitan, will be soloist in the Brahms Rhapsody, with the Westminster Choir directed by Dr. John Finley Williamson and the orchestra conducted by Guido Cantelli.

* * *

SONGSTRESS Carmen McRae, as guest, joins baritone Stuart Foster and the orchestra and chorus conducted by Alfredo Antonini, on Music on a Sunday Afternoon today (WDAE—4:05 o'clock.)

Liberace, popular entertainer and pianist, visits the Edgar Bergen Hour tonight (WDAE—7:05 o'clock.)

Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the combined Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society in portions of Bach's Passion According to St. John, tomorrow night (WFLA — 8:15 o'clock.) Soloists are David Lloyd, tenor; Mac Morgan and James Joyce, basses; Adele Addison, soprano, and Betty Allen, mezzo-soprano.

* * *

ZINO FRANCESCATTI, internationally famed violinist from France, returns as guest soloist on the Telephone Hour tomorrow night (WFLA — 9 o'clock.) With the orchestra conducted by Donald Voorhees, Francescatti is scheduled to play the finale to the majestic Concert in D by Brahms, Spanish Dance by Granados-Kreisler, and what the advance announcement incorrectly calls "Cobbler's Dance" by Sarasate. Probably the violinist will actually play Sarasate's famous Zapateado.

The Marriage of Figaro, sparkling musical comedy-romance by Mozart, is the Metropolitan Opera broadcast for next Saturday afternoon (WSUN — 2 o'clock.) It will have a brilliant cast, with Victoria de los Angeles as the Countess, Nadine Conner as Susanna, Cesare Siepi as Figaro, Frank Guarrera as the Count, and Mildred Miller as Cherubino.

Eugene Ormandy conducts the Philadelphia Orchestra next Saturday night at its new hour (WDAE — 10:05 o'clock) in an all-Sibelius program, postponed from last week.

Sunday Post
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 230,930

APR 1 1956

Toscanini In 2 Books

By TUCKER KEISER

When Arturo Toscanini retired in the spring of 1954, it was inevitable that articles and books would be published, evaluating this maestro's 70-year career and that critics would be as partisan as they were while he was directing various orchestras and opera companies.

Two books with two distinct points of view have just become available. The first is Samuel Chotzinoff's "Toscanini — An Intimate Portrait," an eminently readable series of recollections by a close personal friend. These were previously serialized in Holiday Magazine.

The second is Robert Charles Marsh's "Toscanini and the Art of Orchestral Performance," a much more serious critical study of style and technique based primarily on the conductor's 262 recordings which covered a span of 36 years.

The bulk of Mr. Marsh's book is devoted to perceptive criticism of these recordings. The author makes allowances for improvements in recording in comparing works recorded for second and third times.

Change of Style

One of the major theses of Mr. Marsh is the transformation of the conductor's style in the Germanic symphonic repertory, averring that in Italian music his style has always been correctly based on bel canto.

He cites record and groove with score and measure to justify his distinguishing of three periods, the "ancestral" based upon German traditions, the "transitional" ("bel canto" substituted for romantic excesses), and the "singing" in which German traditions have entirely given away to lyrical clarity. This comparative study is relatively easy since Toscanini as a symphonic conductor roughly coincides with the age of orchestral recording.

Mr. Chotzinoff's recollections, fascinating as they are, exalt Toscanini to a minor deity; on the other hand, Mr. Marsh, with considerably more objectivity, paints a far better rounded portrait of the man and the artist. His Toscanini is a more human —and fallible—individual.

The maestro remained on friendly terms with other conductors who did not seriously threaten his position as No. 1. His publicized remark that he was "only an honest musician" shifted subtly in later life to "the only honest musician." He tended to agree with the idolatrous praise of his friends.

Of local interest is the discussion of Toscanini's relationships with the Boston Symphony and Koussevitzky. (He was once offered the Symphony Hall post but declined.) The tension between him and Koussevitzky kept him from including Boston on his tours, though he did appear here once with the Philharmonic and the NBC Symphony.

With Munch

On the surface his relationship with Charles Munch has been cordial, though he had a private recording made of a Munch specialty, Berlioz' "Fantastic Symphony," and subjected it to withering critical analysis before friends.

Toscanini's greatness as a conductor remains unquestioned, and fortunately recordings—he is still editing tapes—will preserve his crystalline readings.

His repertory was superficially large but practically restricted, confined to 19th century music with its conventional harmonic relationships, and his concerts consisted mainly of thrice-familiar items. He often programmed 3rd and 4th rate scores on some personal whim; his attachment to Ferde Grofe's "Grand Canyon Suite" was somewhat embarrassing to both friend and fan.

Item (e)
CLINTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 3,294

APR 3 1956

Three Recordings Over 50 Years Became Unit

BOSTON (UP) — A recording commemorating the 75th anniversary season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra features the group playing the same piece under the batons of three conductors.

Three recordings of Berlioz' "Hungarian March" made over a period of nearly half a century were dubbed together electronically to sound as one continuous performance.

Karl Muck(who became conductor in 1906, starts the march. The late Serge Koussevitzky "takes over" in the middle section and Charles Munch, the present director, concludes the piece.

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST
Circ. D. 74,147 - S. 58,070

APR 1 1956

Orchestra and Singers

Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony orchestra and the combined Harvard Glee Club and Radcliff Choral Society in portions of Bach's "Passion According to St. John" on NBC radio tomorrow night at 8:15 o'clock.

Soloists will be Adele Addison, soprano; Betty Allen, mezzo-soprano; David Lloyd, tenor, and Mac Morgan and James Joyce, basses. G. Wallace Woodworth is the choral director.

DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS
Circ. D. 190,894 - S. 197,563

APR 2 1956

Harvard, Radcliffe Singers Featured

The combined Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society will present portions of Bach's "Passion According to St. John" Monday on the Boston Symphony Orchestra broadcast at 7:15 a.m. on WFAA-820.

Charles Munch will conduct the orchestra. Soloists will include Adele Addison, soprano; Betty Allen, mezzo-soprano; David Lloyd, tenor; and Mac Morgan and James Joyce, bassos. The choral group will be under the direction of G. Wallace Woodworth.

LAKE CHARLES, LA.
AMERICAN PRESS
Circ. D. 23,234 - S. 22,699

APR 2 1956

L. C. Community Concert Sold Out

Auditorium seating space for the Community Concert 1956-57 season is sold out, the association announced today.

Also, the season's program has been completed with the booking of Theodore Uppman, baritone soloist of the Metropolitan Opera, for next spring. The other two concerts, previously announced, are the NBC Opera's Madam Butterfly in English, for the early fall, and the Boston Pops orchestra, for midwinter. Dates will be announced later in the year.

Sunday Register
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 95,115

APR 1 1956

MUSIC

Full Glory Of Easter Expressed Best In Song

By GORDON E. ARMSTRONG

As we celebrate today's great religious holiday in our churches, let's give a thought to the inspirational role that music holds in Christian worship. A service without music is almost unthinkable in these days and yet most of us give little consideration and appreciation to our church choirs, the great majority of which are volunteer groups. Give your faithful choristers an appreciative smile as they file out singing the recessional this glorious morning—they are well worthy of it!

Two Events Scheduled For Tuesday Night

By an unfortunate coincidence, two worthwhile musical events are scheduled for Tuesday evening. Three New Haven choral groups will participate in a "New Haven Sings" program at the Jewish Community Center at the same time that the Holy Cross College Glee Club will be holding forth at Hamden High School. The former concert will commence at 8:15 while the college program will get under way at 8 on Tuesday night.

"Brotherhood Through Music" is the theme for the New Haven Jewish Community Center program which is sponsored by the Women's Assembly of the Center. Following a brief meeting of this organization, the New Haven Chorale will be heard in a group of Israeli songs under the direction of the Chorale's director, David Kraehenbuehl, the talented young composer who is currently a member of the Yale Music School faculty. Among the Chorale offerings will be: "This Way," by Zaira-Binder; "Ayn Charod," by Ezrachi-Binder; "Rest Has Come," by Samurski-Binder; and "Night of Glory," by Fastalsy-Binder. Klare Heavens, a pupil of Mrs. Richard Donovan, is to be the soloist in this portion of the program.

The Curtiss M. Saulsbury Choir will further the brotherhood idea of the program by presenting a group of spirituals following the offerings of the Chorale. There is no more devoted choral group than this choir which has enriched the musical life of the community for some years with its annual concerts and other appearances.

To complete a full representation of the community's vocal resources, it is altogether fitting that the concert should conclude with operatic selections by members of the Connecticut Experimental Theater. Maestro Francesco Riggio, the founder of this idealistic group, will conduct the presentations by his singers. They will be assisted by an orchestra furnished through the courtesy of the New Haven Federation of Musicians through monies received from the Emergency Fund of the Recording and Transcription Industries. The offerings of the Experimental group will include some of the greatest inspirations in Italian operatic literature.

The Holy Cross concert, followed by dancing to music by the college's dance band, will provide listeners with the type of singing which has won the Worcester collegians a place among the country's leading glee clubs. For the past 30 years, the Holy Cross singers have annually averaged an attendance of 35,000 people at the 20 or more concerts given each season throughout the New England and Middle Atlantic States area.

Prof. Fredrick S. Mirliani, of the class of 1932, is celebrating his 20th year this season as the conductor of the club. Both his vocal and instrumental groups have won many prizes in competitions over the years. An outstanding arranger also, he arranges many of the selections in the club's repertoire.

Holy Cross each year sets aside a substantial budget for the purpose of equipping, training, and sending its glee club on concert tours. This it does, not merely because of the important cultural, social and general educational values which its students derive from concerts in various parts of the country, but also from a keen realization of its responsibility, as a crucible of leadership, to influence communities to high standards of culture and entertainment. The music clubs are open to all qualified students without payment of any fee. Concerts are not booked with an eye toward making a profit but rather for the purpose of meeting the expenses of these tours and the elaborate preparation they require.

The Holy Cross singers will give one of their typical programs on Tuesday evening, with selections chosen principally for their entertainment values.

Woman's Choral Society Concert Wednesday

It is always a pleasure to publicize the annual concert by the Woman's Choral Society of New Haven. This season's event, the 29th in the series by this accomplished group, will be given in Sprague Hall on Wednesday evening at 8:30. Frank Widdis, completing his sixth year as the director of the society, will conduct the program which, like its predecessors, will offer listeners a variety of works sung in a manner that is invariably a delight to the discerning.

The guest artist in Wednesday's concert will be William Gephart, celebrated New York baritone, whose voice is known to millions through the mediums of radio and TV. Most of us remember him for his outstanding solo assignments with the CBS Symphony during the past several years. He will present a group of songs by Brahms and also have a solo role in "Skyscraper Romance," by Philip James. Mary Mazzacane will also be a soloist in this first New Haven presentation of the work.

The group singing will include other works by Lassus, Wilbye, Morley, Weekles, and Schubert. Jean Schapp, whose pianistic accomplishments have been a highlight of recent concerts by the Women's Choral Society, will accompany both the solos of the guest artist and the offerings of the group.

Derby Church To Present Piano Duo

Pianists Raymond Hanson and Leonard Seeber, both faculty members of the Hartt College of Music in Hartford, will present their "Coffee Pops" in the hall of the Derby Methodist Church next Saturday at 8 p. m.

The accomplished piano duo, who were featured artists in the 1952 Pops series in the Bowl, have presented this new form of musical entertainment in a number of towns throughout Connecticut. Listeners sit at tables and refreshments are served somewhat in the fashion of that adopted in the Pop concerts given by the Boston Orchestra in Symphony Hall, Boston. The informal atmosphere of these affairs which enables the two artists to make a more intimate presentation of their offerings has found favor with an increasing number of listeners.

A featured work in their "Coffee Pops" programs is Saint-Saens' "Carnival of the Animals," with verses by Ogden Nash. This was the work which Hanson and Seeber performed in the Yale Bowl a few years ago with Mayor Richard C. Lee acting as the narrator. When the work was performed in New Milford, Fredric March and Florence Eldridge read the verses and a Hartford performance had the music critic, T. H. Parker, as the narrator. In next Saturday's program, Nan Gurney, whose monologues have delighted audiences in the Naugatuck Valley for many years, is to be the reader.

The program will be given for the benefit of the Methodist Church's Camp Scholarship Fund. Tickets may be obtained from George McLachlan, 100 Hawthorne St., Derby.

Further Details On Record Club

Further details were recently made public with regard to future plans for the Metropolitan Opera Record Club, formation of which was announced last June. At that time, the Metropolitan and the Book-of-the-Month Club, Inc., revealed that they would co-operate in a project to record and distribute long-playing, abridged recordings of operas in the current repertory, with Metropolitan artists.

The first recording, of Bizet's Carmen, has already been made in the Opera House, with eight more scheduled within the next year. The plan of subscription is that Metropolitan Opera Record Club subscribers may choose as few as four out of nine operas during each season.

The cast of Carmen, which will serve as an introduction to the series, includes Rosalind Elias, Lucine Amara, Heidi Krall, Margaret Roggero, Kurt Baum, Walter Cassel, Clifford Harvuot, George Cehanovsky and Paul Franke, with Max Rudolf conducting, and Kurt Adler as chorus master. The Metropolitan orchestra and chorus also participate.

The Book-of-the-Month Club will be responsible for the business details of the Metropolitan Opera Record Club, while the Metropolitan Opera will devote itself exclusively to the artistic details of the recordings.

Sunday Post
BRIDGEPORT, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 61,159

APR 1 1956

TURNING the DIALS

By FRED H. RUSSELL

Being on the right side of the law has paid off well for George Petrie, dark and debonair actor heard as Special Agent Reynolds on CBS radio's "FBI in Peace and War" Wednesday nights from 8:30 to 9 o'clock. He has played suavely the aggressor, but his authoritative characterizations of lawyers and enforcement officers have been heard in title roles of five previous long-running mystery-crime dramas on radio.

A waggish radio producer provided Petrie with a real life brush with the law at the outset of his broadcasting career. While on location in Switzerland, making the film "Four Days Leave" he received a cablegram: "You are wanted by the police. Internment starts June 5. Sentence 17 weeks." Alert Swiss authorities had to be convinced that the message was an offer from CBS radio's "Call the Police" series.

Petrie became a serious student of drama during his school days in his native New Haven. To prove his ability to be self-supporting at an early age, he trekked 3,000 miles to enroll and earn his way through the University of Southern California, where the National Collegiate Players, honorary drama society, tapped him in his junior year.

While playing in "Brighten the Corner" on Broadway he was propelled by romance to concentrate on radio. In the company was a young California actress, Patty Pope. When they married he decided to forsake the financial hazard of stage runs for steady, year-round work in radio. His only absence from the air was during a three and a half year stint in the army during World War II.

Now living in Westport, since the arrival of his young daughter, he spends his spare time in unearthing antiques for his superb collection of early American furniture.

Orchestra and Singers

Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony orchestra and the combined Harvard Glee Club and Radcliff Choral Society in portions of Bach's "Passion According to St. John" on NBC radio tomorrow night at 8:15 o'clock.

Soloists will be Adele Addison, soprano; Betty Allen, mezzo-soprano; David Lloyd, tenor, and Mac Morgan and James Joyce, basses. G. Wallace Woodworth is the choral director.

Herald News (e)
FALL RIVER, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 39,447

APR 4 1956

Post (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 285,889

APR 4 1956

Society

Pops Concerts Will Begin on May Day

By ROSE WALSH

May day will be doubly welcome this year for it is bringing the opening of Boston's world famous Pops season at Symphony Hall. Carrying on opening night tradition, the New England Grenfell Association has taken the major portion of the floor and first balcony seats for the benefit of the Grenfell Mission in Labrador.

The project this summer is a new cottage hospital at Nain, Labrador, to care for the Eskimos of that north Labrador region. The operation is a big one because of the short summer season, and Nain is so far north that to get materials and men there in time to beat the freeze-up presents a problem.

Assisting Mrs. Robert M. P. Kennard, Grenfell Night chairman, are Mrs. W. Lloyd Allen, Mrs. Theodore L. Badger, Mrs. William R. Bullard, Mrs. George S. Fuller, Mrs. Graham Granger, Mrs. Theodore A. Greene, Mrs. Lea S. Luquer, Mrs. Eldon Macleod, Mrs. Thorvald S. Ross, Mrs, Wyman B. Shaw and Mrs. Robert G. Stone.

Boston Smith College Club and alumnae of the Smith School for Social Work have scheduled their Pops night for Tuesday, May 8. Mrs. Sherman R. Thayer of Chestnut Hill, chairman, has on her committee Mrs. Richard Chute, president of the club, and Mrs. Theodore A. Greene, chairman of patronesses.

* * *

Prenuptial Party

Mr. and Mrs. Guido L. Rugo were hosts at an Easter cocktail party in honor of their son, Lawrence, and his bride-elect, Miss Jeredith Stiver, at their Marblehead Neck home, Carcasonne. Pink azaleas, white tulips, calla lilies and Easter lilies gave a lovely spring setting to the marble reception hall where the young couple, whose wedding is planned for Sunday afternoon at St. Camillus' Church, Arlington, greeted their friends.

The bridegroom-elect's brothers, Joseph, Robert and Paul, with their wives, and Richard Rugo helped with reception duties. Among the guests were Judge and Mrs. Henry Duggan, Dr. and Mrs. Charles E. Donovan, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Perini, Mr. and Mrs. Louis Perini, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Elwood Kalbach, Mr. and Mrs. Francis Magee, Mrs. William J. Foley and her daughter, Patricia; Mrs. James D. Fisher and her son, James D., Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Charles Mogavero, Mr. and Mrs. John Macdonald, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Garcelon, Mr. and Mrs. Felix Carr, Mr. and Mrs. George Crowley, Mrs. Allan White and her son, Allan, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Byron Wiswell, Mr. and Mrs. William Kearney and Mr. and Mrs. Richard Lucas.

* * *

Hospital Aid Party

An article for the rummage sale will be the admission to this morning's bundle party at the Massachusetts Eye and Ear Infirmary, 243 Charles st., beginning at 10 o'clock.

The next rummage sale will be held on Thursday, April 26, at Horticultural Hall.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE
Circ. D. 42,039
APR 4 1956

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 27,538
APR 4 1956

Boston Symphony Paid Honor

[SPECIAL TO THE HERALD NEWS]

BOSTON—Leaders of the legislature paused to pay tribute to the 75-year-old Boston Symphony Orchestra on its "diamond jubilee celebration" held in the Senate Chamber.

Senate President Richard I. Furbush (R-Waltham) and Speaker of the House Michael F. Skerry (D-Medford) read resolutions passed by their respective branches congratulating the orchestra on its world-wide reputation and for its contribution to the culture of the city and State.

Charles Munch, conductor of the orchestra, and Arthur Fiedler, who conducts the famed Boston Pops and the Esplanade concerts, replied for the orchestra.

Lawrence W. Kanaga, vice-president of the RCA-Victor Records, which has recorded the orchestra for 40 years, presented a $2500 diamond-encrusted gold baton to the Symphony. Kanaga said a movie is being made of the orchestra which will be shown around the world.

Berkshire Concerts Listed For Boston Symphony

Charles Munch has announced the programs for the Music Shed concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival at Lenox, Mass.

* * *

SHED CONCERTS will be held on Friday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons from July 20 through Aug. 12. "Bach-Mozart" concerts by a chamber orchestra of Boston Symphony players will be presented on the weekends of July 6 through 15 in the intimate Theatre-Concert Hall. Chamber groups will present concerts on the six Wednesday evenings of the festival weeks.

Subscriptions are now being filled at Symphony Hall, Boston, for all concerts.

Mr. Munch will conduct the concerts of July 20, 21, 27 and 28; Aug. 5, 10 and 12. Pierre Monteux will conduct July 22 and Aug. 11. Other conductors will be Richard Burgin, July 29; Eleazar de Carvalho, Aug. 3; and Leonard Bernstein,, Aug. 4.

* * *

THE PROGRAMS will include July 20, Berlioz, "Roman Carnival Overture"; Debussy, "The Afternoon of a Faun"; Ravel, "Rapsodie Espagnole"; and Brahms, "Symphony number 2."

July 21, Wagner, "A Faust Overture"; "Waldweben" from Siegfried; "Prelude and Love-Death" from Tristan and Isolde; and "Die Walkure," Act I. Soloists will be Margaret Harshaw, soprano; Albert DaCosta, tenor; and James Pease, bass.

July 22, Rossini, "Overture to L'Italiana in Algeri"; Bartok, "Concerto for Orchestra"; and Schubert, "Symphony number 7 in C major."

July 27, Beethoven, "Overture to Leonore number 2"; Petrassi, "Concerto for Orchestra, number 5"; and Tchaikovsky, "Symphony number 4."

* * *

JULY 28, HANSON, "Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky"; Schumann, "Piano Concerto in A Minor" (soloist, Rudolf Serkin); Honegger, "Symphony number 5"; and Debussy, "La Mer."

July 29, Handel, "Concerto Grosso in D minor, opus 6, number 10"; Hindemith, "Violin Concerto," (soloist, Ruth Posselt); and Mahler, [illegible] number 1."

AUG. 5, COPLAND, "Symphonic Ode"; Brahms, "Concerto for Violin and Cello," (soloists, Zino Francescatti and Samuel Mayes); and Schumann, "Symphony number 2."

Aug. 10, Haydn, "Symphony number 102 in B flat"; Piston, "Symphony number 6"; Strauss, "Don Juan"; Dukas, "L'Apprenti Sorcier."

Aug. 11, Freed, "Festival Overture"; Brahms, "Symphony number 3"; Enesco, "Suite for Orchestra"; Strauss, "Suite from Der Rosenkavalier."

Aug. 12, Wagner, "Overture and Bacchanale from Tannhausser"; "A Siegfried Idyll," "Die Meistersinger von Nuernberg," Act III, (opening and final scene, chorus and soloists Marguerite Willauer, Albert Da Costa and James Pease.)

* * *

BENNY GOODMAN will appear as soloist for the first time with the Boston Symphony during the chamber orchestra series featuring music of Bach and Mozart. He will play Mozart's "Clarinet Concerto." Soloists will include William Kroll, violin; and Lukas Foss, piano, Mr. Foss also conducting a concert as guest. The Yale Glee Club will appear under the direction of Hugh Ross. Boris Goldovsky, Luboshutz and Nemenoff will give a program of Mozart Concertos. The series will end with Bach's "Passion According to Saint John" with Festival Chorus and soloists under the direction of Charles Munch.

ALBANY, N. Y.
Knickerbocker News
Circ. D. 52,692
APR 2 1956

APR 4 1956

Boston Pops, Fiedler Honored At State House

BOSTON (UP)—Orchestra leader Arthur Fiedler has a new baton but chances are that patrons of the Boston Pops concerts this spring won't see him wave it.

He might drop it.

Maestro Fiedler was presented the $2,500, diamond-encrusted gold baton Tuesday during State House ceremonies commemorating the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 75th season.

Fiedler received the baton from Lawrence W. Kanaga; vice president and general manager of the Victor Record Division of the Radio Corporation of America, the firm for which the orchestra records.

The legislature commended the orchestra, Fiedler and Charles Munch, the musical director, for giving Boston a world-wide reputation as a musical center. A resolution adopted by the lawmakers described the musicians as "ambassadors of good will to all the peoples of the world."

Goodman, Chamber Orchestra To Give Tanglewood Concert

Benny Goodman, famed orchestra leader and clarinetist, will make his debut at Tanglewood this summer with a chamber orchestra of Boston Symphony musicians.

He will play in Mozart's Clarinet Concerto at one of the concerts of the Bach-Mozart series to be presented in the theater from July 6 through July 15.

Mr. Goodman made his debut in the chamber music field in the East in 1950 when he appeared as a soloist at Music Mountain in Falls Village, Conn.

His Tanglewood performance also will mark his first appearance with the Boston Symphony.

Other soloists in the chamber orchestra series at Tanglewood in July will be William Kroll, violinist, and Lukas Foss, pianist. Mr. Foss also will appear as guest conductor.

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 185,401
APR 3 1956

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 196,593
APR 3 1956

Legislature to Honor Symphony Orchestra

The Legislature will honor the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 75th anniversary in an extraordinary recess of the Senate at the State House today.

Special citations will be given by House Speaker Michael J. Skerry and Senate President Richard Furbush.

They will be accepted by conductor Charles Munch and Arthur Fiedler, Henry B. Cabot, president of the trustees; and Thomas D. Perry Jr., orchestra manager.

Fete 2 Orchestras At 75th Plateau

Diamond-studded batons were due to be presented today to conductors Charles Munch and Arthur Fiedler in commemoration of the 75th anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Boston Pops Orchestra.

Before the batons are presented, the Legislature was to complete action on resolutions congratulating the orchestras on reaching this milestone in their progress.

Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 113,081
APR 4 1956

Sun (e)
HUDSON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 1,965
APR 4 1956

Leonard Bernstein Conducts Tonight

President Charles F. T. Seaverns of the Bushnell Memorial announced today that Leonard Bernstein, brilliant young conductor and composer, will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the final concert of this season's Bushnell Symphony Series tonight. He will come to Hartford instead of Charles Munch, music director of the orchestra.

Tonight's concert had originally been scheduled for Mar. 19, but a blizzard that day caused the postponement.

In addition to Mr. Bernstein, the Bushnell has also secured the appearance of Jesus Maria Sanroma, renowned pianist, as assisting soloist. He will perform Stravinsky's "Capriccio for Piano and Orchestra" with the Boston ensemble.

Other works on the program will include Mozart's Symphony No. 29 and Prokofieff's Symphony No. 5.

Although still well under 40 years of age, Mr. Bernstein is a foremost figure in American music. Principal conductor of the Symphony of the Air, he has guest-conducted most of the major orchestras in U. S. and Europe, has been presented frequently as guest piano soloist with orchestras [illegible]

High C's

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, in its 75th season, will tour Europe for five weeks this Fall, at the conclusino of the 1956 Berkshire Festival in Lenox [illegible] completed.

[illegible] the Ingram [illegible] national [illegible] the orchestra will perform under [illegible] Munch, [illegible] and [illegible] once [illegible] Boston [illegible] one of [illegible] ing its [illegible] wood [illegible] will [illegible] Edinburgh. The itinerary is still to be worked out but it is expected the orchestra will also visit Cork and Dublin en route to Edinburgh, and then Norway, Sweden, Finland, Denmark, Germany, Austria, Switzerland, France, England, and possibly Italy.

Words And Deeds

Sunday Post
BRIDGEPORT, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 61,159

APR 1 1956

TURNING the DIALS

By FRED H. RUSSELL

Being on the right side of the law has paid off well for George Petrie, dark and debonair actor heard as Special Agent Reynolds on CBS radio's "FBI in Peace and War" Wednesday nights from 8:30 to 9 o'clock. He has played sparely the aggressor, but his authoritative characterizations of lawyers and enforcement officers have been heard in title roles of five previous long-running mystery-crime dramas on radio.

A waggish radio producer provided Petrie with a real life brush with the law at the outset of his broadcasting career. While on location in Switzerland, making the film "Four Days Leave" he received a cablegram: "You are wanted by the police. Internment starts June 5. Sentence 17 weeks." Alert Swiss authorities had to be convinced that the message was an offer from CBS radio's "Call the Police" series.

Petrie became a serious student of drama during his school days in his native New Haven. To prove his ability to be self-supporting at an early age, he trekked 3,000 miles to enroll and earn his way through the University of Southern California, where the National Collegiate Players, honorary drama society, tapped him in his junior year.

While playing in "Brighten the Corner" on Broadway he was propelled by romance to concentrate on radio. In the company was a young California actress, Patty Pope. When they married he decided to forsake the financial hazard of stage runs for steady, year-round work in radio. His only absence from the air was during a three and a half year stint in the army during World War II.

Now living in Westport, since the arrival of his young daughter, he spends his spare time in unearthing antiques for his superb collection of early American furniture.

Orchestra and Singers

Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony orchestra and the combined Harvard Glee Club and Radcliff Choral Society in portions of Bach's "Passion According to St. John" on NBC radio tomorrow night at 8:15 o'clock.

Soloists will be Adele Addison, soprano; Betty Allen, mezzo-soprano; David Lloyd, tenor, and Mac Morgan and James Joyce, basses. G. Wallace Woodworth is the choral director.

Herald News (e)
FALL RIVER, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 39,447

APR 4 1956

ALBANY, N. Y.
Knickerbocker News
Circ. D. 52,692
APR 2 1956

Goodman, Chamber Orchestra To Give Tanglewood Concert

Benny Goodman, famed orchestra leader and clarinetist, will make his debut at Tanglewood this summer with a chamber orchestra of Boston Symphony musicians.

He will play in Mozart's Clarinet Concerto at one of the concerts of the Bach-Mozart series to be presented in the theater from July 6 through July 15.

Mr. Goodman made his debut in the chamber music field in the East in 1950 when he appeared as a soloist at Music Mountain in Falls Village, Conn.

His Tanglewood performance also will mark his first appearance with the Boston Symphony.

Other soloists in the chamber orchestra series at Tanglewood in July will be William Kroll, violinist, and Lukas Foss, pianist. Mr. Foss also will appear as guest conductor.

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 185,401
APR 3 1956

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 196,593
APR 3 1956

Boston Symphony Paid Honor

[SPECIAL TO THE HERALD NEWS]

BOSTON—Leaders of the legislature paused to pay tribute to the 75-year-old Boston Symphony Orchestra on its "diamond jubilee celebration" held in the Senate Chamber.

Senate President Richard I. Furbush (R-Waltham) and Speaker of the House Michael F. Skerry (D-Medford) read resolutions passed by their respective branches congratulating the orchestra on its world-wide reputation and for its contribution to the culture of the city and State.

Charles Munch, conductor of the orchestra, and Arthur Fiedler, who conducts the famed Boston Pops and the Esplanade concerts, replied for the orchestra.

Lawrence W. Kanaga, vice-president of the RCA- Victor Records, which has recorded the orchestra for 40 years, presented a $2500 diamond-encrusted gold baton to the Symphony. Kanaga said a movie is being made of the orchestra which will be shown around the world.

Fete 2 Orchestras At 75th Plateau

Diamond-studded batons were due to be presented today to conductors Charles Munch and Arthur Fiedler in commemoration of the 75th anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Boston Pops Orchestra.

Before the batons are presented, the Legislature was to complete action on resolutions congratulating the orchestras on reaching this milestone in their progress.

Post (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 285,839
APR 4 1956

Society

Pops Concerts Will Begin on May Day

By ROSE WALSH

May day will be doubly welcome this year for it is bringing the opening of Boston's world famous Pops season at Symphony Hall. Carrying on opening night tradition, the New England Grenfell Association has taken the major portion of the floor and first balcony seats for the benefit of the Grenfell Mission in Labrador.

The project this summer is a new cottage hospital at Nain, Labrador, to care for the Eskimos of that north Labrador region. The operation is a big one because of the short summer season, and Nain is so far north that to get materials and men there in time to beat the freeze-up presents a problem.

Assisting Mrs. Robert M. P. Kennard, Grenfell Night chairman, are Mrs. W. Lloyd Allen, Mrs. Theodore L. Badger, Mrs. William R. Bullard, Mrs. George S. Fuller, Mrs. Graham Granger, Mrs. Theodore A. Greene, Mrs. Lea S. Luquer, Mrs. Eldon Macleod, Mrs. Thorvald S. Ross, Mrs, Wyman B. Shaw and Mrs. Robert G. Stone.

Boston Smith College Club and alumnae of the Smith School for Social Work have scheduled their Pops night for Tuesday, May 8. Mrs. Sherman R. Thayer of Chestnut Hill, chairman, has on her committee Mrs. Richard Ciute, president of the club, and Mrs. Theodore A. Greene, chairman of patronesses.

* * *

Prenuptial Party

Mr. and Mrs. Guido L. Rugo were hosts at an Easter cocktail party in honor of their son, Lawrence, and his bride-elect, Miss Jeredith Stiver, at their Marblehead Neck home, Carcasonne. Pink azaleas, white tulips, calla lilies and Easter lilies gave a lovely spring setting to the marble reception hall where the young couple, whose wedding is planned for Sunday afternoon at St. Camillus' Church, Arlington, greeted their friends.

The bridegroom-elect's brothers, Joseph, Robert and Paul, with their wives, and Richard Rugo helped with reception duties. Among the guests were Judge and Mrs. Henry Duggan, Dr. and Mrs. Charles E. Donovan, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Perini, Mr. and Mrs. Louis Perini, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Elwood Kalbach, Mr. and Mrs. Francis Magee, Mrs. William J. Foley and her daughter, Patricia; Mrs. James D. Fisher and her son, James D., Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Charles Mogavero, Mr. and Mrs. John Macdonald, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Garcelon, Mr. and Mrs. Felix Carr, Mr. and Mrs. George Crowley, Mrs. Allan White and her son, Allan, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Byron Wiswell, Mr. and Mrs. William Kearney and Mr. and Mrs. Richard Lucas.

* * *

Hospital Aid Party

An article for the rummage sale will be the admission to this morning's bundle party at the Massachusetts Eye and Ear Infirmary, 243 Charles st., beginning at 10 o'clock.

The next rummage sale will be held on Thursday, April 26, at Horticultural Hall.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE
Circ. D. 42,039
APR 4 1956

Berkshire Concerts Listed For Boston Symphony

Charles Munch has announced the programs for the Music Shed concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival at Lenox, Mass.

* * *

SHED CONCERTS will be held on Friday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons from July 20 through Aug. 12. "Bach-Mozart" concerts by a chamber orchestra of Boston Symphony players will be presented on the weekends of July 6 through 15 in the intimate Theatre-Concert Hall. Chamber groups will present concerts on the six Wednesday evenings of the festival weeks.

Subscriptions are now being filled at Symphony Hall, Boston, for all concerts.

Mr. Munch will conduct the concerts of July 20, 21, 27 and 28; Aug. 5, 10 and 12. Pierre Monteux will conduct July 22 and Aug. 11. Other conductors will be Richard Burgin, July 29; Eleazar de Garvalho, Aug. 3; and Leonard Bernstein,, Aug. 4.

* * *

THE PROGRAMS will include July 20, Berlioz, "Roman Carnival Overture"; Debussy, "The Afternoon of a Faun"; Ravel, "Rapsodie Espagnole"; and Brahms, "Symphony number 2."

July 21, Wagner, "A Faust Overture"; "Waldweben" from Siegfried; "Prelude and Love-Death" from Tristan and Isolde; and "Die Walkure," Act I. Soloists will be Margaret Harshaw, soprano; Albert DaCosta, tenor; and James Pease, bass.

July 22, Rossini, "Overture to L'Italiana in Algeri"; Bartok, "Concerto for Orchestra"; and Schubert, "Symphony number 7 in C major."

July 27, Beethoven, "Overture to Leonore number 2"; Petrassi, "Concerto for Orchestra, number 5"; and Tchaikovsky, "Symphony number 4."

* * *

JULY 28, HANSON, "Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitsky"; Schumann, "Piano Concerto in A Minor" (soloist, Rudolf Serkin); Honegger, "Symphony number 5"; and Debussy, "La Mer."

July 29, Handel, "Concerto Grosso in D minor, opus 6, number 10"; Hindemith, "Violin Concerto," (soloist, Ruth Posselt); and Mahler, "Symphony number 1."

Aug. 3, Hindemith, "Mathis der Maler"; Ravel, "Piano Concerto," (soloist, Jocy de Oliveira); and Stravinsky, "Petrouchka."

Aug. 4, Moeve, "Variations for Orchestra"; Mozart, "Kyrie and Gloria from the Mass in C Minor," (with chorus and soloists, Adele Addison, soprano; Eunice Alberts, contralto; David Lloyd, tenor); Prokofieff, "Symphony number 5."

AUG. 5, COPLAND, "Symphonic Ode"; Brahms, "Concerto for Violin and Cello," (soloists, Zino Francescatti and Samuel Mayes); and Schumann, "Symphony number 2."

Aug. 10, Haydn, "Symphony number 102 in B flat"; Piston, "Symphony number 6"; Strauss, "Don Juan"; Dukas, "L'Apprenti Sorcier."

Aug. 11, Freed, "Festival Overture"; Brahms, "Symphony number 3"; Enesco, "Suite for Orchestra"; Strauss, "Suite from Der Rosenkavalier."

Aug. 12, Wagner, "Overture and Bacchanale from Tannhausser"; "A Siegfried Idyll," "Die Meistersinger von Nuernberg," Act III, (opening and final scene, chorus and soloists Marguerite Willauer, Albert Da Costa and James Pease.)

* * *

BENNY GOODMAN will appear as soloist for the first time with the Boston Symphony during the chamber orchestra series featuring music of Bach and Mozart. He will play Mozart's "Clarinet Concerto." Soloists will include William Kroll, violin; and Lukas Foss, piano, Mr. Foss also conducting a concert as guest. The Yale Glee Club will appear under the direction of Hugh Ross. Boris Goldovsky, Luboshutz and Nemenoff will give a program of Mozart Concertos. The series will end with Bach's "Passion According to Saint John" with Festival Chorus and soloists under the direction of Charles Munch.

Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 113,081
APR 4 1956

Tonight's concert had originally been scheduled for Mar. 19, but a blizzard that day caused the postponement.

In addition to Mr. Bernstein, the Bushnell has also secured the appearance of Jesus Maria Sanroma, renowned pianist, as assisting soloist. He will perform Stravinsky's "Capriccio for Piano and Orchestra" with the Boston ensemble.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 27,538
APR 4 1956

Boston Pops, Fiedler Honored At State House

BOSTON (UP)—Orchestra leader Arthur Fiedler has a new baton but chances are that patrons of the Boston Pops concerts this spring won't see him wave it.

He might drop it.

Maestro Fiedler was presented the $2,500, diamond-encrusted gold baton Tuesday during State House ceremonies commemorating the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 75th season.

Fiedler received the baton from Lawrence W. Kanaga; vice president and general manager of the Victor Record Division of the Radio Corporation of America, the firm for which the orchestra records.

The legislature commended the orchestra, Fiedler and Charles Munch, the musical director, for giving Boston a world-wide reputation as a musical center. A resolution adopted by the lawmakers described the musicians as "ambassadors of good will to all the peoples of the world."

Sun (e)
HUDSON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 1,965
APR 4 1956

High C's

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, in its 75th season, will tour Europe for five weeks this Fall, at the conclusino of the 1956 Berkshire Festival in Lenox, in cooperation with the International Exchange Program of the American National Theatre and Academy. The orchestra's 104 men will perform in 25 cities on the tour, under the direction of Charles Munch, who has invited his friend and colleague, Pierre Monteux, once regular conductor of the Boston Symphony, to conduct some of the concerts abroad. Ending its U. S. activities at Tanglewood August 12, the orchestra will open its European tour in Edinburgh, Scotland, August 26. The itinerary is still to be worked out but it is expected the orchestra will also visit Cork and Dublin en route to Edinburgh, and then Norway, Sweden, Finland, Denmark, Germany, Austria, Switzerland, France, England, and possibly Italy.

Words And Deeds

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 196,593

APR 4 1956

Political Diary

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 4

Calendar

HEARINGS

Legislative committee hearings at the State House tomorrow include:

Report on establishing minimum standards of health, safety, and care of children at summer camps; Public Health; Room 480; 10:30 a.m.

Salary increases for commissioners in Department of Public Utilities; Public Service; Room 443; 10:30 a.m.

Adjustment of salaries of various state employes; Public Service; Room 443; 10:30 a.m.

Establishment of police force in Port of Boston Commission; Public Service; Room 443; 10:30 a.m.

Creation of Massachusetts Resort & Vacation Commission; House Ways and Means; Room 245; 2 p.m.

Chronicle

Major political developments in past 24 hours:

REDS

Witnesses before State Commission Investigating Subversive Activities should be forced to testify in view of U. S. Supreme Court's decision Monday, Rep. Edmond J. Donlan (D-West Roxbury) said. If state can't prosecute Reds, he said, they should not be able to plead self-incrimination.

FLUORINE

Harvard Dental School lecturer said tooth decay reduced 60 per cent. in children drinking fluorinated water.

LIE DETECTOR

Restrictions on use of lie detectors in private industry asked by Rep. Norman Weinberg (D-Brighton).

ROADS

Bill for $1 million underpass or overpass at Brookline Ave. and Riverway, Boston, approved by Committee on Metropolitan Affairs.

SYMPHONY

State Legislature honored Boston Symphony Orchestra in Senate chamber. Musical Director Charles Munch and Arthur Fiedler presented with $2,000 diamond-studded baton by recording company.

DEATH

Rep. Thomas F. Linehan (D., Roxbury) died at Beth Israel Hospital after a brief illness.

MTA

The House killed a bill requiring "fringe" communities to pay part of MTA deficit.

STRIKE

Spokesman for Boston's striking carpenters said 1,800 more in suburbs will join walk-out unless settlement is effected today. Carpenters striking for five cents an hour more than what they were offered.

VACCINE

Most school children under 15 may get second polio shot before polio season starts, according to Boston Health Commr. Dr. John H. Cauley. Increase in vaccine shipments may be sufficient to complete first shot series for children up to 15 this month.

HEART LAW

House approved bill to extend "heart law" to employees in Registry of Motor Vehicles. Law permits retirement at two-thirds pay for total or partial disability resulting from hypertension or heart disease. Disability is "presumed" to have been suffered in line of duty. Law presently applies only to police and firemen.

HOUSING

Senate passed bill authorizing up to $30 million in local bond issue for construction of low-rent housing for elderly people.

CONVENTION

U. S. Rep. John W. McCormack (D., South Boston) hopes majority of Massachusetts delegates attending Democratic National Convention will be uncommitted. He said it would be best to maintain position of "flexibility" for tactical purposes.

PLEA

Gov. Herter will hear last-minute plea for reprieve for Kenneth R. Chapin, 20, convicted slayer of baby-sitter and charge in Springfield in 1954. Chapin faces electric chair.

INSURANCE

Spokesmen for employers and insurance groups opposed proposals for state-administered cash sickness fund at State House hearing. Fund would be in competition with private plans covering workers in industry. Opposition groups said proposals would require workers to contribute part of the premium.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 122,000

APR 4 1956

Society: Grenfell Pops Benefit on May 1, Smith Scholarship Night May 8

(Globe Photo by Charles McCormick)

SMITH ALUMNAE Mrs. Sherman Thayer and Mrs. William R. Robertson make plans for Smith Pops at alumnae coffee meeting. The May 8 Smith Night at Symphony Hall will help provide scholarships.

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

A favorite Boston enterprise for 71 years, the world-famous Pops concerts in Symphony Hall, also have come to stand for one of the most pleasant ways to entertain friends and at the same time benefit one of numberless good causes.

When the Pops season opens on May 1, it will mark the 14th year that the opening program has benefitted the New England Grenfell Association. There will be additional interest this year in raising funds to help with this important cause, for the New England Grenfell Association is helping build an urgently needed new cottage hospital at Main, Labrador.

Mrs. Robert M. P. Kennard, who has headed the Grenfell Pops committee so successfully before, is again chairman, with attractive "veteran" Grenfell workers Mrs. W. Lloyd Allen, Mrs. Theodore L. Badger, Mrs. Thorvald Ross, Mrs. Wyman Shaw, Mrs. Lea Luquer, Mrs. George S. Fuller, and others helping her.

They're meeting today to address the blue and white Pops invitations with their Labrador dogteam insignia that symbolizes the help that Dr. Wilfred Grenfell initiated in 1892. Today there are four Grenfell Mission hospitals, seven nursing stations, a snowmobile for the transport of ill patients, plane service, and a hospital boat.

ANOTHER GOOD POPS CAUSE will be the Smith scholarships, which Smith Night at Pops on May 8 will help provide. The Boston Smith College Club and alumnae of the Smith College School for Social Work are sponsoring the evening, and Mrs. Sherman R. Thayer of Chestnut Hill is chairman, assisted by Mrs. Richard Chute of Brookline, president of the Boston Smith Club, and Mrs. Theodore A. Greene of Chestnut Hill, who is generously giving time to serve on both the Grenfell and the Smith Pops committees. Mrs. Albert Sylvester of Cohasset is ticket chairman for Smith Pops, and the committee also include Mrs. Vcevold Strekalovsky of Dedham, Mrs. William R. Robertson of Wellesley Hills, Mrs. Robert S. Kretschmar of West Newton and Mrs. Gershen Rosenblum of Newton, who will represent the New England alumnae of the School for Social Work.

VASSAR ALUMNAE, who will have their Pops night on May 16, are meeting next Monday at Mrs. John P. Marquand's for evening coffee, and Robert Segal will be the speaker. Mrs. K. E. Compton, Mrs. Alden Foss, Mrs. Stanley Dunn, Mrs. David E. Gates, Mrs. Owen Thomas and Mrs. Thomas S. Kuhn are committee members for the meeting, one of a series of area meetings that include towns outside Boston.

THE JUNIOR LEAGUE is making an outstanding community gift this year, beginning with $8000 for the Rehabilitation Institute of the Boston Dispensary used for the purchase of a Hubbard tank and other equipment to help combat polio's crippling effects. The remainder of the record $10,000 earned by the League's Bargain Box on Newbury st. and by the Boris Goldovsky pre-Symphony lectures will go to a number of civic projects.

Five hundred dollars is being given to the Boston Symphony Orchestra to provide a free Summer concert for children; Ellis Memorial and the Eldridge Settlement House will share funds that will provide adequate lighting systems; the Epilepsy Information Center will be given funds for evening clinics for parents of epileptics, and the Mass. Eye and Ear Infirmary money for a plastic cornea instrument cabinet.

A FIRST CHILD, Kathryn Ann, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Ferguson 3d (Naomi Harrington) of Boston on March 31 at Wyman House, Mount Auburn Hospital. She is the granddaughter of Mrs. G. W. Ferguson and of Mr. and Mrs. Cornelius J. Harrington of Cambridge. Mrs. C. A. Welsh is the child's great-grandmother.

A SON, Robert Jr., was born to Dr. and Mrs. Robert W. Clubb of Cambridge on March 24 at Richardson House. The grandparents are Mr. and Mrs. Robert O. Clubb of Raymond, Wash. and Mr. and Mrs. Percy J. Gardner of New Haven.

Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 101,022

APR 4 1956

PEOPLE in the NEWS

Diamond-Studded Baton for Maestro

BOSTON, April 4 (UP)—Orchestra leader Arthur Fiedler has a new baton but chances are that patrons of the Boston Pops Concerts this spring won't see him wave it.

He might drop it.

Fiedler

Maestro Fiedler was presented the $2,500, diamond-encrusted gold baton during State House ceremonies commemorating the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 75th season.

Fiedler received the baton from Lawrence W. Kanaga, vice president and general manager of the Victor Record Division of the Radio Corporation of America, the firm for which the orchestra records.

The Legislature commended the orchestra, Fiedler and Charles Munch, the musical director, for giving Boston a world-wide reputation as a musical center. A resolution adopted by the lawmakers described the musicians as "ambassadors of good will to all the peoples of the world."

Famed Statesman Shows How It's Done

MONTE CARLO, April 4 (AP) — Sir Winston Churchill didn't break the bank at Monte Carlo but he left the famous gambling Casino a few hours before dawn today as a winner.

Churchill

The former British prime minister, vacationing on the French Riviera, played routlette for several hours, his usual cigar jutting from the corner of his mouth.

After cashing in a handful of chips, Sir Winston sat and talked for nearly half an hour with Aristotle Onassis, the Greek shipping millionaire who owns a controlling interest in the company that operates the Casino.

Times (e)
GLOUCESTER, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 8,769

APR 4 1956

Solons Praise Boston Symphony, 75 Years Old

STATE HOUSE, Boston—Leaders of the Legislature paused to pay tribute to the 75-year-old Boston Symphony Orchestra on its "diamond jubilee celebration" held in the Senate Chamber.

Senate President Richard I. Furbush, Republican, of Waltham and Wingaersheek Beach, and Speaker of the House Michael F. Skerry, Democrat, of Medford, read resolutions passed by their respective branches congratulating the orchestra on its world-wide reputation and for its contribution to the culture of the city and state.

Charles Munch, conductor of the orchestra, and Arthur Fiedler, who conducts the famed Boston Pops and the Esplanade concerts, replied for the orchestra.

Lawrence W. Kanaga, vice president of RCA-Victor Records, which has recorded the orchestra for 40 years, presented a $2500 diamond-encrusted gold baton to the Symphony.

Kanaga said a movie is being made of the orchestra which will be shown around the world.

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 154,241
APR 4 1956

Society: Grenfell Pops Benefit on May 1, Smith Scholarship Night May 8

A LEADING CHARACTER in the Vincent Club's 65th annual show, "Going, Going, Gone," which opens tonight at New England Mutual Hall, is "Finnegan" (center) who moves to the hall for dress rehearsal, with a helping hand by Mrs. Charles F. Hovey of the Vincent show committee and Louis Josephs, who is loaning Finnegan. The big, gala show, which continues through Saturday night, will benefit the Vincent Memorial Hospital.

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

A favorite Boston enterprise for 71 years, the world-famous Pops concerts in Symphony Hall also have come to stand for one of the most pleasant ways to entertain friends and at the same time benefit one of numberless good causes.

When the Pops season opens on May 1, it will mark the 14th year that the opening program has benefitted the New England Grenfell Association. There will be additional interest this year in raising funds to help with this important cause, for the New England Grenfell Association is helping build an urgently needed new cottage hospital at Main, Labrador.

Mrs. Robert M. P. Kennard, who has headed the Grenfell Pops committee so successfully before, is again chairman, with attractive "veteran" Grenfell workers Mrs. W. Lloyd Allen, Mrs. Theodore L. Badger, Mrs. Thorvald Ross, Mrs. Wyman Shaw, Mrs. Lea Luquer, Mrs. George S. Fuller, and others helping her.

They're meeting today to address the blue and white Pops invitations with their Labrador dogteam insignia that symbolizes the help that Dr. Wilfred Grenfell initiated in 1892. Today there are four Grenfell Mission hospitals, seven nursing stations, a snowmobile for the transport of ill patients, plane service, and a hospital boat.

FRITZ KREISLER and his wife are among the patrons and patronesses for the Jordan Hall recital debut of the young Boston soprano, Gloria Tromara, on Friday evening.

Their interest is twofold. At the piano will be Mr. Kreisler's favorite accompanist, Carl Lamson. Furthermore it was Mr. Lamson and his wife who foresaw the potentialities of Gloria when she was a child of 12, and trained her in voice and the concert repertory from that time.

She justified their faith during a three years' residence in Mexico, where she made a name for herself not only in song recitals, but also in radio, television programs, films, and on the stage—one big success having been as an actress in the role of Desdemona in Shakespeare's "Othello," in which she spoke her lines in Spanish.

Others among patrons and patronesses are Mrs. Lewis Armistead, Miss Helen Bond, Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Bond, Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Bond, Mrs. John L. Bottomley, Mr. and Mrs. Percy B. Eckhart, Mrs. Henry Endicott, Charles J. Foley, Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller, Mrs. Samuel Gold, Mrs. Marion Lawrence Higgins, Mrs. Robert Hoffman, Mrs. L. Taylor Johnson, Maxim Karolik, Dr. Isabelle D. Kerr, Gerard B. Ladd, Mrs. Frederick Lesh, Stewart Mitchell, Dr. and Mrs. John T. Nasse, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Nasse, Bishop F. S. Noli, Mrs. Mary Sampson, Mrs. Charles P. Sylvester, Mr. and Mrs. Julius Theodorowicz, Mrs. Max D. Wit.

IN BERMUDA for a week's vacation are Miss Denise Holland, Miss Harriet Reilly, Miss Joyce Russo, and Miss Elizabeth Gomperts.

AT LA COQUILLE, Palm Beach, is Mrs. C. H. Deering of North Grafton.

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Republican
Circ. 30,746
APR 4 - 1956

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 130,559
APR 4 1956

Social Chatter

By Alison Arnold

A SURE HARBINGER OF SPRING is the opening night of the Pops concerts in Symphony Hall. The date is Tuesday, May 1, and for the fourteenth year, this first concert will benefit the New England Grenfell Association. Arthur Fiedler will conduct and the concert begins at 8:30. The New England Grenfell Association, part of the Grenfell Mission in Labrador, is helping to build a new cottage hospital this summer at Nain, Labrador, to care for the Eskimos of that North Labrador region. This is quite a project because the summer season is so short and Nain is so far north that it's a problem to get materials and men there to beat the freeze-up in the fall. Chairman of Grenfell Night at the Pops is Mrs. Robert M. P. Kennard. Helping her on the committee are Mrs. W. Lloyd Allen, Mrs. Theodore L. Badger, Mrs. William R. Bullard, Mrs. George S. Fuller, Mrs. Graham Granger, Mrs. Theodore A. Greene, Mrs. Lea S. Luquer, Mrs. Eldon Macleod, Mrs. Thorvald S. Ross, Mrs. Wyman B. Shaw and Mrs. Robert G. Stone. They'll meet today at the home of Mrs. Kennard in Newton Centre to address the attractive blue and white invitations.

* * *

TULIPS AND POPS are synonymous with the lovely month of May in Boston. After the recent snowstorms it's hard to predict when the tulips will be at the height of their beauty, but it's certain that Tuesday evening, May 8, will be a gay and lively evening at Symphony Hall. It will be Smith Night, sponsored by the Boston Smith College Club and alumnae of the Smith College School for Social Work to benefit scholarships. Mrs. Sherman R. Thayer of Chestnut Hill is chairman of Smith Night, assisted by Mrs. Richard Chute, president of the Boston Smith Club, and Mrs. Theodore A. Greene of Chestnut Hill, chairman of patronesses. Mrs. Albert Sylvester of Cohasset is ticket chairman and also on the committee are Mrs. Vcevold Strekalovsky of Dedham, Mrs. William R. Robertson of Wellesley Hills, Mrs. Robert S. Kretschmar of West Newton, and Mrs. Gershen Rosenblum of Newton, representing New England alumnae of the Smith College School for Social Work.

MRS. THAYER

* * *

IT'S A COMMON COMPLAINT among members of alumnae groups that when they go to a meeting they never see anyone from their own class. So they gradually stop making the effort to go "all the way to Boston," and the graduate organization begins to lose its active membership. The Vassar Club of Boston is making an effort this spring to remedy this situation by following the example of Smith alumnae and holding meetings in its branches. These meetings are taking a variety of form and content. Vassar alumnae of the South Shore area started the ball rolling. Friday morning, March 23, by meeting for coffee at the home of Mrs. Lawrence Dana in Hingham, Mrs. Joseph W. Allen arranged the meeting and Mrs. George B. Wislocki of Milton, president of the Vassar Alumnae Association, spoke informally about recent developments at the college. On Thursday, March 29, alumnae from Needham, Dover, Natick, Framingham and scattered outlying districts gathered for tea at the home of Mrs. Finley H. Perry in Dover. The Cambridge Branch of the Boston Vassar Club will hold an evening meeting, Monday, April 9, at the home of Mrs. John P. Marquand at 8 o'clock. After a coffee hour, Robert Segal, executive director of the Jewish Community Council of Metropolitan Boston, will speak on "The Racial Situation in New England." The committee for this evening includes Mrs. Katherine E. Compton, chairman, Mrs. Alden S. Foss, Mrs. Stanley Dunn, Mrs. David E. Gates, Mrs. Owen C. Thomas and Mrs. Thomas S. Kuhn.

* * *

THE RECORD TOTAL of $35,025 has been brought in by the Vincent Show program advertisements—the largest amount ever raised in a Vincent advertising campaign. This was announced last night by Mrs. Edwin T. Green, chairman of advertising, at the dress rehearsal of the Vincent Show, "Going, Going—Gone!" which opens tonight at 8:30 in New England Mutual Hall to benefit the Vincent Memorial Hospital. Much credit for this remarkable record goes to the advertising committee and to the long list of active members who added their efforts to those of the new provisionals to obtain 1141 ads. Active members awarded prizes were Mrs. Weston W. Adams, Gretchen Winkler and Mrs. Wallace Lincoln Pierce. The highest advertising total among the married provisional members was brought in by Mrs. Hamilton Heard, Jr., and the second place winner in this category was Mrs. George Freeman Thurber, Jr., of Nashua, N. H. The prize for provisionals with full-time jobs or at local colleges was won by Zella Thomas, and the provisional at college more than 25 miles from Boston who brought in the highest total was Whitney Drury, who is at Bryn Mawr. Putting together the huge program is a major operation. This year Jane S. Megrew was program editor, assisted by Mrs. C. Chauncey Gray and a committee of sixteen.

MRS. ADAMS

Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 40,726
APR 4 1956

Fancy Baton for Fiedler

BOSTON, April 4 (UP)—Orchestra Leader Arthur Fiedler has a new baton but chances are that patrons of the Boston Pops concerts this spring won't see him wave it.

He might drop it.

Maestro Fiedler was presented the $2500, diamond-eucrusted gold baton yesterday during state house ceremonies commemorating the Boston Symphony orchestra's 75th season.

Fiedler received the baton from Lawrence W. Kanaga, vice president of the firm for which the orchestra records.

The legislature commended the orchestra, Fiedler and Charles Munch, the musical director, for giving Boston a world-wide reputation as a musical center. A resolution adopted by the lawmakers described the musicians as "ambassadors of good will to all the peoples of the world."

Courant (m)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Republican
Circ. 94,124
APR 4 1956

Boston Symphony Is Here Tonight With Bernstein

Leonard Bernstein, celebrated conductor, composer and television performer, will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra tonight in the final event of this season's Bushnell Symphony Series.

Charles F. T. Seaverns, president of the Bushnell Memorial, announced Tuesday that Mr. Bernstein will come to Hartford instead of Charles Munch, music director of the orchestra, who was to have conducted when the orchestra was earlier scheduled for March 19. The March 19 concert was postponed to tonight because of the severe storm of that date.

Sanroma Is Soloist

In addition to Mr. Bernstein, the Bushnell has also secured the appearance tonight of the outstanding pianist, Jesus Maria Sanroma, Mr. Seaverns said. He announced tonight's Bushnell program as follows:

Mozart's symphony No. 29 in A Major; Stravinsky's Capriccio for Piano and Orchestra, and Symphony No. 5, by Prokofieff.

Principal conductor of the Symphony of the Air, Mr. Bernstein has been guest conductor of the major symphony orchestras here and abroad. He has also conducted at La Scala Opera in Milan, and has made frequent appearances as piano soloist with leading orchestras. He has been very active in television, notably on the program, "Omnibus."

Born in Puerto Rico, Mr. Sanroma now makes his home in that island, and, in fact, flew from there to Boston Tuesday in order to rehearse with the orchestra for the Bushnell appearance. He gave the first performance of tonight's Stravinsky work, with the Boston Symphony in 1930.

Mr. Sanroma, who tours each season in this country and abroad as a piano virtuoso, has appeared as assisting artist with all the major symphony orchestras, notably the Boston Symphony, for which he was piano soloist under the late Serge Koussevitzky for a number of years.

Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 113,081
APR 4 1956

Gold Baton Marks 75th Year of 'Pops'

Boston—(UP)—Orchestra Leader Arthur Fiedler has a new baton, but chances are that patrons of the Boston Pops Concerts this Spring won't see him wave it.

He might drop it.

Maestro Fiedler was presented the diamond-encrusted, $2,500 gold baton yesterday during State House ceremonies commemorating the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 75th season.

Mr. Fiedler received the baton from the Victor Record Division of the Radio Corporation of America, the firm for which the orchestra records.

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 397,884
APR 4 1956

Legislature Honors Hub Symphony, Pops

Resolutions citing Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, and Arthur Fiedler, Pops conductor, as "ambassadors of good will" were presented to them by the House and Senate yesterday in commemoration of the 75th anniversary of the orchestra.

House Speaker Michael Skerry and Senate President Richard I. Furbush made the presentations.

A $2000 diamond studded baton was presented the conductors by L. W. Kanaga, vice-president of RCA Victor records, to mark the 40 years the orchestra has recorded for RCA-Victor. Kanaga also announced that a $50,000 color movie featuring the orchestra would soon be available for national release to schools and

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 154,241
APR 4 1956

Society: Grenfell Pops & Smith Scholarsh

A LEADING CHARACTER in the Vincent Club's 65th annual show, "Going, Going, Gone," which opens tonight at New England Mutual Hall, is "Finnegan" (center) who moves to the hall for dress rehearsal, with a helping hand by Mrs. Charles F. Hovey of the Vincent show committee and Louis Josephs, who is loaning Finnegan. The big, gala show, which continues through Saturday night, will benefit the Vincent Memorial Hospital.

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

A favorite Boston enterprise for 71 years, the world-famous Pops concerts in Symphony Hall also have come to stand for one of the most pleasant ways to entertain friends and at the same time benefit one of numberless good causes.

When the Pops season opens on May 1, it will mark the 14th year that the opening program has benefitted the New England Grenfell Association. There will be additional interest this year in raising funds to help with this important cause, for the New England Grenfell Association is helping build an urgently needed new cottage hospital at Main, Labrador.

Mrs. Robert M. P. Kennard, who has headed the Grenfell Pops committee so successfully before, is again chairman, with attractive "veteran" Grenfell workers Mrs. W. Lloyd Allen, Mrs. Theodore L. Badger, Mrs. Thorvald Ross, Mrs. Wyman Shaw, Mrs. Lea Luquer, Mrs. George S. Fuller, and others helping her.

They're meeting today to address the blue and white Pops invitations with their Labrador dogteam insignia that symbolizes the help that Dr. Wilfred Grenfell initiated in 1892. Today there are four Grenfell Mission hospitals, seven nursing stations, a snowmobile for the transport of ill patients, plane service, and a hospital boat.

FRITZ KREISLER and his wife

Ike Doub

Mr. Kreisler's favorite accompanist, Carl Lamson. Furthermore it was Mr. Lamson and his wife who foresaw the potentialities of Gloria when she was a child of 12, and trained her in voice and the concert repertory from that time.

She justified their faith during a three years' residence in Mexico, where she made a name for herself not only in song recitals, but also in radio, television programs, films, and on the stage —one big success having been as an actress in the role of Desdemona in Shakespeare's "Othello," in which she spoke her lines in Spanish.

Others among patrons and patronesses are Mrs. Lewis Armistead, Miss Helen Bond, Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Bond, Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Bond, Mrs. John L. Bottomley, Mr. and Mrs. Percy B. Eckhart, Mrs. Henry Endicott, Charles J. Foley, Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller, Mrs. Samuel Gold, Mrs. Marion Lawrence Higgins, Mrs. Robert Hoffman, Mrs. L. Taylor Johnson, Maxim Karolik, Dr. Isabelle D. Kerr, Gerard B. Ladd, Mrs. Frederick Lesh, Stewart Mitchell, Dr. and Mrs. John T. Nasse, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Nasse, Bishop F. S. Noli.

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Republican
Circ. 80,746
APR 4 - 1956

Senate and House Give Citations to Boston Symphony

Boston, April 3—The Senate and House of Representatives today cited the Boston Symphony Orchestra as "ambassadors of goodwill to all the peoples of the world."

The citations, commemorating the musical organization's 75th anniversary, were presented at a unique ceremony in the Senate assembly room.

At the same time, L. W. Kanaga, vice - president of RCA Victor Records, presented the symphony with a $2000 diamond-studded baton marking the 40-year association between the orchestra and the recording company.

Charles Munch, music director and conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra, accepted the citations and baton for the other members of the musical organization.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 180,559
APR 4 1956

Social Chatter

By Alison Arnold

A SURE HARBINGER OF SPRING is the opening night of the Pops concerts in Symphony Hall. The date is Tuesday, May 1, and for the fourteenth year, this first concert will benefit the New England Grenfell Association. Arthur Fiedler will conduct and the concert begins at 8:30. The New England Grenfell Association, part of the Grenfell Mission in Labrador, is helping to build a new cottage hospital this summer at Nain, Labrador, to care for the Eskimos of that North Labrador region. This is quite a project because the summer season is so short and Nain is so far north that it's a problem to get materials and men there to beat the freeze-up in the fall. Chairman of Grenfell Night at the Pops is Mrs. Robert M. P. Kennard. Helping her on the committee are Mrs. W. Lloyd Allen, Mrs. Theodore L. Badger, Mrs. William R. Bullard, Mrs. George S. Fuller, Mrs. Graham Granger, Mrs. Theodore A. Greene, Mrs. Lea S. Luquer, Mrs. Eldon Macleod, Mrs. Thorvald S. Ross, Mrs. Wyman B. Shaw and Mrs. Robert G. Stone. They'll meet today at the home of Mrs. Kennard in Newton Centre to address the attractive blue and white invitations.

* * *

TULIPS AND POPS are synonymous with the lovely month of May in Boston. After the recent snowstorms it's hard to predict when the tulips will be at the height of their beauty, but it's certain that Tuesday evening, May 8, will be a gay and lively evening at Symphony Hall. It will be Smith Night, sponsored by the Boston Smith College Club and alumnae of the Smith College School for Social Work to benefit scholarships. Mrs. Sherman R. Thayer of Chestnut Hill is chairman of Smith Night, assisted by Mrs. Richard Chute, president of the Boston Smith Club, and Mrs. Theodore A. Greene of Chestnut Hill, chairman of patronesses. Mrs. Albert Sylvester of Cohasset is ticket chairman and also on the committee are Mrs. Vcevold Strekalovsky of Dedham, Mrs. William R. Robertson of Wellesley Hills, Mrs. Robert S. Kretschmar of West Newton, and Mrs. Gershen Rosenblum of Newton, representing New England alumnae of the Smith College School for Social Work.

MRS. THAYER

* * *

IT'S A COMMON COMPLAINT among members of alumnae groups that when they go to a meeting they never see anyone from their own class. So they gradually stop making the effort to go "all the way to Boston," and the graduate organization begins to lose its active membership. The Vassar Club of Boston is making an effort this spring to remedy this situation by following the example of Smith alumnae and holding meetings in its branches. These meetings are taking a variety of form and content. Vassar alumnae of the South Shore area started the ball rolling. Friday morning, March 23, by meeting for coffee at the home of Mrs. Lawrence Dana in Hingham, Mrs. Joseph W. Allen arranged the meeting and Mrs. George B. Wislocki of Milton, president of the Vassar Alumnae Association, spoke informally about recent developments at the college. On Thursday, March 29, alumnae from Needham, Dover, Natick, Framingham and scattered outlying districts gathered for tea at the home of Mrs. Finley H. Perry in Dover. The Cambridge Branch of the Boston Vassar Club will hold an evening meeting, Monday, April 9, at the home of Mrs. John P. Marquand at 8 o'clock. After a coffee hour, Robert Segal, executive director of the Jewish Community Council of Metropolitan Boston, will speak on "The Racial Situation in New England." The committee for this evening includes Mrs. Katherine E. Compton, chairman, Mrs. Alden S. Foss, Mrs. Stanley Dunn, Mrs. David E. Gates, Mrs. Owen C. Thomas and Mrs. Thomas S. Kuhn.

* * *

THE RECORD TOTAL of $35,025 has been brought in by the Vincent Show program advertisements—the largest amount ever raised in a Vincent advertising campaign. This was announced last night by Mrs. Edwin T. Green, chairman of advertising, at the dress rehearsal of the Vincent Show, "Going, Going—Gone!" which opens tonight at 8:30 in New England Mutual Hall to benefit the Vincent Memorial Hospital. Much credit for this remarkable record goes to the advertising committee and to the long list of active members who added their efforts to those of the new provisionals to obtain 1141 ads. Active members awarded prizes were Mrs. Weston W. Adams, Gretchen Winkler and Mrs. Wallace Lincoln Pierce. The highest advertising total among the married provisional members was brought in by Mrs. Hamilton Heard, Jr., and the second place winner in this category was Mrs. George Freeman Thurber, Jr., of Nashua, N. H. The prize for provisionals with full-time jobs or at local colleges was won by Zella Thomas, and the provisional at college more than 25 miles from Boston who brought in the highest total was Whitney Drury, who is at Bryn Mawr. Putting together the huge program is a major operation. This year Jane S. Megrew was program editor, assisted by Mrs. C. Chauncey Gray and a committee of sixteen.

MRS. ADAMS

Courant (m)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Republican
Circ. 94,124
APR 4 1956

Boston Symphony Is Here Tonight With Bernstein

Leonard Bernstein, celebrated conductor, composer and television performer, will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra tonight in the final event of this season's Bushnell Symphony Series.

Charles F. T. Seaverns, president of the Bushnell Memorial, announced Tuesday that Mr. Bernstein will come to Hartford instead of Charles Munch, music director of the orchestra, who was to have conducted when the orchestra was earlier scheduled for March 19. The March 19 concert was postponed to tonight because of the severe storm of that date.

Sanroma Is Soloist

In addition to Mr. Bernstein, the Bushnell has also secured the appearance tonight of the outstanding pianist, Jesus Maria Sanroma, Mr. Seaverns said. He announced tonight's Bushnell program as follows:

Mozart's symphony No. 29 in A Major; Stravinsky's Capriccio for Piano and Orchestra, and Symphony No. 5, by Prokofieff.

Principal conductor of the Symphony of the Air, Mr. Bernstein has been guest conductor of the major symphony orchestras here and abroad. He has also conducted at La Scala Opera in Milan, and has made frequent appearances as piano soloist with leading orchestras. He has been very active in television, notably on the program, "Omnibus."

Born in Puerto Rico, Mr. Sanroma now makes his home in that island, and, in fact, flew from there to Boston Tuesday in order to rehearse with the orchestra for the Bushnell appearance. He gave the first performance of tonight's Stravinsky work, with the Boston Symphony in 1930.

Mr. Sanroma, who tours each season in this country and abroad as a piano virtuoso, has appeared as assisting artist with all the major symphony orchestras, notably the Boston Symphony, for which he was piano soloist under the late Serge Koussevitzky for a number of years.

Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 40,726
APR 4 1956

Fancy Baton for Fiedler

BOSTON, April 4 (UP)—Orchestra Leader Arthur Fiedler has a new baton but chances are that patrons of the Boston Pops concerts this spring won't see him wave it.

He might drop it.

Maestro Fiedler was presented the $2500, diamond-eucrusted gold baton yesterday during state house ceremonies commemorating the Boston Symphony orchestra's 75th season.

Fiedler received the baton from Lawrence W. Kanaga, vice president of the firm for which the orchestra records.

The legislature commended the orchestra, Fiedler and Charles Munch, the musical director, for giving Boston a world-wide reputation as a musical center. A resolution adopted by the lawmakers described the musicians as "ambassadors of good will to all the peoples of the world."

Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 113,081
APR 4 1956

Gold Baton Marks 75th Year of 'Pops'

Boston—(UP)—Orchestra Leader Arthur Fiedler has a new baton, but chances are that patrons of the Boston Pops Concerts this Spring won't see him wave it.

He might drop it.

Maestro Fiedler was presented the diamond - encrusted, $2,500 gold baton yesterday during State House ceremonies commemorating the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 75th season.

Mr. Fiedler received the baton from the Victor Record Division of the Radio Corporation of America, the firm for which the orchestra records.

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 397,884
APR 4 1956

Legislature Honors Hub Symphony, Pops

Resolutions citing Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, and Arthur Fiedler, Pops conductor, as "ambassadors of good will" were presented to them by the House and Senate yesterday in commemoration of the 75th anniversary of the orchestra.

House Speaker Michael Skerry and Senate President Richard I. Furbush made the presentations.

A $2000 diamond studded baton was presented the conductors by L. W. Kanaga, vice-president of RCA Victor records, to mark the 40 years the orchestra has recorded for RCA-Victor. Kanaga also announced that a $50,000 color movie featuring the orchestra would soon be available for national- release to schools and

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 122,000

38

APR 4 1956

(Globe Photo by Charles Dixon)

LEGISLATORS HONOR SYMPHONY—Conductor Charles Munch, right, is presented citation by State Senate President Richard I. Furbush during State House ceremony. Also participating are Michael J. Skerry, extreme left, House Speaker; Arthur Fiedler, Boston Pops conductor, second left, and Lawrence W. Kanaga, second right, vice president of RCA-Victor records.

Senate, House Honor Symphony

By CYRUS DURGIN

The Commonwealth of Massachusetts yesterday honored the Boston Symphony Orchestra upon its 75th Anniversary, by presenting to conductors Charles Munch and Arthur Fiedler congratulatory resolutions adopted by the State Senate and House of Representatives.

These citations were read in the Senate chamber, during a recess of the Senate, by Richard I. Furbush, president of the Senate, and Michael J. Skerry, Speaker of the House. During the ceremony Mr. Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony, and Mr. Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops, sat upon the rostrum. As each citation was completed, the Senators rose and applauded the recipient.

This was a rare honor, and perhaps unprecedented in this country. Records of 48 capitolds would have to be searched to ascertain whether any such formal legislative tribute ever before had been paid to a musical organization.

Excerpts From Resolutions

"Both the Boston Symphony and the Boston Pops Orchestra," read the Senate resolution, "have been outstanding representatives of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. Their musical achievements have enriched the lives of the people throughout the world and have brought greater respect and appreciation for the cultural reputation of the people of Massachusetts."

"Wherever good music is known and appreciated," read in part the resolution adopted by the House, "the Boston Symphony Orchestra enjoys an unparalleled reputation for its outstanding interpretation of the world's great compositions"; the resolution also referred to the great contributions made to "the cultural prestige of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. Through concert hall appearances and RCA-Victor recordings the Boston Symphony Orchestra and conductors Charles Munch and Arthur Fiedler have acquired an enviable reputation as ambassadors of good will to all the peoples of the world."

Pres. Furbush further introduced L. W. Kanaga, vice-president of RCA-Victor Records, who presented the Orchestra—and Messrs. Munch and Fiedler as its representatives—a $2000 baton designed by the French jeweler Van Cleef and Arpels. The baton, about the size of the ones used by the two conductors, is a handsome momento with a shaft of ivory and a handle of gold studded with small diamonds.

Color Movie, Too

Mr. Kanaga informed the Senate and Speaker Skerry that RCA-Victor is making a $50,000 motion picture in color, featuring the Boston Symphony, and showing how records are made. The film is intended for school students and other groups. Gift of the baton and making of the picture commemorates the 40 years association between the Boston Symphony and RCA-Victor.

Mr. Munch and Mr. Fiedler smilingly expressed their thanks in short and nicely-turned speeches.

Pres. Furbush also called for bows from executives present of the two organizations, each of whom was greeted by applause as the members of the Senate stood at their desks. They were Alan Steinert, president of The Eastern Company; Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony's board of trustees; Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the Orchestra; Raymond W. Saxton, northeastern regional manager of RCA-Victor, and Alan Kayes, RCA-Victor director of artists and repertory.

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,872

APR

Richard Furbush, president of the State Senate, presented citations in honor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 75th anniversary to Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony, and Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops, at the State House yesterday.

Eagle (m)
LAWRENCE, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 3,056

APR 4 - 1956

Herter To Run Office From Sick Bed Today

Governor Has Been Absent from State House for a Week with Attack of Grippe—Not "Seriously Ill"

BOSTON, April 3 (AP) — Gov. Herter is going to run his office from his sick bed at least another day, his office disclosed tonight.

The Governor has been absent from the State House for a week with an attack of grippe. He is staying in his Beacon street apartment, only a couple of blocks from the State House.

The Governor's illness— and two remarks about it by Lt. Gov. Sumner G. Whittier (R) who wants to be Herter's successor next year, forced the Governor's office to issue a bulletin on the Governor's condition today.

Whittier started out with a side remark in a speech last night in which he said the Governor's absence from his desk "helps him to avoid some of the things that have been going on."

By way of fuller explanation, Whittier today told newsmen the reference was made "lightly" in connection with something he said about the feud he has had with GOP State Chairman Elmer Nelson.

Whittier said he did not mean to imply that the governor's illness wasn't real. The Governor is "very truly sick" and "quite ill," Whittier explained.

That brought the announcement from the Governor's press office saying the Governor "is not seriously ill" but is working at home because of the grippe.

Housing For Elderly

The Senate today passed a bill authorizing up to 30 million dollars in local bond issues for construc-

(Continued on Page Twenty-Two)

Files Testimony

The Massachusetts Commission on Communism today filed a transcript of testimony it received Jan. 19 on Communist party activities from Herbert Philbrick, one-time FBI undercover agent within the party.

The commission heard Philbrick in executive session and then in public hearing. The testimony the commission filed with the House clerk today was that of the public session.

The commission reported it is holding the transcript of the executive session testimony because it includes mention of names of persons who have not yet been called before the commission.

The transcript was filed as the eighth interim report of the commission.

Seek Pay Boosts

A thousand state employes—some from as far as Pittsfield—packed a Gardner auditorium legislative hearing tonight to back pay boosts for 34,000 Massachusetts civil servants.

Spokesman for the group urged the legislative committee on public service to consider favorably two types of pay raises—a $480 annual flat increase and a ten percent cost of living boost.

The $480 hike, proposed by the state, county and municipal employes union, would cast the state an additional $16,800,000 annually, committee members said.

The cost of living increase, supported by union would cost more than eight million, they said.

The committee, headed by Sen. John Adams (R-Andover) heard witnesses on a total of 26 salary bills throughout the day and eve-

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 185,401

APR 6 1956

Brahms Gem Revived

Brahm's Double Concerto in A Minor for Violin, Cello and Orchestra, unperformed at Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts since the Brahms Festival terminating the 1932-23 season, will be revived at the orchestra's next Friday afternoon-Saturday evening concerts, April 13 and 14.

The soloists will be Zino Francescatti, violin, Samuel Mayes, cello. Charles Munch will conduct the concerts.

They will begin with Tchaikovskys' Orchestra Fantasia, "Francesca da Rimini," and will include the Violin Concerto No. 2 in G Minor by Prokofieff with Mr. Francescatti as soloist.

Leonard Bernstein concludes his 10-day engagement as guest conductor with the Sunday afternoon and Tuesday night concerts in Symphony Hall. The program for both concerts will be the same: Mozart's Symphony in A Major, K. 201; the Fourteen Variations for Orchestra by Robert Moevs; Stravinsky's "Capriccio" for Piano and Orchestra with Jesus Maria Sanroma as soloist, and the Fifth Symphony by Prokofieff.

Post (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 285,839

APR 4 1956

ORCHESTRA CITED — As the State Senate and House of Representatives cited the Boston Symphony Orchestra as "Ambassadors of Goodwill to all the peoples of the world," Charles Munch, right, conductor, was presented a $2000 diamond-studded baton by L. W. Kanaga, second right, vice president of RCA Victor Records. Others, left to right Speaker of the House Michael J. Skerry, Boston Pops Orchestra Conductor Arthur Fiedler, who also accepted citations and Senator Richard Furbush, Senate President.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 122,000

APR 4 1956

(Globe Photo by Charles Dixon)

LEGISLATORS HONOR SYMPHONY—Conductor Charles Munch, right, is presented citation by State Senate President Richard I. Furbush during State House ceremony. Also participating are Michael J. Skerry, extreme left, House Speaker; Arthur Fiedler, Boston Pops conductor, second left, and Lawrence W. Kanaga, second right, vice president of RCA-Victor records.

Senate, House Honor Symphony

By CYRUS DURGIN

The Commonwealth of Massachusetts yesterday honored the Boston Symphony Orchestra upon its 75th Anniversary, by presenting to conductors Charles Munch and Arthur Fiedler congratulatory resolutions adopted by the State Senate and House of Representatives.

These citations were read in the Senate chamber, during a recess of the Senate, by Richard I. Furbush, president of the Senate, and Michael J. Skerry, Speaker of the House. During the ceremony Mr. Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony, and Mr. Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops, sat upon the rostrum. As each citation was completed, the Senators rose and applauded the recipient.

This was a rare honor, and perhaps unprecedented in this country. Records of 48 capitolds would have to be searched to ascertain whether any such formal legislative tribute ever before had been paid to a musical organization.

Excerpts From Resolutions

"Both the Boston Symphony and the Boston Pops Orchestra," read the Senate resolution, "have been outstanding representatives of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. Their musical achievements have enriched the lives of the people throughout the world and have brought greater respect and appreciation for the cultural reputation of the people of Massachusetts."

"Wherever good music is known and appreciated," read in part the resolution adopted by the House, "the Boston Symphony Orchestra enjoys an unparalleled reputation for its outstanding interpretation of the world's great compositions"; the resolution also referred to the great contributions made to "the cultural prestige of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. Through concert hall appearances and RCA-Victor recordings the Boston Symphony Orchestra and conductors Charles Munch and Arthur Fiedler have acquired an enviable reputation as ambassadors of good will to all the peoples of the world."

Pres. Furbush further introduced L. W. Kanaga, vice-president of RCA-Victor Records, who presented the Orchestra—and Messrs. Munch and Fiedler as its representatives—a $2000 baton designed by the French jeweler Van Cleef and Arpels. The baton, about the size of the ones used by the two conductors, is a handsome momento with a shaft of ivory and a handle of gold studded with small diamonds.

Color Movie, Too

Mr. Kanaga informed the Senate and Speaker Skerry that RCA-Victor is making a $50,000 motion picture in color, featuring the Boston Symphony, and showing how records are made. The film is intended for school students and other groups. Gift of the baton and making of the picture commemorates the 40 years association between the Boston Symphony and RCA-Victor.

Mr. Munch and Mr. Fiedler smilingly expressed their thanks in short and nicely-turned speeches.

Pres. Furbush also called for bows from executives present of the two organizations, each of whom was greeted by applause as the members of the Senate stood at their desks. They were Alan Steinert, president of The Eastern Company; Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony's board of trustees; Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the Orchestra; Raymond W. Saxton, northeastern regional manager of RCA-Victor, and Alan Kayes, RCA-Victor director of artists and repertory.

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,872

APR

Richard Furbush, president of the State Senate, presented citations in honor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 75th anniversary to Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony, and Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops, at the State House yesterday.

Post (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 285,839

APR 4 1956

ORCHESTRA CITED — As the State Senate and House of Representatives cited the Boston Symphony Orchestra as "Ambassadors of Goodwill to all the peoples of the world," Charles Munch, right, conductor, was presented a $2000 diamond-studded baton by L. W. Kanaga, second right, vice president of RCA Victor Records. Others, left to right Speaker of the House Michael J. Skerry, Boston Pops Orchestra Conductor Arthur Fiedler, who also accepted citations and Senator Richard Furbush, Senate President.

...r Office ...ick Bed Today

(Continued from Page One)

tion of low cost housing for elderly persons.

The bill was reduced from an original call for 60 million after Sen. Ralph C. Maher (R-Orange), chairman of the Senate Ways and Means committee, reported the State Housing Board said it could not handle the larger sum.

Honor Boston Symphony

The Senate suspended its session today for long enough to pay tribute to the 75th anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Conductor Charles Munch of the symphony, and Conductor Arthur Fiedler of the Boston Pops Orchestra were present to receive House and Senate resolutions on the anniversary.

They also were presented a diamond studded baton from L. W. Kanaga, vice president of RCA Victor Records, a gift to the two orchestras.

The legislative resolutions cited the orchestras for their contribution to the culture prestige of the state.

Files Testimony

The Massachusetts Commission on Communism today filed a transcript of testimony it received Jan. 19 on Communist party activities from Herbert Philbrick, one-time FBI undercover agent within the party.

The commission heard Philbrick in executive session and then in public hearing. The testimony the commission filed with the House clerk today was that of the public session.

The commission reported it is holding the transcript of the executive session testimony because it includes mention of names of persons who have not yet been called before the commission.

The transcript was filed as the eighth interim report of the commission.

Seek Pay Boosts

A thousand state employes—some from as far as Pittsfield—packed a Gardner auditorium legislative hearing tonight to back pay boosts for 34,000 Massachusetts civil servants.

Spokesman for the group urged the legislative committee on public service to consider favorably two types of pay raises—a $480 annual flat increase and a ten percent cost of living boost.

The $480 hike, proposed by the state, county and municipal employes union, would cast the state an additional $16,800,000 annually, committee members said.

The cost of living increase, supported by union would cost more than eight million, they said.

The committee, headed by Sen. John Adams (R-Andover) heard witnesses on a total of 26 salary bills throughout the day and evening. No one opposed the bills.

Last year Gov. Herter vetoed a $360 across the board raise. He said that flat increases only distort the state's wage classifications.

The last increases received by state employes was in Oct. 1951.

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 185,401

APR 6 1956

Brahms Gem Revived

Brahm's Double Concerto in A Minor for Violin, Cello and Orchestra, unperformed at Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts since the Brahms Festival terminating the 1932-23 season, will be revived at the orchestra's next Friday afternoon-Saturday evening concerts, April 13 and 14.

The soloists will be Zino Francescatti, violin, Samuel Mayes, cello. Charles Munch will conduct the concerts.

They will begin with Tchaikovskys' Orchestra Fantasia, "Francesca da Rimini," and will include the Violin Concerto No. 2 in G Minor by Prokofieff with Mr. Francescatti as soloist.

Leonard Bernstein concludes his 10-day engagement as guest conductor with the Sunday afternoon and Tuesday night concerts in Symphony Hall. The program for both concerts will be the same: Mozart's Symphony in A Major, K. 201; the Fourteen Variations for Orchestra by Robert Moevs; Stravinsky's "Capriccio" for Piano and Orchestra with Jesus Maria Sanroma as soloist, and the Fifth Symphony by Prokofieff.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 130,559

APR 4 1956

DIAMOND-STUDDED BATON worth $2,000 was presented to Charles Munch (right), director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, as the Legislature honored the orchestra's 75th anniversary at the State House yesterday, Others, left to right, are House Speaker Michael J. Skerry, Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Pops; Senate President Richard I. Furbush and Lawrence W. Kanaga, vice-president of R. C. A. Victor, who presented the baton.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 27,538

APR 5 1956

Phelan

A DIAMOND BATON on the 75th anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was presented to BSO Conductor Charles Munch, left, and Boston Pops Conductor Arthur Fiedler, second right, at the State House this week where the Legislature passed resolutions citing the BSO as an "ambassador of good will to all peoples of the world." The baton, an ivory piece studded with diamonds, was designed by Van Cleef & Arpels and was presented by the RCA Corp., which does all the BSO recording. Attending the presentation were Sen. Silvio O. Conte of Pittsfield, second from left, and Senate President Richard I. Furbush of Waltham, right.

Bulletin (e)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 145,400

APR 4 1956

He'll Prize It, but Won't Wave It

Boston — (UP) — Orchestra leader Arthur Fiedler has a new baton but chances are that patrons of the Boston Pops concerts this spring won't see him wave it.

He might drop it.

Maestro Fiedler was presented a $2,500, diamond-encrusted, gold baton yesterday during State House ceremonies commemorating the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 75th season.

Journal-Courier (m)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 22,107

APR 4 1956

TRIBUTE TO ORCHESTRA

BOSTON, April 3 (AP)—The Massachusetts Senate suspended its session today for long enough to pay tribute to the 75th anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Conductor Charles Munch of the symphony, and conductor Arthur Fiedler of the Boston Pops Orchestra were present to receive House and Senate resolutions on the anniversary.

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,872

APR 5 1956

Bernstein Returning as Guest

Music for Weekend Concerts And Future Plans Discussed

By Harold Rogers

This week Leonard Bernstein returns to Boston—after a four-year absence—to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He was a frequent guest on the Symphony Hall podium during Serge Koussevitzky's last years as conductor. He considers his program for the forthcoming concerts something of "a sentimental tribute" to Dr. Koussevitzky, his mentor and friend.

"Koussevitzy is closely associated with each of the pieces I have chosen," he said in an interview earlier this week. "We open with Mozart's little Symphony in A major, No. 29, one of Koussevitzy's favorites which I heard him conduct many times.

"Then we will play the first Boston performances of a new work by Robert Moevs—Variations for Orchestra. This young composer, now living and teaching in Boston, first played me portions of this work when he was composing it while studying in Rome. It was commissioned by the Koussevitzy Foundation."

"The Stravinsky Capriccio for Piano and Orchestra," he continued, "is a work that Koussevitzky introduced to the United States and played here many, many times. In fact, Jesús María Sanromá appeared as the soloist 27 times. He'll be playing it another five times in Symphony Hall during the next few days.

"And the Prokofiev Fifth Symphony—well, Koussevitzky also gave the American premiere and often played it afterward. It is unquestionably Prokofiev's masterpiece, one of the great symphonies of our time."

* * *

Mr. Bernstein has been having a busy week. He discovered, to his dismay, that the program he chose required more rehearsing than he anticipated. Then he was asked by Charles Munch to conduct the orchestra's concert last night in Hartford—the one postponed when a snowstorm prevented the men from getting to Connecticut. Tonight he will conduct the open rehearsal in Symphony Hall, beginning at 7:30. Tickets for this rehearsal are on sale at the box office. And then he will conduct the regular concerts on Friday afternoon, Saturday night, Sunday afternoon, and Tuesday night.

What are his plans for the future?

His schedule is too carefully planned for comfort, he said. From May 1 until Christmas he will devote his entire time to the musical version of Voltaire's "Candide" that he is preparing with Lillian Hellman. Miss Hellman is making the adaptation. Tyrone Guthrie will be the director. A young poet, Richard Wilbur, will fashion the lyrics. Mr. Bernstein, Miss Hellman, and Mr. Guthrie expect to retire to Martha's Vineyard until the job is done.

* * *

Then Mr. Bernstein will have a month of conducting appearances with the New York Philharmonic-Symphony, beginning with Christmas week. He will conduct a complete performance of Handel's "Messiah" and will record it. A male alto will be employed in keeping with the style of performance that prevailed in Handel's day.

When this stint is over Mr. Bernstein will complete the production plans for another musical, as yet untitled, that he is working on now.

"This is something of a telling of the Romeo and Juliet legend against a background of teen-age gangs in New York City," he said. "Arthur Laurents is preparing the book, Jerome Robbins will direct, and Steve Sondheim will collaborate with me on the lyrics.

"As a matter of fact, there is no precedent for either of the musicals I'm working on. 'Candide' will be something of an opéra comique. The Romeo story will be something of a tragic musical comedy, whatever that may mean. 'Candide' is slated for production in the fall. The other one will be ready in the spring.

"Meanwhile," he sighed in resignation, "I have accepted a commission for a large symphonic work for the 75th anniversary of the Boston Symphony. I've been granted an extension on the time until next season, since I couldn't possibly get to it this year. But now I'm beginning to worry about finding enough time to complete it by next season!"

ATLANTA, GA.
WORLD
Circ. D. 28,600

APR 5 1956

Betty Allen, Famous Singer, To Appear At Clark April 8

Atlanta music lovers who heard the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 75th Anniversary program Monday night over Radio Station WSB have some indication of what they might expect when Betty Allen, sensational young American mezzo-soprano appears at Clark College Sunday evening, April 8 at 7:45.

Miss Allen was Boston Symphony director Charles Munch's choice for contralto soloist in Bach's Passion According to Saint John" which was the orchestra's featured work for the Anniversary program.

This is the third time Miss Allen has appeared with Mr. Munch's symphony since he brought her to the forefront several years ago in Boston's Symphony Hall.

During the past two seasons a career of international scope has been carved out by this talented young artist. Her crowded 1956 concert schedule includes many repetitions for major successes scored on three continuents last season; and the 40 concerts she performed in France alone this season included appearances at St. Malo, Cognac, Brest, Rouen, Toulouse and Bordeaux. Since returning to the United States she has appeared with the Hartford Symphony under Fritz Maler, making her second engagement under his baton.

As American artist in the fourth annual interchange of artists program with the Jeunesses Musicales abroad, Miss Allen performed throughout North Africa, appearing in Algiers, Tunis, Bizerte, Bone, Constantine, and a host of other cities .In Tunis she "triumphed easily" in a recital which proved one of the best events of the season, and in Algeris she was acclaimed "an exceptional singer ..... the ideal interpreter of the great classic lieder."

Swift on the heels of her North African successes, Betty Allen scored in an orchestral performance of Honegger's "La Danse des Morts" at the Salle Gaveau in Paris and then went on to Italy to inaugurate an artist exchange program with the Gioventu Musicale there by performing a tour of North Italian cities including Livorno, Lucca, Bolong, Brescia, Florence and culminating in a performace at the Teatro Lirico in Milan.

Miss Allen's concert will be one of the highlights of the All Star Concert year, according to Dr. J. deKoven Killingsworth, and the Series' concluding event.

Courant (m)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Republican
Circ. 94,124
40
APR 5 1956

Bernstein Is Conductor At Bushnell

The Boston Symphony Orches tra, with Leonard Bernstein a conductor and Jesus Maria San roma as soloist, concluded th Bushnell Memorial Series Wed nesday night. The program:

Symphony No. 29 ..... Mozar
Capriccio for Piano and Orchestra ..... Stravinsky
Mr. Sanroma, piano
Fifth Symphony ..... Prokofie

Go, Man, Go! And they went Leonard Bernstein and the Bos ton Symphony Orchestra, righ through Mozart, Stravinsky an Prokofiev without stopping fo the lights.

We had not heard Mr. Bern stein here in some time, bu during the interval he has no changed much. He still is maker of flamboyant musi sometimes to the composer' advantage, sometimes not. H has an all-out orchestral ea until it often seems that soun big sound and lots of it, rathe than meaning and feeling, is hi inspiration and his goal. H still has a tendency to forc the rhythmic side of a wor more than the melodic, possibl because he has given so muc attention to modern compos tion where the beat is prom nent. And he still can work hin self into a frenzy of excit ment on the podium, often mo than communicates to the o chestra.

Mr. Sanroma's Triumph

All this worked out to be Stravinsky Capriccio, whic advantage last night in th might well be subtitled "A Of Anxiety For Piano And O chestra." Or at least for orche tra. It is seldom one sees th Boston players audibly coun ing to keep up with the intr cate rhythmic patterns and th endless time-changes that Stra vinsky can pose. They counte like mad in the Capriccio.

Not Jesus Maria Sanroma, th Boston Symphony's celebrate pianist for so many years. A soloist in the Capriccio, h never had an anxious minut Hardly ever glancing at the key board, he dashed off the bristlin score with absolute ease an perfection. It was brilliant pe formance, and it earned hi enormous applause, even fro customers in my neighborhoo who professedly didn't like th Stravinsky music itself.

But it actually is a shrewd an effective piece, a sublimation the jazz "combo" style of wri ing Stravinsky handles so cha acteristically and well. M Bernstein lighted up every fac and detail of it, the orchestr played exhilaratingly despi whatever anxieties they had, an the whole thing was the best the evening.

Mozart and Prokofiev

The opening Mozart symphon had a beautifully lucid secon movement under Mr. Bernstein' reading. I thought the othe section a little jerky, sometime almost verging on swing in th rhythmic, syncopated manner i which he took them. The Proko fiev Fifth Symphony, a gran scale work in form and content drew indeed a super-hi-fi per formance from Mr. Bernstei and orchestra. I could only feel however, that this was a sample of Mr. Bernstein's tendency to let sound for the sake of decibel excitement, supplant actually meaningful interpretation. It had fury, both black and bright, but on this occasion it did not signi fy as much as it can. Prokofiev did great and striking things with an orchestra, and in pre senting his Fifth Symphony, Mr. Bernstein let no one forget it. It was a vivid reading last night, but not entirely a thoughtful one.

—T. H. P.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 122,000
APR 6 1956

BALTIMORE, MD.
NEWS POST
APR 6 1956

Symphonies To Appear In Capital

One of the most interesting and stimulating announcements to fall into our hands in many a long day issues from Washington and tells of an orchestral collaboration to be carried on in the capital.

Carson Frailey, president of the National Symphony Association, has made known that the Philadelphia Orchestra and Boston Symphony will appear next season in Constitution Hall as a part of the National Symphony's series.

Under Howard Mitchell, the National will present 15 pairs of concerts, with identical programs.

INCLUDED in this series, the Philadelphia will give two pairs of concerts, under Eugene Ormandy. They will also be heard in two separate additional concerts, for which special rates will be available to season subscribers.

Charles Munan will lead the famous Boston Symphony in two Thursday evening concerts, one to be credited to the National's own Tuesday evening series, and the other to the Wednesday concerts as the men from Boston are not available on Tuesdays or Wednesdays.

A little bird has hinted that we MAY see them once more at the Lyric next season, and here's hoping that they still cling to their old-time habit of being seated on platforms, in tiers, to the advantage of the observers and the listeners.

This news gives the impression of a large step in the right direction.

The National, which ended its season out of debt, will play at Carnegie Hall on Sunday.

H. A. F. P.

Union Leader (m) & (e)
MANCHESTER, N. H.
Independent
Circ. 45,622
APR 7 1956

Boston Pops Orchestra Tickets Are Available

Mail order blanks for tickets to the annual concert of the Boston Pops orchestra at Manchester State Armory Friday, April 13, at 8:15 p. m. are available in a number of places throughout the state.

They may be had in Concord, Portsmouth, Rochester, Nashua Milford, Laconia, Exeter and Sunapee.

The orchestra, under the direction of Arthur Fiedler, has appeared in a conert in Manchester for the past four years. They are being presented by the Junior Associates of the Elliot Hospital.

For 26 years, the Boston Pops orchestra, which was founded by Mr. Fiedler, has brought delight to music lovers. Under his expert guidance they have played the classics and latest popular hits with equal facility.

Tickets for this concert are available also from Mrs. Donald Clough, 20 Webster street, Manchester, and will be available as well at the Armory on Canal street the day and evening of the performance.

Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 118,081
APR 5 1956

Leonard Bernstein Conducts Boston

By GEORGE W. STOWE

The vagaries of a severe winter played hob with the schedule of the visiting orchestras this season but everyone could rejoice in the glorious finale to the series played by the Boston Symphony last night at the Bushnell.

* * *

AS A CONSEQUENCE of flood and blizzard the New York Philharmonic and the Boston Symphony were both forced to cancel concerts here. Yet deferred pleasures are better than none, particularly when these two distinguished orchestras offered the most interesting program of the season, and, from all reports, outdid themselves in virtuosity and interpretative dedication.

Last night Charles Munch was unable to be here for the concert and there was not only a substitute conductor, Leonard Bernstein, but an entirely different program from what had been advertised, a program which was strongly oriented toward the moderns.

Knowing Mr. Bernstein's predilection and persuasion is with the moderns, we were pleasurably surprised by his articulate and graceful manner with Mozart's Symphony No. 29 (K. 201) last night. In the catalogue of the composer's works in this form, this is an early effort, written when he was 18, yet it is not without charm and elegance. And these were precisely the qualities that Bernstein stressed in his interpretation.

In the nature of a nostalgic reunion was the appearance of Jesus Maria Sanroma as soloist in Stravinsky's ironic and witty "Capriccio for Piano and Orchestra." Mr. Sanroma introduced this work to America and he is understandably at home in its idiom. His percussive style and brilliant staccati are ideal attributes for music of this type and his superb rhythmic sense made the jazzy finale come alive in this performance.

There is no denying the popularity of Prokofief's "Classical" Symphony, yet each performance of his Fifth Symphony brings us closer to the realization that this is his most distinctive contribution in the tesque, and the merely acidulous of the mock-heroic, the grotesque, and the merely acidulous and it has a solid core of lyricism that touches the heart.

* * *

WRITTEN during World War II when the composer's homeland was under siege, it speaks about "the spirit of man" (to quote Prokofief himself) and it depicts a struggle and an ultimate fulfillment of destiny. It is music that Mr. Bernstein understands and can communicate to an audience.

We have not heard a more eloquent and moving performance of this symphony than the one given by the Boston Symphony last night. It was supercharged with a degree of intensity that left us emotionally spent when it was all over. And that is the highest tribute.

Post (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 285,839
APR 6 1956

Symphony Plans Extra Concerts

By TUCKER KEISER

In a characteristically Yankee spirit of do-it-yourself, the Boston Symphony Orchestra is planning extra concerts to help finance its five-week tour of Europe at the end of the Tanglewood season in August.

The first of these concerts is slated for Sunday evening, April 29, when Charles Munch will lead the orchestra in a program consisting of Beethoven's Seventh Symphony and Tchaikovsky's "Pathetique."

Not only will this raise money for the tour but it will give some Boston music lovers an opportunity to hear the Boston Symphony "live."

Ike Contributes

Despite the fact that the orchestra gives four series of concerts locally, there are many non-subscribers who cannot hear it because the seats are sold out even before the season begins in the fall.

Though the cost of the tour will be about $300,000, just $25,000 is still necessary. Over $275,000 is already in sight.

One of the most generous contributors has been President Eisenhower through the President's Fund for International Affairs to assist Americans performing abroad. Other large contributions are R. C. A.-Victor and the Baldwin Piano Company.

The Boston Symphony is scheduled for five programs in the Edinburgh Festival. The tour is planned to include about 25 cities and to cover more than 4000 miles.

Will Appear in Cork

The orchestra will appear in Cork and Dublin on the way to Edinburgh, and after the Festival will visit Norway, Sweden, Finland, Denmark, Germany, Austria, Switzerland, France, England and possibly Italy.

"We do not feel it is right to ask the Friends of the Orchestra, who support the orchestra generously each year, to finance this trip. We are going to do it ourselves," said T. D. Perry, Jr., manager.

News (e)
SOUTHBRIDGE, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 4,688
APR 9 1956

Three Recordings Over 50 Years Become Unit

BOSTON— (UP) —A recording commemorating the 75th anniversary season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra features the group playing the same piece under the batons of three conductors.

Three recordings of Berlioz' "Hungarian March" made over a period of nearly half a century were dubbed together electronically to sound as one continuous performance.

Karl Muck who became conductor in 1906, starts the march. The late Serge Koussevitzky "takes over" in the middle section and Charles Munch, the present director, concludes the piece.

KANSAS CITY MO.
TIMES
APR 7 1956

FINE 1956-'57 SEUFERT SERIES.

Among 14 Attractions Are Rubinstein and the Iturbis.

The first announcement by Mrs. Ruth Seufert of her Celebrity series attractions for the 1956-57 season was contained in the programs for the Mozarteum orchestra concert last night.

There are 14 musical events on the present list, including George London, baritone; Michael Rabin, violinist; Artur Rubinstein, pianist; Blanche Thebom, mezzo-soprano, as soloists, and the duo-pianists, Jose and Amparo Iturbi.

Two fine orchestras will be heard—the Philadelphia orchestra with Eugene Ormandy conducting, and the Boston "Pops," with Arthur Fiedler on the podium.

Two ballet troupes are listed, the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo and the Chicago Opera Ballet.

There are two opera evenings, with Mozart's "Don Giovanni" sung in English by a notable cast (Phyllis Curtin, Barbara Gibson, Helen George, David Lloyd, Mac Morgan and others), and the new N. B. C. Opera on tour, with Puccini's "Madame Butterfly" sung in English.

Other features include the Festival instrumental quartet—Victor Babin, pianist; Szyman Goldberg, violinist; William Primrose, violist, and Nikolai Graudan, cellist. The National Swedish chorus, a company of 75, will sing. There will be "An Evening with Johann Strauss," with a company of 25 including Marlys Watters, Kansas City and New York soprano; Beverly Sills, soprano; John Drury, tenor, and Ted Scott, baritone, as soloists.

A nonmusical event will be "The Best of Steinbeck," a dramatic production starring Constance Bennett, Todd Andrews, Frank McHugh and Robert Strauss.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N. Y.
APR 1956

Munch Introduces Villa-Lobos Symphony

Boston Symphony, Charles Munch, conductor. Carnegie Hall, March 21:

"Romeo and Juliet", Overture-Fantasy ..... Tchaikovsky
Symphony No. 11 ..... Villa-Lobos
(First New York performance)
Symphony No. 7 ..... Beethoven

Heitor Villa-Lobos' Symphony No. 11 received its first New York performance at the Boston Symphony's last Wednesday concert of the current season. Under Mr. Munch's masterly direction, the virtuosity and precision of the orchestra were exploited to the fullest in the new symphony. Indeed, the work was expressly written for the orchestra's 75th anniversary, and jointly commissioned by the Boston Symphony and the Koussevitzky Music Foundation.

This symphony is in traditional form, although the Scherzo sounded as if it were in duple rather than in the customary triple meter. Villa-Lobos knows how to score brilliantly and is a most luxuriant colorist. Nonetheless, one noted the scarcity of striking thematic material in the work. Rather there is an excessive use of rhythmic patterns, especially in the opening movement, which abounds in restless triplet figurations for the strings, and also shows the composer's fondness for the jarring sound of minor seconds. A nervous and intense work, with hardly a serene moment, this symphony sounded unconvincing for the most part, despite its brilliant surface display.

The performance of Tchaikovsky's "Romeo and Juliet" can only be described as utter perfection. Mr. Munch seemed to have a direct-wire connection with each player in the orchestra (especially the woodwinds), so precise was the split-second response. Beethoven's Seventh had a cool, although well-paced, performance, with the exception of the rather slow tempo of the trio of the Scherzo.

—G. F.

Extra Concert to Aid European Symphony Tour

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give an extra concert at Symphony Hall, Sunday evening, April 29, at 8:30, to help raise money for its tour to Europe next Summer. Charles Munch will conduct the Seventh Symphony of Beethoven and the Sixth, or "Pathetique," Symphony by Tchaikovsky.

Season subscribers are offered the seats of their choice before the public sale of tickets, which will begin at Symphony Hall box office April 16. This extra concert will close the 75th Anniversary season of the Orchestra.

The European tour of about 5½ weeks will cost about $310,000. The orchestra's approximate earnings from the concerts it will give will be approximately $105,000. Thus far, of the additional funds needed, $170,000 has been raised, which includes a grant from the International Exchange Program of the President's Fund for International Affairs, and contributions from private business firms.

Iraq has nationalized the British-Belgian-owned Baghdad Light and Power Company.

Courant (m)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Republican
Circ. 94,124

APR 5 1956

Bernstein Is Conductor At Bushnell

The Boston Symphony Orches tra, with Leonard Bernstein a conductor and Jesus Maria San roma as soloist, concluded th Bushnell Memorial Series Wed nesday night. The program:

Symphony No. 29 ..... Mozar
Capriccio for Piano and Or- chestra ..... Stravinsky
Mr. Sanroma, piano
Fifth Symphony ..... Prokofie

Go, Man, Go! And they went Leonard Bernstein and the Bos ton Symphony Orchestra, righ through Mozart, Stravinsky an Prokofiev without stopping fo the lights.

We had not heard Mr. Bern stein here in some time, bu during the interval he has no changed much. He still is maker of flamboyant music sometimes to the composer' advantage, sometimes not. H has an all-out orchestral ea until it often seems that sound big sound and lots of it, rathe than meaning and feeling, is hi inspiration and his goal. H still has a tendency to forc the rhythmic side of a wor more than the melodic, possibl because he has given so muc attention to modern compos tion where the beat is prom nent. And he still can work hin self into a frenzy of excit ment on the podium, often mor than communicates to the o chestra.

Mr. Sanroma's Triumph

All this worked out to be Stravinsky Capriccio, whic advantage last night in th might well be subtitled "A Of Anxiety For Piano And O chestra." Or at least for orche tra. It is seldom one sees th Boston players audibly coun ing to keep up with the intr cate rhythmic patterns and th endless time-changes that Str vinsky can pose. They counte like mad in the Capriccio.

Not Jesus Maria Sanroma, th Boston Symphony's celebrate pianist for so many years. A soloist in the Capriccio, h never had an anxious minut Hardly ever glancing at the key board, he dashed off the bristlin score with absolute ease an perfection. It was brilliant pe formance, and it earned hi enormous applause, even fro customers in my neighborhoo who professedly didn't like th Stravinsky music itself.

But it actually is a shrewd an effective piece, a sublimation the jazz "combo" style of wri ing Stravinsky handles so cha acteristically and well. M Bernstein lighted up every fac and detail of it, the orchestr played exhilaratingly despi whatever anxieties they had, an the whole thing was the best the evening.

Mozart and Prokofiev

The opening Mozart symphon had a beautifully lucid secon movement under Mr. Bernstein' leading; I thought the othe section a little jerky, sometime almost verging on swing in th rhythmic, syncopated manner i which he took them. The Proko fiev Fifth Symphony, a gran scale work in form and content drew indeed a super-hi-fi per formance from Mr. Bernstein and orchestra. I could only feel however, that this was a sample of Mr. Bernstein's tendency to let sound for the sake of decibel excitement, supplant actually meaningful interpretation. It had fury, both black and bright, but on this occasion it did not signi fy as much as it can. Prokofiev did great and striking things with an orchestra, and in pre senting his Fifth Symphony, Mr. Bernstein let no one forget it. It was a vivid reading last night but not entirely a thoughtful one.

—T. H. P.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 122,000

APR 6 1956

BALTIMORE, MD.
NEWS POST

APR 6 1956

Symphonies To Appear In Capital

One of the most interesting and stimulating announcements to fall into our hands in many a long day issues from Washington and tells of an orchestral collaboration to be carried on in the capital.

Carson Frailey, president of the National Symphony Association, has made known that the Philadelphia Orchestra and Boston Symphony will appear next season in Constitution Hall as a part of the National Symphony's series.

Under Howard Mitchell, the National will present 15 pairs of concerts, with identical programs.

INCLUDED in this series, the Philadelphia will give two pairs of concerts, under Eugene Ormandy. They will also be heard in two separate additional concerts, for which special rates will be available to season subscribers.

Charles Munan will lead the famous Boston Symphony in two Thursday evening concerts, one to be credited to the National's own Tuesday evening series, and the other to the Wednesday concerts as the men from Boston are not available on Tuesdays or Wednesdays.

A little bird has hinted that we MAY see them once more at the Lyric next season, and here's hoping that they still cling to their old-time habit of being seated on platforms, in tiers, to the advantage of the observers and the listeners.

This news gives the impression of a large step in the right direction.

The National, which ended its season out of debt, will play at Carnegie Hall on Sunday.

H. A. F. P.

Union Leader (m) & (e)
MANCHESTER, N. H.
Independent
Circ. 45,622

APR 7 1956

Boston Pops Orchestra Tickets Are Available

Mail order blanks for tickets to the annual concert of the Boston Pops orchestra at Manchester State Armory Friday, April 13, at 8:15 p. m. are available in a number of places throughout the state.

They may be had in Concord, Portsmouth, Rochester, Nashua Milford, Laconia, Exeter and Sunapee.

The orchestra, under the direction of Arthur Fiedler, has appeared in a conert in Manchester for the past four years. They are being presented by the Junior Associates of the Elliot Hospital.

For 26 years, the Boston Pops orchestra, which was founded by Mr. Fiedler, has brought delight to music lovers. Under his expert guidance they have played the classics and latest popular hits with equal facility.

Tickets for this concert are available also from Mrs. Donald Clough, 20 Webster street, Manchester, and will be available as well at the Armory on Canal street the day and evening of the performance.

Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 118,081

APR 5 1956

Leonard Bernstein Conducts Boston

By GEORGE W. STOWE

The vagaries of a severe winter played hob with the schedule of the visiting orchestras this season but everyone could rejoice in the glorious finale to the series played by the Boston Symphony last night at the Bushnell.

* * *

AS A CONSEQUENCE of flood and blizzard the New York Philharmonic and the Boston Symphony were both forced to cancel concerts here. Yet deferred pleasures are better than none, particularly when these two distinguished orchestras offered the most interesting program of the season, and, from all reports, outdid themselves in virtuosity and interpretative dedication.

Last night Charles Munch was unable to be here for the concert and there was not only a substitute conductor, Leonard Bernstein, but an entirely different program from what had been advertised, a program which was strongly oriented toward the moderns.

Knowing Mr. Bernstein's predilection and persuasion is with the moderns, we were pleasurably surprised by his articulate and graceful manner with Mozart's Symphony No. 29 (K. 201) last night. In the catalogue of the composer's works in this form, this is an early effort, written when he was 18, yet it is not without charm and elegance. And these were precisely the qualities that Bernstein stressed in his interpretation.

In the nature of a nostalgic reunion was the appearance of Jesus Maria Sanroma as soloist in Stravinsky's ironic and witty "Capriccio for Piano and Orchestra." Mr. Sanroma introduced this work to America and he is understandably at home in its idiom. His percussive style and brilliant staccati are ideal attributes for music of this type and his superb rhythmic sense made the jazzy finale come alive in this performance.

There is no denying the popularity of Prokofief's "Classical" Symphony, yet each performance of his Fifth Symphony brings us closer to the realization that this is his most distinctive contribution in the tesque, and the merely acidulous of the mock-heroic, the grotesque, and the merely acidulous and it has a solid core of lyricism that touches the heart.

* * *

WRITTEN during World War II when the composer's homeland was under siege, it speaks about "the spirit of man" (to quote Prokofief himself) and it depicts a struggle and an ultimate fulfillment of destiny. It is music that Mr. Bernstein understands and can communicate to an audience.

We have not heard a more eloquent and moving performance of this symphony than the one given by the Boston Symphony last night. It was supercharged with a degree of intensity that left us emotionally spent when it was all over. And that is the highest tribute.

Post (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 285,839

APR 6 1956

Symphony Plans Extra Concerts

By TUCKER KEISER

In a characteristically Yankee spirit of do-it-yourself, the Boston Symphony Orchestra is planning extra concerts to help finance its five-week tour of Europe at the end of the Tanglewood season in August.

The first of these concerts is slated for Sunday evening, April 29, when Charles Munch will lead the orchestra in a program consisting of Beethoven's Seventh Symphony and Tchaikovsky's "Pathetique."

Not only will this raise money for the tour but it will give some Boston music lovers an oppertunity to hear the Boston Symphony "live."

Its Contributors

Despite the fact that the orchestra gives four series of concerts locally, there are many non-subscribers who cannot hear it because the seats are sold out even before the season begins in the fall.

Though the cost of the tour will be about $300,000, just $25,000 is still necessary. Over $275,000 is already in sight.

One of the most generous contributors has been President Eisenhower through the President's Fund for International Affairs to assist Americans performing abroad. Other large contributions are R. C. A. Victor and the Baldwin Piano Company.

The Boston Symphony is scheduled for five programs in the Edinburgh Festival. The tour is planned to include about 25 cities and to cover more than 4000 miles.

Will Appear in Cork

The orchestra will appear in Cork and Dublin on the way to Edinburgh, and after the Festival will visit Norway, Sweden, Finland, Denmark, Germany, Austria, Switzerland, France, England and possibly Italy.

"We do not feel it is right to ask the Friends of the Orchestra, who support the orchestra generously each year, to finance this trip. We are going to do it ourselves," said T. D. Perry, Jr., manager.

News (e)
SOUTHBRIDGE, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 4,688

APR 9 1956

Three Recordings Over 50 Years Become Unit

BOSTON— (UP) —A recording commemorating the 75th anniversary season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra features the group playing the same piece under the batons of three conductors.

Three recordings of Berlioz' "Hungarian March" made over a period of nearly half a century were dubbed together electronically to sound as one continuous performance.

Karl Muck who became conductor in 1906, starts the march. The late Serge Koussevitsky "takes over" in the middle section and Charles Munch, the present director, concludes the piece.

KANSAS CITY MO.
TIMES

APR 7 1956

FINE 1956-'57 SEUFERT SERIES.

Among 14 Attractions Are Rubinstein and the Iturbis.

The first announcement by Mrs. Ruth Seufert of her Celebrity series attractions for the 1956-57 season was contained in the programs for the Mozarteum orchestra concert last night.

There are 14 musical events on the present list, including George London, baritone; Michael Rabin, violinist; Artur Rubinstein, pianist; Blanche Thebom, mezzo-soprano, as soloists, and the duo-pianists, Jose and Amparo Iturbi.

Two fine orchestras will be heard—the Philadelphia orchestra with Eugene Ormandy conducting, and the Boston "Pops," with Arthur Fiedler on the podium.

Two ballet troupes are listed, the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo and the Chicago Opera Ballet.

There are two opera evenings, with Mozart's "Don Giovanni" sung in English by a notable cast (Phyllis Curtin, Barbara Gibson, Helen George, David Lloyd, Mac Morgan and others), and the new N. B. C. Opera on tour, with Puccini's "Madame Butterfly" sung in English.

Other features include the Festival instrumental quartet—Victor Babin, pianist; Szyman Goldberg, violinist; William Primrose, violist, and Nikolai Graudan, cellist. The National Swedish chorus, a company of 75, will sing. There will be "An Evening with Johann Strauss," with a company of 25 including Marlys Watters, Kansas City and New York soprano; Beverly Sills, soprano; John Drury, tenor, and Ted Scott, baritone, as soloists.

A nonmusical event will be "The Best of Steinbeck," a dramatic production starring Constance Bennett, Todd Andrews, Frank McHugh and Robert Strauss.

[redacted]

Munch Introduces Villa-Lobos Symphony

Boston Symphony, Charles Munch, conductor. Carnegie Hall, March 21:

"Romeo and Juliet", Overture-Fantasy ..... Tchaikovsky
Symphony No. 11 ..... Villa-Lobos
(First New York performance)
Symphony No. 7 ..... Beethoven

Heitor Villa-Lobos' Symphony No. 11 received its first New York performance at the Boston Symphony's last Wednesday concert of the current season. Under Mr. Munch's masterly direction, the virtuosity and precision of the orchestra were exploited to the fullest in the new symphony. Indeed, the work was expressly written for the orchestra's 75th anniversary, and jointly commissioned by the Boston Symphony and the Koussevitzky Music Foundation.

This symphony is in traditional form, although the Scherzo sounded as if it were in duple rather than in the customary triple meter. Villa-Lobos knows how to score brilliantly and is a most luxuriant colorist. Nonetheless, one noted the scarcity of striking thematic material in the work. Rather there is an excessive use of rhythmic patterns, especially in the opening movement, which abounds in restless triplet figurations for the strings, and also shows the composer's fondness for the jarring sound of minor seconds. A nervous and intense work, with hardly a serene moment, this symphony sounded unconvincing for the most part, despite its brilliant surface display.

The performance of Tchaikovsky's "Romeo and Juliet" can only be described as utter perfection. Mr. Munch seemed to have a direct-wire connection with each player in the orchestra (especially the woodwinds), so precise was the split-second response. Beethoven's Seventh had a cool, although well-paced, performance, with the exception of the rather slow tempo of the trio of the Scherzo.

—G. F.

Extra Concert to Aid European Symphony Tour

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give an extra concert at Symphony Hall, Sunday evening, April 29, at 8:30, to help raise money for its tour to Europe next Summer. Charles Munch will conduct the Seventh Symphony of Beethoven and the Sixth, or "Pathetique," Symphony by Tchaikovsky.

Season subscribers are offered the seats of their choice before the public sale of tickets, which will begin at Symphony Hall box office April 16. This extra concert will close the 75th Anniversary season of the Orchestra.

The European tour of about 5½ weeks will cost about $310,000. The orchestra's approximate earnings from the concerts it will give will be approximately $105,000. Thus far, of the additional funds needed, $170,000 has been raised, which includes a grant from the International Exchange Program of the President's Fund for International Affairs, and contributions from private business firms.

Iraq has nationalized the British-Belgian-owned Baghdad Light and Power Company.

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,
APR 8

41

Dance News — Symphony Plans Extra Concert

Theodore N. Marier and Hugh Ross, associate conductor and regular conductor, respectively, of the Cecilia Society, prepare for the concert performance of Gluck's "Alceste" in Symphony Hall Monday night.

George Humphrey

Robert Moevs, whose Variations for Orchestra will be heard for the first time in Boston when Leonard Bernstein conducts the Boston Symphony concerts this afternoon, Saturday night, Sunday afternoon, and Tuesday night.

Management Seeking Ways To Complete Fund for Tour

By Harold Rogers

The Boston Symphony Orchestra must raise $25,000 to complete the fund for its European tour this summer. In order to secure a portion of this amount, the management has scheduled an extra concert, the details of which are given below.

The total cost of the tour—as explained to the press yesterday by the manager, Thomas D. Perry—will be $300,000. This will cover the orchestra's expenses for five-and-a-half weeks. Only $100,000 can be earned from the concerts of the tour, which leaves $200,000 to be raised from other sources.

Most of this amount—$175,000 of it—has already been contributed by anonymous donors.

The management hopes to raise part of the remaining $25,000—perhaps $5,000—by selling its main commodity — music. Charles Munch will contribute his services as conductor for the extra concert, to be held in Symphony Hall Sunday evening, April 29, the day after the regular season has closed. The program will consist of two favorites, the Beethoven Symphony No. 7 and the Tchaikovsky "Pathétique" Symphony No. 6.

The public seat sale for this concert will not open until Monday, April 16. Meanwhile, season subscribers, but not the general public, may obtain the seats of their choice from the Symphony Hall box office.

It is to be hoped that many Boston business concerns, as well as private individuals—all those interested in promoting the good name and good will of Boston abroad—will assist in completing the tour fund.

Spies Wins Award

The Board of Judges of the Lili Boulanger Memorial Fund has granted the 1956 award to Claudio Spies—a young Chilean composer—for his "Music for Ballet."

Mr. Spies received his Master's degree in 1954 from Harvard, where he studied composition with Walter Piston. He has won two other prizes for choral works from the Universidad de Chile, but this is his first successful attempt at a major orchestral work.

The Fund, which has its headquarters at 122 Bay State Road, Boston, was founded in 1939 in memory of Lili Boulanger (1893-1918), Nadia Boulanger's sister. Awards are made without regard to nationality and have been won by American, Brazilian, Czech, French, Polish, Scottish, and Turkish musicians.

The Board of Judges consists of Nadia Boulanger, Aaron Copland, Alexei Haieff, Walter Piston, and Igor Stravinsky.

Arnita Organ Recital

Salvator Arnita, organist, will give a recital Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock in the MIT Chapel. His program, to which the public is invited, will include works by Corelli, Buxtehude, Bach, Handel, and Edouard Silas.

Mr. Arnita is chairman of the music department at the American University in Beirut, Lebanon. This year he is studying at Harvard University under a fellowship from the Rockefeller Foundation.

Lee Simonson to Lecture

Lee Simonson, scenic designer and theater architect, will speak on "The University Theater" at the Fogg Museum, Cambridge, Thursday afternoon at 4 o'clock. The lecture will be sponsored by the Fogg Art Museum and the Harvard Theater Collection.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 122,000
APR 7 1956

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Bernstein Leads Moevs Music

Leonard Bernstein is guest conductor of the first program of the Friday afternoon, Saturday evening series of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at Symphony Hall. The program: Mozart: Symphony in A major (K. 201); Robert Moevs: Fourteen Variations for Orchestra (first performance in Boston); Stravinsky: Capriccio (Jesus Maria Sanroma, piano soloist); Prokofieff: Fifth Symphony.

By CYRUS DURGIN

The multifariously gifted Leonard Bernstein has returned as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony, his first such appearances since 1952, bringing with him a score by Robert Moevs, who is a member of the music faculty at Harvard. This is the Fourteen Variations for Orchestra, new to Boston and commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation.

The 35-year-old Mr. Moevs (whose name rhymes with raves), as we have known from certain small pieces already performed here, a man of talent and of learning. His Variations make sense and logic, and they can be counted off as each begins, though the musical fabric shows scarcely a break between any of them. His theme is individual, with its dominant features a sustained trill followed by a downward octave leap.

Perhaps, however, this theme is not inherently suitable for variation, for while the numbers have definite points of interest, there is nowhere near enough variety in elaboration, not enough in harmonic foundation, and very little in orchestral color. It is one thing to write variations, each separate and each with a close; it is another and a much more difficult thing to create a continuous fabric, and this is what Moevs has attempted.

A Growing Talent

That the Variations are, candidly, monotonous; that his scoring fails to jump from a thin chamber-music manner to heavy orchestra, and that there is little forward motion, need not disturb the composer. He was here yesterday, and was positively received. Another time he will have written better and will garner more praise. Of his yet unmatured talent, there is no doubt.

Much like old times it was Jesus Maria Sanroma, crisp, clear, rhythmically excellent performance of the piano part in Stravinsky's Capriccio. Mr. Sanroma, in Boston, has a special identification with the piece, for he played it several times in the days of Koussevitzky. Yesterday's performance, orchestrally and in solo, could hardly be bettered. I had never enjoyed the Capriccio very much until now; it used to seem dry and not at all the peculiar blend of classic directness and a light romantic style that it is. Perhaps Bernstein heightened the flavor of it all. Or, more likely, I at last have grown into the music. At any rate, it was sheer delight.

Mr. Bernstein has grown as a conductor. He still looks boyish, and he still dances on the stand, and his gestures still remind you of Koussevitzky. But what the ear receives is the proof of approaching maturity. He has not yet achieved the height of real simplicity: Mozart he conducted, phrased and accented too elaborately, the first movement was a hair too slow and the second a hair too fast.

A Tour de Force

But what Bernstein can do with such a demanding and complex work as the Prokofieff Fifth Symphony! Here was a mastery of technic and expression in the highest degree. The orchestra played superbly for him, with a tone of loveliness. This work of Prokofieff is music of genuine stature, overlong to be sure, but superb in its melodic invention, deeply moving emotionally, and in the dimensions of its form of a size you could call huge.

To conduct it as Bernstein did, with obvious knowledge of the score from start to finish, with such accurate style, such drive, force, architectural sense, and such beautiful command of details, including those difficult matters of rhythm; to do this takes enormous ability. His performance was a tour de force, thoroughly meriting the applause and the cries of "Bravo!" it received. But I do wish he would stop dancing, for it detracts from the excellence of his work. A conductor ought to be expressive down to the waist and from there to his feet are rigidly motionless as possible!

Next week Charles Munch will conduct Tchaikovsky's "Francesca da Rimini"; the Prokofieff Violin Concerto in G Minor (No. 2), with Zino Francescatti as soloist, and the Brahms Double Concerto, with Mr. Francescatti and Samuel Mayes, first cello, as soloists.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 130,559
APR 7 1956

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Leonard Bernstein conducting, gave the 21st program of the 75th season in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. The soloist was Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist. The program:

Symphony in A (K. 201).....Mozart
Fourteen Variations.....Moevs
Capriccio.....Stravinsky
Symphony No. 5.....Prokofieff

By RUDOLPH ELIE

It isn't a very nice thing to welcome Leonard Bernstein back for a brief appearance as guest conductor with a little reproach, but it seemed to me he came up with a program yesterday afternoon devised largely to weary the spirit of the most dauntless.

Aside from the Mozart, which is a perfect gem, he offered three contemporary works, each interesting in its own right but mutually destructive when lumped together. And it all went on much too long. It may well have been a temporal accident, in that Jesus Maria Sanroma could not appear on a later program and Mr. Bernstein didn't want to sacrifice the Boston debut of Moevs' Variations, but the results were not any too happy from an esthetic point of view.

Moevs' Fourteen Variations for Orchestra disclosed from the outset a powerful musical mind at work. There was about it, it is true, a faint sense of the orchestral exercise as if the composer were still feeling his way, and there was also a good deal of what seemed to me unnecessary shrillness in the instrumental clashes.

Using a brief, angular motto that appears again and again as a sort of point of reference, the composer has displayed great ingenuity in the handling of his materials. The build-up to the climactic tenth variation is exciting to a degree, while the two ensuing variations are both charming and arresting. The work as a whole was arresting, in fact, often suggesting the Moussorgsky of "Pictures at an Exhibition" though of course in a wholly different musical language. Mr. Bernstein, who may have been just a little soft with Mozart, gave it a vivid reading. The composer was in the audience and was very well received.

Heart Warming

The return of Jesus Maria Sanroma in Stravinsky's Capriccio, a work he introduced to American audiences in Boston in 1930, was a heart-warming occasion. He has been too long away, and he played for his numberless friends in Boston with great elan and force. The work, when insulated with older works, is delightful, but under the circumstances of following such a high-pressure work as Moevs' Variations, its rhythmic piquancy and its melodic dexterity do not emerge. Mr. Sanroma, who appears not to have changed at all in his years in his native Porto Rico (eight, to be exact), demonstrated a mature and a persuasive art, his formidable technic having matured with it.

I have never been won over to Prokofieff's Fifth Symphony. On its first performance late in 1945 I find my reactions were mixed but mostly unfavorable. I liked the scherzo then and I do now: it is Prokofieff at the very top of his form. But the opening movement, after a lovely start, is over-written and its themes are often banal. The slow movement, a Beethovenate adagio, loses its way, and the finale turns to sheer bombast. The program tells us the composer wrote it in a month. I can well believe it, for he seems to throw everything into it. It is a perfectly legitimate procedure of course, and many masterpieces have been completed in an even shorter time. But it would seem the Prokofieff failed to cull out the dead wood, the redundancies, the toppling dimensions of the symphony, which for a man celebrated for the economy of his means in other works, is not easily comprehended.

In any case Mr. Bernstein, who conducted the work from memory, is obviously convinced of the validity of the utterance, and pantomined its emotional stresses with great physical abandon, not failing, however, to cue the orchestra with astonishing clarity. For its part, the orchestra responded with a dazzling virtuosity.

Mr. Munch returns next week with Tchaikovsky's "Francesa Da Rimini," Prokofieff's G minor Violin Concerto and Brahms' Double Concerto for Violin and Cello. Zino Francescatti and Samuel Mayes are the soloists.

CINCINNATI, OHIO
POST
Circ. D. 167,260
APR 9 1956

3 Recordings Play as One

BOSTON, April 7 (UP). — A recording commemorating the 75th anniversary season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra features the group playing the same piece under the batons of three conductors.

Three recordings of Berlioz' Hungarian March" made over a period of nearly half a century were dubbed together electronically to sound as one continuous performance.

Karl Muck, who became conductor in 1906, starts the march. The late Serge Koussevitzky "takes over" in the middle section and Charles Munch, the present director, concludes the piece.

Post (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 285,839
APR 7 1956

in Review

By TUCKER KEISER

Leonard Bernstein returned to the podium in Symphony Hall, after an absence of four years, to lead the Boston Symphony in an unofficial tribute to the memory of Serge Koussevitsky. With the exception of Moevs' Fourteen Variations for Orchestra, all the pieces played were associated with the Koussevitzky regime—and, of course, Mr. Bernstein, himself, is the late conductor's star protege.

The performance hit with an explosive impact, coming as it did in a season that has been lamentably routine. Not that this 75th anniversary hasn't witnessed some genuinely stirring moments, because it has, but we have had no particular program that has been aurally exciting until this one.

Bernstein understands contemporary music, and he has the ability to draw every nuance, every dissonance, and every decibel of sound from these scores. His podium manner is graphic, to put it mildly, but he is not a mere cheer leader and his every movement is graceful.

The concert began with a warm and graceful reading of Mozart's Symphony in A major (K.201), which hardly put the audience in the proper frame of mind to listen to Moevs' Fourteen Variations.

This is a curious work utilizing a much too complicated theme for its own good. The dissonance is brutal, the orchestration intense, and the craftsmanship complex. It is not "pretty" music, yet its massive strength and energetic speech compel attention with almost horrifying fascination. The composer must be a very angry man.

Another Boston favorite, Jesus Maria Sanroma, joined forces with Mr. Bernstein and orchestra to give a jocularly whimsical reading of Stravinsky's "Capriccio."

The concert closed with an exhilarating performance of Prokofieff's witty and urbane Symphony No. 5.

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,
APR 6

41

Dance News — Symphony Plans Extra Concert

Theodore N. Marier and Hugh Ross, associate conductor and regular conductor, respectively, of the Cecilia Society, prepare for the concert performance of Gluck's "Alceste" in Symphony Hall Monday night.

George Humphrey

Robert Moevs, whose Variations for Orchestra will be heard for the first time in Boston when Leonard Bernstein conducts the Boston Symphony concerts this afternoon, Saturday night, Sunday afternoon, and Tuesday night.

Management Seeking Ways To Complete Fund for Tour

By Harold Rogers

The Boston Symphony Orchestra must raise $25,000 to complete the fund for its European tour this summer. In order to secure a portion of this amount, the management has scheduled an extra concert, the details of which are given below.

The total cost of the tour—as explained to the press yesterday by the manager, Thomas D. Perry—will be $300,000. This will cover the orchestra's expenses for five-and-a-half weeks. Only $100,000 can be earned from the concerts of the tour, which leaves $200,000 to be raised from other sources.

Most of this amount—$175,000 of it—has already been contributed by anonymous donors.

The management hopes to raise part of the remaining $25,000—perhaps $5,000—by selling its main commodity — music. Charles Munch will contribute his services as conductor for the extra concert, to be held in Symphony Hall Sunday evening, April 29, the day after the regular season has closed. The program will consist of two favorites, the Beethoven Symphony No. 7 and the Tchaikovsky "Pathétique" Symphony No. 6.

The public seat sale for this concert will not open until Monday, April 16. Meanwhile, season subscribers, but not the general public, may obtain the seats of their choice from the Symphony Hall box office.

It is to be hoped that many Boston business concerns, as well as private individuals—all those interested in promoting the good name and good will of Boston abroad—will assist in completing the tour fund.

Spies Wins Award

The Board of Judges of the Lili Boulanger Memorial Fund has granted the 1956 award to Claudio Spies—a young Chilean composer—for his "Music for Ballet."

Mr. Spies received his Master's degree in 1954 from Harvard, where he studied composition with Walter Piston. He has won two other prizes for choral works from the Universidad de Chile, but this is his first successful attempt at a major orchestral work.

The Fund, which has its headquarters at 122 Bay State Road, Boston, was founded in 1939 in memory of Lili Boulanger (1893-1918), Nadia Boulanger's sister. Awards are made without regard to nationality and have been won by American, Brazilian, Czech, French, Polish, Scottish, and Turkish musicians.

The Board of Judges consists of Nadia Boulanger, Aaron Copland, Alexei Haieff, Walter Piston, and Igor Stravinsky.

Arnita Organ Recital

Salvator Arnita, organist, will give a recital Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock in the MIT Chapel. His program, to which the public is invited, will include works by Corelli, Buxtehude, Bach, Handel, and Edouard Silas.

Mr. Arnita is chairman of the music department at the American University in Beirut, Lebanon. This year he is studying at Harvard University under a fellowship from the Rockefeller Foundation.

Lee Simonson to Lecture

Lee Simonson, scenic designer and theater architect, will speak on "The University Theater" at the Fogg Museum, Cambridge, Thursday afternoon at 4 o'clock. The lecture will be sponsored by the Fogg Art Museum and the Harvard Theater Collection.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 122,000
APR 7 1956

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Bernstein Leads Moevs Music

Leonard Bernstein is guest conductor at the 21st program of the Friday afternoon, Saturday evening series of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at Symphony Hall. The program: Mozart: Symphony in A major (K. 201); Robert Moevs: Fourteen Variations for Orchestra (first performances in Boston); Stravinsky: Capriccio (Jesus Maria Sanroma, piano soloist); Prokofieff: Fifth Symphony.

By CYRUS DURGIN

The multifariously gifted Leonard Bernstein has returned as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony, his first such appearances since 1952, bringing with him a score by Robert Moevs, who is a member of the music faculty at Harvard. This is the Fourteen Variations for Orchestra, new to Boston and commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation.

The 35-year-old Mr. Moevs (whose name rhymes with raves), is, as we have known from certain small pieces already performed here, a man of talent and of learning. His Variations make sense and logic, and they can be counted off as each begins, though the musical fabric shows scarcely a break between any of them. His theme is individual, with its dominant features a sustained trill followed by a downward octave leap.

Perhaps, however, this theme is not inherently suitable for variation, for while the numbers have definite points of interest, there is nowhere near enough variety in figuration, not enough in harmonic foundation, and very little in orchestral color. It is one thing to write variations, each separate in itself, with a close; it is another and a much more difficult thing to create a continuous fabric, which is what Moevs has attempted.

A Growing Talent

That the Variations are, candidly, monotonous; that his score seems to jump from a thin chamber-music manner to heavy orchestra, and that there is no onward motion, need not disturb the composer. He was present yesterday, and was politely received. Another time he may will have written better music which will garner more applause. Of his yet unmatured talent, there is no doubt.

Very much like old times it was to hear Jesus Maria Sanroma in a crisp, clear, rhythmically brilliant performance of the piano part in Stravinsky's Capriccio. Mr. Sanroma, in Boston, has a special identification with the piece, for he played it several times in the days of Koussevitzky.

Yesterday's performance, orchestrally and in solo, could hardly be bettered. I had never enjoyed the Capriccio very much until now; it used to seem dry and not at all the peculiar blend of classic directness and a light romantic style that it is. Perhaps Bernstein heightened the flavor of it all. Or, more likely, I at last have grown into the music. At any rate, it was sheer delight.

Mr. Bernstein has grown as a conductor. He still looks boyish, and he still dances on the stand, and his gestures still remind you of Koussevitzky. But what the ear receives is the proof of approaching maturity. He has not yet achieved the height of real simplicity: Mozart he conducted, phrased and accented too elaborately, the first movement was a hair too slow and the second a hair too fast.

A Tour de Force

But what Bernstein can do with such a demanding and complex work as the Prokofieff Fifth Symphony! Here was a mastery of technic and expression in the highest degree. The orchestra played superbly for him, with a tone of loveliness. This work of Prokofieff is music of genuine stature, overlong to be sure, but superb in its melodic invention, deeply moving emotionally, and in the dimensions of its form of a size you could call huge.

To conduct it as Bernstein did, with obvious knowledge of the score from start to finish, with such accurate style, such drive, force, architectural sense, and such beautiful command of details, including those difficult matters of rhythm; to do this takes enormous ability. His performance was a tour de force, thoroughly meriting the applause and the cries of "Bravo!" it received. But I do wish he would stop dancing, for it detracts from the excellence of his work. A conductor ought to be expressive down to the waist and from there to his feet as rigidly motionless as possible!

Next week Charles Munch will conduct Tchaikovsky's "Francesca da Rimini"; the Prokofieff Violin Concerto in G Minor (No. 2), with Zino Francescatti as soloist, and the Brahms Double Concerto, with Mr. Francescatti and Samuel Mayes, first cello, as soloists.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 130,559
APR 7 1956

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Leonard Bernstein conducting, gave the 21st program of the 1955-56 season in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. The soloist was Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist. The program:
Symphony in A (K. 201).....Mozart
Fourteen Variations.....Moevs
Capriccio.....Stravinsky
Symphony No. 5.....Prokofieff

By RUDOLPH ELIE

It isn't a very nice thing to welcome Leonard Bernstein back for a brief appearance as guest conductor with a little reproach, but it seemed to me he came up with a program yesterday afternoon devised largely to weary the spirit of the most dauntless.

Aside from the Mozart, which is a perfect gem, he offered three contemporary works, each interesting in its own right but mutually destructive when lumped together. And it all went on much too long. It may well have been a temporal accident, in that Jesus Maria Sanroma could not appear on a later program and Mr. Bernstein didn't want to sacrifice the Boston debut of Moevs' Variations, but the results were not any too happy from an esthetic point of view.

Moevs' Fourteen Variations for Orchestra disclosed from the outset a powerful musical mind at work. There was about it, it is true, a faint sense of the orchestral exercise as if the composer were still feeling his way, and there was also a good deal of what seemed to me unnecessary shrillness in the instrumental clashes.

Using a brief, angular motto that appears again and again as a sort of point of reference, the composer has displayed great ingenuity in the handling of his materials. The build-up to the climactic tenth variation is exciting to a degree, while the two ensuing variations are both charming and arresting. The work as a whole was arresting, in fact, often suggesting the Moussorgsky of "Pictures at an Exhibition" though of course in a wholly different musical language. Mr. Bernstein, who may have been just a little soft with Mozart, gave it a vivid reading. The composer was in the audience and was very well received.

Heart Warming

The return of Jesus Maria Sanroma in Stravinsky's Capriccio, a work he introduced to American audiences in Boston in 1930, was a heart-warming occasion. He has been too long away, and he played for his numberless friends in Boston with great elan and force. The work, when insulated with older works, is delightful, but under the circumstances of following such a high-to today's [illegible] King; D. Fulton. Sykes v. [illegible] G. Michaels; S. Scheff. Purcell v. Conrad. Settled. F. I. Rose. E. Martin.

Fifth jury session (VOKE, J.)—Travis v. Badger Trucking et al. Unfinished. D. Smerdon; S. Burr. Hubbard v. MTA et al., to follow. H. J. Williams. D. Short; A. J. Learson. E. Murphy. Guarciariello v. Cooper. Settled. T. Meagher; W. Hennebery.

Sixth jury session (BEAUDREAU, J.)—McCabe et al v. New Haven R. R. Unfinished. J. Kimball, Jr.; N. V. Deering. Kaplan v. General Electric Dist. et al. Settled. Schultz; P. E. Troy. To follow: Lomay et al v. Whitney. W. F. Hennberry; J. Parrish.

Pre-trial session (LURIE, J.)—Pre-trial matters.

Equity session without jury, equity matters. Motions.

[illegible] 20 then and it [illegible] it is Prokofieff at the very top of his form. But the opening movement, after a lovely start, is over-written and its themes are often banal. The slow movement, a Beethovenate adagio, loses its way, and the finale turns to sheer bombast. The program tells us the composer wrote it in a month. I can well believe it, for he seems to throw everything into it. It is a perfectly legitimate procedure of course, and many masterpieces have been completed in an even shorter time. But it would seem the Prokofieff failed to cull out the dead wood, the redundancies, the toppling dimensions of the symphony, which for a man celebrated for the economy of his means in other works, is not easily comprehended.

In any case Mr. Bernstein, who conducted the work from memory, is obviously convinced of the validity of the utterance, and

CINCINNATI, OHIO
POST
Circ. D. 167,260
APR 9 1956

3 Recordings Play as One

BOSTON, April 7 (UP). — A recording commemorating the 75th anniversary season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra features the group playing the same piece under the batons of three conductors.

Three recordings of Berlioz' Hungarian March" made over a period of nearly half a century were dubbed together electronically to sound as one continuous performance.

Karl Muck, who became conductor in 1906, starts the march. The late Serge Koussevitzky "takes over" in the middle section and Charles Munch, the present director, concludes the piece.

Post (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 285,839
APR 7 1956

Music in Review

By TUCKER KEISER

Leonard Bernstein returned to the podium in Symphony Hall, after an absence of four years, to lead the Boston Symphony in an unofficial tribute to the memory of Serge Koussevitsky. With the exception of Moevs' Fourteen Variations for Orchestra, all the pieces played were associated with the Koussevitzky regime—and, of course, Mr. Bernstein, himself, is the late conductor's star protege.

The performance hit with an explosive impact, coming as it did in a season that has been lamentably routine. Not that this 75th anniversary hasn't witnessed some genuinely stirring moments, because it has, but we have had no particular program that has been aurally exciting until this one.

Bernstein understands contemporary music, and he has the ability to draw every nuance, every dissonance, and every decibel of sound from these scores. His podium manner is graphic, to put it mildly, but he is not a mere cheer leader and his every movement is graceful.

The concert began with a warm and graceful reading of Mozart's Symphony in A major (K.201), which hardly put the audience in the proper frame of mind to listen to Moevs' Fourteen Variations.

This is a curious work utilizing a much too complicated theme for its own good. The dissonance is brutal, the orchestration intense, and the craftsmanship complex. It is not "pretty" music, yet its massive strength and energetic speech compel attention with almost horrifying fascination. The composer must be a very angry man.

Another Boston favorite, Jesus Maria Sanroma, joined forces with Mr. Bernstein and orchestra to give a jocularly whimsical reading of Stravinsky's "Capriccio."

The concert closed with an exhilarating performance of Prokofieff's witty and urbane Symphony No. 5.

Christian Science Monitor (e)
42 BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,872

APR 7 1956

Bernstein Guest at the Symphony

Variations by Robert Moevs Heard in Boston Première

By Harold Rogers

Leonard Bernstein has returned to Symphony Hall after a four-year absence, trailing clouds of Koussevitzkian glory. He has set up a program—substantial, emotional, and musically exciting—which he calls "a sentimental tribute" to the former conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Most of Mr. Bernstein's listeners were doubtless carried back to an earlier day when the proceedings at Symphony Hall, however great or small, were infused with a powerful sense of the dramatic. This aura prevailed yesterday afternoon, and there is every reason to believe it will continue during Mr. Bernstein's guest appearances tonight, Sunday afternoon, and Tuesday night.

He opened with one of Koussevitzky's favorite Mozart symphonies—the A major, K. 201—and gave this adroitly fashioned little gem a tender traversal. From this point, however, we stepped irretrievably into the 20th century, and the going was great.

This contemporary parade was led off by a work new to Boston—the Fourteen Variations for Orchestra by Robert Moevs (pronounced to rhyme with raves)—a young composer on the music faculty at Harvard. It is heartening to see a name from the younger generation of Boston composers on the program, something that should occur more often in this eminently musical community.

★ ★ ★

Mr. Moevs has spent five years under Nadia Boulanger's guidance, plus some time in Italy on a Prix de Rome. His music, to judge by this one composition, is not in the least precious, as happens to be the case with many of "the Boulangerie," Aaron Copland and Walter Piston being notable exceptions.

Mr. Moevs is an imaginative composer, one who is going places with a will and an uncompromising way. His audience yesterday was friendly in its response, if not overjoyed; but his Variations show clearly that he is the kind of composer who will win supporters to his cause.

★ ★ ★

His writing is forceful and granitic; his harmonies are pungent; his rhythms frenetic; his climaxes built with unrelenting tension. He makes deft use of measured silence (and Mr. Bernstein made dramatic use of every rest). He revels in ostinato effects that are almost mechanistic in their increasing momentum. Through an additive construction he builds one climax to an almost unbearable emotional impact.

On the other hand, he can achieve flights of lyricism. He can be pensive, even apprehensive. There are plateaus of troubled waiting. In one variation he deftly tosses a short rhythmic fragment like a ball from choir to choir. This work was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. He is a composer worth his salt.

Jesús María Sanromá made his 29th appearance with the Boston Symphony as a soloist in Stravinsky's Capriccio for Piano and Orchestra. His conception seems to have mellowed somewhat from his recorded performance, made a good 15 years ago, but in the climaxes his finger work produced dazzling effects. His playing was altogether ingratiating from first to last, and the work itself holds enduring charm.

As for Mr. Bernstein, it was evident that a deeper maturity has come into the work of this most gifted musician. In the past he has been criticized for his virtuosic style, especially when it draws attention away from the music.

There were times when this happened yesterday, but not until he became involved with the inspiring score of Prokofiev's Fifth Symphony. By and large his gestures are now musically justified, if sometimes overly graphic. He knows what he wants, and he knows how to get it. In the Prokofiev he let nothing fall to the floor. He extracted the last ounce of emotion from every effect, and he won a justified salvo of bravos.

Sat. Review of Literature
NEW YORK, N. Y.

APR 7 1956

MUSIC TO MY EARS

"Parsifal" a la Kerz, Gieseking, Villa-Lobos No. 11

LIKE many of Rudolf Bing's ideas, the notion of redoing the Metropolitan's "Parsifal" (in use since Joseph Urban designed it in 1921) à la Bayreuth had more than a measure of merit. A principal demerit, however, is that instead of inviting Wieland Wagner to cut his cloth to the Metropolitan pattern the tailoring has been assigned to one who appears to have only a vague idea of what the original was like. I have no preconceptions about Leo Kerz, but what he provided suggested a continuation of the famous cartoon series: "Impressions of Bayreuth by One Who Has Never Been There."

Some elemental aspects of the "new Bayreuth" technique are employed—a circular ramp for entrances and exits, projected backgrounds, occasional shafts of light from above, a minimum of action on stage. But where is Wieland Wagner's economical sense of design, his sure kind of theatrical effect, his imaginative use of darkness no less than light? We have, instead, a steady confusion between the abstract and the tangible, a mingling of timidity and boldness which add in the end to pastiche.

Klingsor's castle, for example, is a fine specimen of medieval architecture as projected on the Metropolitan's cyclorama. But I studied the background for the opening scene for well over an hour (Wagner must have known his scenic descendants were going to ply the audience with riddles, to judge from the time he allowed for solving them) without reaching a conclusion as to whether it looked more like a) the supports of desert water-tank with enlarged cacti around it or b) an abandoned oil-derrick. The succeeding temple interior is more plain to its purpose, but inferior (in its spikey style) to the now discarded Urban arrangement (in its style). Act III has a rather bleak aspect at the beginning, but the suggested transformation to spring has a warm parallel in the tints that creep into the projected mountain background during the "Good Friday" music. Considering the resources of the new magic-lantern technique, something more closely suggestive of Wagner's transformation effect might have been contrived in Acts I and III. Instead, a forecurtain was drawn and various suggestive blotches disposed upon it.

What is perhaps most useful in this use of projections (following the previous Kerz effects for "Magic Flute") is the clear-cut demonstration that they have a place in the Metropolitan scenic scheme. This is a matter of some importance, since the elements involved are vastly cheaper than conventional painted drops, and the nasty problems related to moving, storage, warehousing, etc., are circumvented. Also, no deterioration. The urgent need is for a better groundplan, however, and greater uniformity of style on that groundplan. The Flower Maidens are decidedly improved in detail and sum on what they have been before, thanks to Herbert Graf's suitable arrangements.

Musically this "Parsifal" was akin to most of the recent past, with Fritz Stiedry waving a sympathetic but leisurely baton over a variable cast. Paul Schoeffler was a superb Amfortas, Otto Edelmann a fine-sounding Gurnemanz, Set Svanholm an experienced Parsifal (he had more voice at his command than has recently been the case), and Margaret Harshaw a Kundry who always promised more than she delivered. Edelmann's vocal character is another sort than the weighty one associated with the bygone Alexander Kipnis and Ludwig Weber or the present Jerome Hines, but it is a pleasure to have this sound in the ear when the garrulities of Gurnemanz roll on and on. Miss Harshaw has obviously given exhaustive thought to the problems posed by Kundry, but the womanly magic to make Act II convincing isn't present in her clear but hard sound.

In addition to the excellent top effects of Schoeffler and Edelmann there are staunch supporting ones by Nicola Moscona (Titurel), Sandra Warfield (a voice), Paul Franke, Clifford Harvuot, Rosalind Elias, etc. Unfortunately, the heat to bind them all together is not provided by conductor Stiedry. And with the scenic inequalities as they are the result is more prosaic than "Parsifal."

Those who value the kind of pianistic attainment represented by Walter Gieseking will be glad to hear that he belatedly resumed his American activities playing the Beethoven "Emperor" with the New York Philharmonic-Symphony orchestra directed by Guido Cantelli despite a shattering accident early in the winter. While he was being driven to a fogbound

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N. Y.
APR 1956

Leonard Rose Appears With Boston Symphony

Boston Symphony, Charles Munch conducting. Leonard Rose, cellist. Carnegie Hall, March 24, 2:30:

"Coriolan" Overture .....Beethoven
"Fantaisies symphoniques"
(Symphony No. 6) .....Martinu
Cello Concerto .....Dvorak
Three Dances from
"The Three-Cornered Hat".....Falla

This was a program tailor-made for the Boston Symphony. It took the group a short time to warm up, however, for the Beethoven "Coriolan" Overture was given a routine performance. But Martinu's "Fantaisies symphoniques" showed the orchestra and Mr. Munch at their peak, and it was easy to see that Martinu had Mr. Munch's style of conducting in mind when he wrote the work.

The New York Music Critics' Circle recently named the Martinu composition as "the orchestral work of the most outstanding excellence performed in this city for the first time during the year 1955". After the performance Mr. Martinu was presented the award by Miles Kastendieck, president of the circle. During his brief speech Mr. Kastendieck said that he hoped the audience had experienced the same excitement as he, when he had first heard the work. Judging from the hearty applause, it had. For the symphony is an exciting work, filled with strong melodic material and exotic effects.

The Dvorak Cello Concerto, with Leonard Rose as soloist, was given a performance that improved steadily. Mr. Rose's opening phrases were perhaps too rough, but soon his playing had gained in smoothness and balance. His tone was warm and full, and he made the second movement a poetic creation. The Finale was memorable for its dance spirit. Praise also belongs to the orchestra's expert accompaniment. —F. M., Jr.

AKRON, OHIO
BEACON JOURNAL
Circ. D. 152,381 - S. 159,201
APR 8 1956

Music

A New, Delightful Western Album

By OSCAR SMITH

Many city dwellers, even those who never get nearer the Wild West than a cowboy movie, will admit they like the music that has come down from frontier days.

That is why the recording of some of these folk songs by the talented Roger Wagner Chorale was such a happy idea. Only the male members of the chorus are heard singing the 12 frontier folk songs in the recording. (Capitol P-8332).

Here are excellent voices, superbly blended, and several outstanding soloists doing such cowboy classics as "Bury Me Not On The Lone Prairie," "Home On The Range," "I'm A Poor Lonesome Cowboy," "Goodbye, Old Paint" and "Little Joe, The Wrangler."

The set also has "Snagtooth Sal," "Curtains of Night," "Old Chisholm Trail" and "Green Grow The Lilacs." It is a fine companion album for Capitol's "Folk Songs of The New World" by the Wagner group.

★

ANDRE KOSTELANETZ and his orchestra have recorded another in their series of "Opera For Orchestra." This time it is Puccini's "Tosca." (Columbia CL-767).

These performances are entertaining, but the chief trouble is they may become monotonous at times.

In a few places a robust tenor is needed or a dramatic soprano to emote through "Vissi d'Arte."

★

DAVID OISTRAKH, sensational Soviet violinist, and Isaac Stern, one of America's greatest fiddlers, are teamed up for a worthwhile Columbia recording.

First they play Vivaldi's Concerto in A Minor for Two Violins with the Philadelphia Orchestra conducted by Eugene Ormandy. It is violin playing pure and undiluted, and I would hate to try to distinguish one artist from the other.

The orchestra itself is like one great singing instrument. Stern also plays the Bach Concerto No. 1 in A Minor and Oistrakh the Bach Concerto No. 2 in E Major. (Columbia ML-5087).

Incidentally, Stern will play in the Akron Armory at 8:30 p. m. Thursday in a concert that will end the Tuesday Musical Club's 68th season.

His program will include sonatas by Handel, Franck and Copland and the Adagio and Fugue from Bach's Sonata in G Minor, for violin alone.

★

EVEN IF YOU think Tchaikovsky's Fourth Symphony should be given a rest, listen to the recording of it by Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Listen to it from the standpoint of intonation and sonority. The Bostonians under Munch are a mighty virtuoso orchestra. (RCA Victor LM-1953).

But I wonder why Mario Lanza makes such work of his singing in the recording called "The Magic Mario."

He is anything but that even though he gets some good, ringing top tones. Much of his singing is so exaggerated that to me it is laborious and annoying. (RCA Victor LM-1943).

Orchestra

George Szell and the Cleveland Orchestra will play a work by a new composer, Everett Helm, and introduce a young Canadian violinist, Betty-Jean Hagen, at the Severance Hall concerts Thursday and Saturday evenings.

The program will open with Helm's "Three Gospel Hymns," settings for orchestra of old sacred tunes.

Miss Hagen and the orchestra will do Mozart's Violin Concerto in G Major, K-216. The program will close with Brahms First Symphony.

A Toronto resident, Miss Hagen was the winner of last year's Leventritt Foundation Award. Szell, one of the judges of the Foundation, first heard her play at the auditions. He wanted his audiences to hear her, with the Cleveland Orchestra.

Helm, a native of Minneapolis, studied at Carleton College and Harvard University, and later in Italy and England. His compositions have been widely performed in the United States and South American countries.

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,872

APR 7 1956

Bernstein Guest at the Symphony

Variations by Robert Moevs Heard in Boston Première

By Harold Rogers

Leonard Bernstein has returned to Symphony Hall after a four-year absence, trailing clouds of Koussevitzkian glory. He has set up a program—substantial, emotional, and musically exciting—which he calls "a sentimental tribute" to the former conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Most of Mr. Bernstein's listeners were doubtless carried back to an earlier day when the proceedings at Symphony Hall, however great or small, were infused with a powerful sense of the dramatic. This aura prevailed yesterday afternoon, and there is every reason to believe it will continue during Mr. Bernstein's guest appearances tonight, Sunday afternoon, and Tuesday night.

He opened with one of Koussevitzky's favorite Mozart symphonies—the A major, K. 201—and gave this adroitly fashioned little gem a tender traversal. From this point, however, we stepped irretrievably into the 20th century, and the going was great.

This contemporary parade was led off by a work new to Boston—the Fourteen Variations for Orchestra by Robert Moevs (pronounced to rhyme with raves)—a young composer on the music faculty at Harvard. It is heartening to see a name from the younger generation of Boston composers on the program, something that should occur more often in this eminently musical community.

* * *

Mr. Moevs has spent five years under Nadia Boulanger's guidance, plus some time in Italy on a Prix de Rome. His music, to judge by this one composition, is not in the least precious, as happens to be the case with many of "the Boulangerie," Aaron Copland and Walter Piston being notable exceptions.

Mr. Moevs is an imaginative composer, one who is going places with a will and an uncompromising way. His audience yesterday was friendy in its response, if not overjoyed; but his Variations show clearly that he is the kind of composer who will win supporters to his cause.

* * *

His writing is forceful and granitic; his harmonies are pungent; his rhythms frenetic; his climaxes built with unrelenting tension. He makes deft use of measured silence (and Mr. Bernstein made dramatic use of every rest). He revels in ostinato effects that are almost mechanistic in their increasing momentum. Through an additive construction he builds one climax to an almost unbearable emotional impact.

On the other hand, he can achieve flights of lyricism. He can be pensive, even apprehensive. There are plateaus of troubled waiting. In one variation he deftly tosses a short rhythmic fragment like a ball from choir to choir. This work was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. He is a composer worth his salt.

Jesús María Sanromá made his 29th appearance with the Boston Symphony as a soloist in Stravinsky's Capriccio for Piano and Orchestra. His conception seems to have mellowed somewhat from his recorded performance, made a good 15 years ago, but in the climaxes his finger work produced dazzling effects. His playing was altogether ingratiating from first to last, and the work itself holds enduring charm.

As for Mr. Bernstein, it was evident that a deeper maturity has come into the work of this most gifted musician. In the past he has been criticized for his virtuosic style, especially when it draws attention away from the music.

There were times when this happened yesterday, but not until he became involved with the inspiring score of Prokofiev's Fifth Symphony. By and large his gestures are now musically justified, if sometimes overly graphic. He knows what he wants, and he knows how to get it. In the Prokofiev he let nothing fall to the [illegible] extracted the last ounce of emotion from every effect, and he won a justified salvo of [illegible]

Sat. Review of Literature
NEW YORK, N. Y.

APR 7 1956

MUSIC TO MY EARS

"Parsifal" a la Kerz, Gieseking, Villa-Lobos No. 11

LIKE many of Rudolf Bing's ideas, the notion of redoing the Metropolitan's "Parsifal" (in use since Joseph Urban designed it in 1921) à la Bayreuth had more than a measure of merit. A principal demerit, however, is that instead of inviting Wieland Wagner to cut his cloth to the Metropolitan pattern the tailoring has been assigned to one who appears to have only a vague idea of what the original was like. I have no preconceptions about Leo Kerz, but what he provided suggested a continuation of the famous cartoon series: "Impressions of Bayreuth by One Who Has Never Been There."

Some elemental aspects of the "new Bayreuth" technique are employed—a circular ramp for entrances and exits, projected backgrounds, occasional shafts of light from above, a minimum of action on stage. But where is Wieland Wagner's economical sense of design, his sure kind of theatrical effect, his imaginative use of darkness no less than light? We have, instead, a steady confusion between the abstract and the tangible, a mingling of timidity and boldness which add in the end to pastiche.

Klingsor's castle, for example, is a fine specimen of medieval architecture as projected on the Metropolitan's cyclorama. But I studied the background for the opening scene for well over an hour (Wagner must have known his scenic descendants were going to ply the audience with riddles, to judge from the time he allowed for solving them) without reaching a conclusion as to whether it looked more like a) the supports of desert water-tank with enlarged cacti around it or b) an abandoned oil-derrick. The succeeding temple interior is more plain to its purpose, but inferior (in its spikey style) to the now discarded Urban arrangement (in its style). Act III has a rather bleak aspect at the beginning, but the suggested transformation to spring has a warm parallel in the tints that creep into the projected mountain background during the "Good Friday" music. Considering the resources of the new magic-lantern technique, something more closely suggestive of Wagner's transformation effect might have been contrived in Acts I and III. Instead, a forecurtain was drawn and various suggestive blotches disposed upon it.

What is perhaps most useful in this use of projections (following the previous Kerz effects for "Magic Flute") is the clear-cut demonstration that they have a place in the Metropolitan scenic scheme. This is a matter of some importance, since the elements involved are vastly cheaper than conventional painted drops, and the nasty problems related to moving, storage, warehousing, etc., are circumvented. Also, no deterioration. The urgent need is for a better groundplan, however, and greater uniformity of style on that groundplan. The Flower Maidens are decidedly improved in detail and sum on what they have been before, thanks to Herbert Graf's suitable arrangements.

Musically this "Parsifal" was akin to most of the recent past, with Fritz Stiedry waving a sympathetic but leisurely baton over a variable cast. Paul Schoeffler was a superb Amfortas, Otto Edelmann a fine-sounding Gurnemanz, Set Svanholm an experienced Parsifal (he had more voice at his command than has recently been the case), and Margaret Harshaw a Kundry who always promised more than she delivered. Edelmann's vocal character is another sort than the weighty one associated with the bygone Alexander Kipnis and Ludwig Weber or the present Jerome Hines, but it is a pleasure to have this sound in the ear when the garrulities of Gurnemanz roll on and on. Miss Harshaw has obviously given exhaustive thought to the problems posed by Kundry, but the womanly magic to make Act II convincing isn't present in her clear but hard sound.

In addition to the excellent top effects of Schoeffler and Edelmann there are staunch supporting ones by Nicola Moscona (Titurel), Sandra Warfield (a voice), Paul Franke, Clifford Harvuot, Rosalind Elias, etc. Unfortunately, the heat to bind them all together is not provided by conductor Stiedry. And with the scenic inequalities as they are the result is more prosaic than "Parsifal."

Those who value the kind of pianistic attainment represented by Walter Gieseking will be glad to hear that he belatedly resumed his American activities playing the Beethoven "Emperor" with the New York Philharmonic-Symphony orchestra directed by Guido Cantelli despite a shattering accident early in the winter. While he was being driven to a fogbound

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N. Y.

APR 1956

Leonard Rose Appears With Boston Symphony

Boston Symphony, Charles Munch conducting. Leonard Rose, cellist. Carnegie Hall, March 24, 2:30:

"Coriolan" Overture ..... Beethoven
"Fantaisies symphoniques" (Symphony No. 6) ..... Martinu
Cello Concerto ..... Dvorak
Three Dances from "The Three-Cornered Hat" ..... Falla

This was a program tailor-made for the Boston Symphony. It took the group a short time to warm up, however, for the Beethoven "Coriolan" Overture was given a routine performance. But Martinu's "Fantaisies symphoniques" showed the orchestra and Mr. Munch at their peak, and it was easy to see that Martinu had Mr. Munch's style of conducting in mind when he wrote the work.

The New York Music Critics' Circle recently named the Martinu composition as "the orchestral work of the most outstanding excellence performed in this city for the first time during the year 1955". After the performance Mr. Martinu was presented the award by Miles Kastendieck, president of the circle. During his brief speech Mr. Kastendieck said that he hoped the audience had experienced the same excitement as he, when he had first heard the work. Judging from the hearty applause, it had. For the symphony is an exciting work, filled with strong melodic material and exotic effects.

The Dvorak Cello Concerto, with Leonard Rose as soloist, was given a performance that improved steadily. Mr. Rose's opening phrases were perhaps too rough, but soon his playing had gained in smoothness and balance. His tone was warm and full, and he made the second movement a poetic creation. The Finale was memorable for its dance spirit. Praise also belongs to the orchestra's expert accompaniment. —F. M., Jr.

ON, OHIO
BEACON JOURNAL
Circ. D. 152,381 - S. 159,201

APR 8 1956

Music

A New, Delightful Western Album

By OSCAR SMITH

Many city dwellers, even those who never get nearer the Wild West than a cowboy movie, will admit they like the music that has come down from frontier days.

That is why the recording of some of these folk songs by the talented Roger Wagner Chorale was such a happy idea. Only the male members of the chorus are heard singing the 12 frontier folk songs in the recording. (Capitol P-8332).

Here are excellent voices, superbly blended, and several outstanding soloists doing such cowboy classics as "Bury Me Not On The Lone Prairie," "Home On The Range," "I'm A Poor Lonesome Cowboy," "Goodbye, Old Paint" and "Little Joe, The Wrangler."

The set also has "Snagtooth Sal," "Curtains of Night," "Old Chisholm Trail" and "Green Grow The Lilacs." It is a fine companion album for Capitol's "Folk Songs of The New World" by the Wagner group.

★

ANDRE KOSTELANETZ and his orchestra have recorded another in their series of "Opera For Orchestra." This time it is Puccini's "Tosca." (Columbia CL-767).

These performances are entertaining, but the chief trouble is they may become monotonous at times.

In a few places a robust tenor is needed or a dramatic soprano to emote through "Vissi d'Arte."

★

DAVID OISTRAKH, sensational Soviet violinist, and Isaac Stern, one of America's greatest fiddlers, are teamed up for a worthwhile Columbia recording.

First they play Vivaldi's Concerto in A Minor for Two Violins with the Philadelphia Orchestra conducted by Eugene Ormandy. It is violin playing pure and undiluted, and I would hate to try to distinguish one artist from the other.

The orchestra itself is like one great singing instrument. Stern also plays the Bach Concerto No. 1 in A Minor and Oistrakh the Bach Concerto No. 2 in E Major. (Columbia ML-5087).

Incidentally, Stern will play in the Akron Armory at 8:30 p. m. Thursday in a concert that will end the Tuesday Musical Club's 68th season.

His program will include sonatas by Handel, Franck and Copland, and the Adagio and Fugue from Bach's Sonata in G Minor, for violin alone.

★

EVEN IF YOU think Tchaikovsky's Fourth Symphony should be given a rest, listen to the recording of it by Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Listen to it from the standpoint of intonation and sonority. The Bostonians under Munch are a mighty virtuoso orchestra. (RCA Victor LM-1953).

But I wonder why Mario Lanza makes such work of his singing in the recording called "The Magic Mario."

He is anything but that even though he gets some good, ringing top tones. Much of his singing is so exaggerated that to me it is laborious and annoying. (RCA Victor LM-1943).

Orchestra

George Szell and the Cleveland Orchestra will play a work by a new composer, Everett Helm, and introduce a young Canadian violinist, Betty-Jean Hagen, at the Severance Hall concerts Thursday and Saturday evenings.

The program will open with Helm's "Three Gospel Hymns," settings for orchestra of old sacred tunes.

Miss Hagen and the orchestra will do Mozart's Violin Concerto in G Major, K-216. The program will close with Brahms First Symphony.

A Toronto resident, Miss Hagen was the winner of last year's Leventritt Foundation Award. Szell, one of the judges of the Foundation, first heard her play at the auditions. He wanted his audiences to hear her, with the Cleveland Orchestra.

Helm, a native of Minneapolis, studied at Carleton College and Harvard University, and later in Italy and England. His compositions have been widely performed in the United States and South American countries.

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,872

APR 7 1956

Bernstein Gue

Variations by Robert M

By Harold Rogers

Leonard Bernstein has returned to Symphony Hall after a four-year absence, trailing clouds of Koussevitzkian glory. He has set up a program—substantial, emotional, and musically exciting—which he calls "a sentimental tribute" to the former conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Most of Mr. Bernstein's listeners were doubtless carried back to an earlier day when the proceedings at Symphony Hall, however great or small, were infused with a powerful sense of the dramatic. This aura prevailed yesterday afternoon, and there is every reason to believe it will continue during Mr. Bernstein's guest appearances tonight, Sunday afternoon, and Tuesday night.

He opened with one of Koussevitzky's favorite Mozart symphonies—the A major, K. 201—and gave this adroitly fashioned little gem a tender traversal. From this point, however, we stepped irretrievably into the 20th century, and the going was great.

This contemporary parade was led off by a work new to Boston—the Fourteen Variations for Orchestra by Robert Moevs (pronounced to rhyme with raves)—a young composer on the music faculty at Harvard. It is heartening to see a name from the younger generation of Boston composers on the program, something that should occur more often in this eminently musical community.

✓ ✓ ✓

Mr. Moevs has spent five years under Nadia Boulanger's guidance, plus some time in Italy on a Prix de Rome. His music, to judge by this one composition, is not in the least precious, as happens to be the case with many of "
langerie," Aaron Cop
Walter Piston being exceptions.

Mr. Moevs is an i composer, one who places with a will compromising way. I yesterday was fricn
sponse, if not overj
Variations show cl is the kind of c
will win supporter

✓ ✓

His writing is granitic; his pungent; his rh his climaxes b
lenting tension.
use of measur
Mr. Bernstein use of every ostinato effect mechanistic i momentum. T construction max to an emotional in

On the c achieve flig can be pe hensive. T troubled w tion he rhythmic

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N. Y.
APR 1956

Leonard Rose Appears With Boston Symphony

Boston Symphony, Charles Munch conducting. Leonard Rose, cellist. Carnegie Hall, March 24, 2:30:

"Coriolan" Overture .....Beethoven
"Fantaisies symphoniques" (Symphony No. 6) .....Martinu
Cello Concerto .....Dvorak
Three Dances from "The Three-Cornered Hat".....Falla

This was a program tailor-made for the Boston Symphony. It took the group a short time to warm up, however, for the Beethoven "Coriolan" Overture was given a routine performance. But Martinu's "Fantaisies symphoniques" showed the orchestra and Mr. Munch at their peak, and it was easy to see that Martinu had Mr. Munch's style of conducting in mind when he wrote the work.

The New York Music Critics' Circle recently named the Martinu composition as "the orchestral work of the most outstanding excellence performed in this city for the first time during the year 1955". After the performance Mr. Martinu was presented the award by Miles Kastendieck, president of the circle. During his brief speech Mr. Kastendieck said that he hoped the audience had experienced the same excitement as he, when he had first heard the work. Judging from the hearty applause, it had. For the symphony is an exciting work, filled with strong melodic material and exotic effects.

The Dvorak Cello Concerto, with Leonard Rose as soloist, was given a performance that improved steadily. Mr. Rose's opening phrases were perhaps too rough, but soon his playing had gained in smoothness and balance. His tone was warm and full, and he made the second movement a poetic creation. The Finale was memorable for its dance spirit. Praise also belongs to the orchestra's expert accompaniment. —F. M., Jr.

SOLUTION OF LAST WEEK'S KINGSLEY DOUBLE-CROSSTIC (No. 1149)
ELIZABETH (CUSTER) NEARING:
"Your
THE LANCASTERS

ON, OHIO
ON JOURNAL
152,381 - S. 159,201
APR 8 1956

Music

ew, Delightful estern Album

By OSCAR SMITH

Many city dwellers, even se who never get nearer the ld West than a cowboy ovie, will admit they like the usic that has come down
rom frontier days.

That is why the recording of some of these folk songs by the talented Roger Wagner Chorale was such a happy idea. Only the male members of the chorus are heard singing the 12 frontier folk songs in the recording. (Capitol P-8332).

Here are excellent voices, superbly blended, and several outstanding soloists doing such cowboy classics as "Bury Me Not On The Lone Prairie," "Home On The Range," "I'm A Poor Lonesome Cowboy," "Goodbye, Old Paint" and "Little Joe, The Wrangler."

The set also has "Snagtooth Sal," "Curtains of Night," "Old Chisholm Trail" and "Green Grow The Lilacs." It is a fine companion album for Capitol's "Folk Songs of The New World" by the Wagner group.

★

ANDRE KOSTELANETZ and his orchestra have recorded another in their series of "Opera For Orchestra." This time it is Puccini's "Tosca." (Columbia CL-767).

These performances are entertaining, but the chief trouble is they may become monotonous at times.

In a few places a robust tenor is needed or a dramatic soprano to emote through "Vissi d'Arte."

★

DAVID OISTRAKH, sensational Soviet violinist, and Isaac Stern, one of America's greatest fiddlers, are teamed up for a worthwhile Columbia recording.

First they play Vivaldi's Concerto in A Minor for Two Violins with the Philadelphia Orchestra conducted by Eugene Ormandy. It is violin playing pure and undiluted, and I would hate to try to distinguish one artist from the other.

The orchestra itself is like one great singing instrument. Stern also plays the Bach Concerto No. 1 in A Minor and Oistrakh the Bach Concerto No. 2 in E Major. (Columbia ML-5087).

Incidentally, Stern will play in the Akron Armory at 8:30 p. m. Thursday in a concert that will end the Tuesday Musical Club's 68th season.

His program will include sonatas by Handel, Franck and Copland and the "Adagio" and Fugue from Bach's Sonata in G Minor, for violin alone.

★

EVEN IF YOU think Tchaikovsky's Fourth Symphony should be given a rest, listen to the recording of it by Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Listen to it from the standpoint of intonation and sonority. The Bostonians under Munch are a mighty virtuoso orchestra. (RCA Victor LM-1953).

But I wonder why Mario Lanza makes such work of his singing in the recording called "The Magic Mario."

He is anything but that even though he gets some good, ringing top tones. Much of his singing is so exaggerated that to me it is laborious and annoying. (RCA Victor LM-1943).

Orchestra

George Szell and the Cleveland Orchestra will play a work by a new composer, Everett Helm, and introduce a young Canadian violinist, Betty-Jean Hagen, at the Severance Hall concerts Thursday and Saturday evenings.

The program will open with Helm's "Three Gospel Hymns," settings for orchestra of old sacred tunes.

Miss Hagen and the orchestra will do Mozart's Violin Concerto in G Major, K-216. The program will close with Brahms First Symphony.

A Toronto resident, Miss Hagen was the winner of last year's Leventritt Foundation Award. Szell, one of the judges of the Foundation, first heard her play at the auditions. He wanted his audiences to hear her, with the Cleveland Orchestra.

Helm, a native of Minneapolis, studied at Carleton College and Harvard University, and later in Italy and England. His compositions have been widely performed in the United States and South American countries.

ROMANCE A LA MODE: Naomi Lane Babson's fifth novel, "Another Sky," (Harcourt, Brace, $3.50), is what her Ladies' Home Journal readers have come to expect: a pleasant story, well-constructed out of favorite ingredients, like the Cinderella formula. Miss Babson writes persuasively. Her pages are dotted with proverbs and saynings used as flavoring: "The old step hard where the young would sooner choose to tread softly," "Most things don't matter much, but a drink of water stays a drink of water right to the end." If, when analyzed, the flavor of these sayings dwindles into vanilla, there are other times when the story takes on added dimension and the reader is almost reminded of Mary Webb's distinguished work, particularly "Precious Bane." Miss Webb's Prue Sarn was afflicted with a harelip and a beautiful witchlike contemporary who attracted her lover by showing herself naked to him. Miss Babson's Quincy is afflicted with a beautiful stone-cold cousin, Annis, who also shows herself naked to the man Quincy loves. But the difference between "Precious Bane" and "Another Sky" is that the former is rooted in the probabilities and the verities and the good sound earth of the English countryside while "Another Sky" is indeed just that—the atmosphere above a never-never land. Miss Babson gives us too many of the assorted fancy ingredients: high-hearted heroines, rich in their own right, sailing the higher seas, accompanied by no chaperones, at the mercy of lusty sea-captains with ten-

SOLUTION OF LAST WEEK'S KINGSLEY DOUBLE-CROSSTIC (No. 1149)
ELIZABETH (CUSTER) NEARING:
"Your
THE LANCASTERS

AIR FIGHTERS: Elleston Trevor, whose fine novel of Dunkirk, "The Big Pick-Up," appeared in this country only a few months ago, has given us another restrained and superbly realistic picture of British heroism. This time he tells, in "Squadron Airborne" (Macmillan, $3.50), of two brutal weeks in an RAF fighter squadron during Goering's attempt to soften England up for the post-Dunkirk invasion. These were the days of the Battle of Britain, a time when the RAF figured that it was just breaking even if it brought down four German planes for every one it lost itself. Fighter squadrons in the thick of this battle were then receiving pilot officer replacements who were as young as Mr. Trevor's nineteen-year-old Peter Stuyckes, who changes in two weeks from nervous tyro to tough veteran of seven kills and two crashes. Stuyckes is not a ough

The most charitable thing one can say of the book is that it is a rather frankly and thoroughly commercial undertaking, a cynical combination of sex and excitement and everything else left in the literary hydrator. But of that slickness that can blend such leftovers into an acceptable stew and none of the assurance of the first-rate potboiler who knows what he is doing and does it well. Rather, there is the impression of embarrassing opportunism in which the excitement is unexciting, the sex is asexual, and the love is utterly and depressingly loveless. —JOHN FREDERICK MUEHL.

ceeded. For "Shadow of the Monsoon," the novel. And in this he has succ which is to say, it is too long and it is one of those "big, sprawling novels," is badly organized, taking innumerable characters through almost four hundred pages to arrive at a disappointingly prosaic destination. If there is a hero it is Spike Willey, "an American biologist plagued by nightmare memories of the war," says the jacket. If there is a villain it is Peter Becker, "an employe of an oil company hoping to establish selling depots in Chalnagar." And if there is a heroine it is Kate Becker, his tumescent young wife, who offers immoral support to both her husband and Willey, and whose other virtues are that she drinks too much, wears no brassiere, and gets raped repeatedly.

CLEVELAND, OHIO
PLAIN DEALER
Circ. D. 299,297 - S. 513,207

APR 8 1956

Marjorie Tallchief and George Skibine

Yugoslav Dancers

THE YUGOSLAV BALLET is one of the dance events scheduled for Oct. 20 and 21, in the Cleveland Opera Association's offerings for next season. Marjorie Tallchief and George Skibine appear with the Ruth Page Chicago Ballet in the same series, Dec. 2. Montovani and his new music will be heard in Masonic Hall, Oct. 7. Charles Munch conducts the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Oct. 19, as one of the events in G. Bernardi's course.

Sunday Post
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 230,930

APR 8 - 1956

Bernardi Announces 15 Events for Autumn

In planning attractions for next season, G. Bernardi, manager of the Cleveland Opera Association, is as optimistic as ever. He already has booked 15 events, most of which will be at Public Music Hall, and he says there are more to be announced later.

Of the attractions listed so far, five are ballets and two are famed symphony orchestras, the Boston and the Vienna Philharmonic. There will be one opera company, the NBC, and one solo recital, that of the celebrated soprano Elizabeth Schwarzkopf.

The season will open Oct. 7 with two concerts by Mantovani and his New Music Ensemble in Masonic Auditorium. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, after concluding its 75th anniversary tour of the British Isles and Europe, will be here Oct. 19 with its regular conductor, Charles Munch.

The Yugoslav State Co., hailed as the official cultural ambassadors of Yugoslavia, will give two performances of "Slavonic Rhapsody" with a company of 55 singers, dancers and musicians in Public Music Hall Oct. 20 and 21.

Makes Debut

The November attractions will open with three performances by Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo in Public Music Hall Nov. 2, 3 and 4. The Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra will make its debut appearance here Nov. 10. Another first will be a concert by the Carabinieri Band of Rome, the official band of the Italian army, with 102 men, in a pro-

(Continued on Page 64-D)

Sunday Post
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 230,930

APR 8 - 1956

Francescatti and Mayes Soloist at Symphony

Brahms' Double Concerto in A minor for violin, cello, and orchestra unperformed at the concerts of the Boston Symphony since the Brahms Festival in 1933, will be revived at the orchestra's next pair of concerts this week end. The soloists will be Zino Francescatti and Samuel Mayes. Also included will be Tchaikovsky's "Francesca da Rimini" and Prokofieff's Second Violin concerto.

Gluck's "Alcestis" Tomorrow Night in Symphony Hall

A concert version of Gluck's "Alcestis" will be presented tomorrow night in Symphony Hall by the Cecilia Society, Hugh Ross conducting. Three Metropolitan Opera singers, Margaret Harshaw, James McCracken, and Arthur Budney, will sing the major roles, and members of the Boston Symphony will provide the orchestral accompaniment.

Sunday Advertiser
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 547,691

APR 8 - 1956

Hub Symphony Honored

OCCASION OF THE 75TH ANNIVERSARY of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was marked at a unique ceremony in the State House by citations from the State Senate and House of Representatives hailing the orchestra as "ambassadors of goodwill to all peoples of the world." Left to right, Speaker Michael Skerry, Arthur Fiedler, Senate President Richard Furbush, L. W. Kanaga of RCA Victor and Charles Munch.

VARIETY
NEW YORK, N. Y.

APR 11 1956

Mass. Solons Mark 75th Anni of Boston Symph; RCA to Make 50G Film

Boston, April 10.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra was honored on its 75th anniversary by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts at the state house last week when resolutions, adopted by the State Senate and House of Representatives were presented to conductors Charles Munch and Arthur Fiedler. The citations were read by Richard I. Furbush, president of the Senate, and Michael J. Skerry, Speaker of the House. During the ceremony, Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony, and Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops, sat upon the rostrum.

It was the first time that any formal legislative tribute had been paid to a musical organization.

Lawrence (Larry) Kanaga, vice president of RCA Victor Records, presented Munch and Fiedler a $2,000 diamond-studded baton designed by French jeweler Van Cleef & Arpels. Kanaga said that Victor is making a $50,000 film in color featuring the Boston Symphony and showing how records are made. The film is intended for school students and other groups. Gift of the baton and making of the film commemorated the 40-year association between the Boston Symphony and Victor.

The Senate resolution said: "Both the Boston Symphony and the Boston Pops Orchestra have been the outstanding representatives of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. Their musical achievements have enriched the lives of the people throughout the world and have brought greater respect and appreciation for the cultural reputation of the people of Massachusetts."

Sat. Review of Literature
NEW YORK, N. Y.

APR 7 1956

—Culver.

"Music in My Time: The Memoirs of Alfredo Casella." Translated and edited by Spencer Norton, University of Oklahoma Press, $4.

ALFREDO CASELLA, an Italian composer, conductor, concert pianist, lecturer, and piano teacher (1883-1947), was fifty-five when he wrote his memoirs, which he said did not offer anything extraordinary—"a life of a man who has given all of himself to art and to his country." This, no doubt, is true of Casella the musician. Casella the author of "Music in My Time" had the rich material that came within the scope of his own experience and observation. Born in Italy, at the age of thirteen Casella came to Paris where first as a student and later as an artist he joined one of the most interesting phases in the development of modern music. He knew Ravel, Mahler, Ysaye, Stravinsky, Cortot, Enesco, Casals, Diaghilev and the members of his ballet, D'Annunzio, Cocteau, Picasso, and . . . practically everybody who called himself a musician or had something to do with the arts. He traveled to Russia, the United States, and South America. For three seasons (1926-1929) Casella conducted the Boston Pops orchestra, he was Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge's protegé with his trio, shared with Bela Bartok a prize of ten thousand dollars for a composition at the Musical Fund Society of Philadelphia contest, played for President Franklin D. Roosevelt at the White House, visited Russia before the revolution, was taken by Koussevitzky to play for Tolstoy at Yasnaya Polyana, twice returned to the USSR after the revolution, besides all his activities in Europe and in his native Italy—and yet with all this wealth of experience from which to draw Casella's reminiscences are too sketchy to have any value as additional records for the well-informed on the subject and too nebulous or insufficient for those who seek information for the first time. It is a pity, for if Casella had concentrated more on the development of modern music in his own country he perhaps would have filled the gap in the history. He complains too often about his enemies, particularly in Italy, but fails to make clear the cause of their animosity—whether personal or because of general prejudice against the new trends he brought with him and tried to introduce—and who should have known this better than Casella.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

Sunday Post
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 230,930

APR 8 - 1956

On the Record

Tchaikovsky-Symphony No. 4. Charles Munch conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra. During his friendship with with Madame Nadejda Filaretovna von Meck, wealthy widow of a railroad contractor, Tchaikovsky reached his richest period of productivity. She made it possible for him to spend his time in composition without concern for monetary matters by granting him an annuity. However, an unhappy marriage to a woman he hardly knew depressed him to such a degree that he attempted suicide. It was at this time that Symphony No. 4 was written and it's music indicates clearly his triumphal escape from fear and depression. The tone quality and Boston Symphony Orchestra interpretation are of an extremely high order. R. C. A. Victor.

Five Rossini Overtures. Pierino Gambra conducting the London Symphony Orchestra. Gioacchino Antonio Rossini was undoubtedly the greatest lyrical composer of the Bel Canto School of Italian opera. Here are presented some of his better known overtures. Tancredi, produced in 1813 in Venice, brought him to the attention of the public and his fame soon spread throughout Italy. Here also is presented the overture from his last, and in some respects, his most famous work, William Tell. Among others are the overture from the amusingly comic Cenerentola and The Siege of Corinth. Pierino Gambra conducts brilliantly. London

Schuberts Sonata for Piano in B-flat major Landler-op. 171, Leon Fleisher, pianist: The Sonata in B-flat major was one of a set of three piano sonatas, published posthumously, which Schubert composed in his closing year of 1828, to crown his achievements in the piano-sonata form. Here we find his extraordinary ability to translate musical values into human ones, to give a warm melodic line with poignancy and to a rhythm. The Landler, taking its name from the Austrian region of Landel, is a form of popular dance music the forerunner of the waltz. Schubert injected into this piece a jollity, a come-ye-all sentiment in sharp contrast to the waltzes of Strauss's Vienna. The brilliant performance of Leon Fleisher shows the incomparable artistry of his technique. He plays Schubert's works with insight and emotional perfection. Columbia

Juno and the Paycook, a tragi-comedy of Dublin by Sean O'Casey played by the outstanding actors and actresses of the Abbey Theatre such as Seanus Kavanagh, Siobhan McKenna, Leo Leyden, Maureen Cusask, Cyril Cusack, Marie Kean, Harry Brogan and several others. The recorded presentation of this poignant drama is deeply moving and a bitter penetration into the heart of the Irish drive for freedom from the yoke that has galled them for many centuries. It is a shocking tragedy and speaks clearly to the world the emotions that underlie the very heart of Erin. Angel.

Tchaikovsky's Suite No. 3 in G major-opus 55, Sir Adrian Boult-conductor: Tchaikovsky's four orchestral suites once considered an important part of the composer's works, is known today only by the "Themes and Variations," which forms the finales of the Suite. Equally delightful are the first three suites, although lighter and less imaginative, still are highly characteristic works. Tchaikovsky's music is an emotional experience for many music lovers because he speaks simply and honestly. This music is for all who draw near to it with their hearts rather than their intellects. Sir Adrian Boult admirably conducts this fine masterpiece. London.

I'm Still Swinging—Joe Newman Octet: The Swing Era came in with the '30s under the leadership of Benny Goodman. It was Count Basie's band, however, that brought the jazz age to its polished period. For many years Joe Newman was a member if his band and this recording of some well known swing pieces demonstrates the Basie tradition. At the same time he imposes his own. Most of these numbers are well done, with the possible exception of a couple which in the reviewer's opinion add little or nothing to a jazz collection. R.C.A. Victor Maruxa composed by Amadeo Vives with script by Pascual Frutos is a gay, light-hearted joyous musical comedy of young love with its action set among the meadows of Galicia, near the sea into which the Galician rivers flow to die. The enchanting, melodious voice of Tony Rosado is heard in the role of Maruxa, a pretty shepherdess who loses her heart to the strong, romantic young shepherd, Pablo. That part is sung by Manuel Ausensi who has a rich, powerful voice. Pilar Lorengar sings the songs of Rosa; Luis Corbella, the role of Rufo and Enrique De La Vara that of Antonio. The Madrid Singers (The Vocal Chamber Music Group of the Centre of Commercial Instruction) feature in the shepherd, shepherdesses and servants choruses while the score is played by the Augmented Madrid Chamber Orchestra conducted by Ataulfo Argenta. Haunting bagpipe music predominates during the early part of this two-act musical ecologue complete on two 12-inch records. This is one of the most popular of Vives' many works and was first produced in the Teatro de la Zarzuela, Madrid in 1914. London.

Sunday Post
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 230,930

APR 8 - 1956

Francescatti and Mayes Soloist at Symphony

Brahms' Double Concerto in A minor for violin, cello, and orchestra unperformed at the concerts of the Boston Symphony since the Brahms Festival in 1953, will be revived at the orchestra's next pair of concerts this week end. The soloists will be Zino Francescatti and Samuel Mayes. Also included will be Tchaikovsky's "Francesca da Rimini" and Prokofieff's Second Violin concerto.

Gluck's "Alcestis" Tomorrow Night in Symphony Hall

A concert version of Gluck's "Alcestis" will be presented tomorrow night in Symphony Hall by the Cecilia Society, Hugh Ross conducting. Three Metropolitan Opera singers, Margaret Harshaw, James McCracken, and Arthur Budney, will sing the major roles, and members of the Boston Symphony will provide the orchestral accompaniment.

VARIETY
NEW YORK, N. Y.

APR 11 1956

Mass. Solons Mark 75th Anni of Boston Symph; RCA to Make 50G Film

Boston, April 10.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra was honored on its 75th anniversary by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts at the state house last week when resolutions, adopted by the State Senate and House of Representatives were presented to conductors Charles Munch and Arthur Fiedler. The citations were read by Richard I. Furbush, president of the Senate, and Michael J. Skerry, Speaker of the House. During the ceremony, Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony, and Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops, sat upon the rostrum.

It was the first time that any formal legislative tribute had been paid to a musical organization.

Lawrence (Larry) Kanaga, vice president of RCA Victor Records, presented Munch and Fiedler a $2,000 diamond-studded baton designed by French jeweler Van Cleef & Arpels. Kanaga said that Victor is making a $50,000 film in color featuring the Boston Symphony and showing how records are made. The film is intended for school students and other groups. Gift of the baton and making of the film commemorated the 40-year association between the Boston Symphony and Victor.

The Senate resolution said: "Both the Boston Symphony and the Boston Pops Orchestra have been the outstanding representatives of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. Their musical achievements have enriched the lives of the people throughout the world and have brought greater respect and appreciation for the cultural reputation of the people of Massachusetts."

Emmy Loose

Mstislav Rostropovich

THIS WEEK'S ARTISTS. Emmy Loose, soprano, will appear in Music Hall, Friday night. Mstislav Rostropovich, Russian cellist, will speak on "The Symphony," "A Masked Ball," and "Fiedler's Four Operas." Tuesday afternoon the Metropolitan will discuss "La Traviata," "Der Rosenkavalier," "Aida." As usual illustrate his talk at the piano. There is no charge. The Institute of Contemporary Art and Institute of Contemporary Art evening, Wil-marches at the Metropolitan. The NBC Opera Co., under the direction of Peter Herman Adler with special mountings by Samuel Chotzinoff, will give two full scale productions of opera in English. "The Marriage of Figaro" and "Madame Butterfly," in Public Music Hall Nov. 23 and 24.

The appearance of one of the modern world's great sopranos, Elizabeth Schwarzkopf, will be a highlight for Dec. 1, and Ruth Page's Chicago Opera Ballet with Marjorie Tallchief and George Skibine as stars in two ballets, "The Merry Widow" and "Revenge," will follow on Dec. 2. "The Little Gaelic Singers" will conclude the week with their first concert here on Dec. 7.

French Group to Sing

The original Don Cossack Chorus and Dancers, directed by Serge Jaroff, well-known here, have a date for Feb. 24. Ballet Theater, known abroad as America's National Ballet Co., will give several performances here March 8 and 9.

"The Little Singers of Paris," a choral group of 32 French boys, will give a varied concert March 10. The De Paur Opera Gala, augmented with women's voices and an orchestra, will present highlights from "Four Saints in Three Acts," "Carmen Jones" and "Porgy and Bess" March 23. One of the last scheduled events of the season is the Ballet Basque de Biarritz on March 30.

The Cleveland Opera Association will continue its Popular Price Concert Series, which will group together six events at a special price.

These selected events include the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra, NBC Opera's first performance, Elizabeth Scharzkopf and Ballets Basque de Biarritz.

Sunday Advertiser
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 547,691

APR 8 - 1956

Hub Symphony Honored

OCCASION OF THE 75TH ANNIVERSARY of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was marked at a unique ceremony in the State House by citations from the State Senate and House of Representatives hailing the orchestra as "ambassadors of goodwill to all peoples of the world." Left to right, Speaker Michael Skerry, Arthur Fiedler, Senate President Richard Furbush, L. W. Kanaga of RCA Victor and Charles Munch.

Sat. Review of Literature
NEW YORK, N. Y.

APR 7 1956

—Culver.

"Music in My Time: The Memoirs of Alfredo Casella." Translated and edited by Spencer Norton, University of Oklahoma Press, $4.

ALFREDO CASELLA, an Italian composer, conductor, concert pianist, lecturer, and piano teacher (1883-1947), was fifty-five when he wrote his memoirs, which he said did not offer anything extraordinary—"a life of a man who has given all of himself to art and to his country." This, no doubt, is true of Casella the musician. Casella the author of "Music in My Time" had the rich material that came within the scope of his own experience and observation. Born in Italy, at the age of thirteen Casella came to Paris where first as a student and later as an artist he joined one of the most interesting phases in the development of modern music. He knew Ravel, Mahler, Ysaye, Stravinsky, Cortot, Enesco, Casals, Diaghilev and the members of his ballet, D'Annunzio, Cocteau, Picasso, and . . . practically everybody who called himself a musician or had something to do with the arts. He traveled to Russia, the United States, and South America. For three seasons (1926-1929) Casella conducted the Boston Pops orchestra, he was Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge's protegé with his trio, shared with Bela Bartok a prize of ten thousand dollars for a composition at the Musical Fund Society of Philadelphia contest, played for President Franklin D. Roosevelt at the White House, visited Russia before the revolution, was taken by Koussevitzky to play for Tolstoy at Yasnaya Polyana, twice returned to the USSR after the revolution, besides all his activities in Europe and in his native Italy—and yet with all this wealth of experience from which to draw Casella's reminiscences are too sketchy to have any value as additional records for the well-informed on the subject and too nebulous or insufficient for those who seek information for the first time. It is a pity, for if Casella had concentrated more on the development of modern music in his own country he perhaps would have filled the gap in the history. He complains too often about his enemies, particularly in Italy, but fails to make clear the cause of their animosity—whether personal or because of general prejudice against the new trends he brought with him and tried to introduce—and who should have known this better than Casella.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 122,000

APR 6 1956

Society: Friends of Boston Symphony to Hear Special Program

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

Particular interest centers around this season's annual meeting of the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its 75th year. Charles Munch is planning to conduct a special half-hour program after Henry B. Cabot, president of the Friends, and Dr. Palfrey Perkins, chairman of the meeting, speak at 4 on Wednesday, April 18, summarizing the history of the orchestra founded in 1881 by Henry L. Higginson.

Trustees' wives serving tea in the foyer upstairs will include Mrs. Phillip R. Allen, Mrs. Michael T. Kelleher, Mrs. Lewis Perry and Mrs. Cabot.

Among the Boston Symphony trustees planning to receive friends of the orchestra arriving for the 22d annual meeting at the Massachusetts av. entrance are Francis W. Hatch, Charles H. Stockton, C. D. Jackson, N. Penrose Hallowell, Jacob Kaplan, Talcott M. Banks Jr., John N. Brown, Rev. Theodore P. Ferris, Dr. Perry, Mr. Allen, and Mark A. DeWolfe Howe.

Others making plans for the orchestra's future, as well as paying tribute to its significant history, will include Richard C. Paine, treasurer of the Friends; Alvan T. Fuller, Harold D. Hodgkinson, Mr. Kelleher, Oliver Wolcott, Raymond S. Wilkins and Edward A. Taft.

A WEDDING IN GERMANY in May is being planned by Miss Marie E. Gerrion, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph B. Gerrion of Somerville, who are announcing her engagement to Lt Peter J. Foss of Litchfield, Minn. He graduated from West Point and is now stationed at Augsburg.

A GOOD CHANCE to hear and meet Canada's famous singer Lois Marshall, who has been hailed by critics in the United States and in Europe as a great musical find, will also bring the opportunity to help one of Boston's most appealing causes—the South End Music Centre. Miss Marshall is coming to Boston April 12 and the Thursday evening concert will be in the handsome new Morse Auditorium of the Museum of Science, where the accoustics are superlative. All those who buy tickets for the concert, which may be ordered at the Centre, 32 Rutland st., CO 6-1542, are invited to the party for Miss Marshall following the program. Mrs. Albert C. Titcomb is chairman of the reception committee, and Mrs. John E. Boit, president of the Centre, Mrs. Byam Whitney, and Mrs. Earnest B. Dunstan are among the committee members who will welcome the evening's guest at the candle-lighted, flower-decked reception table. The many subscribers include Mrs. Leslie MacDill, Mrs. George B. Cutts, Mr. and Mrs. Carl Weyerhauser, Mr. and Mrs. Nicholas Van Slyck, Mrs. George Putnam, Mr. and Mrs. George McCandlish, Mrs. Alexander Steinert, Mrs. L. C. Pray and others.

BACKSTAGE and front-of-the house credits for the annual Vincent Club show, which continues through Saturday at New England Mutual Hall, are as big as those for the excellent cast itself. The cochairmen of props, Mrs. Vincent Bailey and Mrs. William C. Haskins, for example, have dyed over 80 yards of material and paint-spattered them to give background textures for the sets, and in addition have managed to produce medieval instruments such as a lute made from a canned-ham tin, beaverboard and plastic string. Store fixtures and clothes racks had to be tracked down and borrowed from Hurwitch's and from Estabrook and Newell, and a hard-come-by suit of armor from Louis Joseph.

The costume committee, for which Mrs. Robert Jenney is chairman, assisted by Mabel Diggs—whose 30th Vincent show this is—have even turned up a Ferris waist made in 1900 and still bearing R. H. Stearns' original price tag for $12.50. A yellow velvet page's suit made for the late Mrs. S. J. Mixter to be used at one of her "musical evenings" on Marlboro st. in 1900, is also in this year's show, as is her granddaughter, Mrs. H. Thomas Ballantine.

A great-granddaughter of one of the original Vincent members is Lucy Lowell Grimm (Mrs. Roland Grimm), whose great-grandmother, Mrs. Lindsley Loring (Charlotte Cochrane), wore daring tights in the first Vincent show given in April, 1892, in her mother's lovely Commonwealth av. drawing room.

Mrs. E. Francis Bowditch (who plays Mr. Hogg) is wearing the cutaway worn by Frank's father, John Bowditch, and made for his grandfather, the first E. Francis Bowditch, for his wedding. With it she wears the old Bowditch watch chain which belonged to the famous navigator, Nathaniel Bowditch. Mrs. Forrest Cranmer is chairman of the front-of-the-house, Mrs. Richard Wakeman of Vincent uniforms, and Mrs. Louis Harding and Mrs. John Worrall cochairmen of waitresses, pretty Diana Osgood chairman of programs—and many more.

THE INTERNATIONAL POST OFFICE, only one of its kind, is franking scores of invitations with United Nations stamps this week as announcements go out for the Greater Boston World Federalists' dinner on Tuesday, April 24. Norman Cousins, Saturday Review editor, will speak at the 6 o'clock reception and dinner at the Somerset Hotel.

Sponsors include Mr. and Mrs. Conrad Hobbs, Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Kaplan, Mr. and Mrs. Henry B. Cabot, Mr. and Mrs. Edgar J. Driscoll, Mr. and Mrs. Frederic Winthrop Jr., Mr. and Mrs. William Van N. Washburn, Mr. and Mrs. R. Minturn Sedgwick, Mr. and Mrs. John L. Saltonstall Jr., Mr. and Mrs. William A. Reilly and Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Parker Jr.

Invitations are also going out in the name of Mr. and Mrs. Harold D. Hodgkinson, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas H. Mahoy, Rev. Francis J. Lally, Mr. and Mrs. John L. Saltonstall Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Thomas A. Pappas, Bishop and Mrs. Norman B. Nash, Walter J. Levison, Mrs. James M. Faulkner, Rabbi Roland B. Gittelsohn, Mrs. Vincent L. Greene, Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Haussermann, Dr. and Mrs. Arthur N. Holcombe and Rt. Rev. Edward G. Murray.

(Globe Photo by Charles Dixon)

INTERESTED in the concert which noted singer Lois Marshall will give April 12 for the benefit of the South End Music Centre, are Mrs. A. O. Willauer and Miss Mary Otis of the committee, and Vitale Beskrovny, pupil at the Centre.

(Porter)

A FALL WEDDING is planned by Miss Judith A. Holmes, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Everett B. Holmes of Ludlow, Vt., who are announcing her engagement to Robert J. H. Cowan, son of Mr. and Mrs. James T. Cowan of Saxtons River, Vt. She is at Middlebury College and her fiance is completing his studies at B. U.

A SECOND SON, Jonathan, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Louis S. Epstein (Sally Dogem) of West Roxbury on April 3 at Beth Israel Hospital. He is a grandson of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Dogem and of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Epstein of Dorchester.

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 185,401

APR 10 1956

Russian Culture Snubs Hub Famed Orchestra

The entire 104-man Boston Symphony orchestra may end up playing second fiddle.

The Muscovites have by-passed an offer by Boston's world renowned symphony to perform in Russia. Worse yet, the Soviet minister of culture has extended a concert invitation to a symphonic competitor—the Philadelphia Symphony orchestra.

Moreover, the Philadelphians have accepted and have applied to the U. S. State Department for $110,000 "to balance expenses" under President Eisenhower's emergency fund to support the international cultural exchange program.

One country behind the Iron Curtain did pick up the Boston offer, but it's a mere satellite.

Czechoslovakia's music festival director has asked the Boston orchestra to include performances there while on tour in Western Europe this summer.

Thomas D. Perry, business manager for the Hub symphony, said the Czech invitation was still under consideration. The orchestra will begin a 10-country, $300,000 tour in August.

They were hopeful that Russia would pick up their offer to play in Moscow, which was announced last summer.

For undisclosed reasons, the Russians evidently prefer the music of Quakers rather than of Pilgrims.

Perhaps, it's just that the Boston Symphony has too much class for the classless society of the Soviet.

Variety
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Weekly Amusements

APR 11 1956

Boston Orch Needs 25G For 300G O'Seas Trek

Boston, April 10.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra plans extra concerts to help finance its five-week tour of Europe at the end of the Tanglewood season in August. First concert is slated for April 29. Although the cost of the tour will be about $300,000, only $25,000 is still needed. Over $275,000 is in sight. RCA Victor and Baldwin Piano and large contributors, as is the International Exchange Program.

The Boston Symphony is skedded for five programs at the Edinburgh Festival. Tour is planned to include about 25 cities and to cover more than 4,000 miles. The orch will appear in Cork and Dublin on the way to Edinburgh and after the Festival will visit Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Germany, Austria, Switzerland, France, England and possibly Italy.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
Post & Times Herald
D. & S.

APR 11 1956

Mrs. Snow's Retirement

Constance Snow, an excellent business woman and indefatigable worker, has been a major contributor to the musical life of this community. Now she is retiring after 17 years of bringing concerts to the city and promoting support for them. She took over the sponsorship of the Philadelphia and Boston symphonies and not only built the attendance at their concerts but also increased the number of concerts they gave each season. She was one of the enthusiastic backers of the Washington Choral Society, now the Washington and Cathedral Choral Society. Her many friends will join in wishing her much happiness in the future, and they will be comforted to know that she will be retained as a consultant to the National Symphony Orchestra.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 122,000

APR 11 1956

Symphony Still Ready to Visit Russia, If Asked

Unperturbed by a Soviet invitation to the Philadelphia Orchestra, a spokesman for the famed Boston Symphony Orchestra said last night the group still stands ready to visit Russia if invited.

Business Manager Thomas D. Perry said "There have been no developments" on the Boston orchestra's offer to play in Russia during its European tour this Summer.

"We'll be as close to Russia as Helsinki," he said, "and if our government wishes us to go to Russia, we'd be pleased to do so. We'd welcome any way of using our art to improve international feelings."

A substantial share of the $300,000 cost of the tour—to include 10 and possibly 12 countries—will be met by funds from President Eisenhower's $5,000,000 fund for support of trade fairs and cultural exchange.

One Iron Curtain nation, Czecho-Slovakia, has invited Conductor Charles Munch and the 104-man Boston orchestra to appear, but the offer has not yet been accepted. Perry said a trip to Prague and Italy is entirely a matter of finances.

The Boston Symphony's tour opens in Ireland, Aug. 24, then moves to Scotland, Norway, Sweden, Finland, Germany, Austria, Switzerland—maybe Czecho-Slovakia and Italy—and France, and winds up in London, Sept. 26.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
Circ. D. 336,443 - S. 528,253

APR 8 1956

Biographer's Lot Not Easy

Victor Seroff Tells of the Search For Elusive Debussy Photograph

By JAY S. HARRISON

It becomes increasingly obvious that most people who read biographies have little realization of the work that goes into them. The common view is that the biographer assembles facts and figures—usually from a public library—then adds to them, and finally puts in a likely verbal picture of the historical figure he is studying. It happens, however, that this is not at all true. Most biographers are detectives at heart who, when on the scent of new or hitherto unknown bits of information, are overcome with an almost missionary zeal to track it down. They are literary private-eyes with a mystery to solve. Usually, they solve it.

Prober Without Peer

Victor Seroff is just such a demon researcher. He already has to his credit books on Shostakovitch, Ravel, Rachmaninoff and Russia's "Mighty Five," and on May 7 Putnam & Sons will publish his latest effort—a long awaited and much needed biography of Claude Debussy. Last week, in discussing the new volume, Mr. Seroff turned to some of the problems facing writers who deal in historical fact rather than poetic fancy. Specifically, he was concerned with the bloodhound instincts it is necessary for all good biographers to possess.

"To prove my point," said Mr. Seroff, "let me give you two examples—one from my Rachmaninoff book and one from the Debussy. In 1948 I was living in a little village in Alsace doing research on Rachmaninoff and writing reviews of music festivals. One day, out of the blue, I received a letter from a Russian musician by the name of Bukinik. He was eighty, and had heard, to his interest, that I was preparing a book on Rachmaninoff. The reason he wrote was to tell me that there was a man living in Switzerland who owned 188 typewritten pages of valuable information on Rachmaninoff. The letter suggested that I find the man. That was all. No name, no address, nothing! Bukinik—typical Russian that he is—didn't even offer a clew to the man's identity.

Questions, Questions, Questions

"Directly after that I began a round of European festivals, and everywhere I went I asked musicians if they knew of a musicologist — any musicologist — who was living in Switzerland. But I got nowhere. Then, when my critical chores were over, I returned to Alsace and quite by accident ran into Charles Munch, who is a close friend of mine. Munch was about to go off to Switzerland on a conducting tour and he suggested that I come along. I did."

Mr. Seroff continued by explaining that at Mr. Munch's second concert in Lucerne he happened to flip over the program and discovered an announcement of a lecture to be given, as he put it, "by a man whose name was too long even for a Russian like myself to pronounce." The talk was to be followed by a performance of Rachmaninoff's cello sonata. "When I saw Munch later," Mr. Seroff remarked, "I told him that by instinct I thought I had found my man. To this Munch had only one reply. 'Seroff,' he said, 'you are just as mad as I am. Now who wrote you the letter in the first place.'

"Still, somehow I was sure. The next day I dragged Munch along to see the manager who had placed the ad in the program and he gave me the lecturer's address. He lived in Zurich, but he had no phone. 'No phone!' I shouted. 'A good sign. Russian musicologists never have phones.' I knew I had found the right person. But Munch was unconvinced. He just looked at me and muttered, 'Now I know it for a fact: you Russians, you're all crazy.'

Mr. Seroff then went on to explain how he continued the search in Zurich. "I knocked on the door," he observed, "and after an interminable time it opened. The man on the other side of the threshhold peered at me intently and said, 'Ah, I imagine you are Seroff. I have been waiting for you. I understand that you are writing about Rachmaninoff. I have some material you might want to see.'

All for Naught

"So I had finally reached my goal. But wait—the worst is still to come. After a year's struggle to find the Rachmaninoff notes I finally read them and —" Mr. Seroff shuddered perceptibly, "—there was not a single detail in them I had not gotten from other sources."

As if to brush from his memory the whole abysmal episode, he then plunged into his tale concerning the soon-to-be-published Debussy book.

"You know," he began, "as a student, Debussy was hired as a kind of official house-pianist for Nadejda Von Meck, the famous patroness of Tchaikovsky. He played privately for her, played in her trio, taught her children—that sort of thing. He traveled with her for three consecutive summers and during the third he asked Madame Von Meck's permission to marry her daughter, Sonia. The Madame was appalled at the impertinance of the young unknown student and fired him on the spot. Actually, no one really knows whether Debussy was in love with Sonia or her handsome dowry—but that's not important.

Hunt for Photographs

"What is important is that I realized somewhere in Russia there must be photographs of Debussy taken at the time of his stay with Von Meck. No one had ever been able to find them—perhaps they didn't exist. I got in touch with Barbara Von Meck, the wife of Nadejda's nephew, who was living in New York. Though she was frightfully old, she told me that she did recall seeing some pictures of Debussy as a member of the Von Meck entourage, but she couldn't remember where. Five days later Barbara Von Meck died, and my last lead died with her."

But here, as Mr. Seroff commented, fate stepped in. While rummaging through a library on 146th St., he chanced on a dusty, concealed volume that itemized all of the memorabilia contained in the Tchaikovsky Museum at Klin. Part of the list described a collection of 780 photos, but not one of them was of Debussy. He did, however, find the names of two of the musicians who formed the trio in which Debussy played while in Madame Von Meck's employ.

"And so on a guess," he said, "I sent to Russia for a photostat of the two men. When it arrived, several months later it turned out that there were not two men in the picture but three. The third was Debussy—though no one had realized it before. As a result, in my new book there is picture of Debussy that has not been published till now. You see," Mr. Seroff concluded, "maybe Munch was right. Maybe all Russians are crazy. But for a biographer a little craziness doesn't hurt."

ATLANTA, GA.
WORLD
Circ. D. 28,600

APR 8 1956

Betty Allen In Recital Tonight At Clark College

The most praiseworthy number on Betty Allen's recital tonight at Clark College may be the aria 'L'Amour Est Un Oiseau" which won for her distinction as a mezzo-soprano several years ago. A feature of Clark's All Star Concert Series, Miss Allen's recital will begin at 7:45 p. m., in Davage Auditorium.

Betty Allen was born in Ohio and graduated from Wilberforce University there. Heading east to continue her music studies, she attended the Hartford School of Music in Connecticut, and coaches with Sara Peck More in New York City.

Her career was launched when Charles Munch selected her soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall for performances of Honegger's "La Danse des Morts." She was also chosen by Virgil Thomson for the leading role of St. Teresa in the Gertrude Stein —Thomson opera: "Four Saints in Three Acts" performed on Broadway, at the Lewisohn and at the Theatres des Champs Elysees in Paris, France.

As an American artist in the fourth annual interchange-of-artists program with the Jeunesses Musicales abroad, Miss Allen performed throughout North Africa and subsequently went to Italy to inaugurate an artist exchange program with the Gioventu Musicale.

She was presented in many North Italian cities including Livorno, Lucca, Bologna, Brescia, Florence with her culminating performance at the Teatro Lirico in Milan. The immediate results of the foreign ovations she received brought re-engagements from both France and Italy.

Miss Allen returned to the United States from France just last month for an appearance on the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 75th Anniversary program and for an engagement with the Hartford Symphony under Fritz Mahler.

The artist's Clark program will include 'Evivva Rosa Bella Bella' by Galuppi; 'Con Tranquillo Riposo' by Pasquini; and Vivaldi's 'O Servi Volati,' 'Vieni, Vieni, O Mio Diletto' and 'Aria Di Abra' in the first group —The second group will feature Schubert's 'Liebesbotschaft,' 'Die Liebe Hat Gelogen,' 'Lachen Und Weinen,' 'Du Bist Wie Eine Blume' and 'Fruhlingsnacht.'

Following, the audience will hear 'Vieille Chanson de Chasse' arranged by Manning; Bizet's 'Ouvre Ton Coeur;' 'Psyche' by Paladilhe; and Debussy's 'Mandoline.'

After a brief intermission, Miss Allen will offer Roland Hayes' arrangement of 'The Life of Christ' (First Part.)

'The Water Mill' and 'Silent Moon' by R. Vaughan-Williams; Horsman's 'The Bird of the Wilderness;' 'The Cloths of Heaven' by Dunhill; and Quilter's 'Love's Philosophy' will conclude the program.

Miss Allen will be accompanied by Moke Owens of New York City.

BETTY ALLEN

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 248,071

APR 8 - 1956

Symphony in Special Concert for Tour Funds

By RUDOLPH ELIE

Little by little, as the plans for the forthcoming second European tour of the Boston Symphony develop, it becomes increasingly evident that the event will not only be of far greater scope than that of the 1952 tour but of far greater significance as well. For the itinerary, still tentative in many cases, takes the orchestra behind the Iron Curtain to Prague, Czechoslovakia, and while there is no word official or unofficial one way or another, there still seems to be a possibility that the orchestra may be the first American symphony orchestra to perform in Moscow.

The tour begins on the 24th of August in Cork, Ireland and, following a concert in Dublin the next night, the orchestra goes on to Edinburgh where it will remain for a week as the featured orchestra of the Edinburgh Festival. As the itinerary stands now, and changes are undoubtedly to be expected, the orchestra then goes on to Oslo, Goteburg, Stockholm, Helsinki, Copenhagen, Hamburg, Frankfurt, Stuttgart, Prague, Vienna, Munich, Basle, Bern, Zurich, Paris, Chartres (where it will play in the cathedral), Leeds, and London. The management is hoping to give the city of Boston, England a special concert as a present of the City of Boston, Massachusetts since the city is too small to be able to afford a Boston Symphony concert itself.

The question of how all this is to be financed is still some way from solution but one thing the management makes very clear: No regular subscriber or Friend of the orchestra will be approached in any way. According to figures released this week by Thomas Perry, the orchestra's manager, the total cost of the tour will be $300,000. Receipts for the concerts themselves will provide about $105,000, and a total of $175,000 has already been raised from commercial and private sources, the government having partly subsidized the tour for its enormous cultural public relations value.

So only $25,000 needs to be raised to complete the budget, and the orchestra will give a special concert on Sunday night, April 28, the night after the regular season closes, to raise at least $5,000 of it. The concert, offering Beethoven's Seventh Symphony and Tchaikovsky's Sixth, will be offered first to the regular subscribers with public sale following on April 16. There is a good deal of confidence that the additional $20,000 will be attained, but not at the expense of the supporters of the orchestra itself. If local business could only realize the incalculable advertisement this orchestra is to Boston, not only on such a tour as this, but in its nationwide travels, it seems that this piddling little sum could be reached in a day or two!

BERKSHIRE PROGRAM

There is very little for the regular Symphony goer to get excited about in the recent announcement of the programs for Tanglewood this summer. To be sure the programs for this festival have long been aimed more at the out-of-state music lover than to the subscriber, which is of course as it should be. The bulk of the audiences attracted to this affair, which again consists of a pre-festival Bach-Mozart series beginning July 6 and the regular series in the Music Shed beginning July 20, are from New York, Connecticut and western Massachusetts, along with many transient tourists from all over the country. The programs offered are consequently new and novel to them.

But the Boston audience is hardly too eager to travel 138 miles to hear works that have been programmed throughout the season. For on the 12 programs of the big series there appear fewer than a half dozen works that have not been given this season in Symphony Hall, things like Schubert's C major Symphony, Honeggers Fifth Symphony, the Suite from "Der Rosenkavalier" and so on. Other familiar works of recent local hearing are Brahms' Second and Third, Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra, Piston's Symphony No. 2, Ravel's "Rhapsodie Espagnol," Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun" and so on . . . all good works and true, but hardly exciting to the regular audiences.

However, the picture is much enlivened by the programming of two full Wagnerian programs. The first, on Saturday evening July 21, offers the "Faust" Overture, "Waldweben" from "Siegfried," the Prelude and Love-Death from "Tristan" and act I of "Die Walkuere." The soloists on this occasion are Margaret Harshaw, soprano, Albert Da Costa, tenor and James Pease, bass.

The second program closes the festival on August 12 when Mr. Munch does the Overture and Bacchanale from "Tannhauesar," "A Sigfried Idyll" and the opening and final scene of Act III of "Die Meistersinger" with Margaret Willauer, soprano, Albert Da Costa and James Pease. These two programs, in the light of Mr. Munch's extraordinary way with Wagner should be the highlights of the festival this season so far as the Bostonian is concerned. So far as others are concerned, the programs seem to be well made varied and interesting. It is pleasant to note in them, too, the return of Eleazar de Carvalho, who has not appeared with this orchestra since Koussevitzky's day. Otherwise, save for the appearance of Benny Goodman in Mozart's Clarinet Concerto, the personalities remain largely familiar ones: Rudolf Serkin, Ruth Posselt, Leonard Bernstein, Pierre Monteux Zino Francescatti, Lukas Foss, Boris Goldovsky and so on.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
NEWS
Circ. D. 138,778

APR 9 1956

MRS. SNOW DEPARTS

WASHINGTON concert-goers in particular and the community in general owe a not inconsiderable debt of gratitude to Mrs. Constance A. Snow. Mrs. Snow is retiring from active participation in the city's musical life tomorrow night with the Philadelphia Orchestra's final appearance of the season.

Mrs. Snow has not only brought to Washington each season the great Philadelphia and Boston Symphony orchestras, but also, in its early days of struggle, helped the city's own National Symphony get on its financial feet.

Her 17 years in the music field encompasses too many endeavors to list—opera, choral work, benefits for the Boys Clubs, Scouts, fire-fighters, etc. It has been an outstanding contribution.

We extend to Mrs. Snow our sincere wishes for many more years of concert-going in the happiest role of all—as a listener.

VARIETY
NEW YORK, N. Y.

APR 11 1956

Boston Orch Needs 25G For 300G O'Seas Trek

Boston, April 10.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra plans extra concerts to help finance its five-week tour of Europe at the end of the Tanglewood season in August. First concert is slated for April 29. Although the cost of the tour will be about $300,000, only $25,000 is still needed. Over $275,000 is in sight. RCA Victor and Baldwin Piano and large contributors, as is the International Exchange Program.

The Boston Symphony is skedded for five programs at the Edinburgh Festival. Tour is planned to include about 25 cities and to cover more than 4,000 miles. The orch will appear in Cork and Dublin on the way to Edinburgh and after the Festival will visit Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Germany, Austria, Switzerland, France, England and possibly Italy.

EL PASO, TEX.
TIMES
Circ. D. 48,374 - S. 65,539

APR 8 1956

The Turntable

Boston Quartet Waxes Haydn's 'Last Words'

HAYDN: The Seven Last Words of Christ. The Boston Symphony Orchestra String Quartet. RCA Victor LP Record.

The history of music designed to glorify Christ's Passion is, at various stages in its long history, both an awesome and distressing thing.

For the most part composers after the dawn of the 1700s junked Biblical texts and substituted murky and sometimes tasteless paraphrases of passages from Holy Writ. With this withering of literary fervor came a corresponding decay in musical taste which eventuated in some of the bombast of the oratorio form which transformed the style into something resembling opera.

In the latter days of Passion Music, Haydn's "Seven Last Words of Christ" stands far above the now obscure works of Telemann and Johann Ernst Bach, for example. Haydn's version is interesting also because it is performed in three versions: For orchestra, string quartet and for piano. There is a fourth version, a chorus affair in cantata form, which experts assure us probably was arranged by Haydn's brother, Michael.

It is, obviously, in the second of these arrangements that the work is performed here. The Boston Symphony Orchestra Quartet, composed of four first desk men in that splendid aggregation, plays with virginal cleanliness and infinite gentleness music which demands just these refinements. Like wine, a string quartet improves with age and future recordings by this group should reveal the mellowness and elegance the Budapest Quartet has boasted for so long.

This music, however, is suited ideally to the group5s from at present. Its inexjressibly beautiful delicacy sings a soft yet exalted lament for a departed God.

BARTOK: Concerto for Orchestra. Fritz Reiner conducting the Chicago Symphony Orchestra. RCA Victor LP record.

Unless the memory department has decayed even more than is customarily apparent, this is Reiner's second recording of this Bartok score, the first being etched back in the dark pre-high fidelity days with the Pittsburgh Orchestra. At any rate, Reiner's identification with this music is indisputable. He was not only a close friend of the late composer but also helped coax this work from his inspired pen. Enough slop has been written about Bartok's sufferings and his astral attainments in composition. The Concerto for Orchestra is not only a tuneful, appealing work but a devastating slap in the face to those thoughtless and hastily-written works which often pass as serious music in our time. The performance is peerless in every way and the recording a model of clarity.

'SONG FROM SERENADE.' Mario Lanza, tenor, with orchestra and piano accompaniments. RCA Victor LP record.

These records are taken from the motion picture version of James M. Cain's "Serenade," a picture which finds the chunky tenor cavorting in Mexico with Joan Fontaine. There is a lot of interesting music here, including an aria from "Turandot" and a long episode from "Otello" in which Lanza is joined by Metropolitan Opera Soprano Licia Albanese. Some of Lanza's yelling tendencies have been restrained by some voice coach because Lanza unquestionably is incapable of doing it himself. Once or twice he even passes up chances for his specialty: A high note sung at top voice and off pitch. The "Otello" work, though by no means artistically up to the standard of the Metropolitan's poorest tenor, is surprisingly good—for Lanza. Albanese doesn't have her heart in it.—L.A.

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 397,884

APR 11 1956

WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR
Circ. D. 245,642 - S. 273,244

APR 9 1956

Mrs. Snow Bowing Out As Concert Manager

A 17-year chapter in Washington's musical history will close tomorrow with the retirement of Constance Snow from the concert management field.

Mrs. Snow will bow out of the business she started on a $1,500 shoestring in 1938 when she presents her final attraction, the Philadelphia Orchestra's last concert of the season, in Constitution Hall. Earlier in the day, a host of friends will assemble at the Occidental Hotel to pay tribute to the woman whose labors on the cultural scene have made her name known to thousands.

At the 12:30 p.m. testimonial luncheon messages from the White House, city leaders and others will be read. Conductors Eugene Ormandy of the Philadelphia Orchestra, Charles Munch of the Boston Symphony and Howard Mitchell of the National Symphony are expected to attend.

Borrowed Capital from Husband

Mrs. Snow borrowed the $1,500 from her husband, the late Andrew Snow, a United States Steel executive, to start the Snow Concert Bureau. Her first contract was with the Philadelphia Orchestra which at that time was playing to half-filled halls here.

In six months, she had paid back the loan and was embarked on a career. She kept the Boston and Philadelphia Orchestras coming and attracting full houses at times when the city's own symphony was wondering if it would continue in business.

She booked the Library of Congress concerts, brought the Metropolitan Opera here—on a personal guarantee of staggering proportions—after an absence of 22 years, introduced such Washington "firsts" as the Sadlers Wells Ballet, Jeanette MacDonald, Alec Templeton and Victor Borge, and lent her name and efforts to a series of charity benefits.

MRS. CONSTANCE SNOW
Leaving Musical Scene

First Business Venture

It was Constance Snow's first venture into any kind of business. Until then, she confessed, she couldn't even balanced her personal checkbook.

But while her business grew, so did her family. Three children grew up and married and soon were producing grandchildren. Now there are six grandchildren and Mrs. Snow says it is time she gives more attention to them.

When it was learned Mrs. Snow planned to retire this year, the National Symphony Orchestra was first in line to snap up the concert bureau. The National Symphony for the first time next season will act as booking agent for the Philadelphia and Boston orchestras.

Telegram-News (e)
LYNN, Mass.
Democrat
Circ. 21,071

APR 12 1956

LEAVES $60,000 IN PUBLIC GIFTS

Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 26,246

Independent
Circ. 27,538

APR 12 1956

BSO Shares Bequests In Proctor Will

SALEM, Mass. (AP)—The will of Mrs. Grace Hopkins Proctor of Swampscott, disposing of more than $250,000 in specific bequests, was filed today in Essex County Probate Court.

Mrs. Proctor was the widow of Charles H. Proctor, leather manufacturer.

She left $100,000 each to two granchildren, Eileen Burke Wilkinson and Charles Proctor Wilkinson, both of Washington, D.C.

Other bequests included: Smith College, $5,000; Northfield Schools, East Northfield, Mass., $5,000; Boston Symphony Orchestra, $10,000; Boston YWCA, $15,000; Old South Church, Boston, $10,000; Walker Missionary Homes, Newton, $10,000; Children's Hospital, Boston, $5,000.

Advocate
ARLINGTON, Mass
Weekly Independent
Circ. 4,987

APR 12 1956

Enterprise
ACTON, Mass.
Weekly Ind. Rep.
Comb. Circ. 4,728

APR 12 1956

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Enterprise
CONCORD, Mass.
Weekly Ind. Rep.
Comb. Circ. 4728

APR 12 1956

Enterprise
BEDFORD, Mass.
Weekly Ind. Rep.
Comb. Circ. 4,728

APR 12 1956

Enterprise
MAYNARD, Mass.
Weekly Ind. Rep.
Comb. Circ. 4,728

APR 12 1956

THREE RECORDINGS OVER 50 YEARS BECOME UNIT

Boston—(UP) — A recording commemorating the 75th anniversary season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra features the group playing the same piece under the batons of three conductors.

Three recordings of Berlioz' "Hungarian March" made over a period of nearly half a century were dubbed together electronically to sound as one continuous performance.

Karl Muck, who became conductor in 1906, starts the march. The late Serge Koussevitzky "takes over" in the middle section and Charles Munch, the present director, concludes the piece.

Variety
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Weekly Amusements

APR 11 1956

Mass. Solons Mark 75th Anni of Boston Symph; RCA to Make 50G Film

Boston, April 10.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra was honored on its 75th anniversary by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts at the state house last week when resolutions, adopted by the State Senate and House of Representatives were presented to conductors Charles Munch and Arthur Fiedler. The citations were read by Richard I. Furbush, president of the Senate, and Michael J. Skerry, Speaker of the House. During the ceremony, Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony, and Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops, sat upon the rostrum.

It was the first time that any formal legislative tribute had been paid to a musical organization.

Lawrence (Larry) Kanaga, vice president of RCA Victor Records, presented Munch and Fiedler a $2,000 diamond-studded baton designed by French jeweler Van Cleef & Arpels. Kanaga said that Victor is making a $50,000 film in color featuring the Boston Symphony and showing how records are made. The film is intended for school students and other groups. Gift of the baton and making of the film commemorated the 40-year association between the Boston Symphony and Victor.

The Senate resolution said: "Both the Boston Symphony and the Boston Pops Orchestra have been the outstanding representatives of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. Their musical achievements have enriched the lives of the people throughout the world and have brought greater respect and appreciation for the cultural reputation of the people of Massachusetts."

Townsman
WELLESLEY, Mass.
Weekly Republican
Circ. 5614

APR 12 1956

Wellesley Night At Pops May 12

Minute Man
LEXINGTON, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 4669

APR 12 1956

Lexington Women To Be 'Pops' Patronesses

A distinguished group of prominent women of Lexington will be patronesses of "Wellesley Night at Pops" on May 12. This benefit featuring Arthur Fiedler's Boston Pops Orchestra, is a colorful annual event—held to raise funds for providing financial aid to students. This year Wellesley College is lending its own "Tupelos"—18 talented young students with fresh vibrant voices—to the outstanding occasion.

Patronesses from Lexington include Mrs. Austin W. Fisher, Mrs. A. Edward Rowse, Mrs. F. W. Aldrich, Jr., and Mrs. Herbert L. Crowley, Jr.

Miss Ka[illegible] Carard M. Nichols, Miss Helen G. Meagl Russell, Mrs. Clark Belden, and Marth Mrs. F. C. Hopewell.

committee.

Reds Snub Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra isn't going to Russia on its 10-country European tour this summer, but the Philadelphia Symphony will, it was announced yesterday.

The Bostonians had offered to include the U.S.S.R. in their tour, but the Soviet minister of culture extended the invitation to the Philadelphians instead.

The Philadelphia orchestra has accepted and has applied to the U. S. State Department for $110,000 to balance expenses under the emergency fund to support the international cultural exchange program.

On the other hand, Czechoslovakia has asked the Boston Orchestra to play there this August. The Czech offer is under consideration.

Item (e)
LYNN, Mass.
Republican
Circ. 21,915

APR 12 1956

Swampscott Will Benefits H

Public groups are given a total of $60,000 by the will of Mrs. Grace Hopkins Proctor of 14 Littles Point, Swampscott, which was recorded in the Registry of Probate in Salem yesterday. Value of the estate was not estimated.

The will, signed Oct. 14, 1953, with codicil dated March 18, 1955, nominates a daughter, Mrs. Barbara P. Thompson of Salem, and Allan H. W. Higgins of Boston, for executors. The codicil gives $100,000 each to two grandchildren, Eileen Burke Wilkinson and Charles Proctor Wilkinson, children of another daughter, Mrs. Frances P. Wilkinson of Washington, D. C.

After bequeathing the $60,000 in public gifts and a total of $75,500 to relatives and friends, the testament directs that the residue be given to adopted children of Mrs. Wilkinson, including any children adopted by her after the signing of the will.

The public gifts are: Boston YWCA, $15,000, of which $5000 is to be used for the Berkeley Residence Club; Boston Symphony Orchestra, Old South Church in Boston and Walker Missionary Homes, Inc., Auburndale, $10,000 each; Northfield Schools in East Northfield, trustees of Smith College in Northampton and Children's Hospital in Boston, $5000 each.

MANY GIFTS

Gifts of $10,000 each are directed to Sheelin V. Maxwell, J. Burke Wilkinson and Richard H. Thompson. Bequests of $7500 each are directed to Barry O. S. Maxwell and Simon K. Maxwell. Richard H. Thompson, Jr. and Joan Thompson are given $5000 apiece. Gifts of $3000 each are dire Flor queathed $2000 each, and Marion E. Bond, $1500. Alio Spelto, Michael Sheehan, Catherine McKee, Paul R. Gosselin and Margaret Ford are each given $1000, the latter gift being contingent on her being in the employ of the testatrix at the time of her death.

Mrs. Proctor, who was the widow of Charles H. Proctor, directed that her two daughters share all tangible personal property. In directing the residue to the adopted children of her daughter, Mrs. Wilkinson, the testatrix stated that all of her children and their descendants by blood and her other relatives are well provided for.

EL PASO, TEX.
TIMES
Circ. D. 48,374 - S. 65,539

APR 8 1956

The Turntable

Boston Quartet Waxes Haydn's 'Last Words'

HAYDN: The Seven Last Words of Christ. The Boston Symphony Orchestra String Quartet. RCA Victor LP Record.

The history of music designed to glorify Christ's Passion is, at various stages in its long history, both an awesome and distressing thing.

For the most part composers after the dawn of the 1700s junked Biblical texts and substituted murky and sometimes tasteless paraphrases of passages from Holy Writ. With this withering of literary fervor came a corresponding decay in musical taste which eventuated in some of the bombast of the oratorio form which transformed the style into something resembling opera.

In the latter days of Passion Music, Haydn's "Seven Last Words of Christ" stands far above the now obscure works of Telemann and Johann Ernst Bach, for example. Haydn's version is interesting also because it is performed in three versions: For orchestra, string quartet and for piano. There is a fourth version, a chorus affair in cantata form, which experts assure us probably was arranged by Haydn's brother, Michael.

It is, obviously, in the second of these arrangements that the work is performed here. The Boston Symphony Orchestra Quartet, composed of four first desk men in that splendid aggregation, plays with virginal cleanliness and infinite gentleness music which demands just these refinements. Like wine, a string quartet improves with age and future recordings by this group should reveal the mellowness and elegance the Budapest Quartet has boasted for so long.

This music, however, is suited ideally to the group5s from at present. Its inexjressibly beautiful delicacy sings a soft yet exalted lament for a departed God.

BARTOK: Concerto for Orchestra. Fritz Reiner conducting the Chicago Symphony Orchestra. RCA Victor LP record.

Unless the memory department has decayed even more than is customarily apparent, this is Reiner's second recording of this Bartok score, the first being etched back in the dark pre-high fidelity days with the Pittsburgh Orchestra. At any rate, Reiner's identification with this music is indisputable. He was not only a close friend of the late composer but also helped coax this work from his inspired pen. Enough slop has been written about Bartok's sufferings and his astral attainments in composition. The Concerto for Orchestra is not only a tuneful, appealing work but a devastating slap in the face to those thoughtless and hastily-written works which often pass as serious music in our time. The performance is peerless in every way and the recording a model of clarity.

'SONG FROM SERENADE.' Mario Lanza, tenor, with orchestra and piano accompaniments. RCA Victor LP record.

These records are taken from the motion picture version of James M. Cain's "Serenade," a picture which finds the chunky tenor cavorting in Mexico with Joan Fontaine. There is a lot of interesting music here, including an aria from "Turandot" and a long episode from "Otello" in which Lanza is joined by Metropolitan Opera Soprano Licia Albanese. Some of Lanza's yelling tendencies have been restrained by some voice coach because Lanza unquestionably is incapable of doing it himself. Once or twice he even passes up chances for his specialty: A high note sung at top voice and off pitch. The "Otello" work, though by no means artistically up to the standard of the Metropolitan's poorest tenor, is surprisingly good—for Lanza. Albanese doesn't have her heart in it.—L.A.

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 397,884

APR 11 1956

WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR
Circ. D. 245,642 - S. 273,244

APR 9 1956

Mrs. Snow Bowing Out As Concert Manager

A 17-year chapter in Washington's musical history will close tomorrow with the retirement of Constance Snow from the concert management field.

Mrs. Snow will bow out of the business she started on a $1,[illegible] shoestring in 1938 when she presents her final attraction, [illegible] Philadelphia Orchestra's [illegible] concert of the season, in Constitution Hall. Earlier in the [illegible] a host of friends will assemble at the Occidental Hotel to pay tribute to the woman whose labors on the cultural scene have made her name known to thousands.

At the 12:30 p.m. testimonial luncheon messages from the White House, city leaders and others will be read. Conductors Eugene Ormandy of the Philadelphia Orchestra, Charles Munch of the Boston Symphony and Howard Mitchell of the National Symphony are expected to attend.

Borrowed Capital from Husband

Mrs. Snow borrowed the $1,500 from her husband, the late Andrew Snow, a United States Steel executive, to start the Snow Concert Bureau. Her first contract was with the Philadelphia Orchestra which at that time was playing to half-filled halls here.

In six months, she had paid back the loan and was embarked on a career. She kept the Boston and Philadelphia Orchestras coming and attracting full houses at times when the city's own symphony was wondering if it would continue in business.

She booked the Library of Congress concerts, brought the Metropolitan Opera here—on a personal guarantee of staggering proportions—after an absence of 22 years, introduced such Washington "firsts" as the Sadlers Wells Ballet, Jeanette MacDonald, Alec Templeton and Victor Borge, and lent her name and efforts to a series of charity benefits.

MRS. CONSTANCE SNOW
Leaving Musical Scene

First Business Venture

It was Constance Snow's first venture into any kind of business. Until then, she confessed, she couldn't even balanced her personal checkbook.

But while her business grew, so did her family. Three children grew up and married and soon were producing grandchildren. Now there are six grandchildren and Mrs. Snow says it is time she gives more attention to them.

When it was learned Mrs. [illegible] was about $1.5 billion higher [illegible] that the average in the final three months of 1955, and it was $20 billion higher than the income flow to the public in February, 1955.

The report said wage and salary disbursements in the auto [illegible]

Variety
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Weekly Amusements

APR 11 1956

Mass. Solons Mark 75th Anni of Boston Symph; RCA to Make 50G Film

Boston, April 10.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra was honored on its 75th anniversary by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts at the state house last week when resolutions, adopted by the State Senate and House of Representatives were presented to conductors Charles Munch and Arthur Fiedler. The citations were read by Richard L. Furbush, president of the Senate, and Michael J. Skerry, Speaker of the House. During the ceremony, Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony, and Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops, sat upon the rostrum.

It was the first time that an formal legislative tribute had bee paid to a musical organization.

Lawrence (Larry) Kanaga, vi president of RCA Victor Record presented Munch and Fiedler $2,000 diamond-studded baton signed by French jeweler Van Cl & Arpels. Kanaga said that tor is making a $50,000 film color featuring the Boston S phony and showing how rec are made. The film is intended school students and other grou Gift of the baton and making the film commemorated the 40-y association between the Bo Symphony and Victor.

The Senate resolution "Both the Boston Symphony the Boston Pops Orchestra been the outstanding repres tives of the Commonwealth of sachusetts. Their musical ach ments have enriched the liv the people throughout the and have brought greater r and appreciation for the cu reputation of the people of chusetts."

Telegram-News (e)
LYNN, Mass.
Democrat
Circ. 21,071

APR 12 1956

LEAVES $60,000 IN PUBLIC GIFTS

Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 26,246

APR 12 1956

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 27,538

APR 12 1956

BSO Shares Bequests In Proctor Will

SALEM, Mass. (AP)—The will of Mrs. Grace Hopkins Proctor of Swampscott, disposing of more than $250,000 in specific bequests, was filed today in Essex County Probate Court.

Mrs. Proctor was the widow of Charles H. Proctor, leather manufacturer.

She left $100,000 each to two granchildren, Eileen Burke Wilkinson and Charles Proctor Wilkinson, both of Washington, D.C.

Other bequests included: Smith College, $5,000; Northfield Schools, East Northfield, Mass., $5,000; Boston Symphony Orchestra, $10,000; Boston YWCA, $15,000; Old South Church, Boston, $10,000; Walker Missionary Homes, Newton, $10,000; Children's Hospital, Boston, $5,000.

Advocate
ARLINGTON, Mass
Weekly Independent
Circ. 4,987

APR 12 1956

Republican
Circ. 5614

APR 12 1956

Reds Snub Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra isn't going to Russia on its 10-country European tour this summer, but the Philadelphia Symphony will, it was announced yesterday.

The Bostonians had offered to include the U.S.S.R. in their tour, but the Soviet minister of culture extended the invitation to the Philadelphians instead.

The Philadelphia orchestra has accepted and has applied to the U. S. State Department for $110,000 to balance expenses under the emergency fund to support the international cultural exchange program.

On the other hand, Czechoslovakia has asked the Boston Orchestra to play there this August. The Czech offer is under consideration.

Item (e)
LYNN, Mass.
Republican
Circ. 21,915

APR 12 1956

Swampscott Will Benefits H[illegible]

Public groups are given a total of $60,000 by the will of Mrs. Grace Hopkins Proctor of 14 Littles Point, Swampscott, which was recorded in the Registry of Probate in Salem yesterday. Value of the estate was not estimated.

The will, signed Oct. 14, 1953, with codicil dated March 18, 1955, nominates a daughter, Mrs. Barbara P. Thompson of Salem, and Allan H. W. Higgins of Boston, for executors. The codicil gives $100,000 each to two grandchildren, Eileen Burke Wilkinson and Charles Proctor Wilkinson, children of another daughter, Mrs. Frances P. Wilkinson of Washington, D. C.

After bequeathing the $60,000 in public gifts and a total of $75,500 to relatives and friends, the testament directs that the residue be given to adopted children of Mrs. Wilkinson, including any children adopted by her after the signing of the will.

The public gifts are: Boston YWCA, $15,000, of which $5000 is to be used for the Berkeley Residence Club; Boston Symphony Orchestra, Old South Church in Boston and Walker Missionary Homes, Inc., Auburndale, $10,000 each; Northfield Schools in East Northfield, trustees of Smith College in Northampton and Children's Hospital in Boston, $5000 each.

MANY GIFTS

Gifts of $10,000 each are directed to Sheelin V. Maxwell, J. Burke Wilkinson and Richard H. Thompson. Bequests of $7500 each are directed to Barry O. S. Maxwell and Simon K. Maxwell. Richard H. Thompson, Jr. and Joan Thompson are given $5000 apiece. Gifts of $3000 each are dire[illegible] Flor[illegible] Car[illegible] Meagl[illegible] Marth[illegible] queathed $2000 each, and Marion E. Bond, $1500. Alio Spelto, Michael Sheehan, Catherine McKee, Paul R. Gosselin and Margaret Ford are each given $1000, the latter gift being contingent on her being in the employ of the testatrix at the time of her death.

Mrs. Proctor, who was the widow of Charles H. Proctor, directed that her two daughters share all tangible personal property. In directing the residue to the adopted children of her daughter, Mrs. Wilkinson, the testatrix stated that all of her children and their descendants by blood and her other relatives are well provided for.

APR 12 1956

Wellesley Night At Pops May 12

Minute Man
LEXINGTON, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 4669

APR 12 1956

[illegible] committee.

Lexington Women To Be 'Pops' Patronesses

A distinguished group of prominent women of Lexington will be patronesses of "Wellesley Night at Pops" on May 12. This benefit featuring Arthur Fiedler's Boston Pops Orchestra, is a colorful annual event—held to raise funds for providing financial aid to students. This year Wellesley College is lending its own "Tupelos"—18 talented young students with fresh vibrant voices—to the outstanding occasion.

Patronesses from Lexington include Mrs. Austin W. Fisher, Mrs. A. Edward Rowse, Mrs. F. W. Aldrich, Jr., and Mrs. Herbert L. Crowley, Jr. [illegible] Miss [illegible] ard M. Nichols, Miss Helen G. Russell, Mrs. Clark Belden, and Mrs. F. C. Hopewell.

APR 12 1956

Boston—(UP) — A recording commemorating the 75th anniversary season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra features the group playing the same piece under the batons of three conductors.

Three recordings of Berlioz' "Hungarian March" made over a period of nearly half a century were dubbed together electronically to sound as one continuous performance.

Karl Muck, who became conductor in 1906, starts the march. The late Serge Koussevitzky "takes over" in the middle section and Charles Munch, the present director, concludes the piece.

EL PASO, TEX.
TIMES
Circ. D. 48,374 - S. 65,539

APR 8 1956

The Turntable

Boston Quartet Waxes Haydn's 'Last Words'

HAYDN: The Seven Last Words of Christ. The Boston Symphony Orchestra String Quartet. RCA Victor LP Record.

The history of music designed to glorify Christ's Passion is, at various stages in its long history, both an awesome and distressing thing.

For the most part composers after the dawn of the 1700s junked Biblical texts and substituted murky and sometimes tasteless paraphrases of passages from Holy Writ. With this withering of literary fervor came a corresponding decay in musical taste which eventuated in some of the bombast of the oratorio form which transformed the style into something resembling opera.

In the latter days of Passion Music, Haydn's "Seven Last Words of Christ" stands far above the now obscure works of Telemann and Johann Ernst Bach, for example. Haydn's version is interesting also because it is performed in three versions: For orchestra, string quartet and for piano. There is a fourth version, a chorus affair in cantata form, which experts assure us probably was arranged by Haydn's brother, Michael.

It is, obviously, in the second of these arrangements that the work is performed here. The Boston Symphony Orchestra Quartet, composed of four first desk men in that splendid aggregation, plays with virginal cleanliness and infinite gentleness music which demands just these refinements. Like wine, a string quartet improves with age and future recordings by this group should reveal the mellowness and elegance the Budapest Quartet has boasted for so long.

This music, however, is suited ideally to the group5s from at present. Its inexjressibly beautiful delicacy sings a soft yet exalted lament for a departed God.

BARTOK: Concerto for Orchestra. Fritz Reiner conducting the Chicago Symphony Orchestra. RCA Victor LP record.

Unless the memory department has decayed even more than is customarily apparent, this is Reiner's second recording of this Bartok score, the first being etched back in the dark pre-high fidelity days with the Pittsburgh Orchestra. At any rate, Reiner's identification with this music is indisputable. He was not only a close friend of the late composer but also helped coax this work from his inspired pen. Enough slop has been written about Bartok's sufferings and his astral attainments in composition. The Concerto for Orchestra is not only a tuneful, appealing work but a devastating slap in the face to those thoughtless and hastily-written works which often pass as serious music in our time. The performance is peerless in every way and the recording a model of clarity.

'SONG FROM SERENADE.' Mario Lanza, tenor, with orchestra and piano accompaniments. RCA Victor LP record.

These records are taken from the motion picture version of James M. Cain's "Serenade," a picture which finds the chunky tenor cavorting in Mexico with Joan Fontaine. There is a lot of interesting music here, including an aria from "Turandot" and a long episode from "Otello" in which Lanza is joined by Metropolitan Opera Soprano Licia Albanese. Some of Lanza's yelling tendencies have been restrained by some voice coach because Lanza unquestionably is incapable of doing it himself. Once or twice he even passes up chances for his specialty: A high note sung at top voice and off pitch. The "Otello" work, though by no means artistically up to the standard of the Metropolitan's poorest tenor, is surprisingly good—for Lanza. Albanese doesn't have her heart in it.—L.A.

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 397,884

APR 11 1956

Reds Snub Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra isn't going to Russia on its 10-country European tour this summer, but the Philadelphia Symphony will, it was announced yesterday.

The Bostonians had offered to include the U.S.S.R. in their tour, but the Soviet minister of culture extended the invitation to the Philadelphians instead.

The Philadelphia orchestra has accepted and has applied to the U. S. State Department for $110,000 to balance expenses under the emergency fund to support the international cultural exchange program.

On the other hand, Czechoslovakia has asked the Boston Orchestra to play there this August. The Czech offer is under consideration.

Item (e)
LYNN, Mass.
Republican
Circ. 21,915

APR 12 1956

Swampscott Will Benefits Hu

Public groups are given a total of $60,000 by the will of Mrs. Grace Hopkins Proctor of 14 Littles Point, Swampscott, which was recorded in the Registry of Probate in Salem yesterday. Value of the estate was not estimated.

The will, signed Oct. 14, 1953, with codicil dated March 18, 1955, nominates a daughter, Mrs. Barbara P. Thompson of Salem, and Allan H. W. Higgins of Boston, for executors. The codicil gives $100,000 each to two grandchildren, Eileen Burke Wilkinson and Charles Proctor Wilkinson, children of another daughter, Mrs. Frances P. Wilkinson of Washington, D. C.

After bequeathing the $60,000 in public gifts and a total of $75,500 to relatives and friends, the testament directs that the residue be given to adopted children of Mrs. Wilkinson, including any children adopted by her after the signing of the will.

The public gifts are: Boston YWCA, $15,000, of which $5000 is to be used for the Berkeley Residence Club; Boston Symphony Orchestra, Old South Church in Boston and Walker Missionary Homes, Inc., Auburndale, $10,000 each; Northfield Schools in East Northfield, trustees of Smith College in Northampton and Children's Hospital in Boston, $5000 each.

MANY GIFTS

Gifts of $10,000 each are directed to Sheelin V. Maxwell, J. Burke Wilkinson and Richard H. Thompson. Bequests of $7500 each are directed to Barry O. S. Maxwell and Simon K. Maxwell. Richard H. Thompson, Jr. and Joan Thompson are given $5000 apiece. Gifts of $3000 each are direc
Flore
Ca
Meag
Marth
queathed $2000 each, and Marion E. Bond, $1500. Alio Spelto, Michael Sheehan, Catherine McKee, Paul R. Gosselin and Margaret Ford are each given $1000, the latter gift being contingent on her being in the employ of the testatrix at the time of her death.

Mrs. Proctor, who was the widow of Charles H. Proctor, directed that her two daughters share all tangible personal property. In directing the residue to the adopted children of her daughter, Mrs. Wilkinson, the testatrix stated that all of her children and their descendants by blood and her other relatives are well provided for.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR
Circ. D. 245,642 - S. 273,244

APR 9 1956

Mrs. Snow Bowing Out As Concert Manager

A 17-year chapter in Washington's musical history will close tomorrow with the retirement of Constance Snow from the concert management field.

Mrs. Snow will bow out of the business she started on a $1,500 shoestring in 1938 when she presents her final attraction, the Philadelphia Orchestra's concert of the season, in Constitution Hall. Earlier in the a host of friends will assemble at the Occidental Hotel to pay tribute to the woman whose labors on the cultural scene have made her name known to thousands.

At the 12:30 p.m. testimonial luncheon messages from the White House, city leaders and others will be read. Conductors Eugene Ormandy of the Philadelphia Orchestra, Charles Munch of the Boston Symphony and Howard Mitchell of the National Symphony are expected to attend.

Borrowed Capital from Husband

Mrs. Snow borrowed the $1,500 from her husband, the late Andrew Snow, a United States Steel executive, to start the Snow Concert Bureau. Her first contract was with the Philadelphia Orchestra which at that time was playing to half-filled halls here.

In six months, she had paid back the loan and was embarked on a career. She kept the Boston and Philadelphia Orchestras coming and attracting full houses at times when the city's own symphony was wondering

MRS. CONSTANCE SNOW
Leaving Musical Scene

Victor Borge, and lent her name and efforts to a series of charity benefits.

First Business Venture

It was Constance Snow's first venture into any kind of business. Until then, she confessed, she couldn't even balanced her personal checkbook.

But while her business grew, so did her family. Three children grew up and married and soon were producing grandchildren. Now there are six grandchildren and Mrs. Snow says it is time she gives more attention to them.

When it was learned Mrs.

was about $1.5 billion higher that the average in the final three months of 1955, and it was $20 billion higher than the income flow to the public in February, 1955.

The report said wage and salary disbursements in the auto

Variety
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Weekly Amusements

APR 11 1956

Mass. Solons Mark 75th Anni of Boston Symph; RCA to Make 50G Film

Boston, April 10.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra was honored on its 75th anniversary by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts at the state house last week when resolutions, adopted by the State Senate and House of Representatives were presented to conductors Charles Munch and Arthur Fiedler. The citations were read by Richard I. Furbush, president of the Senate, and Michael J. Skerry, Speaker of the House. During the ceremony, Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony, and Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops, sat upon the rostrum.

It was the first time that a formal legislative tribute had been paid to a musical organization.

Lawrence (Larry) Kanaga, vice president of RCA Victor Records presented Munch and Fiedler with a $2,000 diamond-studded baton designed by French jeweler Van Cleef & Arpels. Kanaga said that Victor is making a $50,000 film in color featuring the Boston Symphony and showing how records are made. The film is intended for school students and other groups. Gift of the baton and making the film commemorated the association between the Boston Symphony and Victor.

The Senate resolution read: "Both the Boston Symphony and the Boston Pops Orchestra have been the outstanding representatives of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. Their musical achievements have enriched the lives of the people throughout the world and have brought greater respect and appreciation for the cultural reputation of the people of Massachusetts."

wellesley Night at Pops" on May 12th. This benefit, featuring Arthur Fiedler's Boston Pops Orchestra, is a colorful annual event, held to raise funds for providing financial aid to students. This year Wellesley College is lending its own "Tupelos" — eighteen talented young students with fresh vibrant voices, to the outstanding occasion.

Patronesses from Wellesley include Miss Mary E. Prentiss, Miss Phyllis Goodenough, Mrs. William H. Belknap, Mrs. Richard Swain, Mrs. Paul L. Mansfield, Mrs. James Grower, Mrs. Leeds A. Wheeler, Miss Carol M. Roehm, Mrs. Robert C. Wiese, Mrs. James F. Cowan, Jr., Miss Harriet B. Creighton, Mrs. Paul T. Babson, Mrs. Francis M. Woods, Mrs. Cedric J. Walker, Mrs. Frederick R. Geron, Mrs. David R. Porter, Mrs. Thomas W. Chesterton, Mrs. David C. Wiswall, Mrs. Robert M. Henkels, Mrs. Edward H. Bailey, Mrs. W. D. Shepard, Mrs. Donald B. Morse, Mrs. Frederick W. Haffenreffer, Mrs. Robert R. Thurber, Miss Kathleen Elliott, Mrs. Richard M. Nichols, Miss Helen G. Russell, Mrs. Clark Belden, and Mrs. F. C. Hopewell.

commemorating the 75th anniversary season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra features the group playing the same piece under the batons of three conductors.

Three recordings of Berlioz' "Hungarian March" made over a period of nearly half a century were dubbed together electronically to sound as one continuous performance.

Karl Muck, who became conductor in 1906, starts the march. The late Serge Koussevitzky "takes over" in the middle section and Charles Munch, the present director, concludes the piece.

(1) Eliminate all unreas to register with the authoritie
(2) Let boys and girls, a private field. It has always atru and deliver groceries by bicy
Naturally, kids should not b portums, or factories making that, however, I would let th
(3) Reorganize all state visions, but to unify them, a illegal in another.
(4) Set up state and Fed portunities for ambitious you effort to resolutions on the

And Smith College

SALEM, Mass. (AP)—The will of Mrs. Grace Hopkins Proctor of Swampscott, disposing of more than $250,000 in specific bequests, was filed today in Essex County Probate Court.

Mrs. Proctor was the widow of Charles H. Proctor, leather manufacturer.

She left $100,000 each to two grandchildren, Eileen Burke Wilkinson and Charles Proctor Wilkinson, both of Washington, D.C.

Other bequests included: Smith College, $5,000; Northfield Schools, East Northfield, Mass., $5,000; Boston Symphony Orchestra, $10,000; Boston YWCA, $15,000; Old South Church, Boston, $10,000; Walker Missionary Homes, Newton, $10,000; Children's Hospital, Boston, $5,000.

other relatives are well provided for.

COUNTS
Nelson Hospital KNOW
COUNTS
Nelson Hospital KNOW
8 - 12:30
Adm. $1.25 ea.
APRI
DA
OVER
UNIT

INFORMATION OBSCURED

EL PASO, TEX.
TIMES
Circ. D. 48,374 - S. 65,539

APR 8 1956

The Turntable

Boston Quartet Waxes Haydn's 'Last Words'

HAYDN: The Seven Last Words of Christ. The Boston Symphony Orchestra String Quartet. RCA Victor LP Record.

The history of music designed to glorify Christ's Passion is, at various stages in its long history, both an awesome and distressing thing.

For the most part composers after the dawn of the 1700s junked Biblical texts and substituted murky and sometimes tasteless paraphrases of passages from Holy Writ. With this withering of literary fervor came a corresponding decay in musical taste which eventuated in some of the bombast of the oratorio form which transformed the style into something resembling opera.

In the latter days of Passion Music, Haydn's "Seven Last Words of Christ" stands far above the now obscure works of Telemann and Johann Ernst Bach, for example. Haydn's version is interesting also because it is performed in three versions: For orchestra, string quartet and for piano. There is a fourth version, a chorus affair in cantata form, which experts assure us probably was arranged by Haydn's brother, Michael.

It is, obviously, in the second of these arrangements that the work is performed here. The Boston Symphony Orchestra Quartet, composed of four first desk men in that splendid aggregation, plays with virginal cleanliness and infinite gentleness music which demands just these refinements. Like wine, a string quartet improves with age and future recordings by this group should reveal the mellowness and elegance the Budapest Quartet has boasted for so long.

This music, however, is suited ideally to the group5s from at present. Its inexjressibly beautiful delicacy sings a soft yet exalted lament for a departed God.

BARTOK: Concerto for Orchestra. Fritz Reiner conducting the Chicago Symphony Orchestra. RCA Victor LP record.

Unless the memory department has decayed even more than is customarily apparent, this is Reiner's second recording of this Bartok score, the first being etched back in the dark pre-high fidelity days with the Pittsburgh Orchestra. At any rate, Reiner's identification with this music is indisputable. He was not only a close friend of the late composer but also helped coax this work from his inspired pen. Enough slop has been written about Bartok's sufferings and his astral attainments in composition. The Concerto for Orchestra is not only a tuneful, appealing work but a devastating slap in the face to those thoughtless and hastily-written works which often pass as serious music in our time. The performance is peerless in every way and the recording a model of clarity.

'SONG FROM SERENADE.' Mario Lanza, tenor, with orchestra and piano accompaniments. RCA Victor LP record.

These records are taken from the motion picture version of James M. Cain's "Serenade," a picture which finds the chunky tenor cavorting in Mexico with Joan Fontaine. There is a lot of interesting music here, including an aria from "Turandot" and a long episode from "Otello" in which Lanza is joined by Metropolitan Opera Soprano Licia Albanese. Some of Lanza's yelling tendencies have been restrained by some voice coach because Lanza unquestionably is incapable of doing it himself. Once or twice he even passes up chances for his specialty: A high note sung at top voice and off pitch. The "Otello" work, though by no means ar[illegible] tically up to the standard of [illegible] Metropolitan's poorest tenor, [illegible] surprisingly good—for Lanza. A[illegible] banese doesn't have her heart [illegible] it.—L.A.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR
Circ. D. 245,642 - S. 273,244

APR 9 1956

Mrs. Snow Bowing Out As Concert Manager

A 17-year chapter in Washington's musical history will close tomorrow with the retirement of Constance Snow from the concert management field.

Mrs. Snow will bow out of the business she started on a $1,[illegible] shoestring in 1938 when she presents her final attraction, [illegible] Philadelphia Orchestra's [illegible] concert of the season, in Co[illegible] tution Hall. Earlier in the [illegible] a host of friends will assemble at the Occidental Hotel to pay tribute to the woman whose labors on the cultural scene have made her name known to thousands.

At the 12:30 p.m. testimonial luncheon messages from the White House, city leaders and others will be read. Conductors Eugene Ormandy of the Philadelphia Orchestra, Charles Munch of the Boston Symphony and Howard Mitchell of the National Symphony are expected to attend.

Borrowed Capital from Husband

Mrs. Snow borrowed the $1,500 from her husband, the late Andrew Snow, a United States Steel executive, to start the Snow Concert Bureau. Her first contract was with the Philadelphia Orchestra which at that time was playing to half-filled halls here.

In six months, she had paid back the loan and was embarked on a career. She kept the Boston and Philadelphia Orchestras coming and attracting full houses at times when the city's own symphony [illegible] wondering [illegible] in [illegible] Victor Borge, and lent her name and efforts to a series of charity benefits.

MRS. CONSTANCE SNOW
Leaving Musical Scene

First Business Venture

It was Constance Snow's first venture into any kind of business. Until then, she confessed, she couldn't even balanced her personal checkbook.

But while her business grew, so did her family. Three children grew up and married and soon were producing grandchildren. Now there are six grandchildren and Mrs. Snow says it is time she gives more attention to them.

When it was learned Mrs.

was about $1.5 billion higher that the average in the final three months of 1955, and it was $20 billion higher than the income flow to the public in February, 1955.

The report said wage and salary disbursements in the auto

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 397,884

APR 11 1956

Reds Snub Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra isn't going to Russia on its 10-country European tour this summer, but the Philadelphia Symphony will, it was announced yesterday.

The Bostonians had offered to include the U.S.S.R. in their tour, but the Soviet minister of culture extended the invitation to the Philadelphians instead.

The Philadelphia orchestra has accepted and has applied to the U. S. State Department for $110,000 to balance expenses under the emergency fund to support the international cultural exchange program.

On the other hand, Czechoslovakia has asked the Boston Orchestra to play there this August. The Czech offer is under consideration.

Item (e)
LYNN, Mass.
Republican
Circ. 21,915

APR 12 1956

Swampscott Will Benefits Hub Groups

Public groups are given a total of $60,000 by the will of Mrs. Grace Hopkins Proctor of 14 Littles Point, Swampscott, which was recorded in the Registry of Probate in Salem yesterday. Value of the estate was not estimated.

The will, signed Oct. 14, 1953, with codicil dated March 18, 1955, nominates a daughter, Mrs. Barbara P. Thompson of Salem, and Allan H. W. Higgins of Boston, for executors. The codicil gives $100,000 each to two grandchildren, Eileen Burke Wilkinson and Charles Proctor Wilkinson, children of another daughter, Mrs. Frances P. Wilkinson of Washington, D. C.

After bequeathing the $60,000 in public gifts and a total of $75,500 to relatives and friends, the testament directs that the residue be given to adopted children of Mrs. Wilkinson, including any children adopted by her after the signing of the will.

The public gifts are: Boston YWCA, $15,000, of which $5000 is to be used for the Berkeley Residence Club; Boston Symphony Orchestra, Old South Church in Boston and Walker Missionary Homes, Inc., Auburndale, $10,000 each; Northfield Schools in East Northfield, trustees of Smith College in Northampton and Children's Hospital in Boston, $5000 each.

MANY GIFTS

Gifts of $10,000 each are directed to Sheelin V. Maxwell, J. Burke Wilkinson and Richard H. Thompson. Bequests of $7500 each are directed to Barry O. S. Maxwell and Simon K. Maxwell. Richard H. Thompson, Jr. and Joan Thompson are given $5000 apiece. Gifts of $3000 each are directed to Bertha H. Frye and Florence D. Estes.

Carolyn D. Smiley, Maude Meagher, James I. Riddell and Martha Riddell Gallagher are bequeathed $2000 each, and Marion E. Bond, $1500. Alio Spelto, Michael Sheehan, Catherine McKee, Paul R. Gosselin and Margaret Ford are each given $1000, the latter gift being contingent on her being in the employ of the testatrix at the time of her death.

Mrs. Proctor, who was the widow of Charles H. Proctor, directed that her two daughters share all tangible personal property. In directing the residue to the adopted children of her daughter, Mrs. Wilkinson, the testatrix stated that all of her children and their descendants by blood and her other relatives are well provided for.

Variety
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Weekly Amusements

APR 11 1956

Mass. Solons Mark 75th Anni of Boston Symph; RCA to Make 50G Film

Boston, April 10.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra was honored on its 75th anniversary by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts at the state house last week when resolutions, adopted by the State Senate and House of Representatives were presented to conductors Charles Munch and Arthur Fiedler. The citations were read by Richard L. Furbush, president of the Senate, and Michael J. Skerry, Speaker of the House. During the ceremony, Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony, and Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops, sat upon the rostrum.

It was the first time that any formal legislative tribute had been paid to a musical organization.

Lawrence (Larry) Kanaga, vice president of RCA Victor Records, presented Munch and Fiedler a $2,000 diamond-studded baton designed by French jeweler Van Cleef & Arpels. Kanaga said that Victor is making a $50,000 film in color featuring the Boston Symphony and showing how records are made. The film is intended for school students and other groups. Gift of the baton and making of the film commemorated the 40-year association between the Boston Symphony and Victor.

The Senate resolution said: "Both the Boston Symphony and the Boston Pops Orchestra have been the outstanding representatives of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. Their musical achievements have enriched the lives of the people throughout the world and have brought greater respect and appreciation for the cultural reputation of the people of Massachusetts."

Boston—(UP) — A recording commemorating the 75th anniversary season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra features the group playing the same piece under the batons of three conductors.

Three recordings of Berlioz' "Hungarian March" made over a period of nearly half a century were dubbed together electronically to sound as one continuous performance.

Karl Muck, who became conductor in 1906, starts the march The late Serge Koussevitzky "takes over" in the middle section and Charles Munch, the present director, concludes the piece.

guests have been urged to make early reservations.

more than $7[illegible]0 to friends, it was disclosed [illegible]day when the document was recorded in the Registry of Probate at Salem.

Mrs. Proctor, the widow of Charles H. Proctor, a Boston leather merchant, died April 6. No estimate of the value of her estate was given. She signed the testament Oct. 14, 1953, and drew up a codicil March 18, 1955.

A legacy of $15,000 was awarded to the Boston YWCA, and Mrs. Proctor directed that $5000 of this be used for the Berkeley Residence club. Gifts of $10,000 apiece were devised to the Boston Symphony orchestra, the Old South church in Boston, and Walker Missionary Home., Inc., of Auburndale. The will allotted $5000 each to the Northfield schools at East Northfield, Smith college at Northampton, and the Children's hospital at Boston.

Two grandchildren, Charles

Continued on Page Two

INFORMATION OBSCURED

EL PASO, TEX.
TIMES
Circ. D. 48,374 - S. 65,539

APR 8 1956

The Turntable

Boston Quartet Waxes Haydn's 'Last Words'

HAYDN: The Seven Last Words of Christ. The Boston Symphony Orchestra String Quartet. RCA Victor LP Record.

The history of music designed to glorify Christ's Passion is, at various stages in its long history, both an awesome and distressing thing.

For the most part composers after the dawn of the 1700s junked Biblical texts and substituted murky and sometimes tasteless paraphrases of passages from Holy Writ. With this withering of literary fervor came a corresponding decay in musical taste which eventuated in some of the bombast of the oratorio form which transformed the style into something resembling opera.

In the latter days of Passion Music, Haydn's "Seven Last Words of Christ" stands far above the now obscure works of Telemann and Johann Ernst Bach, for example. Haydn's version is interesting also because it is performed in three versions: For orchestra, string quartet and for piano. There is a fourth version, a chorus affair in cantata form, which experts assure us probably was arranged by Haydn's brother, Michael.

It is, obviously, in the second of these arrangements that the work is performed here. The Boston Symphony Orchestra Quartet, composed of four first desk men in that splendid aggregation, plays with virginal cleanliness and infinite gentleness music which demands just these refinements. Like wine, a string quartet improves with age and future recordings by this group should reveal the mellowness and elegance the Budapest Quartet has boasted for so long.

This music, however, is suited ideally to the group5s from at present. Its inexjressibly beautiful delicacy sings a soft yet exalted lament for a departed God.

BARTOK: Concerto for Orchestra. Fritz Reiner conducting the Chicago Symphony Orchestra. RCA Victor LP record.

Unless the memory department has decayed even more than is customarily apparent, this is Reiner's second recording of this Bartok score, the first being etched back in the dark pre-high fidelity days with the Pittsburgh Orchestra. At any rate, Reiner's identification with this music is indisputable. He was not only a close friend of the late composer but also helped coax this work from his inspired pen. Enough slop has been written about Bartok's sufferings and his astral attainments in composition. The Concerto for Orchestra is not only a tuneful, appealing work but a devastating slap in the face to those thoughtless and hastily-written works which often pass as serious music in our time. The performance is peerless in every way and the recording a model of clarity.

'SONG FROM SERENADE.' Mario Lanza, tenor, with orchestra and piano accompaniments. RCA Victor LP record.

These records are taken from the motion picture version of James M. Cain's "Serenade," a picture which finds the chunky tenor cavorting in Mexico with Joan Fontaine. There is a lot of interesting music here, including an aria from "Turandot" and a long episode from "Otello" in which Lanza is joined by Metropolitan Opera Soprano Licia Albanese. Some of Lanza's yelling tendencies have been restrained by some voice coach because Lanza unquestionably is incapable of doing it himself. Once or twice he even passes up chances for his specialty: A high note sung at top voice and off pitch. The "Otello" work, though by no means artistically up to the standard of Metropolitan's poorest tenor, surprisingly good—for Lanza. Albanese doesn't have her heart in it.—L.A.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR
Circ. D. 245,642 - S. 273,244

APR 9 1956

Mrs. Snow Bowing Out As Concert Manager

A 17-year chapter in Washington's musical history will close tomorrow with the retirement of Constance Snow from the concert management field.

Mrs. Snow will bow out of the business she started on a $1,500 shoestring in 1938 when she presents her final attraction, the Philadelphia Orchestra's last concert of the season, in Constitution Hall. Earlier in the day a host of friends will assemble at the Occidental Hotel to pay tribute to the woman whose labors on the cultural scene have made her name known to thousands.

At the 12:30 p.m. testimonial luncheon messages from the White House, city leaders and others will be read. Conductors Eugene Ormandy of the Philadelphia Orchestra, Charles Munch of the Boston Symphony and Howard Mitchell of the National Symphony are expected to attend.

Borrowed Capital from Husband

Mrs. Snow borrowed the $1,500 from her husband, the late Andrew Snow, a United States Steel executive, to start the Snow Concert Bureau. Her first contract was with the Philadelphia Orchestra which at that time was playing to half-filled halls here.

In six months, she had paid back the loan and was embarked on a career. She kept the Boston and Philadelphia Orchestras coming and attracting full houses at times when the city's own symphony was wondering [illegible]

MRS. CONSTANCE SNOW
Leaving Musical Scene

Victor Borge, and lent her name and efforts to a series of charity benefits.

First Business Venture

It was Constance Snow's first venture into any kind of business. Until then, she confessed, she couldn't even balanced her personal checkbook.

But while her business grew, so did her family. Three children grew up and married and soon were producing grandchildren. Now there are six grandchildren and Mrs. Snow says it is time she gives more attention to them.

When it was learned Mrs. Snow was about $1.5 billion higher that the average in the final three months of 1955, and it was $20 billion higher than the income flow to the public in February, 1955.

The report said wage and salary disbursements in the auto

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 397,884

APR 11 1956

Reds Snub Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra isn't going to Russia on its 10-country European tour this summer, but the Philadelphia Symphony will, it was announced yesterday.

The Bostonians had offered to include the U.S.S.R. in their tour, but the Soviet minister of culture extended the invitation to the Philadelphians instead.

The Philadelphia orchestra has accepted and has applied to the U. S. State Department for $110,000 to balance expenses under the emergency fund to support the international cultural exchange program.

On the other hand, Czechoslovakia has asked the Boston Orchestra to play there this August. The Czech offer is under consideration.

[illegible] Wellesley Night at Pops" on May 12th. This benefit, featuring Arthur Fiedler's Boston Pops Orchestra, is a colorful annual event, held to raise funds [illegible]

LUTHERAN CHURCH
Centre and Cypress S[illegible]
Rev. ARTHUR H. BLOCH[illegible]
CHURCH SERVICE — SUN[illegible]

Patronize Our Advertisers

Item (e)
LYNN, Mass.
Republican
Circ. 21,915

APR 12 1956

Swampscott Will Benefits Hub Groups

Public groups are given a total of $60,000 by the will of Mrs. Grace Hopkins Proctor of 14 Littles Point, Swampscott, which was recorded in the Registry of Probate in Salem yesterday. Value of the estate was not estimated.

The will, signed Oct. 14, 1953, with codicil dated March 18, 1955, nominates a daughter, Mrs. Barbara P. Thompson of Salem, and Allan H. W. Higgins of Boston, for executors. The codicil gives $100,000 each to two grandchildren, Eileen Burke Wilkinson and Charles Proctor Wilkinson, children of another daughter, Mrs. Frances P. Wilkinson of Washington, D. C.

After bequeathing the $60,000 in public gifts and a total of $75,500 to relatives and friends, the testament directs that the residue be given to adopted children of Mrs. Wilkinson, including any children adopted by her after the signing of the will.

The public gifts are: Boston YWCA, $15,000, of which $5000 is to be used for the Berkeley Residence Club; Boston Symphony Orchestra, Old South Church in Boston and Walker Missionary Homes, Inc., Auburndale, $10,000 each; Northfield Schools in East Northfield, trustees of Smith College in Northampton and Children's Hospital in Boston, $5000 each.

MANY GIFTS

Gifts of $10,000 each are directed to Sheelin V. Maxwell, J. Burke Wilkinson and Richard H. Thompson. Bequests of $7500 each are directed to Barry O. S. Maxwell and Simon K. Maxwell. Richard H. Thompson, Jr. and Joan Thompson are given $5000 apiece. Gifts of $3000 each are directed to Bertha H. Frye and Florence D. Estes.

Carolyn D. Smiley, Maude Meagher, James I. Riddell and Martha Riddell Gallagher are bequeathed $2000 each, and Marion E. Bond, $1500. Alio Spelto, Michael Sheehan, Catherine McKee, Paul R. Gosselin and Margaret Ford are each given $1000, the latter gift being contingent on her being in the employ of the testatrix at the time of her death.

Mrs. Proctor, who was the widow of Charles H. Proctor, directed that her two daughters share all tangible personal property. In directing the residue to the adopted children of her daughter, Mrs. Wilkinson, the testatrix stated that all of her children and their descendants by blood and her other relatives are well provided for.

Variety
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Weekly Amusements

APR 11 1956

Mass. Solons Mark 75th Anni of Boston Symph; RCA to Make 50G Film

Boston, April 10.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra was honored on its 75th anniversary by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts at the state house last week when resolutions, adopted by the State Senate and House of Representatives were presented to conductors Charles Munch and Arthur Fiedler. The citations were read by Richard I. Furbush, president of the Senate, and Michael J. Skerry, Speaker of the House. During the ceremony, Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony, and Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops, sat upon the rostrum.

It was the first time that any formal legislative tribute had been paid to a musical organization.

Lawrence (Larry) Kanaga, vice president of RCA Victor Records, presented Munch and Fiedler a $2,000 diamond-studded baton designed by French jeweler Van Cleef & Arpels. Kanaga said that Victor is making a $50,000 film in color featuring the Boston Symphony and showing how records are made. The film is intended for school students and other groups. Gift of the baton and making of the film commemorated the 40-year association between the Boston Symphony and Victor.

The Senate resolution said: "Both the Boston Symphony and the Boston Pops Orchestra have been the outstanding representatives of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. Their musical achievements have enriched the lives of the people throughout the world and have brought greater respect and appreciation for the cultural reputation of the people of Massachusetts."

LOBSTER LUNCHEON

The annual Lobster Luncheon of the Arlington Women's Republican Club will be held at Calvary Methodist church Wednesday, April 25 at 1 p.m.

Ralph H. Bonnell, Republican national committeeman is the speaker.

Guests of honor will include Representative Hollis M. Gott, Representative Irene K. Thresher, Mrs. Bonnell, Mrs. Joseph L. Roberts, Republican state committeewoman, and Arthur W. Sampson, chairman of the Arlington Republican Town Committee.

Mrs. Horace Homer will preside at the business meeting, and will announce plans for the Republican Night at the Boston Pops concert June 2, which is being sponsored by the Arlington and Winchester Women's Republican Clubs.

Ticket chairman for the luncheon is Mrs. Olaf G. Peterson, and members and their guests have been urged to make early reservations.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

EL PASO, TEX.
TIMES
Circ. D. 48,374 - S. 65,539

APR 8 1956

The Turntable

Boston Quartet Waxes Haydn's 'Last Words'

HAYDN: The Seven Last Words of Christ. The Boston Symphony Orchestra String Quartet. RCA Victor LP Record.

The history of music designed to glorify Christ's Passion is, at various stages in its long history, both an awesome and distressing thing.

For the most part composers after the dawn of the 1700s junked Biblical texts and substituted murky and sometimes tasteless paraphrases of passages from Holy Writ. With this withering of literary fervor came a corresponding decay in musical taste which eventuated in some of the bombast of the oratorio form which transformed the style into something resembling opera.

In the latter days of Passion Music, Haydn's "Seven Last Words of Christ" stands far above the now obscure works of Telemann and Johann Ernst Bach, for example. Haydn's version is interesting also because it is performed in three versions: For orchestra, string quartet and for piano. There is a fourth version, a chorus affair in cantata form, which experts assure us probably was arranged by Haydn's brother, Michael.

It is, obviously, in the second of these arrangements that the work is performed here. The Boston Symphony Orchestra Quartet, composed of four first desk men in that splendid aggregation, plays with virginal cleanliness and infinite gentleness music which demands just these refinements. Like wine, a string quartet improves with age and future recordings by this group should reveal the mellowness and elegance the Budapest Quartet has boasted for so long.

This music, however, is suited ideally to the group5s from at present. Its inexjressibly beautiful delicacy sings a soft yet exalted lament for a departed God.

BARTOK: Concerto for Orchestra. Fritz Reiner conducting the Chicago Symphony Orchestra. RCA Victor LP record.

Unless the memory department has decayed even more than is customarily apparent, this is Reiner's second recording of this Bartok score, the first being etched back in the dark pre-high fidelity days with the Pittsburgh Orchestra. At any rate, Reiner's identification with this music i indisputable. He was not only a close friend of the late composer but also helped coax this work from his inspired pen. Enough slop has been written about Bartok's sufferings and his astral attainments in composition. The Concerto for Orchestra is not only a tuneful, appealing work but a devastating slap in the face to those thoughtless and hastily-written works which often pass as serious music in our time. The performance is peerless in every way and the recording a model of clarity.

'SONG FROM SERENADE.' Mario Lanza, tenor, with orchestra and piano accompaniments. RCA Victor LP record.

These records are taken from the motion picture version of James M. Cain's "Serenade," a picture which finds the chunky tenor cavorting in Mexico with Joan Fontaine. There is a lot of interesting music here, including an aria from "Turandot" and a long episode from "Otello" in which Lanza is joined by Metropolitan Opera Soprano Licia Albanese. Some of Lanza's yelling tendencies have been restrained by some voice coach because Lanza unquestionably is incapable of doing it himself. Once or twice he even passes up chances for his specialty: A high note sung at top voice and off pitch. The "Otello" work, though by no means ar tically up to the standard of Metropolitan's poorest tenor, surprisingly good—for Lanza. banese doesn't have her heart it.—L.A.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR
Circ. D. 245,642 - S. 273,244

APR 9 1956

Mrs. Snow Bowing Out As Concert Manager

A 17-year chapter in Washington's musical history will close tomorrow with the retirement of Constance Snow from the concert management field.

Mrs. Snow will bow out of the business she started on a $1,[illegible] shoestring in 1938 when she presents her final attraction, [illegible] Philadelphia Orchestra's [illegible] concert of the season, in Constitution Hall. Earlier in the [illegible] a host of friends will assemble at the Occidental Hotel to pay tribute to the woman whose labors on the cultural scene have made her name known to thousands.

At the 12:30 p.m. testimonial luncheon messages from the White House, city leaders and others will be read. Conductors Eugene Ormandy of the Philadelphia Orchestra, Charles Munch of the Boston Symphony and Howard Mitchell of the National Symphony are expected to attend.

Borrowed Capital from Husband

Mrs. Snow borrowed the $1,500 from her husband, the late Andrew Snow, a United States Steel executive, to start the Snow Concert Bureau. Her first contract was with the Philadelphia Orchestra which at that time was playing to half-filled halls here.

In six months, she had paid back the loan and was embarked on a career. She kept the Boston and Philadelphia Orchestras coming and attracting full houses at times when the city's own symphony [illegible] wondering [illegible] in

MRS. CONSTANCE SNOW
Leaving Musical Scene

Victor Borge, and lent her name and efforts to a series of charity benefits.

First Business Venture

It was Constance Snow's first venture into any kind of business. Until then, she confessed, she couldn't even balanced her personal checkbook.

But while her business grew, so did her family. Three children grew up and married and soon were producing grandchildren. Now there are six grandchildren and Mrs. Snow says it is time she gives more attention to them.

When it was learned Mrs. [illegible] was about $1.5 billion higher that the average in the final three months of 1955, and it was $20 billion higher than the income flow to the public in February, 1955.

The report said wage and salary disbursements in the auto [illegible]

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 397,884

APR 11 1956

Reds Snub Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra isn't going to Russia on its 10-country European tour this summer, but the Philadelphia Symphony will, it was announced yesterday.

The Bostonians had offered to include the U.S.S.R. in their tour, but the Soviet minister of culture extended the invitation to the Philadelphians instead.

The Philadelphia orchestra has accepted and has applied to the U. S. State Department for $110,000 to balance expenses under the emergency fund to support the international cultural exchange program.

On the other hand, Czechoslovakia has asked the Boston Orchestra to play there this August. The Czech offer is under consideration.

[illegible] Wellesley Night at Pops" on May 12th. This benefit, featuring Arthur Fiedler's Boston Pops Orchestra, is a colorful annual event, held to raise fund[illegible]

LUTHERAN CHURCH
Centre and Cypress S[illegible]
Rev. ARTHUR R. BLOCK[illegible]
CHURCH SERVICE — SUN[illegible]

Patronize Our Advertisers

Item (e)
LYNN, Mass.
Republican
Circ. 21,915

APR 12 1956

Swampscott Will Benefits Hub Groups

Public groups are given a total of $60,000 by the will of Mrs. Grace Hopkins Proctor of 14 Littles Point, Swampscott, which was recorded in the Registry of Probate in Salem yesterday. Value of the estate was not estimated.

The will, signed Oct. 14, 1953, with codicil dated March 18, 1955, nominates a daughter, Mrs. Barbara P. Thompson of Salem, and Allan H. W. Higgins of Boston, for executors. The codicil gives $100,000 each to two grandchildren, Eileen Burke Wilkinson and Charles Proctor Wilkinson, children of another daughter, Mrs. Frances P. Wilkinson of Washington, D. C.

After bequeathing the $60,000 in public gifts and a total of $75,500 to relatives and friends, the testament directs that the residue be given to adopted children of Mrs. Wilkinson, including any children adopted by her after the signing of the will.

The public gifts are: Boston YWCA, $15,000, of which $5000 is to be used for the Berkeley Residence Club; Boston Symphony Orchestra, Old South Church in Boston and Walker Missionary Homes, Inc., Auburndale, $10,000 each; Northfield Schools in East Northfield, trustees of Smith College in Northampton and Children's Hospital in Boston, $5000 each.

MANY GIFTS

Gifts of $10,000 each are directed to Sheelin V. Maxwell, J. Burke Wilkinson and Richard H. Thompson. Bequests of $7500 each are directed to Barry O. S. Maxwell and Simon K. Maxwell. Richard H. Thompson, Jr. and Joan Thompson are given $5000 apiece. Gifts of $3000 each are directed to Bertha H. Frye and Florence D. Estes.

Carolyn D. Smiley, Maude Meagher, James I. Riddell and Martha Riddell Gallagher are bequeathed $2000 each, and Marion E. Bond, $1500. Alio Spelto, Michael Sheehan, Catherine McKee, Paul R. Gosselin and Margaret Ford are each given $1000, the latter gift being contingent on her being in the employ of the testatrix at the time of her death.

Mrs. Proctor, who was the widow of Charles H. Proctor, directed that her two daughters share all tangible personal property. In directing the residue to the adopted children of her daughter, Mrs. Wilkinson, the testatrix stated that all of her children and their descendants by blood and her other relatives are well provided for.

ROCK OF AGES
FAMILY MONUMENTS
NORTH SHORE MONUMENT CO
THERESA H. PENDLETON
175 WINTER ST SA 8-1092
Opp. Riverside Cemetery

CARD OF THANKS

The family of the late Ernest B. Frye wishes to express their heartfelt thanks and appreciation to their relatives, friends, neighbors and business associates for the beautiful floral tributes and other acts of kindness extended to them during their recent bereavement.

Con[illegible] rom Page One

Proctc Wilkinson and Eileen Br ke Wilkinson, were bequeathed $100,000 each. They are children of a daughter, Mrs. Frances P. Wilkinson of Washington, D. C. Another daughter, Mrs. Barbara P. Thompson of Salem, was nominated as a co-executor of the will with Allan H. W. Higgins of Boston.

Mrs. Proctor awarded the following sums to friends:

Sheelin V. Maxwell, $10,000; J. Burke Wilkinson, $10,000; Richard H. Thompson, $10,000; Barry O. S. Maxwell, $7500; Simon K. Maxwell, $7500; Richard H. Thompson, Jr., $5000; Joan Thompson, $5000; Bertha H. Frye, $3000; Florence D. Estes, $3000; Carolyn D. Smiley, $2000; Maude Meagher, $2000; James I. Riddell, $2000; Martha Riddell Gallagher, $2000; Marion E. Bond, $1500; Alio Spelto, $1000; Catherine McKee, $1000; Paul R. Gosselin, $1000; and Margaret Ford, $1000.

The two daughters are to share all of the Swampscott woman's tangible personal property, according to the will, which stipulated that adopted children if one of the daughters, Mrs. Wilkinson, are to inherit the residue of the estate. Mrs. Proctor set forth that her children, their descendants by blood, and other relatives are well provided for.

Variety
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Weekly Amusements

APR 11 1956

Mass. Solons Mark 75th Anni of Boston Symph; RCA to Make 50G Film

Boston, April 10.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra was honored on its 75th anniversary by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts at the state house last week when resolutions, adopted by the State Senate and House of Representatives were presented to conductors Charles Munch and Arthur Fiedler. The citations were read by Richard L. Furbush, president of the Senate, and Michael J. Skerry, Speaker of the House. During the ceremony, Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony, and Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops, sat upon the rostrum.

It was the first time that a formal legislative tribute had be paid to a musical organization.

Lawrence (Larry) Kanaga, v president of RCA Victor Recor presented Munch and Fiedler $2,000 diamond-studded baton signed by French jeweler Van C & Arpels. Kanaga said that tor is making a $50,000 film color featuring the Boston phony and showing how re are made. The film is intend school students and other g Gift of the baton and mak the film commemorated the association between the Symphony and Victor.

The Senate resolution "Both the Boston Sympho the Boston Pops Orchest been the outstanding rep tives of the Commonwealth sachusetts. Their musical ments have enriched the the people throughout t and have brought greate and appreciation for th reputation of the people chusetts."

Advocate
ARLINGTON, Mass
Weekly Independent
Circ. 4,987

APR 12 1956

Enterprise
ACTON, Mass.
Weekly Ind. Rep.
Comb. Circ. 4,728

APR 12 1956

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Enterprise
CONCORD, Mass.
Ind. Rep.
Comb. Circ. 4728

APR 12 1956

Enterprise
BEDFORD, Mass.
Weekly Ind. R
Comb. Circ. 4,728

APR 12 1956

Enterprise
MAYNARD, Mass.
Weekly Ind. Rep.
Comb. Circ. 4,728

APR 12 1956

THREE RECORDINGS OVER 50 YEARS BECOME UN[illegible]

Boston—(UP) — A recordin commemorating the 75th anni versary season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra features the group playing the same piece under the batons of three conductors.

Three recordings of Berlioz' "Hungarian March" made over a period of nearly half a century were dubbed together electronically to sound as one continuous performance.

Karl Muck, who became conductor in 1906, starts the march The late Serge Koussevitzky "takes over" in the middle section and Charles Munch, the present director, concludes the piece.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 130,559

1 2 1956

Social Chatter

By Alison Arnold

FOR THE FIFTEENTH YEAR, the Peter Bent Brigham Hospital family and friends will gather in Symphony Hall, Thursday, May 3, for Brigham Night at the Pops. The Friends of the Peter Bent Brigham Hospital and alumnae of the Brigham School of Nursing, traditional annual co-sponsors of the benefit, are one of the oldest sponsoring groups for the Pops, now approaching their 71st season. Arthur Fiedler is planning a special birthday program for May 3, and Mrs. James H. Jackson, chairman, and her committee are working hard to make the fifteenth a memorable benefit. Proceeds will be used to modernize the reception room of the hospital's Outpatient Department. Gay invitations already have been mailed by Mrs. Jackson and some of her Brookline neighbors interested in the hospital. Among them are Mrs. Seymour Gray, Mrs. Franc D. Ingraham, Mrs. Thomas Quigley and Mrs. Fred D. Fowler. Mrs. Lucius T. Hill and Mrs. Donald V. Baker, Jr., are in charge of the Pops tickets, and Mrs. F. Gregg Bemis is concert treasurer. Mrs. Russell Baker is in charge of flowers, and their sellers, eight internes and eight nurses from the hospital. Also committee members are Mrs. James Donovan and Mrs. Harriet Brooks, serving in an advisory capacity for the Friends. Mrs. Harold S. Bird and Miss Elizabeth McMahon, representative of the alumnae of the Brigham School of Nursing.

* * *

GIRLS AND BOYS are coming in for an extra share of attention this month. Over in New York, Mrs. Byron G. Tosi, president of the Girls' Clubs of Boston, presided yesterday at the Girls' Clubs of America national luncheon at its eleventh annual conference at the Park Sheraton Hotel. She presented to the large audience of national delegates representing more than fifty clubs throughout the United States and Canada, Boston's Judge Jennie Loitmann Barron as guest speaker. Last week, in observance of National Boys' Club Week, the Bunker Hill Club held its annual mothers' tea and library awards, Friday afternoon, at 15 Green Street, Charlestown. Forrester A. Clark is president of the Boys' Clubs of Boston. Mrs. Amory Parker and Mrs. Richard Harte, wives of two of the new overseers, were present, and Mrs. Frank Mansfield Taylor, well-known lecturer on current affairs, presented the awards to the boys, who served tea to their guests and mothers.

MRS. TOSI

* * *

A BENEFIT POPS CONCERT, Wednesday evening, May 16, in Symphony Hall, will replenish the Boston Vassar Club's Scholarship Fund. For a number of years, the fund has enabled the local Vassar group to send several girls from the Boston area to Vassar College. Alumnae and friends of the college look forward to the Pops as a gay evening and reunion, as well as a chance to be a part of this worthwhile effort. Mrs. Thomas Morse of Brookline is chairman of the 1956 Pops committee. Virginia Bridge, also of Brookline, has charge of tickets. Other Brookline neighbors who are assisting Mrs. Morse are Sarah Jenkins and Mrs. J. Charles Drooker. Mrs. Andrew Rankin of Dedham and Mrs. Don Ross of Newton Highlands are working on pre-concert arrangements and other committee members include Mrs. H. Burton Powers of Wellesley and Mrs. Robert Haydock, Jr., of Newton Centre.

* * *

THE FINE ARTS FESTIVAL to be presented by the International Students' Center in Cambridge, May 4-6, is entitled "Images." It invites an interpretation of a nation through its visual arts. The students, in appreciation for what the Boston community has done for them, are planning in return, an exhibition of painting, sculpture and photography, representative of countries all over the world. There'll also be special instrumental and dance programs arranged for Friday, Saturday and Sunday evenings, as well as demonstrations of glass-blowing. The hospitality committee of the ISA gathered yesterday at a luncheon from 12-2 at the Center to discuss plans for the festival. At this regularly scheduled monthly meeting, reports were given by Mrs. Myron A. Hofer, co-chairman of the student planning committee for the festival, and Nanine Powell, the executive co-ordinator. Among those at the luncheon were Mrs. Herrman Blumgart, Mrs. Kirk Bryan, Mrs. Paul Chalmers, Mrs. Karl T. Compton, Mrs. John Cushman, Mrs. Eugene Floyd, Mrs. Oscar Horowitz, Mrs. Ernest Kahn, Mrs. Arthur Kohlenberg, Mrs. Calvert Magruder, Mrs. Alan Morse, Mrs. Norman Padelford, Miss Catherine Patton, Mrs. John W. Perry, Mrs. Neil H. Powell, Mrs. Edward Ryerson, Mrs. Somers Sturgis, Miss Louise Walworth and Mrs. Edward Yeomans, Jr., chairman.

* * *

THE INTERNATIONAL STUDENT CENTER, a roomy stucco house on Garden Street, Cambridge, and a quick step from the Hotel Continental, is a miniature UN. It provides students from abroad with a central gathering place with a friendly and aesthetically pleasing atmosphere, and its activities are both recreational and educational. Sunday afternoon teas for the students and interested public are regularly scheduled, and Sunday evenings are devoted to lectures of topical interest. These, however, are only part of the Center's innumerable activities. The director of the Center is John F. Reichard. Among those on the board of directors are James S. Turner, president; James Barr Ames, Erwin D. Canham, Mrs. Karl T. Compton, James Lawrence, Jr., Mrs. Nathan Pusey, Mrs. Paul Dudley White and James Perkins.

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 20,000

APR 1 2 1956

MUSIC IN REVIEW

By GERALD A. BERLIN

BERNSTEIN CONDUCTS BSO

"The program," said the concert bulletin, "which Leonard Bernstein has made for his present visit, while not officially for a memorial occasion, bears many memories of concerts under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky." This evocation of the late, great Doctor consisted of Mozart's early symphony in A major (K. 201), the first Boston performance of Robert Moev's Fourteen Variations for Orchestra, Stravinsky's Capriccio, for Piano and Orchestra, with Jesus Maria Sanroma as soloist, and Prokofieff's Symphony No. 5.

Mr. Bernstein, a conductor with a firm and knowledgeable hand, was in splendid form. His Mozart spun along smartly; his collaboration with Mr. Sanroma in Stravinsky's spare, inconsequential, but expertly wrought tour-de-force was brought off with a deftness beyond cavil; Mr. Moev's composition had more than passing merit; and the Prokofieff Fifth Symphony is already a modern classic. It is surprising, then, that such a bill of fare failed to prove more satisfying than it did. This in part was due, I think, to the overbalance towards the moderns. Also, to its length—the concert ran a good twenty minues longer than usual. But mostly, I suggest, the mischief resulted from the incompatibility of two works on the same program of such intensity as the Moev and the Prokofieff.

Mr. Moev's Variations were commissioned by the Koussevitsky Music Foundation and had their first performance by the Symphony of the Air last February 3rd in New York City under Mr. Bernstein's direction. The original theme is a powerful, sombre thing in itself and is clearly discernible throughout the fourteen connected variations that ensue. The initial effect of turbulence and foreboding is compounded by unrelieved use of tremendous chords, piercing brass dissonances, jagged rhythmic figurations and general pauses until the intensity of the mood becomes unendurable. What Mr. Moev needed was to ease off here and there—in other words, to pace the impact. As it turned out, the Variations on first hearing seemed something of vast promise that did not come off because they attempted too much.

Now the Fifth Symphony of Prokofieff is also a troubled work. Its anxieties and tensions are only partly hidden beneath bright melodies and brilliant orchestral plumage. If well proportioned, it is also very long and intense and deserves, and indeed must have, the fullest acti e participation of the listener, even though its line is quite easy to follow. For the first time I found that by the middle of the slow movement I had wandered. Since Mr. Bernstein's reading did the symphony fullest justice, I can only attribute this numbing of the sensibilities to the length of the program and to the emotional ennervation caused by the Moev work.

This week Mr. Munch returns to conduct a program consisting of Tchaikovsky's "Francesca da Rimini," Prokofieff's Violin Concerto No. 2 and the Brahms Double Concerto for Violin and Cello. Zino Francescatti and Samuel Mayes will be the soloists.

Cecelia Society's Production of Gluck's "Alceste"

The eighty-year-old Cecelia Society this week, Hugh Ross conducting, went afield into the realm of opera in Symphony Hall and presented Gluck's operatic masterpiece, "Alceste." Three crack soloists from the Metropolitan Opera, Margaret Harshaw, James MacCracken and Arthur Budney assisted. The result was something of major musical significance for these parts.

The opera deals, of course, with the legend of the Thessalian queen who offers her life in the place of her husband's, Admetus, as a sacrifice to Apollo, then is rescued from Hades and restored to earth by Hercules, eventually to receive Apollo's blessing. Although denominated an opera, "Alceste" is really a clear forerunner of the music drama. Hence, its stage motion is of a static sort that lends itself easily to a concert version. And that is more or less how the Cecelia Society mounted it. The chorus and soloists were in full dress, with the chorus seated at the back of the stage, the orchestra in front and the soloists entering from various parts, off to right, back and center, to indicate, as the very informative program notes pointed out, the varying physical situations of the drama.

It was an evening of much beauty. Christoph Gluck is one of those rare geniuses who achieved greatness without having thoroughly mastered the craft of composition. Handel is said to have remarked that his cook knew more counterpoint than Gluck and the threadbare quality of his textures is only too apparent even in his greatest works. Yet Gluck turned his deficiencies to advantage by making a virtue of simplicity, by his thorough understanding and exploitation of the dramatic situation and by capitalizing on his innate sense of melodic invention and natural grandeur. Nowhere are these qualities more apparent than in "Alceste," which along with "Iphigenia in Tauride," is far and away Gluck's greatest work.

The choristers turned in an able performance, as did the small, proficient orchestra. But the three guest soloists clinched the success. In fact, this was the best set of soloists that I have ever heard grace a local choral enterprise and that includes the large scale Boston Symphony choral presentations. Their magnificent voices, particularly Margaret Harshaw's, soared above the fortissimos of the forces (which Mr. Ross was not shy about using) with the ease and grandeur of clouds.

I do not know when "Alceste" was last performed here. Certainly its advent is a very rare one. With music so lovely and soloists of this calibre. one would have thought that a musical community of the size and intelligence of Boston might have filled every seat. Yet Symphony Hall was three-quarters empty. Cheers, then, to the Cecelia for effort and result. Tears for a Boston that has become so blase.

Graphic
NEWTON, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 8625

APR 1 2 1956

Citizen
BELMONT, Mass.
Weekly Non-partisan
Circ. 4,108

APR 1 3 1956

Local Sponsors of Wellesley Pops Night

A group of women of Belmont will be patronesses of "Wellesley Night at Pops" on May 12. This benefit, featuring Arthur Fiedler's Boston Pops Orchestra, is a colorful annual event, held to raise funds for providing financial aid to students.

Patronesses from Belmont include Mrs. John A. Donovan, Mrs. Norman Hughes, Mrs. Paul K. McElroy, and Mrs. Clark C. Stephenson.

This year Wellesley College is lending its own "Tupelos," eighteen talented young students with fresh vibrant voices, to the occasion.

Mrs. John P. Ratigan, Mrs. C. W. Lacy, Mrs. George H. Lusk, and Mrs. Isaac G. Swope.

News
ARLINGTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 9,700

APR 1 2 1956

Republican Club Plans Annual Lobster Lunch

The Annual Lobster Luncheon of the Arlington Women's Republican Club will be held at the Calvary Methodist Church, Wednesday, April 25, at 1 p.m.

Ralph Bonnell, Republican National Committeeman will be the speaker, and guests will include Representative Hollis M. Gott, representative Dorothy Thresher, Mrs. Bonnell, Mrs. Joseph L. Roberts, Republican State Committeewoman; and Arthur Sampson, Chairman of the Arlington Republican Town Committee.

President Mrs. Horace Homer will preside at the business meeting and will announce plans for the Republican Night at the Boston Pops Concert, June 2, which is being sponsored by the Arlington and Winchester Woman's Republican Clubs.

Ticket chairman for the luncheon is Mrs. Olaf Peterson, and members and their guests are urged to make early reservations.

Chronicle
NEEDHAM, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 4824

APR 1 2 1956

The members of the All State Chorus, Judi Brightman, Leslie Reed Penny Heald, Priscilla Goodwin, Carol Shannon and Nona Higgins; All State Band, Ann Stutsman and All State Orchestra, Dick Swanson spent the weekend in Pittsfield rehearsing for the All State Concert last Saturday. The Chorus was fortunate to have Miss Iva Dee Hiatt as its director. The band and orchestra were equally as fortunate with Mr. Paul Yoder and Francis Findlay. The group of eight students spent their time rehearsing at the Pittsfield High School. Rooms were provided by the residents of Pittsfield and the surrounding towns. Friday afternoon the members visited Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The recordings of the Concert were broadcasted over the Yankee Network at 9:30 Tuesday evening. The eight students will never forget the wonderful experience they had in Pittsfield.

Needham's gym show, given last Saturday night, was a huge success. People were standing in the hall watching the show. There were 13 acts, with the four grades participating in the meet. The class tug-of-war was won by the Seniors. The final was the Statuettes composed of boys painted all in silver assuming different group positions. The show was greatly enjoyed by all.

The Jewish Herald
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Weekly
Circ. 11,979

APR 1 3 1956

Munch To Conduct At Tuesday Concert

When the Boston Symphony Orchestra pays its last visit of the season to Providence to play a concert in the Veterans Auditorium next Tuesday evening, at 8:15, Charles Munch will introduce to this city the Symphony No. 6, called "Fantasies Symphoniques," by Bohuslav Martinu. Composed for Mr. Munch and performed under his direction for the first time last season, the Symphony recently received the award of the New York Music Critics Circle as "the best new orchestral score" performed in New York City during 1955.

For the first half of the concert Mr. Munch has scheduled Mozart's "Haffner" Symphony, Number 35, and Tchaikovsky's Overture-Fantasy, "Romeo and Juliet." The concert will conclude with Three Dances from the Ballet "The Three-Cornered Hat" by Manuel de Falla.

Reformer (e)
BRATTLEBORO, Vt.
Independent
Circ. 6,544

APR 1 4 1956

Leland and Gray

Prom Date May 1

The juniors, under the direction of Edward Adzima, are making good progress on plans for the prom to be held May 11. Preliminary voting for the queen has narrowed the field to five candidates.

* * *

Senior Class Trip.

The seniors will take a one-day trip to Boston May 17. They plan to visit the Logan International Airport in the morning, watch Cinerama in the afternoon and attend a Boston Pops concert in the evening. The trip will be made in private cars.

* * *

Band Concert

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 130,559

APR 12 1956

Social Chatter

By Alison Arnold

FOR THE FIFTEENTH YEAR, the Peter Bent Brigham Hospital family and friends will gather in Symphony Hall, Thursday, May 3, for Brigham Night at the Pops. The Friends of the Peter Bent Brigham Hospital and alumnae of the Brigham School of Nursing, traditional annual co-sponsors of the benefit, are one of the oldest sponsoring groups for the Pops, now approaching their 71st season. Arthur Fiedler is planning a special birthday program for May 3, and Mrs. James H. Jackson, chairman, and her committee are working hard to make the fifteenth a memorable benefit. Proceeds will be used to modernize the reception room of the hospital's Out-patient Department. Gay invitations already have been mailed by Mrs. Jackson and some of her Brookline neighbors interested in the hospital. Among them are Mrs. Seymour Gray, Mrs. Frane D. Ingraham, Mrs. Thomas Quigley and Mrs. Fred D. Fowler. Mrs. Lucius T. Hill and Mrs. Donald V. Baker, Jr., are in charge of the Pops tickets, and Mrs. F. Gregg Bemis is concert treasurer. Mrs. Russell Baker is in charge of flowers and their sellers, eight internes and eight nurses from the hospital. Also committee members are Mrs. James Donovan and Mrs. Harriet Brooks, serving in an advisory capacity for the Friends. Mrs. Harold S. Bird and Miss Elizabeth McMahon, representative of the alumnae of the Brigham School of Nursing.

* * *

GIRLS AND BOYS are coming in for an extra share of attention this month. Over in New York, Mrs. Byron G. Tosi, president of the Girls' Clubs of Boston, presided yesterday at the Girls' Clubs of America national luncheon at its eleventh annual conference at the Park Sheraton Hotel. She presented to the large audience of national delegates representing more than fifty clubs throughout the United States and Canada, Boston's Judge Jennie Loitmann Barron as guest speaker. Last week, in observance of National Boys' Club Week, the Bunker Hill Club held its annual mothers' tea and library awards, Friday afternoon, at 15 Green Street, Charlestown. Forrester A. Clark is president of the Boys' Clubs of Boston. Mrs. Amory Parker and Mrs. Richard Harte, wives of two of the new overseers, were present, and Mrs. Frank Mansfield Taylor, well-known lecturer on current affairs, presented the awards to the boys, who served tea to their guests and mothers.

MRS. TOSI

* * *

A BENEFIT POPS CONCERT, Wednesday evening, May 16, in Symphony Hall, will replenish the Boston Vassar Club's Scholarship Fund. For a number of years, the fund has enabled the local Vassar group to send several girls from the Boston area to Vassar College. Alumnae and friends of the college look forward to the Pops as a gay evening and reunion, as well as a chance to be a part of this worthwhile effort. Mrs. Thomas Morse of Brookline is chairman of the 1956 Pops committee. Virginia Bridge, also of Brookline, has charge of tickets. Other Brookline neighbors who are assisting Mrs. Morse are Sarah Jenkins and Mrs. J. Charles Drooker. Mrs. Andrew Rankin of Dedham and M[illegible] of Newton Highlands are working on pre-co[illegible] committee members include Mrs. [illegible] ley and Mrs. Robert Haydock, Jr.

* *

THE FINE ARTS FESTIVA[illegible] ternational Students' Center in [illegible] titled "Images." It invites an [illegible] through its visual arts. The stud[illegible] the Boston community has done [illegible] return, an exhibition of painting, [illegible] representative of countries all o[illegible] be special instrumental and dance [illegible] day, Saturday and Sunday evenin[illegible] of glass-blowing. The hospitality committee of the ISA gathered yesterday at a luncheon from 12-2 at the Center to discuss plans for the festival. At this regularly scheduled monthly meeting, reports were given by Mrs. Myron A. Hofer, co-chairman of the student planning committee for the festival, and Nanine Powell, the executive co-ordinator. Among those at the luncheon were Mrs. Herrman Blumgart, Mrs. Kirk Bryan, Mrs. Paul Chalmers, Mrs. Karl T. Compton, Mrs. John Cushman, Mrs. Eugene Floyd, Mrs. Oscar Horowitz, Mrs. Ernest Kahn, Mrs. Arthur Kohlenberg, Mrs. Calvert Magruder, Mrs. Alan Morse, Mrs. Norman Padelford, Miss Catherine Patton, Mrs. John W. Perry, Mrs. Neil H. Powell, Mrs. Edward Ryerson, Mrs. Somers Sturgis, Miss Louise Walworth and Mrs. Edward Yeomans, Jr., chairman.

* * *

THE INTERNATIONAL STUDENT CENTER, a roomy stucco house on Garden Street, Cambridge, and a quick step from the Hotel Continental, is a miniature UN. It provides students from abroad with a central gathering place with a friendly and aesthetically pleasing atmosphere, and its activities are both recreational and educational. Sunday afternoon teas for the students and interested public are regularly scheduled, and Sunday evenings are devoted to lectures of topical interest. These, however, are only part of the Center's innumerable activities. The director of the Center is John F. Reichard. Among those on the board of directors are James S. Turner, president; James Barr Ames, Erwin D. Canham, Mrs. Karl T. Compton, James Lawrence, Jr., Mrs. Nathan Pusey, Mrs. Paul Dudley White and James Perkins.

Ha[illegible] Pops Night

A distinguished group of prominent women of Newton will be patronesses of "Wellesley Night at Pops" on May 12. This benefit, featuring Arthur Fiedler's Boston Pops Orchestra, is a colorful annual event—held to raise funds for providing financial aid to students. This year Wellesley College is lending its own "Tupelos"—eighteen talented young students with fresh vibrant voices to the outstanding occasion.

Patronesses from Newton include Mrs. T. Edson Jewell, Jr., Mrs. Edward A. Caredis, Mrs. Joseph B. Jamiesen, Mrs. Norman W. Kempf, Miss Helen Townsend, Mrs. John E. Eaton, Jr., Mrs. George Frost, Mrs. William F. Ray, Mrs. Neil W. Swinton, Mrs. Percy L. Nelson, Mrs. Willis E. Pattison, Mrs. Ernest Dietz, Mrs. Edward C. Uehlein, Mrs. John A. Baybutt, Mrs. John P. Rattigan, Mrs. C. W. Lacy, Mrs. George H. Lusk, and Mrs. Isaac G. Swope.

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 20,000

APR 12 1956

MUSIC IN REVIEW

By GERALD A. BERLIN

BERNSTEIN CONDUCTS BSO

"The program," said the concert bulletin, "which Leonard Bernstein has made for his present visit, while not officially for a memorial occasion, bears many memories of concerts under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky." This evocation of the late, great Doctor consisted of Mozart's early symphony in A major (K. 201), the first Boston performance of Robert Moev's Fourteen Variations for Orchestra, Stravinsky's Capriccio, for Piano and Orchestra, with Jesus Maria Sanroma as soloist, and Prokofieff's Symphony No. 5.

Mr. Bernstein, a conductor with a firm and knowledgeable hand, was in splendid form. His Mozart spun along smartly; his collaboration with Mr. Sanroma in Stravinsky's spare, inconsequential, but expertly wrought tour-de-force was brought off with a deftness beyond cavil; Mr. Moev's composition had more than passing merit; and the Prokofieff Fifth Symphony is already a modern classic. It is surprising, then, that such a bill of fare failed to prove more satisfying than it did. This in part was due, I think, to the overbalance towards the moderns. Also, to its length—the concert ran a good twenty minues longer than usual. But mostly, I suggest, the mischief resulted from the incompatibility of two works on the same program of such intensity as the Moev and the Prokofieff.

Mr. Moev's Variations were commissioned by the Koussevitsky Music Foundation and had their first performance by the Symphony of the Air last February 3rd in New York City under Mr. Bernstein's direction. The original theme is a powerful, sombre thing in itself and is clearly discernible throughout the fourteen connected variations that ensue. The initial effect of turbulence and foreboding is compounded by unrelieved use of tremendous chords, piercing brass dissonances, jagged rhythmic figurations and general pauses until the intensity of the mood becomes unendurable. What Mr. Moev needed was to ease off here and there—in other words, to pace the impact. As it turned out, the Variations on first hearing seemed something of vast promise that did not come off because they attempted too much.

Now the Fifth Symphony of Prokofieff is also a troubled work. Its anxieties and tensions are only partly hidden beneath bright melodies and brilliant orchestral plumage. If well proportioned, it is also very long and intense and deserves, and indeed must have, the fullest acti e participation of the listener, even though its line is quite easy to follow. For the first time I found that by the middle of the slow movement I had wandered. Since Mr. Bernstein's reading did the symphony fullest justice, I can only attribute this numbing of the sensibilities to the length of the program and to the emotional ennervation caused by the Moev work.

This week Mr. Munch returns to conduct a program consisting of Tchaikovsky's "Fra[illegible]esca da Rimini," Prokofieff's Violin Concerto No. 2 and the Brahms Double Concerto for Violin and Cello. Zino Francescatti and Samuel Mayes will be the soloists.

Cecelia Society's Production of Gluck's "Alceste"

The eighty-year-old Cecelia Society this week, Hugh Ross conducting, went afield into the realm of opera in Symphony Hall and presented Gluck's operatic masterpiece, "Alceste." Three crack soloists from the Metropolitan Opera, Margaret Harshaw, James MacCracken and Arthur Budney assisted. The result was something of major musical significance for these parts.

The opera deals, of course, with the legend of the Thessalian queen who offers her life in the place of her husband's, Admetus, as a sacrifice to Apollo, then is rescued from Hades [illegible]d restored to earth by Hercules, eventually to receive Apollo's [illegible]essing. Although denominated an opera, "Alceste" is really a [illegible]ear forerunner of the music drama. Hence, its stage motion is [illegible] a static sort that lends itself easily to a concert version. And [illegible]at is more or less how the Cecelia Society mounted it. The [illegible]orus and soloists were in full dress, with the chorus seated at [illegible] back of the stage, the orchestra in front and the soloists [illegible]tering from various parts, off to right, back and center, to [illegible]licate, as the very informative program notes pointed out, the [illegible]rying physical situations of the drama.

It was an evening of much beauty. Christoph Gluck is one [illegible] those rare geniuses who achieved greatness without having [illegible]roughly mastered the craft of composition. Handel is said to [illegible]ve remarked that his cook knew more counterpoint than Gluck [illegible]d the threadbare quality of his textures is only too apparent [illegible]en in his greatest works. Yet Gluck turned his deficiencies to [illegible]vantage by making a virtue of simplicity, by his thorough [illegible]derstanding and exploitation of the dramatic situation and by [illegible]pitalizing on his innate sense of melodic invention and natural [illegible]ndeur. Nowhere are these qualities more apparent than in [illegible]lceste," which along with "Iphigenia in Tauride," is far and [illegible]ay Gluck's greatest work.

The choristers turned in an able performance, as did the [illegible]all, proficient orchestra. But the three guest soloists clinched [illegible] success. In fact, this was the best set of soloists that I have [illegible]r heard grace a local choral enterprise and that includes the [illegible]arge scale Boston Symphony choral presentations. Their magnificent voices, particularly Margaret Harshaw's, soared above the fortissimos of the forces (which Mr. Ross was not shy about using) with the ease and grandeur of clouds.

I do not know when "Alceste" was last performed here. Certainly its advent is a very rare one. With music so lovely and soloists of this calibre, one would have thought that a musical community of the size and intelligence of Boston might have filled every seat. Yet Symphony Hall was three-quarters empty. Cheers, then, to the Cecelia for effort and result. Tears for a Boston that has become so blase.

News
ARLINGTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 9,700

APR 12 1956

Republican Club Plans Annual Lobster Lunch

The Annual Lobster Luncheon of the Arlington Women's Republican Club will be held at the Calvary Methodist Church, Wednesday, April 25, at 1 p.m.

Ralph Bonnell, Republican National Committeeman will be the speaker, and guests will include Representative Hollis M. Gott, Representative [illegible] Thrasher, Mrs. Bonnell, Mrs. Joseph L. Roberts, Republican State Committeewoman; and Arthur Sampson, Chairman of the Arlington Republican Town Committee.

President Mrs. Horace Homer will preside at the business meeting and will announce plans for the Republican Night at the Boston Pops Concert, June 2, which is being sponsored by the Arlington and Winchester Woman's Republican Clubs.

Ticket chairman for the luncheon is Mrs. Olaf Peterson, and members and their guests are urged to make early reservations.

Chronicle
NEEDHAM, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 4824

APR 12 1956

The members of the All State Chorus, Judi Brightman, Leslie Reed Penny Heald, Priscilla Goodwin, Carol Shannon and Nona Higgins; All State Band, Ann Stutsman and All State Orchestra, Dick Swanson spent the weekend in Pittsfield rehearsing for the All State Concert last Saturday. The Chorus was fortunate to have Miss Iva Dee Hiatt as its director. The band and orchestra were equally as fortunate with Mr. Paul Yoder and Francis Findlay. The group of eight students spent their time rehearsing at the Pittsfield High School. Rooms were provided by the residents of Pittsfield and the surrounding towns. Friday afternoon the members visited Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The recordings of the Concert were broadcasted over the Yankee Network at 9:30 Tuesday evening. The eight students will never forget the wonderful experience they had in Pittsfield.

Needham's gym show, given last Saturday night, was a huge success. People were standing in the hall watching the show. There were 13 acts, with the four grades participating in the meet. The class tug-of-war was won by the Seniors. The final was the Statuettes composed of boys painted all in silver assuming different group positions. The show was greatly enjoyed by all.

The Jewish Herald
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Weekly
Circ. 11,979

APR 13 1956

Munch To Conduct At Tuesday Concert

When the Boston Symphony Orchestra pays its last visit of the season to Providence to play a concert in the Veterans Auditorium next Tuesday evening, at 8:15, Charles Munch will introduce to this city the Symphony No. 6, called "Fantasies Symphoniques," by Bohuslav Martinu. Composed for Mr. Munch and performed under his direction for the first time last season, the Symphony recently received the award of the New York Music Critics Circle as "the best new orchestral score" performed in New York City during 1955.

For the first half of the concert Mr. Munch has scheduled Mozart's "Haffner" Symphony, Number 35, and Tchaikovsky's Overture-Fantasy, "Romeo and Juliet." The concert will conclude with Three Dances from the Ballet "The Three-Cornered Hat" by Manuel de Falla.

Reformer (e)
BRATTLEBORO, Vt.
Independent
Circ. 6,544

APR 14 1956

Leland and Gray

Prom Date May 1

The juniors, under the direction of Edward Adzima, are making good progress on plans for the prom to be held May 11. Preliminary voting for the queen has narrowed the field to five candidates.

* * *

Senior Class Trip.

The seniors will take a one-day trip to Boston May 17. They plan to visit the Logan International Airport in the morning, watch Cinerama in the afternoon and attend a Boston Pops concert in the evening. The trip will be made in private cars.

* * *

Band Concert

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 122,000

APR 12 1956

Society

Pops on May 3 to Benefit Peter Bent Brigham Hospital

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

A 15th anniversary present of plate glass instead of crystal is the goal of Friends of the Peter Bent Brigham Hospital this year. Proceeds from the May 3 Pops concert at Symphony Hall, which will be the 15th Peter Bent night at Pops, will go to modernize the reception room of the Outpatient Department.

Eight internes and eight nurses will sell flowers at the benefit in their white hospital coats, according to plans being made by Mrs. Russell Baker. Paying tribute to the 15 years of association between the Pops Orchestra and the Peter Bent, conductor Arthur Fiedler will offer a special birthday program for the concert.

Mrs. James H. Jackson heads the committee at work on the occasion. Helping her to send out invitations this week are Mrs. Seymour Gray, Mrs. Fred D. Fowler, Mrs. Franc D. Ingraham and Mrs. Thomas Quigley. Tickets are the responsibility of Mrs. Lucius T. Hill and Mrs. Donald V. Baker Jr., working with Mrs. F. Gregg Bemis as concert treasurer. Advisory committee members also helping include Miss Elizabeth McMahon of the Brigham School of Nursing Alumnae, Mrs. James Donovan, Mrs. Harold S. Bird and Mrs. Harriet Brooks.

THE GOLDEN JUBILEE of the Visiting Nurse Association of Somerville will be observed at a series of events this Spring, starting with a 50th anniversary tea next Tuesday afternoon. Ivan H. Hoyt, Loring P. Gleason and William Jeffreys make up the general committee, working with Mrs. Paul E. Tierney, president; Mrs. Robert Repetto, second vice president; John J. Donahue, treasurer; Morgan E. Williams, assistant treasurer; and Mrs. Royal Caldwell, secretary. They will receive with Miss Mary E. Mullins, executive director.

Mrs. Repetto has named Mrs. Benjamin Russman as chairman of hostesses, Mrs. Leo MacDonald to head the food committee; Mrs. Harold Freeman, invitations; Mrs. Norman Corwin, tables, and Mrs. Frederick Matheson, flowers.

BUSY VASSAR ALUMNAE have invitations for Pops May 16, when the Boston Vassar Club will sponsor the Symphony Hall Vassar Pops concert to benefit the club's Scholarship Night, and New York invitations to see the Personality Patterns in Paint that Pauline Dillingham Ward (Mrs. Charles L. Ward) of Concord is showing at 156 East 79th st., April 17 to benefit the Vassar Alumnae Fund. Vassar classmates whose "portraits" are included in this exhibition are Mrs. Howland Walter of Cambridge, Mrs. J. Andrew Heath of Marblehead, Mrs. John Norwood of Concord, Mrs. Converse Hill of Lexington and Mrs. Paul Tubby of Belmont. Mrs. Heath will go to New York for the exhibit on her way to Poughkeepsie to attend the Alumnae Council meeting at Vassar.

Vassar Pops chairman this year is Mrs. Thomas Morse of Brookline, and ticket chairman is Miss Virginia Bridge of Brookline. Others of the committee are Mrs. Andrew Rankin, Dedham; Mrs. Don Rose, Newton; Mrs. Robert Haydock Jr., Newton Centre; Mrs. H. Burton Powers, Wellesley; Miss Sarah Jenkins and Mrs. J. Charles Drooker Brookline.

ENTERPRISING youngsters in classes five and six at the Lesley-Ellis School in Cambridge will present their version of "Robin Hood" tonight at 8 o'clock at the school, to benefit their Student Activities Fund. The cast includes Arthur Lemos, Robert Chernis, Seth Coon, Ronald Norman, Theodore Rodgers, Juliet Kepes, Deborah Ellis, Dennis Willmott, Fred Merriam, Peter Pavlo, Chandra Salvi, Martha Saxton, Sam Sheps, David Bernstein, David Dillon, Susan Follett and Christine Marston.

A SEPTEMBER WEDDING is planned by Miss Ann Lingley, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. James R. Lingley of Framingham, who are announcing her engagement to William Dickson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Leo Dickson, also of Framingham.

Miss Lingley attended Middlebury College and the Prince School at Simmons. Her fiance is an M. I. T. senior.

MARKING THE LEAGUE'S FIRST BIRTHDAY, N. E. Baptist Hospital League members will present Fred Waring and the Pennsylvanians in the only Boston showing of "Hear! Hear!", a new kind of musical, at the Boston Opera House April 27. Proceeds will benefit the hospital. Reservations may be made with Mrs. Lambert A. Suor or Mrs. Benoit J. Demers. Tickets go on public sale April 17.

A FIRST CHILD, Betsy, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Emanuel Goldberg on April 7 at the Beth Israel Hospital. She is the grandchild of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Masicov of Brookline and of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Goldberg of Lynn.

THE CHILDREN'S ROOM at the Ellis Memorial will have a new lighting system thanks to a $200 check presented by Mrs. Hugh T. Putnam (left) of the Junior League to Mrs. S. Eliot Guild, president of Ellis Memorial and Robert K. Hutchins, its executive director. Funds were raised by the League's Bargain Box and Boris Goldovsky lectures.

DRESSES worn by famous 19th Century women will be modeled by Concord Academy students and their mothers tomorrow and Saturday. Marty Poole wears a dress that belonged to Mrs. Jane Welch Carlisle. The four upper classes at the academy are sponsoring the "Glass of Fashion" show with historic costumes to raise funds for a senior common room.

Post (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 285,839

APR 12 1956

Society

Special 'Pops' Night Will Honor Hospital

By ROSE WALSH

A special Pops birthday program is being planned by the noted conductor, Arthur Fiedler, for May 3, because it marks the 15th anniversary of Brigham Night at the famous popular concerts, now approaching their 71st season, in Symphony Hall. The Friends of the Peter Bent Brigham Hospital and alumnae of its School of Nursing, are traditional co-sponsors for the annual benefit. Proceeds will be used to modernize the reception room of the hospital's Outpatient Department.

Invitations for the festive occasion have already been mailed by Mrs. James H. Jackson, chairman, and her committee including Mrs. Seymour Gray, Mrs Franc D. Ingraham, Mrs. Thomas Quigley and Mrs. Fred D. Fowler. Mrs. Lucius T. Hill and Mrs. Donald V. Baker, Jr., are handling the tickets and Mrs. F. Gregg Bemis is concert treasurer. Mrs. Russell Baer is in charge of flowers and the sellers who will comprise eight internes and eight nurses from the hospital.

* * *

Guests at GM Preview

Harlow H. Curtice, General Motors president, will greet a distinguished group of Boston guests at Wednesday afternoon's elaborate preview of the GM Motorama of 1956 in the spacious and attractively decorated Commonwealth Armory.

Acceptances to the preview invitations have been received from Mr. and Mrs. Nelson W. Aldrich, Mr. and Mrs. George Alpert, Mr. and Mrs. Harvey H. Bundy, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Dennison, Mr. and Mrs. B. Devereaux Barker, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Edward L. Bigelow, Dr. and Mrs. Philip D. Bonnet, Mr. and Mrs. Louis W. Cabot, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas D. Cabot, Mr. and Mrs. Francis W. Capper, Mr. and Mrs. Georges Doriot, Mr. and Mrs. Augustin H. Parker, Jr., and many others.

* * *

Fred Waring Benefit

A new kind of musical at the Boston Opera House, Fred Waring and the Pennsylvanians in the only Boston showing of "Hear! Hear!" on Friday evening, April 27, has the New England Baptist Hospital League as sponsors.

Tickets will be available at the Opera House starting Tuesday. Meanwhile coping with advance reservations are Mrs. Lambert Suor, chairman of reservations; Mrs. Benoit J. Demers, co-chairman, Mrs. Roger Billings, Mrs. George Waldo Dean, Mrs. Stanley Newman, Mrs. Gordon Scott, Sr., and Mrs. George Williamson.

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 106,753

APR 15 1956

BERNSTEIN TO LEAD BOSTON SYMPHONY

Leonard Bernstein will conduct the Boston Symphjony Orchestra in music by two contemporary composers tomorrow (NBC Radio, 8.15 p. m., EST). Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist, will be soloist.

The opening work will be "Fourteen Variations for Orchestra" by Robert Moevs, American composer, who wrote the work on commission from the Koussevitzky Foundation. It was first performed last February in New York by the Symphony of the Air under Bernstein's direction. The remaining portion of the concert will be devoted to Igor Stravinsky's "Capriccio for Piano and Orchestra" with Sanroma as soloist.

Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 179,065

APR 15 1956

Symphony Recording Is Three-in-One

Boston — (UP) — A recording commemorating the 75th anniversary season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra features the group playing the same piece under the batons of three conductors.

Three recordings of Berlioz' "Hungarian March" made over a period of nearly half a century were dubbed together electronically to sound as one continuous performance.

Karl Muck, who became conductor in 1906, starts the march. The late Serge Koussevitzky "takes over" in the middle section and Charles Munch, the present director, concludes the piece.

Cash Box
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Weekly

APR 14 1956

Boston Symphony Takes Bow in State Senate

BOSTON—The State Senate and House of Representatives on Tuesday, April 3, cited the Boston Symphony Orchestra as "Ambassadors of Goodwill to all the peoples of the world."

The citations, commemorating the musical organization's 75th anniversary, were presented at a unique ceremony in the Senate assembly room of the State House here. Michael J. Skerry, Speaker of the House and Richard Furbush, President of the Senate, made the presentations.

At the same time, L. W. Kanaga, vice president of RCA Victor Records, presented the Symphony with a $2,000 diamond-studded baton especially designed by the world-famous French jeweler, Van Cleef and Arpels. The gift marked the 40-year association between the Orchestra and the recording company.

Charles Munch, music director and conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra, accepted the citations and baton for the other members of the musical organization.

Kanaga told the joint meeting of the Massachusetts legislature that his company is "now spending more than $50,000 on a color moving picture featuring the Boston Symphony. The picture, which will show how a record is made, will be available in the fall for showings in schools and before other groups. We are confident that this film will help to add just a little lustre to the distinguished contributions which these great Boston musicmakers have already made to the better understanding and appreciation of music."

The resolution of the House cited "the great contributions" made by the orchestra "to the cultural prestige of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts."

"Wherever good music is known and appreciated," the citation added, "the Boston Symphony Orchestra enjoys an unparalleled reputation for its outstanding interpretation of the world's great compositions.

"Through Concert Hall appearances and RCA Victor recordings the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Conductors Charles Munch and Arthur Fiedler have acquired an enviable reputation as Ambassadors of Goodwill to all the peoples of the world."

The Senatorial resolution said it was issued "in tangible recognition of the influence the Boston Symphony Orchestra has had in extending the musical horizons of the entire world."

"Both the Boston Symphony and the Boston Pops Orchestra, under the leadership of Charles Munch and Arthur Fiedler," the resolution added, "have been outstanding representatives of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. Their musical achievements have enriched the lives of the people throughout the world and have brought greater respect and appreciation for the cultural reputation of the people of Massachusetts."

The Boston Symphony Orchestra was founded in 1881 by Major Henry Lee Higginson. Its conductors have included Arthur Nikisch, Karl Muck, Pierre Monteux and Serge Koussevitsky. Charles Munch is currently concluding his seventh season as the orchestra's music director.

The anniversary season will be climaxed by a five-week tour of Europe during August and September, including five performances at the famed Edinburgh Festival.

Participating in the ceremonies were Alan Steinert, President of The Eastern Company, RCA Victor distributor in Boston; Thomas D. Perry, Jr., Manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; Raymond W. Saxon, Northeastern Regional Manager, Radio Corporation of America; and Alan Kayes, Director of Artists and Repertoire, RCA Victor Records.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 122,000

APR 12 1956

Society

Pops on May 3 to Benefit Peter Bent Brigham Hospital

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

A 15th anniversary present of plate glass instead of crystal is the goal of Friends of the Peter Bent Brigham Hospital this year. Proceeds from the May 3 Pops concert at Symphony Hall, which will be the 15th Peter Bent night at Pops, will go to modernize the reception room of the Outpatient Department.

Eight internes and eight nurses will sell flowers at the benefit in their white hospital coats, according to plans being made by Mrs. Russell Baker. Paying tribute to the 15 years of association between the Pops Orchestra and the Peter Bent, conductor Arthur Fiedler will offer a special birthday program for the concert.

Mrs. James H. Jackson heads the committee at work on the occasion. Helping her to send out invitations this week are Mrs. Seymour Gray, Mrs. Fred D. Fowler, Mrs. Franc D. Ingraham and Mrs. Thomas Quigley. Tickets are the responsibility of Mrs. Lucius T. Hill and Mrs. Donald V. Baker Jr., working with Mrs. F. Gregg Bemis as concert treasurer. Advisory committee members also helping include Miss Elizabeth McMahon of the Brigham School of Nursing Alumnae, Mrs. James Donovan, Mrs. Harold S. Bird and Mrs. Harriet Brooks.

THE GOLDEN JUBILEE of the Visiting Nurse Association of Somerville will be observed at a series of events this Spring, starting with a 50th anniversary tea next Tuesday afternoon. Ivan H. Hoyt, Loring P. Gleason and William Jeffreys make up the general committee, working with Mrs. Paul E. Tierney, president; Mrs. Robert Repetto, second vice president; John J. Donahue, treasurer; Morgan E. Williams, assistant treasurer; and Mrs. Royal Caldwell, secretary. They will receive with Miss Mary E. Mullins, executive director.

Mrs. Repetto has named Mrs. Benjamin Russman as chairman of hostesses, Mrs. Leo MacDonald to head the food committee; Mrs. Harold Freeman, invitations; Mrs. Norman Corwin, tables, and Mrs. Frederick Matheson, flowers.

BUSY VASSAR ALUMNAE have invitations for Pops May 16, when the Boston Vassar Club will sponsor the Symphony Hall Vassar Pops concert to benefit the club's Scholarship Night, and New York invitations to see the Personality Patterns in Paint that Pauline Dillingham Ward (Mrs. Charles L. Ward) of Concord is showing at 156 East 79th st., April 17 to benefit the Vassar Alumnae Fund. Vassar classmates whose "portraits" are included in this exhibition are Mrs. Howland Walter of Cambridge, Mrs. J. Andrew Heath of Marblehead, Mrs. John Norwood of Concord, Mrs. Converse Hill of Lexington and Mrs. Paul Tubby of Belmont. Mrs. Heath will go to New York for the exhibit on her way to Poughkeepsie to attend the Alumnae Council meeting at Vassar.

Vassar Pops chairman this year is Mrs. Thomas Morse of Brookline, and ticket chairman is Miss Virginia Bridge of Brookline. Others of the committee are Mrs. Andrew Rankin, Dedham; Mrs. Don Rose, Newton; Mrs. Robert Haydock Jr., Newton Centre; Mrs. H. Burton Powers, Wellesley; Miss Sarah Jenkins and Mrs. J. Charles Drooker Brookline.

ENTERPRISING youngsters in classes five and six at the Lesley-Ellis School in Cambridge will present their version of "Robin Hood" tonight at 8 o'clock at the school, to benefit their Student Activities Fund. The cast includes Arthur Lemos, Robert Chernis, Seth Coon, Ronald Norman, Theodore Rodgers, Juliet Kepes, Deborah Ellis, Dennis Willmott, Fred Merriam, Peter Pavlo, Chandra Salvi, Martha Saxton, Sam Sheps, David Bernstein, David Dillon, Susan Follett and Christine Marston.

A SEPTEMBER WEDDING is planned by Miss Ann Lingley, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. James R. Lingley of Framingham, who are announcing her engagement to William Dickson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Leo Dickson, also of Framingham.

Miss Lingley attended Middlebury College and the Prince School at Simmons. Her fiance is an M. I. T. senior.

MARKING THE LEAGUE'S FIRST BIRTHDAY, N. E. Baptist Hospital League members will present Fred Waring and the Pennsylvanians in the only Boston showing of "Hear! Hear!", a new kind of musical, at the Boston Opera House April 27. Proceeds will benefit the hospital. Reservations may be made with Mrs. Lambert A. Suor or Mrs. Benoit J. Demers. Tickets go on public sale April 17.

A FIRST CHILD, Betsy, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Emanuel Goldberg on April 7 at the Beth Israel Hospital. She is the grandchild of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Masicov of Brookline and of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Goldberg of Lynn.

THE CHILDREN'S ROOM at the Ellis Memorial will have a new lighting system thanks to a $200 check presented by Mrs. Hugh T. Putnam (left) of the Junior League to Mrs. S. Eliot Guild, president of Ellis Memorial and Robert K. Hutchins, its executive director. Funds were raised by the League's Bargain Box and Boris Goldovsky lectures.

DRESSES worn by famous 19th Century women will be modeled by Concord Academy students and their mothers tomorrow and Saturday. Marty Poole wears a dress that belonged to Mrs. Jane Welch Carlisle. The four upper classes at the academy are sponsoring the "Glass of Fashion" show with historic costumes to raise funds for a senior common room.

Post (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 285,839

APR 12 1956

Society

Special 'Pops' Night Will Honor Hospital

By ROSE WALSH

A special Pops birthday program is being planned by the noted conductor, Arthur Fiedler, for May 3, because it marks the 15th anniversary of Brigham Night at the famous popular concerts, now approaching their 71st season, in Symphony Hall. The Friends of the Peter Bent Brigham Hospital and alumnae of its School of Nursing, are traditional co-sponsors for the annual benefit. Proceeds will be used to modernize the reception room of the hospital's Outpatient Department.

Invitations for the festive occasion have already been mailed by Mrs. James H. Jackson, chairman, and her committee including Mrs. Seymour Gray, Mrs Franc D. Ingraham, Mrs. Thomas Quigley and Mrs. Fred D. Fowler. Mrs. Lucius T. Hill and Mrs. Donald V. Baker, Jr., are handling the tickets and Mrs. F. Gregg Bemis is concert treasurer. Mrs. Russell Baer is in charge of flowers and the sellers who will comprise eight internes and eight nurses from the hospital.

* * *

Guests at GM Preview

Harlow H. Curtice, General Motors president, will greet a distinguished group of Boston guests at Wednesday afternoon's elaborate preview of the GM Motorama of 1956 in the spacious and attractively decorated Commonwealth Armory.

Acceptances to the preview invitations have been received from Mr. and Mrs. Nelson W. Aldrich, Mr. and Mrs. George Alpert, Mr. and Mrs. Harvey H. Bundy, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Dennison, Mr. and Mrs. B. Devereaux Barker, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Edward L. Bigelow, Dr. and Mrs. Philip D. Bonnet, Mr. and Mrs. Louis W. Cabot, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas D. Cabot, Mr. and Mrs. Francis W. Capper, Mr. and Mrs. Georges Doriot, Mr. and Mrs. Augustin H. Parker, Jr., and many others.

* * *

Fred Waring Benefit

A new kind of musical at the Boston Opera House, Fred Waring and the Pennsylvanians in the only Boston showing of "Hear! Hear!" on Friday evening, April 27, has the New England Baptist Hospital League as sponsors.

Tickets will be available at the Opera House starting Tuesday. Meanwhile coping with advance reservations are Mrs. Lambert Suor, chairman of reservations; Mrs. Benoit J. Demers, co-chairman, Mrs. Roger Billings, Mrs. George Waldo Dean, Mrs. Stanley Newman, Mrs. Gordon Scott, Sr., and Mrs. George Williamson.

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 106,753

APR 15 1956

BERNSTEIN TO LEAD BOSTON SYMPHONY

Leonard Bernstein will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in music by two contemporary composers tomorrow (NBC Radio, 8.15 p. m., EST). Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist, will be soloist.

The opening work will be "Fourteen Variations for Orchestra" by Robert Moevs, American composer, who wrote the work on commission from the Koussevitzky Foundation. It was first performed last February in New York by the Symphony of the Air under Bernstein's direction. The remaining portion of the concert will be devoted to Igor Stravinsky's "Capriccio for Piano and Orchestra" with Sanroma as soloist.

Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 179,065

APR 15 1956

Symphony Recording Is Three-in-One

Boston — (UP) — A recording commemorating the 75th anniversary season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra features the group playing the same piece under the batons of three conductors.

Three recordings of Berlioz' "Hungarian March" made over a period of nearly half a century were dubbed together electronically to sound as one continuous performance.

Karl Muck, who became conductor in 1906, starts the march. The late Serge Koussevitzky "takes over" in the middle section and Charles Munch, the present director, concludes the piece.

Cash Box
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Weekly

APR 14 1956

Boston Symphony Takes Bow in State Senate

BOSTON—The State Senate and House of Representatives on Tuesday, April 3, cited the Boston Symphony Orchestra as "Ambassadors of Goodwill to all the peoples of the world."

The citations, commemorating the musical organization's 75th anniversary, were presented at a unique ceremony in the Senate assembly room of the State House here. Michael J. Skerry, Speaker of the House and Richard Furbush, President of the Senate, made the presentations.

At the same time, L. W. Kanaga, vice president of RCA Victor Records, presented the Symphony with a $2,000 diamond-studded baton especially designed by the world-famous French jeweler, Van Cleef and Arpels. The gift marked the 40-year association between the Orchestra and the recording company.

Charles Munch, music director and conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra, accepted the citations and baton for the other members of the musical organization.

Kanaga told the joint meeting of the Massachusetts legislature that his company is "now spending more than $50,000 on a color moving picture featuring the Boston Symphony. The picture, which will show how a record is made, will be available in the fall for showings in schools and before other groups. We are confident that this film will help to add just a little lustre to the distinguished contributions which these great Boston music-makers have already made to the better understanding and appreciation of music."

The resolution of the House cited "the great contributions" made by the orchestra "to the cultural prestige of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts."

"Wherever good music is known and appreciated," the citation added, "the Boston Symphony Orchestra enjoys an unparalleled reputation for its outstanding interpretation of the world's great compositions.

"Through Concert Hall appearances and RCA Victor recordings the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Conductors Charles Munch and Arthur Fiedler have acquired an enviable reputation as Ambassadors of Goodwill to all the peoples of the world."

The Senatorial resolution said it was issued "in tangible recognition of the influence the Boston Symphony Orchestra has had in extending the musical horizons of the entire world."

"Both the Boston Symphony and the Boston Pops Orchestra, under the leadership of Charles Munch and Arthur Fiedler," the resolution added, "have been outstanding representatives of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. Their musical achievements have enriched the lives of the people throughout the world and have brought greater respect and appreciation for the cultural reputation of the people of Massachusetts."

The Boston Symphony Orchestra was founded in 1881 by Major Henry Lee Higginson. Its conductors have included Arthur Nikisch, Karl Muck, Pierre Monteux and Serge Koussevitsky. Charles Munch is currently concluding his seventh season as the orchestra's music director.

The anniversary season will be climaxed by a five-week tour of Europe during August and September, including five performances at the famed Edinburgh Festival.

Participating in the ceremonies were Alan Steinert, President of The Eastern Company, RCA Victor distributor in Boston; Thomas D. Perry, Jr., Manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; Raymond W. Saxon, Northeastern Regional Manager, Radio Corporation of America; and Alan Kayes, Director of Artists and Repertoire, RCA Victor Records.

KILGORE, TEX.
NEWS-HERALD
Circ. D. 6,258 · S. 6,258
APR 13 1956

BY COMMUNITY CONCERTS

Versatile 'Pops' Sought For Kilgore

"A Strauss waltz is as good a thing as a Beethoven symphony. It's nice to eat a good chunk of beef, but you want a slice of light dessert, too."

This belief of Arthur Fiedler, popular director of the Boston "Pops" Orchestra which plays popular music as well as the classics, has made him beloved in his native Boston, since he began in 1929.

Kilgore music lovers will have an opportunity to hear this 90-piece orchestra play such numbers as "Grand Canyon Suite" and "Naughty Lady of Shady Lane," a Tschaikovsky Polonaise and "Three Coins in a Fountain," for these and many others are in the versatile repertoire of Fiedler's musicians.

That is, Kilgore will have an opportunity to hear the Boston Pops if the Community Concerts membership drive, which ends Saturday, is as successful as it has been in the past seven years.

Over 700 memberships had been turned in to headquarters on the mezzanine of The Kilgore hotel late Thursday. A check-up will be held Friday afternoon.

Mrs. C. D. Wyatt, secretary of the drive, urged workers to turn in their reports as soon as possible. She said that those who wanted memberships and had not been contacted by Saturday should call 6171 or 6172. The drive will definitely be closed Saturday at 5 p.m.

Speaking of the lighter classics in terms of dessert, Fiedler says that his aim is to dish up the dessert as expertly as a Paris chef. "I'm very particular about that," he says.

Fiedler is known to Boston first, of course, as an eminent conductor, but also as an amateur fireman. He is an active member of the Boston Fire Department and his car is equipped with a short wave radio and siren to make sure that he doesn't miss out on any fires. Many cities, including Chicago and San Francisco, have made him honorary fire chief, and, on tours, when not in the concert hall, he can usually be found at the nearest fire station. He is also an ardent prize fight enthusiast.

With the Boston "Pops," the 1956-57 series may include Eileen Farrell, soprano; Rudolf Firkusny or Jorge Bolet, pianists; the Beaux Arts trio with Daniel Guilet, violinist, Bernard Greenhouse, cellist and Mennahem Pressler, pianist.

Other available attractions include Rey and Gomez, Spanish dancers; Jon Crain, tenor, and many more.

CHAMP MEETS CHAMP . . . Rocky Marciano swaps his boxing gloves for Arthur Fiedler's baton. The Boston "Pops" conductor is a boxing fan and red hot amateur fireman.

Post (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 285,839
14 1956

Music in Review

By TUCKER KEISER

The highlight of yesterday's concert by the Boston Symphony was the superbly integrated playing by Zina Francescatti and Samuel Mayes of the solo parts in Brahms' Double Concerto. Both, of course are outstanding soloists in their own right, and for this work they maintained a rapport that was well-high perfect.

Throughtout the three movements the composer has fashioned a duet for violin and cello which calls for the most careful balancing of mood and color. Francescatti's style is basically a violin bel canto; Mayes foremost characteristic is dramatic vigor (he can also mold a cantabile of the purest gold when the music demands it).

One would not suspect that these two artists would so perfectly complement each other, yet they proved to be an ideal combination for the piece. In the figures which begin in one instrument and continue in the other it was almost impossible to tell when one stopped and the other took over. In the passages of octave doubling, they were precisely in tune. In other sections where Brahms has written double stops, they sounded like a seasoned string quartet.

Happily the two artists made up in warmth and vibrancy for the rather square-cut unBrahmsian reading Charles Munch gave to the orchestral part.

Mr. Francescatti earlier in the concert performed the Prokofieff Second Violin Concerto, one of the loveliest and wittiest of contemporary scores. Neither conductor nor soloist were temperamentally suited to realize effectively this urbane, but not unemotional, music. It was a plodding performance with heavy-paced, uninteresting tempos.

Had the conductor rationed some of the verve he expended so lavishly on the opening "Francesca da Rimini" by Tchaikovsky, saving it for the Prokofieff, both the concerto and the tone poem would have been more vivid musical experiences.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 122,000
APR 14 1956

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Francescatti Violin Soloist

Charles Munch conducted yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall the first of the 22d pair of concerts in the Friday–Saturday series by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The program: "Francesca da Rimini," Tchaikovsky; Violin Concerto in G minor, No. 2 (Zino Francescatti, soloist), Prokofieff; Concerto in A minor for Violin and Cello (Zino Francescatti and Samuel Mayes, soloists), Brahms.

BY CYRUS DURGIN

Where to begin, in telling of the Boston Symphony concert yesterday afternoon. Most politely, perhaps, with the visiting soloist of the week: that exemplary master of the violin, Zino Francescatti. Thanks to a most fortunate choice of program, we all heard him twice, in music as far apart in style as in chronology.

First, of course, came the Prokofieff G minor Concerto, now a little over two decades old. Not quite such a devil's magic of technical trickery—as its elder brother in D major, the G minor is yet a demanding, even fearsome, work of virtuosity. But again like its brother, it is also notable modern music, and no empty display piece.

Since the G minor is so fascinating, Mr. Francescatti, one of the great artists of the violin, and the Boston Symphony what it is, the result was a performance whose brilliance defies adequate description. It could have been taken for granted that Mr. Francescatti would deal with the fireworks with all his accustomed flair and dextrous accuracy. That he surely did.

Virtuoso Performances

Those who are familiar with the extremely musical character of his playing also expected and received a performance of exterior grace and inward profundity. Mr. Francescatti, with his lithe bowing arm, could not turn a phrase that was without sheer beauty of sound or some aspect of emotional expression. Nor would he ever distort or otherwise modify the nature of any rhythm.

When he joined with the Boston Symphony's splendid first cellist, Samuel Mayes, in the long and unaccountably neglected Double Concerto of Brahms, Mr. Francescatti had a partner of equal talent. Together, and with a superbly vital and glowing collaboration from Mr. Munch and the orchestra, the two soloists achieved a gorgeous performance of music rich and romantic.

Applause had been generous when the Prokofieff Concerto was ended. But the audience could not wait to acclaim the two soloists—and of course conductor and orchestra, as well—and burst in upon the final chord of Brahms. The ovation that followed was noisy and sustained.

A Most Memorable Day

Taken all together, this was one of the memorable concerts of the season. It was also a study in con- from the heat and tumult cesca da Rimini," through ff and Brahms. The two s, heard in succession, off the other. The Proko- th its spare orchestral tex- melody which is tender er too sentimental, and its finale with extremely ut-of-key harmonies, was ly astringent. Brahms' ied work, with its peculiar of classic structure with g romantic ardor, was an pleasant antithesis.

ay or may not admire the orchestral fantasia of sky, although as a tone omits no detail of the un- outcome of the after- rary sessions of Paolo and a. As interpretation and orchestral performance, Mr. Munch's reading lacked nothing. It was powerful and tender in turn, of the greatest intensity, and it was never coarse. The orchestra showed a richness of color, and a refinement of sonority which were proof that the Boston Symphony again is at its exalted best. Especially was this true of the strings, which have regained their old depth and sheen.

Next week Mr. Munch will present the Beecham arrangement of a Suite from Handel's "The Faithful Shepherd"; Mozart's D major Piano Concerto (K. 451), with Rudolf Firkusny as soloist; Honegger's Third Symphony ("Liturgique"), and "Chant de Joie," the latter new to these concerts.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 130,559
APR 14 1956

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, gave the 22d program of the 75th season in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. The soloists were Zino Francescatti, violin, and Samuel Mayes, cello. The program:

"Francesca da Rimini".....Tchaikovsky
Concerto No. 2 in G minor, Op. 63 ..... Prokofieff
Concerto in A minor for Violin and Cello, Op. 102.....Brahms

By RUDOLPH ELIE

It is more than likely that many of the audience yesterday afternoon came away with the impression that this was one of the most memorable concerts of the season. In many ways it was, too, and the reason isn't hard to isolate: A superb performance of Brahms' Concerto for Violin and Cello.

The astonishing thing is that this work hasn't been given at these concerts for 32 years. To be sure, virtuosos do not as a rule team up and tour together, so the opportunities for hearing this work—and a good many others, such as Beethoven's Triple Concerto — are pretty limited. Happily enough, Zino Francescatti, who provided us with an enchanting performance of Prokofieff's G minor Concerto in the first half, did join with Samuel Mayes, the orchestra's virtuoso first cellist for this occasion. The results could not have been happier, for these two personalities blended technically and stylistically to set forth this beautiful work with a radiance of tone and a perfection of phrase.

Two Solo Voice

The Concetro, one of Brahms' final utterances, though dominated by a mood of gentle melancholy save in the rondo finale, presents the two solo voice now in dialogue, again in powerful unison, now in sharp conflict, again in repose. The thematic content, from the opening statement of the solo cello, to the emergence of the noble proclamation in the finale, is Brahms at his most felicitous level. The sentiment, often colored by Gypsy overtones, never gets out of hand, nor does the composer ever turn to sheer virtuosity for its own sake in the solo voices, though there is virtuosity enough.

It was to be expected that Mr. Francescatti, who is a violinist of the greatest taste and accomplishment, would soar in the performance of the Concerto. Less to be expected was the incomparably fine performance by Mr. Mayes, for it is no easy task to step out of the more or less anonymous position of the orchestral player, even though he be the first desk man, and turn virtuoso. That he would be technically secure in the role was a foregone conclusion, but he displayed the temperamental elan of the solo virtuoso as well, pairing with Mr. Francescatti in a performance marvelous for its unanimity of style. Needless to say Mr. Munch, whose accompanying art is of the highest character, supplied them with a glowing orchestra background.

The Prokofieff Concerto, which is vintage Prokofieff in his finest period, went extraordinarily well. Mr. Francescatti always conveys the impression of complete security, complete mastery of his instrument and himself. He achieves a tone that is alive but that glows as well. And in the slow movement, one of the most beautiful things in all Prokofieff, he reached moments of great expressivity.

"Francesca da Rimini" is not, if the truth be known, very good Tchaikovsky save in the long romantic passage in the middle. The outer sections, depicting the tortures and agonies of the damned as Virgil leads Dante into the second circle of Hell, depict all right. But it all seems a little distraught and somehow empty of anything but theatricality. It is effective, however, and Mr. Munch gave it the necessary turbulence, in a performance that didn't always seem any too tidy.

The program next week begins with "The Faithful Shepherd" Suite of Handel, Mozart's Piano Concerto in D major (K. 451), Honegger's Symphony No. 3 and "Chant de joie."

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,872
APR 13 1956

Zino Francescatti will be the violin soloist at the concerts by Boston Symphony Orchestra this afternoon and Saturday night.

Longview, Tex.
Daily News
April 16, 1956

Boston 'Pops' To Be On Kilgore Program

KILGORE.—The Boston "Pops" orchestra conducted by Arthur Fiedler will headline the Kilgore Community Concert association 1956-57 season, officers announced here after the completion of a membership drive in which more than 1,400 concert-goers joined the organization.

Other attractions named by the association's artists' committee after the drive ended were the Tucson Boys' chorus, with highly original songs of the great Southwest spiced with comedy; Jon Crain, tenor star of the New York City opera who will join the Metropolitan Opera company in the fall; and Vera Franceschi, pianist, protege of Pierre Montieu.

KILGORE, TEX.
NEWS-HERALD
Circ. D. 6,258 - S. 6,258
APR 13 1956

BY COMMUNITY CONCERTS

Versatile 'Pops' Sought For Kilgore

"A Strauss waltz is as good a thing as a Beethoven symphony. It's nice to eat a good chunk of beef, but you want a slice of light dessert, too."

This belief of Arthur Fiedler, popular director of the Boston "Pops" Orchestra which plays popular music as well as the classics, has made him beloved in his native Boston, since he began in 1929.

Kilgore music lovers will have an opportunity to hear this 90-piece orchestra play such numbers as "Grand Canyon Suite" and "Naughty Lady of Shady Lane," a Tschaikovsky Polonaise and "Three Coins in a Fountain," for these and many others are in the versatile repertoire of Fiedler's musicians.

That is, Kilgore will have an opportunity to hear the Boston Pops if the Community Concerts membership drive, which ends Saturday, is as successful as it has been in the past seven years.

Over 700 memberships had been turned in to headquarters on the mezzanine of The Kilgore hotel late Thursday. A check-up will be held Friday afternoon.

Mrs. C. D. Wyatt, secretary of the drive, urged workers to turn in their reports as soon as possible. She said that those who wanted memberships and had not been contacted by Saturday should call 6171 or 6172. The drive will definitely be closed Saturday at 5 p.m.

Speaking of the lighter classics in terms of dessert, Fiedler says that his aim is to dish up the dessert as expertly as a Paris chef. "I'm very particular about that," he says.

Fiedler is known to Boston first, of course, as an eminent conductor, but also as an amateur fireman. He is an active member of the Boston Fire Department and his car is equipped with a short wave radio and siren to make sure that he doesn't miss out on any fires. Many cities, including Chicago and San Francisco, have made him honorary fire chief, and, on tours, when not in the concert hall, he can usually be found at the nearest fire station. He is also an ardent prize fight enthusiast.

With the Boston "Pops," the 1956-57 series may include Eileen Farrell, soprano; Rudolf Firkusny or Jorge Bolet, pianists; the Beaux Arts trio with Daniel Guilet, violinist, Bernard Greenhouse, cellist and Mennahem Pressler, pianist.

Other available attractions include Rey and Gomez, Spanish dancers; Jon Crain, tenor, and many more.

CHAMP MEETS CHAMP . . . Rocky Marciano swaps his boxing gloves for Arthur Fiedler's baton. The Boston "Pops" conductor is a boxing fan and red hot amateur fireman.

Post (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 285,839
1 4 1956

Music in Review

By TUCKER KEISER

The highlight of yesterday's concert by the Boston Symphony was the superbly integrated playing by Zina Francescatti and Samuel Mayes of the solo parts in Brahms' Double Concerto. Both, of course are outstanding soloists in their own right, and for this work they maintained a rapport that was well-high perfect.

Throughtout the three movements the composer has fashioned a duet for violin and cello which calls for the most careful balancing of mood and color. Francescatti's style is basically a violin bel canto; Mayes foremost characteristic is dramatic vigor (he can also mold a cantabile of the purest gold when the music demands it).

One would not suspect that these two artists would so perfectly complement each other, yet they proved to be an ideal combination for the piece. In the figures which begin in one instrument and continue in the other it was almost impossible to tell when one stopped and the other took over. In the passages of octave doubling, they were precisely in tune. In other sections where Brahms has written double stops, they sounded like a seasoned string quartet.

Happily the two artists made up in warmth and vibrancy for the rather square-cut unBrahmsian reading Charles Munch gave to the orchestral part.

Mr. Francescatti earlier in the concert performed the Prokofieff Second Violin Concerto, one of the loveliest and wittiest of contemporary scores. Neither conductor nor soloist were temperamentally suited to realize effectively this urbane, but not unemotional, music. It was a plodding performance with heavy-paced, uninteresting tempos.

Had the conductor rationed some of the verve he expended so lavishly on the opening "Francesca da Rimini" by Tchaikovsky, saving it for the Prokofieff, both the concerto and the tone poem would have been more vivid musical experiences.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 122,000
APR 14 1956

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Francescatti Violin Soloist

Charles Munch conducted yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall the first of the 22d pair of concerts in the Friday-Saturday series by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The program: "Francesca da Rimini," Tchaikovsky; Violin Concerto in G minor, No. 2 (Zino Francescatti, soloist), Prokofieff; Concerto in A minor for Violin and Cello (Zino Francescatti and Samuel Mayes, soloists), Brahms.

BY CYRUS DURGIN

Where to begin, in telling of the Boston Symphony concert yesterday afternoon. Most politely, perhaps, with the visiting soloist of the week: that exemplary master of the violin, Zino Francescatti. Thanks to a most fortunate choice of program, we all heard him twice, in music as far apart in style as in chronology.

First, of course, came the Prokofieff G minor Concerto, now a little over two decades old. Not quite such a devil's magic of technical trickery—as its elder brother in D major, the G minor is yet a demanding, even fearsome, work of virtuosity. But again like its brother, it is also notable modern music and no empty display piece.

Since the G minor is so fascinating, Mr. Francescatti, one of the great artists of the violin, and the Boston Symphony what it is, the result was a performance whose brilliance defies adequate description. It could have been taken for granted that Mr. Francescatti would deal with the fireworks with all his accustomed flair and dextrous accuracy. That he surely did.

Virtuoso Performances

Those who are familiar with the extremely musical character of his playing also expected and received a performance of exterior grace and inward profundity. Mr. Francescatti, with his lithe bowing arm, could not turn a phrase that was without sheer beauty of sound or some aspect of emotional expression. Nor would he ever distort or otherwise modify the nature of any rhythm.

When he joined with the Boston Symphony's splendid first cellist, Samuel Mayes, in the long and unaccountably neglected Double Concerto of Brahms, Mr. Francescatti had a partner of equal talent. Together, and with a superbly vital and glowing collaboration from Mr. Munch and the orchestra, the two soloists achieved a gorgeous performance of music rich and romantic.

Applause had been generous when the Prokofieff Concerto was ended. But the audience could not wait to acclaim the two soloists—and of course conductor and orchestra, as well—and burst in upon the final chord of Brahms. The ovation that followed was noisy and sustained.

A Most Memorable Day

Taken all together, this was one of the memorable concerts of the season. It was also a study in contrasts, from the heat and tumult of "Francesca da Rimini," through Prokofieff and Brahms. The two concertos, heard in succession, each set off the other. The Prokofieff, with its spare orchestral texture, its melody which is tender but never too sentimental, and its piquant finale with extremely clever out-of-key harmonies, was pleasantly astringent. Brahms' full-bodied work, with its peculiar coupling of classic structure with out-giving romantic ardor, was an equally pleasant antithesis.

You may or may not admire the febrile orchestral fantasia of Tchaikovsky, although as a tone poem it omits no detail of the unfortunate outcome of the afternoon literary sessions of Paolo and Francesca. As interpretation and orchestral performance, Mr. Munch's reading lacked nothing. It was powerful and tender in turn, of the greatest intensity, and it was never coarse. The orchestra showed a richness of color, and a refinement of sonority which were proof that the Boston Symphony again is at its exalted best. Especially was this true of the strings, which have regained their old depth and sheen.

Next week Mr. Munch will present the Beecham arrangement of a Suite from Handel's "The Faithful Shepherd"; Mozart's D major Piano Concerto (K. 451), with Rudolf Firkusny as soloist; Honegger's Third Symphony ("Liturgique"), and "Chant de Joie," the latter new to these concerts.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 130,559
APR 14 1956

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, gave the 22d program of the 1956 season in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. The soloists were Zino Francescatti, violin, and Samuel Mayes, celle. The program:

"Francesca da Rimini".....Tchaikovsky
Concerto No. 2 in G minor, Op. 63 ..... Prokofieff
Concerto in A minor for Violin and Cello, Op. 102.....Brahms

By RUDOLPH ELIE

It is more than likely that many of the audience yesterday afternoon came away with the impression that this was one of the most memoriable concerts of the season. In many ways it was, too, and the reason isn't hard to isolate: A superb performance of Brahms' Concerto for Violin and Cello.

The astonishing thing is that this work hasn't been given at these concerts for 32 years. To be sure, virtuosos do not as a rule team up and tour together, so the opportunities for hearing this work—and a good many others, such as Beethoven's Triple Concerto — are pretty limited. Happily enough, Zino Francescatti, who provided us with an enchanting performance of Prokofieff's G minor Concerto in the first half, did join with Samuel Mayes, the orchestra's virtuoso first cellist for this occasion. The results could not have been happier, for these two personalities blended technically and stylistically to set forth this beautiful work with a radiance of tone and a perfection of phrase.

Two Solo Voice

The Concetro, one of Brahms' final utterances, though dominated by a mood of gentle melancholy save in the rondo finale, presents the two solo voice now in dialogue, again in powerful unison, now in sharp conflict, again in repose. The thematic content, from the opening statement of the solo cello, to the emergence of the noble proclamation in the finale, is Brahms at his most felicitous level. The sentiment, often colored by Gypsy overtones, never gets out of hand, nor does the composer ever turn to sheer virtuosity for its own sake in the solo voices, though there is virtuosity enough.

It was to be expected that Mr. Francescatti, who is a violinist of the greatest taste and accomplishment, would soar in the performance of the Concerto. Less to be expected was the incomparably fine performance by Mr. Mayes, for it is no easy task to step out of the more or less anonymous position of the orchestral player.

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,872
APR 13 1956

Zino Francescatti will be the violin soloist at the concerts by Boston Symphony Orchestra this afternoon and Saturday night.

Lukens Steel Net Soars for Quarter

NEW YORK, April 13 (AP)- Lukens Steel Co. reported toda that for three months ende March 24 its net income w $1,361,641, equal to $4.28 a co mon share, compared with $29 384, or 92 cents a share, for t like period ended April 9 l year, the closest comparal quarter.

Allegheny Ludlum

Longview, Tex.
Daily News

April 16, 1956

Boston 'Pops' To Be On Kilgore Program

KILGORE.—The Boston "Pops" orchestra conducted by Arthur Fiedler will headline the Kilgore Community Concert association 1956-57 season, officers announced here after the completion of a membership drive in which more than 1,400 concert-goers joined the organization.

Other attractions named by the association's artists' committee after the drive ended were the Tucson Boys' chorus, with highly original songs of the great Southwest spiced with comedy; Jon Crain, tenor star of the New York City opera who will join the Metropolitan Opera company in the fall; and Vera Franceschi, pianist, protege of Pierre Montieu.

50

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,872

APR 14 1956

-Francescatti at Symphony

SCENES FROM THE ANNUAL POPS CONCERT by the famed conductor, Arthur Fiedler, are shown in the panel above. In photo at left, two "first" ladies, Mrs. Arthur Fiedler, left, and Mrs. Lane Dwinell, look over the evening's program prior to concert time. Entering the spacious state armory, scene of the annual concert which is sponsored by the Elliot Hospital Junior Associates, are, left to right, Mr. and Mrs. J. Fred French and Mr. and Mrs. Lyford MacEwen. In third photo, Mr. and Mrs. Orin Farrell receive their program from Mrs. Norton Virgien, left, while at far right, John R. Jacobson pins a corsage on his attractive wife, Priscilla. (Staff Photos).

Crowd of 3,000 Attends Annual Pops Concert

Nearly 3,000 persons att[illegible] Boston Pops concert, held he[illegible] Friday eve[illegible]

Music lovers, both young and old, from the four corners of the state, including Gov. and Mrs. Lane Dwinell, showed their appreciation for the famed conductor, Arthur Fiedler, by their attendance at the concert, which is sponsored annually by the Elliot Hospital Junior Associates.

After a brief delay in starting, the orchestra opened the program with the "Overture to Oberon" by Weber for its first selection.

This was followed by Mozart's serenade, "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik," commemorating the 200th anniversary of Mozart's birth.

A turn to the more popular sounds was accorded with Fantasia on "Greensleeves," by Vaughan Williams.

Presented Badge

The first half of the evening's program concluded with Tchaikovsky's "Nutcracker Suite."

Before resuming the program after a brief intermission, Mrs. James Chandler, general chairman, introduced Fire Chief G. Napoleon Guevin, who presented Conductor Fiedler with a gold honorary fire chief's badge on behalf of the city.

Chief Guevin made note of the fact that Mr. Fiedler has a siren-equipped car and is known around Boston as a "spark" who chases fires with the best of them. Fiedler now [illegible]

List Committees

"On the Trail" from "Grand Canyon Suite" by Grofe followed and then the maestro swung into a peppery presentation of "Popsorama," which included "Mister Sandman," "Melody of Love," "Naughty Lady of Shady Lane," "Three Coins in the Fountain" and "Tweedle-Dee."

The program concluded with a bristling, snappy "Bugler's Holiday" by Anderson.

Serving on the various committees, headed by Mrs. Chandler, were: Mrs. Richard Nichols, treasurer; Mrs. Donald Higley, assistant treasurer; Mrs. Donald Clough, tickets, assisted by Mrs. Richard Stevens; Mrs. Norton Virgien, program, assisted by Mrs. James A. Shanahan, Jr.; Mrs. Paul Theodore, patrons, assisted by Mrs. Herbert Stebbins; Mrs. R. A. Johnson, publicity, assisted by Mrs. Russell Taber; Mrs. Don Tibbetts, ushers; Mrs. Howard Hirshberg, procurement, and Mrs. Elmore Johnson, reception.

Union Leader (m) & (e)
MANCHESTER, N. H.
Independent
Circ. 45,622

APR 14 1956

Violinist Heard in Brahms And Prokofiev Concertos

By Harold Rogers

We are grateful for superb violinists wherever we find them —whether in the Soviet Union, the home of David Oistrakh, or in the United States, where we have Isaac Stern and Zino Francescatti. If there were any reason to offer a challenge to Mr. Oistrakh, it is likely that Mr. Francescatti is the man to do it.

According to their disks, the two men have much in common in tone and technique; and when Mr. Francescatti appeared as soloist yesterday afternoon with the Boston Symphony, he was again impressive for his stylistic elegance. Perhaps he does not play with Oistrakh's bravura, but he knows the power he can gain by restraint.

He was heard in two works— in Prokofiev's Violin Concerto No. 2 in G minor, and in Brahms' Concerto in A minor for Violin and Violoncello. For the latter he was joined by Samuel Mayes, first cellist of the Boston Symphony, and we heard a pair of beautifully matched soloists.

This Prokofiev Concerto is almost the antithesis of his Fifth Symphony, conducted by Leonard Bernstein during a recent visit. For the Fifth the composer used an augmented orchestra for an augmented sound, and its aural magnificence still rings in the memory. For this violin concerto, however, he scaled the orchestra down to classical dimensions, and he also treated the work in a quasi-classical style.

Mr. Francescatti, too, reined in his resources to illuminate the graceful phrases, the lacy figures, the songful moods. The middle Andante was buoyant with his sustained singing tone.

This is not a well-known concerto, nor is it dramatic in the popular sense of the Scythian Suite or "Lieutenant Kije." If it were the only concerto on a program, one might feel a bit cheated—not that it lacks musical substance. It lacks virtuosic intensity.

Charles Munch's programing was ideal in that it gave us Mr. Francescatti first as the pure artist, and second, as a virtuoso in the Brahms Double Concerto. In the latter his collaboration with Mr. Mayes was on an equal footing dynamically and interpretively. They both have the silken tone and the romantic verve, and they obviously enjoyed the balanced interplay of Brahms' skillful writing. Their listeners enjoyed the total effect.

Mr. Munch, in rare form after his two-week vacation, opened with Tchaikovsky's seldom-heard "Francesca da Rimini," an Orchestral Fantasia after Dante. Though a bit overlong, it is an impassioned piece of writing, redolent of the Italian Renaissance, and Mr. Munch whipped his musicians into a fiery if not altogether polished performance.

Next week Rudolf Firkusny will be the visiting artist in Mozart's Piano Concerto No. 16 in D major, K. 451. The program will include a Honegger work new to the orchestra's repertoire —"Chant de joie"—as well as a revival of his Third Symphony. Mr. Munch will open with Sir Thomas Beecham's arrangement of a suite from Handel's "The Faithful Shepherd."

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 369,241

APR 15 1956

Pianist Firkusny Symphony Soloist

At the next pair of concerts by the Boston Symphony in Symphony Hall on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening Charles Munch will conduct two works by two great composers—one from the past, one from our own time—which have never before been performed by this orchestra. The work from the past is Mozart's Piano Concerto No. 16 in D Major, bearing the number 451 in the Kochel catalogue of Mozart's music. The year 1784 saw Mozart produce no fewer than six piano concerti, of which this D major concerto was one. The soloist at the forthcoming Boston Symphony Orchestra performances will be Rudolf Firkusny.

Two Honegger Works

The other work new to the orchestra's repertoire is the "Chant de Joie" by the late Artur Honegger. It is an early work of Honegger's, composed in January, 1923 (thus making it almost exactly contemporary with the composer's "Pacific 231"), and is dedicated to Maurice Ravel.

The programs will also include a revival of Honegger's Third Symphony, called the "Liturgique." Dedicated to Mr. Munch, the symphony was performed for the first time under his direction early in December, 1946. A few weeks later he conducted its American premiere with the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra and introduced it to Boston in November, 1947, as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

In advance of these concerts, which will begin with a Suite from Handel's "The Faithful Shepherd" in the arrangement by Sir Thomas Beecham, an open rehearsal has been scheduled for next Thursday evening at 7:30, with proceeds from the sale of tickets to benefit the Orchestra's Pension Fund.

Extra Concert

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony will bring the 75th season to a close with an extra concert on Sunday evening, April 29, in Symphony Hall at 8:30. The program will offer the Seventh Symphony of Beethoven, the Sixth of Tchaikovsky. Proceeds of the concerts will help to defray the expenses of the Orchestra's European tour in August and September, following the Berkshire season.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,872
APR 14 1956

-Francescatti at Symphony

SCENES FROM THE ANNUAL POPS CONCERT by the famed conductor, Arthur Fiedler, are shown in the panel above. In photo at left, two "first" ladies, Mrs. Arthur Fiedler, left, and Mrs. Lane Dwinell, look over the evening's program prior to concert time. Entering the spacious state armory, scene of the annual concert which is sponsored by the Elliot Hospital Junior Associates, are, left to right, Mr. and Mrs. J. Fred French and Mr. and Mrs. Lyford MacEwen. In third photo, Mr. and Mrs. Orin Farrell receive their program from Mrs. Norton Virgien, left, while at far right, John R. Jacobson pins a corsage on his attractive wife, Priscilla. (Staff Photos).

Crowd of 3,000 Attends Annual Pops Concert

Nearly 3,000 persons attended the fifth annual Boston Pops concert, held here at the State Armory Friday evening.

Music lovers, both young and old, from the four corners of the state, including Gov. and Mrs. Lane Dwinell, showed their appreciation for the famed conductor, Arthur Fiedler, by their attendance at the concert, which is sponsored annually by the Elliot Hospital Junior Associates.

After a brief delay in starting, the orchestra opened the program with the "Overture to Oberon" by Weber for its first selection.

This was followed by Mozart's serenade, "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik," commemorating the 200th anniversary of Mozart's birth.

A turn to the more popular sounds was accorded with Fantasia on "Greensleeves," by Vaughan Williams.

Presented Badge

The first half of the evening's program concluded with Tchaikovsky's "Nutcracker Suite."

Before resuming the program, after a brief intermission, Mrs. James Chandler, general chairman, introduced Fire Chief G. Napoleon Guevin, who presented Conductor Fiedler with a gold honorary fire chief's badge on behalf of the city.

Chief Guevin made note of the fact that Mr. Fiedler has a siren-equipped car and is known around Boston as a "spark" who chases fires with the best of them. Fiedler now holds some 50 honorary fire chief titles.

Mr. Fiedler, apparently quite surprised with the recognition given him, resumed the program with the "Graduation Ball" suite by Strauss, which included Accelerations, Perpetual Motion, Nocturne, March and Galop.

List Committees

"On the Trail" from "Grand Canyon Suite" by Grofe followed and then the maestro swung into a peppery presentation of "Popsorama," which included "Mister Sandman," "Melody of Love," "Naughty Lady of Shady Lane," "Three Coins in the Fountain" and "Tweedle-Dee."

The program concluded with a bristling, snappy "Bugler's Holiday" by Anderson.

Serving on the various committees, headed by Mrs. Chandler, were: Mrs. Richard Nichols, treasurer; Mrs. Donald Higley, assistant treasurer; Mrs. Donald Clough, tickets, assisted by Mrs. Richard Stevens; Mrs. Norton Virgien, program, assisted by Mrs. James A. Shanahan, Jr.; Mrs. Paul Theodore, patrons, assisted by Mrs. Herbert Stebbins; Mrs. R. A. Johnson, publicity, assisted by Mrs. Russell Taber; Mrs. Don Tibbetts, ushers; Mrs. Howard Hirshberg, procurement, and Mrs. Elmore Johnson, reception.

Union Leader (m) & (e)
MANCHESTER, N. H.
Independent
Circ. 45,622
APR 14 1956

Violinist Heard in Brahms And Prokofiev Concertos

By Harold Rogers

We are grateful for superb violinists wherever we find them—whether in the Soviet Union, the home of David Oistrakh, or in the United States, where we have Isaac Stern and Zino Francescatti. If there were any reason to offer a challenge to Mr. Oistrakh, it is likely that Mr. Francescatti is the man to do it.

According to their disks, the two men have much in common in tone and technique; and when Mr. Francescatti appeared as soloist yesterday afternoon with the Boston Symphony, he was again impressive for his stylistic elegance. Perhaps he does not play with Oistrakh's bravura, but he knows the power he can gain by restraint.

He was heard in two works—in Prokofiev's Violin Concerto No. 2 in G minor, and in Brahms' Concerto in A minor for Violin and Violoncello. For the latter he was joined by Samuel Mayes, first cellist of the Boston Symphony, and we heard a pair of beautifully matched soloists.

This Prokofiev Concerto is almost the antithesis of his Fifth Symphony, conducted by Leonard Bernstein during a recent visit. For the Fifth the composer used an augmented orchestra for an augmented sound, and its aural magnificence still rings in the memory. For this violin concerto, however, he scaled the orchestra down to classical dimensions, and he also treated the work in a quasi-classical style.

Mr. Francescatti, too, reined in his resources to illuminate the graceful phrases, the lacy figures, the songful moods. The middle Andante was buoyant with his sustained singing tone.

This is not a well-known concerto, nor is it dramatic in the popular sense of the Scythian Suite or "Lieutenant Kije." If it were the only concerto on a program, one might feel a bit cheated—not that it lacks musical substance. It lacks virtuosic intensity.

Charles Munch's programing was ideal in that it gave us Mr. Francescatti first as the pure artist, and second, as a virtuoso in the Brahms Double Concerto. In the latter his collaboration with Mr. Mayes was on an equal footing dynamically and interpretively. They both have the silken tone and the romantic verve, and they obviously enjoyed the balanced interplay of Brahms' skillful writing. Their listeners enjoyed the total effect.

Mr. Munch, in rare form after his two-week vacation, opened with Tchaikovsky's seldom-heard "Francesca da Rimini," an Orchestral Fantasia after Dante. Though a bit overlong, it is an impassioned piece of writing, redolent of the Italian Renaissance, and Mr. Munch whipped his musicians into a fiery if not altogether polished performance.

Next week Rudolf Firkusny will be the visiting artist in Mozart's Piano Concerto No. 16 in D major, K. 451. The program will include a Honegger work new to the orchestra's repertoire—"Chant de joie"—as well as a revival of his Third Symphony. Mr. Munch will open with Sir Thomas Beecham's arrangement of a suite from Handel's "The Faithful Shepherd."

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 369,241
APR 15 1956

Pianist Firkusny Symphony Soloist

At the next pair of concerts by the Boston Symphony in Symphony Hall on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening Charles Munch will conduct two works by two great composers—one from the past, one from our own time—which have never before been performed by this orchestra. The work from the past is Mozart's Piano Concerto No. 16 in D Major, bearing the number 451 in the Kochel catalogue of Mozart's music. The year 1784 saw Mozart produce no fewer than six piano concerti, of which this D major concerto was one. The soloist at the forthcoming Boston Symphony Orchestra performances will be Rudolf Firkusny.

Two Honegger Works

The other work new to the orchestra's repertoire is the "Chant de Joie" by the late Artur Honegger. It is an early work of Honegger's, composed in January, 1923 (thus making it almost exactly contemporary with the composer's "Pacific 231"), and is dedicated to Maurice Ravel.

The programs will also include a revival of Honegger's Third Symphony, called the "Liturgique." Dedicated to Mr. Munch, the sym-

Extra Concert

[illegible] Searched Far and Wide

Producer Dore Schary and Director Charles Vidor searched far and wide for a house magnificent enough to serve as the Princess' castle, and Biltmore House proved to be the ideal choice. As a result, the studio sent a location unit of more than 100 persons to Asheville. There, a month was spent in filming scenes for "The Swan" at the Vanderbilt estate which, in its own way, is nearly as magnificent as the Monacan Palace which Miss Kelly will occupy as Her Serene Highness [illegible] when he visits her castle.

NEWARK, N. J.
NEWS
Circ. D. 268,862 - S. 288,382

APR 15 1956

LEADER—Betty Mandeville (above) produces and directs the FBI in Peace and War program, which is heard over WCBS Wednesday nights at 8:30. Miss Mandeville is the only woman now directing a nighttime crime radio show.

Gussie Moran, former tennis star, will start her second season as a sportscaster on WMGM. She will be heard with Marty Glickman, Ward Wilson and Jim Gordon on Warm-Up Time, which is presented before all broadcasts of the Brooklyn Dodgers' games and the Sports Extra show that follows the games.

* * *

Ella Fitzgerald, jazz singer; Nell Rankin, mezzo-soprano of the Metropolitan Opera; Florian ZaBach and the Dixie Land Band, and pop singer Steve Lawrence will be featured on What's New in Music on WCBS today at 1. Percy Faith conducts the orchestra and chorus and Donald Woods is host.

* * *

WABC will handle the pool broadcast of the H-bomb blast at Eniwetok scheduled for May 1, with Bryson Rash acting as commentator. Plans call for a live broadcast of the test.

Our Gal Sunday and Road of Life, daytime serials normally heard over WCBS between 12:45 and 1:15 p.m., will not be broadcast Monday through Thursday because of special reports on the Grace Kelly-Prince Rainier wedding, which will take place Wednesday and Thursday.

* * *

Thomas E. Dewey, former governor of New York, will be tonight's guest on Meet the Press at 6 on WRCA. . . . Arthur Godfrey will broadcast his WCBS programs from Miami Beach, Fla., for two weeks, starting tomorrow morning. . . . "Should Wire Tap Evidence Be Admissible in Our Courts" will be discussed on WNEW's The Law on Trial program tonight at 10:45.

* * *

Rudy Wissler, singer, will hold the fort for Gary Crosby on the Edgar Bergen Hour while Crosby makes a two-month tour of Australia and England with Louis Armstrong and his band. Wissler will take over next Sunday night at 7:05 on WCBS.

Incidentally, for the first time in his radio career, Bergen will sing—and in Swedish—on his broadcast tonight.

* * *

Leonard Bernstein will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in music by two contemporary composers tomorrow night on WRCA at 8:15. Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist, will be soloist.

The opening work will be "Fourteen Variations for Orchestra" by Robert Moevs, American composer, who wrote the work on commission from the Koussevitzky Foundation. It was first performed last February in New York by the Symphony of the Air under Bernstein's direction. The remaining portion of the concert will be devoted to Igor Stravinsky's "Capriccio for Piano and Orchestra" with Sanroma as soloist.

—J. S.

LA CROSSE, WIS.
TRIBUNE
APR 15 1956

51

Boston Symphony To Play Ex-City Man's Composition

Robert Moevs, formerly of La Crosse and now an instructor in composition in the music department at Harvard University, will have one of his works, "14 Variations for Orchestra," presented by the Boston Symphony Monday night.

Leonard Bernstein, famous conductor, will direct the orchestra. Moevs, now known as a prominent American composer, is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Moevs of 1602 Cass St.

The program will be heard locally over Radio Station WKBH from 7:15-8 p.m. Monday, April 16.

Born in La Crosse 35 years ago, Moevs was fifth in his Central High School graduating class. He was one of the outstanding pianists there as well as in this community. He had been president of the Nocturne Club. After graduation, he was given a scholarship at Harvard. He secured his degree from that university, then entered the Air Force to serve as pilot and interpreter in the European Theater. Moevs received his discharge in 1947.

ROBERT MOEVS

He then attended the Paris Conservatory of Music for four years and in 1952 was one of 12 Americans to be awarded a prize fellowship in Rome. Moevs studied at the American Academy in Rome for three years, and then returned to Harvard as instructor.

LIBRARY JOURNAL
NEW YORK, N. Y.

APR 15 1956

RECORDED Music

By Philip L. Miller
The New York Public Library
Guest Reviewer
James Coover, Music Librarian
Vassar College

All records reviewed are twelve-inch, 33.3 rpm, $3.98, except as noted. ML—Columbia (4 ML—, $4.98); LC—Epic; HSL—Haydn Society ($5.95); LL— and LLP—London; MG—Mercury (OL 3-102, $19.95); LM—RCA Victor ($4.98).

ORCHESTRAL MUSIC—OUTSTANDING

BEETHOVEN: Symphony no. 3 "Eroica". Chicago Sym. Orch.; Fritz Reiner, cond. LM—1899.

A feature of any Reiner performance is its lithe, relentless rhythmic drive; it makes this version of the "Eroica" vital, direct, and convincing. Those who prefer a more determinedly romantic treatment of Beethoven are advised to look elsewhere, but of the straightforward versions now available—and there are a goodly number—this is in every way superior. RCA sound compliments the superlative orchestral play and Reiner's dramatically understated interpretation.

BRAHMS: Concerto for Violin and Orch., D major, op. 77. Chicago Sym. Orch.; Fritz Reiner, cond.; Jascha Heifetz, vln. LM—1903.

Heifetz' prowess allows him to disdain the technical challenges of this work. The result is a thrilling performance that contrasts glowing lyric passages with those of blazing and savage—but happy—abandonment. Not for those who prefer Brahms emotionally incontinent or heavily meditative—these tempi are brisk, the overall effect one of zestful extroversion. The orchestra, the conductor, the engineers—all contribute their wonderful best to make this a high-spirited and eloquent performance.

STRAUSS, R.: Till Eulenspiegel and Death and Transfiguration. NBC Sym. Orch.; Arturo Toscanini, cond. LM—1891.

Taken at a more solemn pace than the majority of other versions available, these works seem more imposing, more earnest and more telling here than is customary. Till is not cute; he is a nasty and deliberate rowdy. Suiting the punishment to the crimes, Toscanini provides a momentous gallows scene. Reiner's (LM—1180) Till may be more witty, but Toscanini's has more meaning. "Death and Transfiguration" is surely one of the most completely beautiful records to the credit of this orchestra and its conductor. Beside it all other versions sound commonplace. Unqualifiedly recommended for libraries!

TCHAIKOVSKI: Concerto for Piano and Orch., no. 1 in B-flat minor. Chicago Sym. Orch.; Fritz Reiner, cond.; Emil Gilels, pf. LM—1969.

Rugged, earthy and, in turn, poetic and lyrical, the "Concerto" as performed by Gilels is more poised and less introspective than usual. The customary Tchaikovski mien of morbid self-indulgence is overshadowed by an almost heroic eloquence. Gilels' pianism is brilliant. Held in firm control by the very evident influence of Reiner, abetted by the excellent orchestral work, and beautifully recorded, this version is unsurpassed.

ORCHESTRAL MUSIC—RECOMMENDED

BERLIOZ: Symphonie Fantastique. Boston Sym. Orch.; Charles Munch, cond. LM—1900.

The superb woodwind sounds from Boston on this disc are preferable to their nearest competition, the thumping good percussive achievements from Minneapolis (MG 50034). Dorati's version and this by Munch have essentially similar goals, and both—though different—are effective statements. An older performance by Ormandy and the Philadelphia (3 ML—4467) boasts the usual Philadelphia qualifications plus a vital measure of clarity in the important finales to both second and fourth movements not present in any other versions. For a few listeners, even the revered Van Beinum interpretation (LLP—389) will not be overshadowed by Munch's performance. RCA sound is a bit too magnificent for comfortable listening. A definitive "Fantastique" is still needed.

BRAHMS: Symphony no. 4 in E minor. Detroit Sym. Orch.; Paul Paray, cond. MG 50057.

This is a profound and impassioned reading, challenged for overall merit by only the Toscanini (LM—1713). Interpretatively, Paray's performance is brilliant—unmatched even by Toscanini's—but orchestrally, the performance is a bit stern, a bit hard-driven, the tonal fabric therefore a bit thin. A Mercury sound luxuriant in highs and lows but lacking the general suavity of the Victor recording heightens this impression.

ITALIAN CLASSICAL SYMPHONISTS, VOLUME II. ITALIAN CHAMBER ORCH.; NEWELL JENKINS, COND. HSL-135/136/137/138.

PAISIELLO: Concerto for Piano and Orch. in C major. Carlo Bussotti, pf. BRUNETTI: Symphony no. 31 in D minor (Record no. 1)

The inclusion of two complete symphonies by Brunetti in this set (the other on Record

BALTIMORE, MD.
AMERICAN
Circ. S. 317,397

APR 15 1956

Records

Tchaikovsky Clicks Again

By RECORDER

That faithful old war-horse, Tchaikovsky, gets the long play this week.

His "Symphony No. 4 in F Minor" has been recorded for Columbia by the Philadelphia Orchestra under Eugene Ormandy and is one of the best of three recordings of the Russian's symphonies.

This recording ranks high among the many long-playing discs already made of this inspiring work.

Another highly commendable recording of the same is Charles Munch's conducting of the Boston Symphony for RCA Victor.

Considered the strongest and best of his three great latter symphonies, the tragic Fourth is given a beautiful performance,

Not up to same standard, however, is Columbia's recording of Tchaikovsky's "Symphony No. 5 in E Minor" by the New York Philharmonic under Dimitri Mitropoulos.

Here the most popular of the Tchaikovsky symphonies is given the curb. Where one expects passion there is nothing out of the ordinary and certain emphasis appear for unknown reasons. (Maybe Mitropoulos grew tired of the way things were.)

Tchaikovsky's "Symphony No. 6 in B Minor," as played by the Boston Symphony under Pierre Monteux on RCA Victor returns to the sphere of orchestral splendor the final great symphony of the dying composer.

He left its program content enigmatic, but we do know that he held it in high esteem personally and poured into its subjective grandeur much ardor and many tears.

PRODUCING cover photographs for record albums is no snap, particularly when they have to be taken on a Navajo reservation, as was the striking cover on "Reflections of an Indian Boy," which was reviewed here last Sunday.

To get the effect he wanted, cover photographer Allen Reed had to get an Indian boy, a goat and a mountain, and get them all in the same place. All of the boys were out of the territory and the goats were all either too large or too small.

Once he had surmounted these problems, he had to take the boy and goat up a 5,000-foot mountain—and hope that the sun would still be shining. The first day, it rained. So back down the mountain they all jeeped. The second day he was successful. Even then he had to send his plates out of the Navajo country by burro.

Sunday Post
BRIDGEPORT, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 61,159

APR 15 1956

BERNSTEIN CONDUCTS BOSTON SYMPHONY

Leonard Bernstein will conduct the Boston Symphony orchestra in music by two contemporary composers Monday (NBC Radio, 8:15 p. m.). Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist, will be soloist.

The opening work will be "Fourteen Variations for Orchestra" by Robert Moevs, American composer, who wrote the work on commission from the Roussevitzky Foundation. It was first performed last February in New York by the Symphony of the Air under Bernstein's direction. The remaining portion of the concert will be devoted to Igor Stravinsky's "Capriccio for Piano and Orchestra" with Sanroma as soloist.

SARASOTA, FLA.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
Circ. D. 11,001 - S. 13,388

APR 15 1956

Tickets Available

Memberships and renewals for the 1956-57 season of the Community Concert Association have run far ahead of last year, it was announced yesterday. However, space remains and those wishing to enjoy the splendid programs already lined up for next season, including the Boston Pops Orchestra—"There is only one Arthur Fiedler"—are urged to send dues to Postoffice Box 1714 at once.

Furniture has been purchased to be used in visiting artists' rooms at Municipal Auditorium. In past seasons, various local firms, including Hendry, Mather and Kane, were most generous in making loans. But with the Florida West Coast Symphony using its own rehearsal hall, it has been possible to get storage space for permanent furnishings, so Mrs. Horace J. Palmer, dressing room chairman, announced.

At the annual meeting of the Association last week, Guy Saunders, who has been responsible for decorations at concerts, was lauded for his taste and ingenuity. He praised a liberal loan of plants by the Palmer Nursery.

NEWARK, N. J.
NEWS
Circ. D. 268,862 - S. 288,382

APR 15 1956

LEADER—Betty Mandeville (above) produces and directs the FBI in Peace and War program, which is heard over WCBS Wednesday nights at 8:30. Miss Mandeville is the only woman now directing a nighttime crime radio show.

Gussie Moran, former tennis star, will start her second season as a sportscaster on WMGM. She will be heard with Marty Glickman, Ward Wilson and Jim Gordon on Warm-Up Time, which is presented before all broadcasts of the Brooklyn Dodgers' games and the Sports Extra show that follows the games.

Ella Fitzgerald, jazz singer; Nell Rankin, mezzo-soprano of the Metropolitan Opera; Florian ZaBach and the Dixie Land Band, and pop singer Steve Lawrence will be featured on What's New in Music on WCBS today at 1. Percy Faith conducts the orchestra and chorus and Donald Woods is host.

* * *

WABC will handle the pool broadcast of the H-bomb blast at Eniwetok scheduled for May 1, with Bryson Rash acting as commentator. Plans call for a live broadcast of the test.

Our Gal Sunday and Road of Life, daytime serials normally heard over WCBS between 12:45 and 1:15 p.m., will not be broadcast Monday through Thursday because of special reports on the Grace Kelly-Prince Rainier wedding, which will take place Wednesday and Thursday.

* * *

Thomas E. Dewey, former governor of New York, will be tonight's guest on Meet the Press at 6 on WRCA. . . . Arthur Godfrey will broadcast his WCBS programs from Miami Beach, Fla., for two weeks, starting tomorrow morning. . . . "Should Wire Tap Evidence Be Admissible in Our Courts" will be discussed on WNEW's The Law on Trial program tonight at 10:45.

* * *

Rudy Wissler, singer, will hold the fort for Gary Crosby on the Edgar Bergen Hour while Crosby makes a two-month tour of Australia and England with Louis Armstrong and his band. Wissler will take over next Sunday night at 7:05 on WCBS.

Incidentally, for the first time in his radio career, Bergen will sing—and in Swedish—on his broadcast tonight.

* * *

Leonard Bernstein will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in music by two contemporary composers tomorrow night on WRCA at 8:15. Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist, will be soloist.

The opening work will be "Fourteen Variations for Orchestra" by Robert Moevs, American composer, who wrote the work on commission from the Koussevitzky Foundation. It was first performed last February in New York by the Symphony of the Air under Bernstein's direction. The remaining portion of the concert will be devoted to Igor Stravinsky's "Capriccio for Piano and Orchestra" with Sanroma as soloist.

—J. S.

LA CROSSE, WIS.
TRIBUNE
APR 15 1956

51

Boston Symphony To Play Ex-City Man's Composition

ROBERT MOEVS

Robert Moevs, formerly of La Crosse and now an instructor in composition in the music department at Harvard University, will have one of his works, "14 Variations for Orchestra," presented by the Boston Symphony Monday night.

Leonard Bernstein, famous conductor, will direct the orchestra. Moevs, now known as a prominent American composer, is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Moevs of 1602 Cass St.

The program will be heard locally over Radio Station WKBH from 7:15-8 p.m. Monday, April 16.

Born in La Crosse 35 years ago, Moevs was fifth in his Central High School graduating class. He was one of the outstanding pianists there as well as in this community. He had been president of the Nocturne Club. After graduation, he was given a scholarship at Harvard. He secured his degree from that university, then entered the Air Force to serve as pilot and interpreter in the European Theater. Moevs received his discharge in 1947.

He then attended the Paris Conservatory of Music for four years and in 1952 was one of 12 Americans to be awarded a prize fellowship in Rome. Moevs studied at the American Academy in Rome for three years, and then returned to Harvard as instructor.

BALTIMORE, MD.
AMERICAN
Circ. S. 317,397

APR 15 1956

Records — Tchaikovsky Clicks Again

By RECORDER

That faithful old war-horse, Tchaikovsky, gets the long play this week.

His "Symphony No. 4 in F Minor" has been recorded for Columbia by the Philadelphia Orchestra under Eugene Ormandy and is one of the best of three recordings of the Russian's symphonies.

This recording ranks high among the many long-playing discs already made of this inspiring work.

Another highly commendable recording of the same is Charles Munch's conducting of the Boston Symphony for RCA Victor.

Considered the strongest and best of his three great latter symphonies, the tragic Fourth is given a beautiful performance,

Not up to same standard, however, is Columbia's recording of Tchaikovsky's "Symphony No. 5 in E Minor" by the New York Philharmonic under Dimitri Mitropoulos.

Here the most popular of the Tchaikovsky symphonies is given the curb. Where one expects passion there is nothing out of the ordinary and certain emphasis appear for unknown reasons. (Maybe Mitropoulos grew tired of the way things were.)

Tchaikovsky's "Symphony No. 6 in B Minor," as played by the Boston Symphony under Pierre Monteux on RCA Victor returns to the sphere of orchestral splendor the final great symphony of the dying composer.

He left its program content enigmatic, but we do know that he held it in high esteem personally and poured into its subjective grandeur much ardor and many tears.

PRODUCING cover photographs for record albums is no snap, particularly when they have to be taken on a Navajo reservation, as was the striking cover on "Reflections of an Indian Boy," which was reviewed here last Sunday.

To get the effect he wanted, cover photographer Allen Reed had to get an Indian boy, a goat and a mountain, and get them all in the same place. All of the boys were out of the territory and the goats were all either too large or too small.

Once he had surmounted these problems, he had to take the boy and goat up a 5,000-foot mountain—and hope that the sun would still be shining. The first day, it rained. So back down the mountain they all jeeped. The second day he was successful. Even then he had to send his plates out of the Navajo country by burro.

LIBRARY JOURNAL
NEW YORK, N. Y.

APR 15 1956

RECORDED Music

By Philip L. Miller
The New York Public Library
Guest Reviewer
James Coover, Music Librarian
Vassar College

All records reviewed are twelve-inch, 33.3 rpm, $3.98, except as noted. ML—Columbia (4 ML—, $4.98); LC—Epic; HSL—Haydn Society ($5.95); LL— and LLP—London; MG—Mercury (OL 3-102, $19.95); LM—RCA Victor ($4.98).

ORCHESTRAL MUSIC—OUTSTANDING

BEETHOVEN: Symphony no. 3 "Eroica". Chicago Sym. Orch.; Fritz Reiner, cond. LM—1899.

A feature of any Reiner performance is its lithe, relentless rhythmic drive; it makes this version of the "Eroica" vital, direct, and convincing. Those who prefer a more determinedly romantic treatment of Beethoven are advised to look elsewhere, but of the straightforward versions now available—and there are a goodly number—this is in every way superior. RCA sound compliments the superlative orchestral play and Reiner's dramatically understated interpretation.

BRAHMS: Concerto for Violin and Orch., D major, op. 77. Chicago Sym. Orch.; Fritz Reiner, cond.; Jascha Heifetz, vln. LM—1903.

Heifetz' prowess allows him to disdain the technical challenges of this work. The result is a thrilling performance that contrasts glowing lyric passages with those of blazing and savage—but happy—abandonment. Not for those who prefer Brahms emotionally incontinent or heavily meditative—these tempi are brisk, the overall effect one of zestful extroversion. The orchestra, the conductor, the engineers—all contribute their wonderful best to make this a high-spirited and eloquent performance.

STRAUSS, R.: Till Eulenspiegel and Death and Transfiguration. NBC Sym. Orch.; Arturo Toscanini, cond. LM—1891.

Taken at a more solemn pace than the majority of other versions available, these works seem more imposing, more earnest and more telling here than is customary. Till is not cute; he is a nasty and deliberate rowdy. Suiting the punishment to the crimes, Toscanini provides a momentous gallows scene. Reiner's (LM—1180) Till may be more witty, but Toscanini's has more meaning. "Death and Transfiguration" is surely one of the most completely beautiful records to the credit of this orchestra and its conductor. Beside it all other versions sound commonplace. Unqualifiedly recommended for libraries!

TCHAIKOVSKI: Concerto for Piano and Orch., no. 1 in B-flat minor. Chicago Sym. Orch.; Fritz Reiner, cond.; Emil Gilels, pf. LM—1969.

Rugged, earthy and, in turn, poetic and lyrical, the "Concerto" as performed by Gilels is more poised and less introspective than usual. The customary Tchaikovski mien of morbid self-indulgence is overshadowed by an almost heroic eloquence. Gilels' pianism is brilliant. Held in firm control by the very evident influence of Reiner, abetted by the excellent orchestral work, and beautifully recorded, this version is unsurpassed.

ORCHESTRAL MUSIC—RECOMMENDED

BERLIOZ: Symphonie Fantastique. Boston Sym. Orch.; Charles Munch, cond. LM—1900.

The superb woodwind sounds from Boston on this disc are preferable to their nearest competition, the thumping good percussive achievements from Minneapolis (MG 50034). Dorati's version and this by Munch have essentially similar goals, and both—though different—are effective statements. An older performance by Ormandy and the Philadelphia (3 ML—4467) boasts the usual Philadelphia qualifications plus a vital measure of clarity in the important finales to both second and fourth movements not present in any other versions. For a few listeners, even the revered Van Beinum interpretation (LLP—389) will not be overshadowed by Munch's performance. RCA sound is a bit too magnificent for comfortable listening. A definitive "Fantastique" is still needed.

BRAHMS: Symphony no. 4 in E minor. Detroit Sym. Orch.; Paul Paray, cond. MG 50057.

This is a profound and impassioned reading, challenged for overall merit by only the Toscanini (LM—1713). Interpretatively, Paray's performance is brilliant—unmatched even by Toscanini's—but orchestrally, the performance is a bit stern, a bit hard-driven, the tonal fabric therefore a bit thin. A Mercury sound luxuriant in highs and lows but lacking the general suavity of the Victor recording heightens this impression.

ITALIAN CLASSICAL SYMPHONISTS, VOLUME II. ITALIAN CHAMBER ORCH.; NEWELL JENKINS, COND. HSL-135/136/137/138.

PAISIELLO: Concerto for Piano and Orch. in C major. Carlo Bussotti, pf. BRUNETTI: Symphony no. 31 in D minor (Record no. 1)

The inclusion of two complete symphonies by Brunetti in this set (the other on Record

Sunday Post
BRIDGEPORT, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 61,159

APR 15 1956

N

†NashCSL4	3.80	137½	132½	137½	+ ⅛
NATCOC.40r	12	18⅜	18	18¼	— ⅛
NatAcme2a	30	78½	75⅛	77	+2
xdNatAirlin1	180	26⅞	23⅞	26¾	+2⅞

Leonard Bernstein will conduct the Boston Symphony orchestra in music by two contemporary composers Monday (NBC Radio, 8:15 p. m.). Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist, will be soloist.

The opening work will be "Fourteen Variations for Orchestra" by Robert Moevs, American composer, who wrote the work on commission from the Roussevitzky Foundation. It was first performed last February in New York by the Symphony of the Air under Bernstein's direction. The remaining portion of the concert will be devoted to Igor Stravinsky's "Cap-

SARASOTA, FLA.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
Circ. D. 11,001 - S. 13,388

APR 15 1956

Concert Tickets Still Available

Memberships and renewals for the 1956-57 season of the Community Concert Association have run far ahead of last year, it was announced yesterday. However, space remains and those wishing to enjoy the splendid programs already lined up for next season, including the Boston Pops Orchestra—"There is only one Arthur Fiedler"—are urged to send dues to Postoffice Box 1714 at once.

Furniture has been purchased to be used in visiting artists' rooms at Municipal Auditorium. In past seasons, various local firms, including Hendry, Mather and Kane, were most generous in making loans. But with the Florida West Coast Symphony using its own rehearsal hall, it has been possible to get storage space for permanent furnishings, so Mrs. Horace J. Palmer, dressing room chairman, announced.

At the annual meeting of the Association last week, Guy Saunders, who has been responsible for decorations at concerts, was lauded for his taste and ingenuity. He praised a liberal loan of plants by the Palmer Nursery.

NEWARK, N. J.
NEWS
Circ. D. 268,862 - S. 288,382
APR 15 1956

LEADER—Betty Mandeville (above) produces and directs the FBI in Peace and War program, which is heard over WCBS Wednesday nights at 8:30. Miss Mandeville is the only woman now directing a nighttime crime radio show.

Gussie Moran, former tennis star, will start her second season as a sportscaster on WMGM. She will be heard with Marty Glickman, Ward Wilson and Jim Gordon on Warm-Up Time, which is presented before all broadcasts of the Brooklyn Dodgers' games and the Sports Extra show that follows the games.

* * *

Ella Fitzgerald, jazz singer; Nell Rankin, mezzo-soprano of the Metropolitan Opera; Florian ZaBach and the Dixie Land Band, and pop singer Steve Lawrence will be featured on What's New in Music on WCBS today at 1. Percy Faith conducts the orchestra and chorus and Donald Woods is host.

* * *

WABC will handle the pool broadcast of the H-bomb blast at Eniwetok scheduled for May 1, with Bryson Rash acting as commentator. Plans call for a live broadcast of the test.

Our Gal Sunday and Road of Life, daytime serials normally heard over WCBS between 12:45 and 1:15 p.m., will not be broadcast Monday through Thursday because of special reports on the Grace Kelly-Prince Rainier wedding, which will take place Wednesday and Thursday.

* * *

Thomas E. Dewey, former governor of New York, will be tonight's guest on Meet the Press at 6 on WRCA. . . . Arthur Godfrey will broadcast his WCBS programs from Miami Beach, Fla., for two weeks, starting tomorrow morning. . . . "Should Wire Tap Evidence Be Admissible in Our Courts" will be discussed on WNEW's The Law on Trial program tonight at 10:45.

* * *

Rudy Wissler, singer, will hold the fort for Gary Crosby on the Edgar Bergen Hour while Crosby makes a two-month tour of Australia and England with Louis Armstrong and his band. Wissler will take over next Sunday night at 7:05 on WCBS.

Incidentally, for the first time in his radio career, Bergen will sing—and in Swedish—on his broadcast tonight.

* * *

Leonard Bernstein will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in music by two contemporary composers tomorrow night on WRCA at 8:15. Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist, will be soloist.

The opening work will be "Fourteen Variations for Orchestra" by Robert Moevs, American composer, who wrote the work on commission from the Koussevitzky Foundation. It was first performed last February in New York by the Symphony of the Air under Bernstein's direction. The remaining portion of the concert will be devoted to Igor Stravinsky's "Capriccio for Piano and Orchestra" with Sanroma as soloist.

—J. S.

LA CROSSE, WIS.
TRIBUNE
APR 15 1956

Boston Symphony To Play Ex-City Man's Composition

Robert Moevs, formerly of La Crosse and now an instructor in composition in the music department at Harvard University, will have one of his works, "14 Variations for Orchestra," presented by the Boston Symphony Monday night.

Leonard Bernstein, famous conductor, will direct the orchestra. Moevs, now known as a prominent American composer, is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Moevs of 1602 Cass St.

The program will be heard locally over Radio Station WKBH from 7:15-9 p.m. Monday, April 16.

Born in La Crosse 35 years ago, Moevs was fifth in his Central High School graduating class. He was one of the outstanding pianists there as well as in this community. He had been president of the Nocturne Club. After graduation, he was given a scholarship at Harvard. He secured his degree from that university, then entered the Air Force to serve as pilot and interpreter in the European Theater. Moevs received his discharge in 1947.

He then attended the Paris Conservatory of Music for four years and in 1952 was one of 12 Americans to be awarded a prize fellowship in Rome. Moevs studied at the American Academy in Rome for three years, and then returned to Harvard as instructor.

ROBERT MOEVS

LIBRARY JOURNAL
NEW YORK, N. Y.
APR 15 1956

RECORDED Music

By Philip L. Miller
The New York Public Library
Guest Reviewer
James Coover, Music Librarian
Vassar College

All records reviewed are twelve-inch, 33.3 rpm, $3.98, except as noted. ML—Columbia (4 ML—, $4.98); LC—Epic; HSL—Haydn Society ($5.95); LL— and LLP—London; MG—Mercury (OL 3-102, $19.95); LM—RCA Victor ($4.98).

ORCHESTRAL MUSIC—OUTSTANDING

BEETHOVEN: Symphony no. 3 "Eroica". Chicago Sym. Orch.; Fritz Reiner, cond. LM—1899.

A feature of any Reiner performance is its lithe, relentless rhythmic drive; it makes this version of the "Eroica" vital, direct, and convincing. Those who prefer a more determinedly romantic treatment of Beethoven are advised to look elsewhere, but of the straightforward versions now available—and there are a goodly number—this is in every way superior. RCA sound compliments the superlative orchestral play and Reiner's dramatically understated interpretation.

BRAHMS: Concerto for Violin and Orch., D major, op. 77. Chicago Sym. Orch.; Fritz Reiner, cond.; Jascha Heifetz, vln. LM—1903.

Heifetz' prowess allows him to disdain the technical challenges of this work. The result is a thrilling performance that contrasts glowing lyric passages with those of blazing and savage—but happy—abandonment. Not for those who prefer Brahms emotionally incontinent or heavily meditative—these tempi are brisk, the overall effect one of zestful extroversion. The orchestra, the conductor, the engineers—all contribute their wonderful best to make this a high-spirited and eloquent performance.

STRAUSS, R.: Till Eulenspiegel and Death and Transfiguration. NBC Sym. Orch.; Arturo Toscanini, cond. LM—1891.

Taken at a more solemn pace than the majority of other versions available, these works seem more imposing, more earnest and more telling here than is customary. Till is not cute; he is a nasty and deliberate rowdy. Suiting the punishment to the crimes, Toscanini provides a momentous gallows scene. Reiner's (LM—1180) Till may be more witty, but Toscanini's has more meaning. "Death and Transfiguration" is surely one of the most completely beautiful records to the credit of this orchestra and its conductor. Beside it all other versions sound commonplace. Unqualifiedly recommended for libraries!

TCHAIKOVSKI: Concerto for Piano and Orch., no. 1 in B-flat minor. Chicago Sym. Orch.; Fritz Reiner, cond.; Emil Gilels, pf. LM—1969.

Rugged, earthy and, in turn, poetic and lyrical, the "Concerto" as performed by Gilels is more poised and less introspective than usual. The customary Tchaikovski mien of morbid self-indulgence is overshadowed by an almost heroic eloquence. Gilels' pianism is brilliant. Held in firm control by the very evident influence of Reiner, abetted by the excellent orchestral work, and beautifully recorded, this version is unsurpassed.

ORCHESTRAL MUSIC—RECOMMENDED

BERLIOZ: Symphonie Fantastique. Boston Sym. Orch.; Charles Munch, cond. LM—1900.

The superb woodwind sounds from Boston on this disc are preferable to their nearest competition, the thumping good percussive achievements from Minneapolis (MG 50034). Dorati's version and this by Munch have essentially similar goals, and both—though different—are effective statements. An older performance by Ormandy and the Philadelphia (3 ML—4467) boasts the usual Philadelphia qualifications plus a vital measure of clarity in the important finales to both second and fourth movements not present in any other versions. For a few listeners, even the revered Van Beinum interpretation (LLP—389) will not be overshadowed by Munch's performance. RCA sound is a bit too magnificent for comfortable listening. A definitive "Fantastique" is still needed.

BRAHMS: Symphony no. 4 in E minor. Detroit Sym. Orch.; Paul Paray, cond. MG 50057.

This is a profound and impassioned reading, challenged for overall merit by only the Toscanini (LM—1713). Interpretatively, Paray's performance is brilliant—unmatched even by Toscanini's—but orchestrally, the performance is a bit stern, a bit hard-driven, the tonal fabric therefore a bit thin. A Mercury sound luxuriant in highs and lows but lacking the general suavity of the Victor recording heightens this impression.

ITALIAN CLASSICAL SYMPHONISTS, VOLUME II. ITALIAN CHAMBER ORCH.; NEWELL JENKINS, COND. HSL-135/136/137/138.

PAISIELLO: Concerto for Piano and Orch. in C major. Carlo Bussotti, pf. BRUNETTI: Symphony no. 31 in D minor (Record no. 1) The inclusion of two complete symphonies by Brunetti in this set (the other on Record

BALTIMORE, MD.
AMERICAN
Circ. S. 317,397
APR 15 1956

Records

Tchaikovsky Clicks Again

By RECORDER

That faithful old war-horse, Tchaikovsky, gets the long play this week.

His "Symphony No. 4 in F Minor" has been recorded for Columbia by the Philadelphia Orchestra under Eugene Ormandy and is one of the best of three recordings of the Russian's symphonies.

This recording ranks high among the many long-playing discs already made of this inspiring work.

Another highly commendable recording of the same is Charles Munch's conducting of the Boston Symphony for RCA Victor.

Considered the strongest and best of his three great latter symphonies, the tragic Fourth is given a beautiful performance.

Not up to same standard, however, is Columbia's recording of Tchaikovsky's "Symphony No. 5 in E Minor" by the New York Philharmonic under Dimitri Mitropoulos.

Here the most popular of the Tchaikovsky symphonies is given the curb. Where one expects passion there is nothing out of the ordinary and certain emphasis appear for unknown reasons. (Maybe Mitropoulos grew tired of the way things were.)

Tchaikovsky's "Symphony No. 6 in B Minor," as played by the Boston Symphony under Pierre Monteux on RCA Victor returns to the sphere of orchestral splendor the final great symphony of the dying composer.

He left its program content enigmatic, but we do know that he held it in high esteem personally and poured into its subjective grandeur much ardor and many tears.

PRODUCING cover photographs for record albums is no snap, particularly when they have to be taken on a Navajo reservation, as was the striking cover on "Reflections of an Indian Boy," which was reviewed here last Sunday.

To get the effect he wanted, cover photographer Allen Reed had to get an Indian boy, a goat and a mountain, and get them all in the same place. All of the boys were out of the territory and the goats were all either too large or too small.

Once he had surmounted these problems, he had to take the boy and goat up a 5,000-foot mountain—and hope that the sun would still be shining. The first day, it rained. So back down the mountain they all jeeped. The second day he was successful. Even then he had to send his plates out of the Navajo country by burro.

Sunday Post
BRIDGEPORT, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 61,159
APR 15 1956

			N
tNashCHL4	3.80	137½	132½	137½	+
NATCOC.40r	12	18⅝	18	18½	—
NatAcme2a	30	78½	75½	77	+2
xdNatAirlin1	180	26⅞	23⅞	26¾	+2⅞

Leonard Bernstein will conduct the Boston Symphony orchestra in music by two contemporary composers Monday (NBC Radio, 8:15 p. m.). Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist, will be soloist.

The opening work will be "Fourteen Variations for Orchestra" by Robert Moevs, American composer, who wrote the work on commission from the Roussevitzky Foundation. It was first performed last February in New York by the Symphony of the Air under Bernstein's direction. The remaining portion of the concert will be devoted to Igor Stravinsky's "Cap-

SARASOTA, FLA.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
Circ. D. 11,001 - S. 13,388
APR 15 1956

Concert Tickets Still Available

Memberships and renewals for the 1956-57 season of the Community Concert Association have run far ahead of last year, it was announced yesterday. However, space remains and those wishing to enjoy the splendid programs already lined up for next season, including the Boston Pops Orchestra—"There is only one Arthur Fiedler"—are urged to send dues to Postoffice Box 1714 at once.

Furniture has been purchased to be used in visiting artists' rooms at Municipal Auditorium. In past seasons, various local firms, including Hendry, Mather and Kane, were most generous in making loans. But with the Florida West Coast Symphony using its own rehearsal hall, it has been possible to get storage space for permanent furnishings, so Mrs. Horace J. Palmer, dressing room chairman, announced.

At the annual meeting of the Association last week, Guy Saunders, who has been responsible for decorations at concerts, was lauded for his taste and ingenuity. He praised a liberal loan of plants by the Palmer Nursery.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

J.
382
56

Our Gal Sunday and Road of Life, daytime serials normally heard over WCBS between 12:45 and 1:15 p.m., will not be broadcast Monday through Thursday because of special reports on the Grace Kelly-Prince Rainier wedding, which will take place Wednesday and Thursday.

* * *

Thomas E. Dewey, former governor of New York, will be tonight's guest on Meet the Press at 6 on WRCA. . . . Arthur Godfrey will broadcast his WCBS programs from Miami Beach, Fla., for two weeks, starting tomorrow morning. . . . "Should Wire Tap Evidence Be Admissible in Our Courts" will be discussed on WNEW's The Law on Trial program tonight at 10:45.

* * *

Rudy Wissler, singer, will hold the fort for Gary Crosby on the Edgar Bergen Hour while Crosby makes a two-month tour of Australia and England with Louis Armstrong and his band. Wissler will take over next Sunday night at 7:05 on WCBS.

Incidentally, for the first time in his radio career, Bergen will [illegible] and in Swedish—on his [illegible]st tonight.

* * *

[illegible] Bernstein will conduct [illegible] Symphony Orches[illegible] by two contempo[illegible]rs tomorrow night [illegible]:15. Jesus Maria [illegible] will be soloist. [illegible] work will be [illegible]ns for Orches[illegible]ws, American [illegible] the work on [illegible]e Kousse[illegible] was first [illegible] in New [illegible] of the [illegible]ection [illegible] the con[illegible] to Igor Stra[illegible]cio for Piano and [illegible] with Sanroma as [illegible]

—J. S.

LA CROSSE, WIS.
TRIBUNE
APR 15 1956

Boston Symphony To Play Ex-City Man's Composition

ROBERT MOEVS

Robert Moevs, formerly of La Crosse and now an instructor in composition in the music department at Harvard University, will have one of his works, "14 Variations for Orchestra," presented by the Boston Symphony Monday night.

Leonard Bernstein, famous conductor, will direct the orchestra. Moevs, now known as a prominent American composer, is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Moevs of 1602 Cass St.

The program will be heard locally over Radio Station WKBH from 7:15-8 p.m. Monday, April 16.

Born in La Crosse 35 years ago, Moevs was fifth in his Central High School graduating class. He was one of the outstanding pianists there as well as in this community. He had been president of the Nocturne Club. After graduation, he was given a scholarship at Harvard. He secured his degree from that university, then entered the Air Force to serve as pilot and interpreter in the European Theater. Moevs received his discharge in 1947.

He then attended the Paris Conservatory of Music for four years and in 1952 was one of 12 Americans to be awarded a prize fellowship in Rome. Moevs studied at the American Academy in Rome for three years, and then returned to Harvard as instructor.

BALTIMORE, MD.
AMERICAN
Circ. S. 317,397
APR 15 1956

Records

Tchaikovsky Clicks Again

By RECORDER

That faithful old warhorse, Tchaikovsky, gets the long play this week.

His "Symphony No. 4 in F Minor" has been recorded for Columbia by the Philadelphia Orchestra under Eugene Ormandy and is one of the best of three recordings of the Russian's symphonies.

This recording ranks high among the many long-playing discs already made of this inspiring work.

Another highly commendable recording of the same is Charles Munch's conducting of the Boston Symphony for RCA Victor.

Considered the strongest and best of his three great latter symphonies, the tragic Fourth is given a beautiful performance.

Not up to same standard, however, is Columbia's recording of Tchaikovsky's "Symphony No. 5 in E Minor" by the New York Philharmonic under Dimitri Mitropoulos.

Here the most popular of the Tchaikovsky symphonies is given the curb. Where one expects passion there is nothing out of the ordinary and certain emphasis appear for unknown reasons. (Maybe Mitropoulos grew tired of the way things were.)

Tchaikovsky's "Symphony No. 6 in B Minor," as played by the Boston Symphony under Pierre Monteux on RCA Victor returns to the sphere of orchestral splendor the final great symphony of the dying composer.

He left its program content enigmatic, but we do know that he held it in high esteem personally and poured into its subjective grandeur much ardor and many tears.

PRODUCING cover photographs for record albums is no snap, particularly when they have to be taken on a Navajo reservation, as was the striking cover on "Reflections of an Indian Boy," which was reviewed here last Sunday.

To get the effect he wanted, cover photographer Allen Reed had to get an Indian boy, a goat and a mountain, and get them all in the same place. All of the boys were out of the territory and the goats were all either too large or too small.

Once he had surmounted these problems, he had to take the boy and goat up a 5,000-foot mountain and hope that the sun would still be shining. The first day it rained. So back down the mountain they all jeeped. The second day he was successful. Even then he had to send his plates out of the Navajo country by burro.

Sunday Post
BRIDGEPORT, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 61,159
APR 15 1956

	N
†NashCHL4	3.80	137½	132½	137½	+ [illegible]
NATCOC.40r	12	18⅝	18	18⅛	— [illegible]
NatAcme2a	30	78½	75⅞	77	+2
xdNatAirlnl	180	26⅞	23⅞	26½	+2[illegible]

Leonard Bernstein will conduct the Boston Symphony orchestra in music by two contemporary composers Monday (NBC Radio, 8:15 p. m.). Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist, will be soloist.

The opening work will be "Fourteen Variations for Orchestra" by Robert Moevs, American composer, who wrote the work on commission from the Roussevitzky Foundation. It was first performed last February in New York by the Symphony of the Air under Bernstein's direction. The remaining portion of the concert will be devoted to Igor Stravinsky's "Cap[illegible]

SARASOTA, FLA.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
Circ. D. 14,001 - S. 13,388
APR 15 1956

Concert Tickets Still Available

Memberships and renewals for the 1956-57 season of the Community Concert Association have run far ahead of last year, it was announced yesterday. However, space remains and those wishing to enjoy the splendid programs already lined up for next season, including the Boston Pops Orchestra—"There is only one Arthur Fiedler"—are urged to send dues to Postoffice Box 1714 at once.

Furniture has been purchased to be used in visiting artists' rooms at Municipal Auditorium. In past seasons, various local firms, including Hendry, Mather and Kane, were most generous in making loans. But with the Florida West Coast Symphony using its own rehearsal hall, it has been possible to get storage space for permanent furnishings, so Mrs. Horace J. Palmer, dressing room chairman, announced.

At the annual meeting of the Association last week, Guy Saunders, who has been responsible for decorations at concerts, was lauded for his taste and ingenuity. He praised a liberal loan of plants by the Palmer Nursery.

Chicago, Ill. The program includes presentation of the 1956 Golden Reel Film Award.

FCA film information service

Film Council of America announced the establishment of a new film information service, which provides with film information on all public libraries, and all FCA publicizes Film Lists, a new film information center. Film data are easy; there are mailed by-lists of 20 titles index, and packets subject-title index. For information Council of America, 600 Film Council, Ill.

Film assembly in Chicago

The third American Film Assembly will meet April 23-27, at The Morrison Hotel, Louisville (Ky.) Free Public Library.

Salina library radio program

The Salina (Kan.) Journal on station KSAL, by Eve Lake India, by program director, The Salina Journal, Customan, library.

Ramsay, Allen, 1713-1784.
Thoughts on the origin and nature of government, addressed to the American colonies. Written in the year 1766 (1st ed. London: Printed for T. Becket and P. A. de Hondt, 1768)
Microcard edition (3 cards).
Copy owned by Thomas Jefferson, ms. annotations by Benjamin Franklin.
Sabin 67679. Sowerby 3073.
VtU 68-8671 for $5 2-4
1. U.S.—Pol. & govt.—Revolution. 2. Stamp act, 1766. I. Title.

Card 1 (of 3)

Catalog cards are provided with the microcards in the Louisville project the quality of the work [illegible] unknown composer. His is lucid, [illegible]ty, and forcible music, immediately likeable and increasingly rewarding with repitition. The performance of the "Symphony no. 31" is a spirited one, enhanced throughout by two fine horn players. The Paisiello is a bit pale by comparison, but the comparison is not exactly fair. It, too, receives affable treatment from the orchestra, and the recorded sound on both sides is well suited to the music.

PUGNANI: Symphony no. 5 in A major. SARTI: Concertone per più strumenti obbligati. SAMMARTINI, Giuseppe: Concerto for Oboe and Orch., no. 1. Sidney Gallesi, oboe. (Record no. 2)

An unusual work with a concertino composed of 2 clarinets, 2 horns, 2 violins, a viola and cello, and a ripieno consisting of the remaining strings plus bassoon, Sarti's "Concertone" is performed here from the original manuscripts. The Sammartini, though not as interesting, is pleasant. Pugnani's "Symphony" is tiresome and occasionally pretentious despite its rather unusual ordering of movements, some flamboyant (for Pugnani's time) harmonic constructions, and a generally vigorous and alert performance.

VIOTTI: Concerto for Violin and Orch., no. 4 in D major. Antonio Abussi, vln. ALBINONI: Concerto for Oboe and Orch. in D minor. Sidney Gallesi, oboe. DURANTE: Concerto no. 4 in E minor for strings and harpsichord. (Record no. 3)

The Durante "Concerto" is the most charming work of the three on this disc and one of the most surprising in the whole set. Short and simple, it is completely satisfying. The orchestra sounds more vital here than in other works in the set. Though it is perhaps a more profound work, on this disc the impact of the Viotti is lessened by frowzy intonation in its early sections. Solo parts in both the Viotti and the Albinoni are well played by Abussi and Gallesi. The latter's oboe work is beautifully dark-hued and expressive— some of the most tasteful to be found on record. The recording is bright and spacious.

BRUNETTI: Symphony no. 33 in C minor, "Il Maniatico". CLEMENTI: Concerto for Piano and Orchestra in C major. Carlo Bussotti, pf. (Record no. 4)

Mr. Jenkins states in his album notes that Clementi's is "a lost masterpiece of a great composer [and] one of the few great Italian classic piano concertos," and one which he hopes "may receive many performances in the future." It is unfortunate, then, that a polished performance of such important music should be less than elegantly recorded. The microphones are too close to the piano, too far from the orchestra to produce a really noble sound, a balanced sound, or one with much clarity. The Brunetti "Symphony" on the other side is a programmatic work of persuasive wit and profundity as well—and is superbly played. And here, the microphones are a bit more perceptive, the resultant recorded sound more distinguished.

TCHAIKOVSKI: Symphony no. 6 "Pathetique". Boston Sym. Orch.; Pierre Monteux, cond. LM—1901.

As in the Gilels/Reiner version of the "Concerto" reviewed above, Tchaikovski again emerges tragic yet strong, pitiable yet dignified. This is a powerful statement. Conducting and orchestra work are consistently first-rate, and there is little real competition in the catalog for this performance except, perhaps, Ormandy's with the Philadelphia (4 ML-4544). Generally overlooked and though not in a class with Monteux's or Ormandy's, the recording by Cantelli and the Philharmonia (HMV 1047) still presents the most thrilling second movement of any, in this reviewer's opinion.

TCHAIKOVSKI: Swan Lake, Acts II & III. Members of the NBC Sym. Orch.; Leopold Stokowski, cond. LM—1894.

Idiosyncracies in a few sensitive places subtract from the overall effectiveness of this otherwise fine performance. No competition for Stokowski's appraisal of Act II and Act III exists except Dorati's, but in this case, the acts appear on two different discs. They are available singly (MG 50069 and 50070), and warrant serious comparison with Stokowski's, despite the disparity in relative costs. RCA's album and recording are, of course, sumptuous.

MOZART: Concerto for Piano and Orch. no. 23, in A major, K. 488; Concerto for Piano and Orch. no. 20, in D minor, K. 466. Vienna Sym. Orch.; Paul Sacher, cond. (in K. 488); Bernhard Paumgartner, cond. (in K. 466); Clara Haskil, pf. in both. LC—3163.

Worthwhile in every way, these performances are, however, for those preferring a prim and ruminating Mozart. Buoyance and verve are not strong features of this performance, and the recording reflects this. The piano is at a great distance from the microphones and therefore often submerged in the orchestral sounds. Purchase of this disc should not be eschewed if a coupling of these two concerti is needed. If separate purchase is possible, others are more attractive, particularly Schnabel, Süsskind, and the Philharmonia in the K. 466 (HMV 1012), and the Gieseking, von Karajan, Philharmonia recording of the K. 488 (4 ML-4536).

You'll find lists of selected
PAPERBOUND BOOKS
under MUSIC AND DANCE and HIGH FIDELITY
in PAPERBOUND BOOKS IN PRINT, a new subject guide with author index to 5000 inexpensive editions. Issued several times yearly; Spring edition out March 1956. 60c each in lots of 5 or more; $2 for 3 consecutive issues; $1 for single copies. R. R. BOWKER COMPANY, 62 W. 45TH ST., NEW YORK 36.

52

CHICAGO, ILL.
AMERICAN
Circ. D. 524,656 - S. 769,679
APR 15 1958

Passing In Review

Zelzer's Glad Tidings for '56-57

By Roger Dettmer

WITH THE 1955-1956 music season nearly ended, it's time again to look forward—to set down what the summer and fall-winter seasons of 1956-57 have in store.

The symphony, which ended its 65th year of concerts last Friday, some weeks ago announced guest-conductors and certain key soloists to be heard in '56-57. Today, Harry Zelzer's mammoth Allied Arts Corp. is the bearer of good glad tidings.

In an operation as extensive as the Allied Arts schedule—more than half a hundred attractions each concert year—there's inevitably the danger of anticlimax, especially following seasons as provocative as the past two.

Mr. Zelzer did not, however, come by his reputation as America's foremost independent concert manager through any fluke or stroke of idle luck. He is an artist-merchandiser at once canny, resourceful and musically alert. He knows very well what he can sell, but knows, too, and is willing to gamble on, what ought to be sold by him.

His proposed 1956-57 agenda is notable evidence. Divided into four series (not including Dance which Ann Barzel will attend to when specifics are made public), over and above a long list of single attractions, are the following musicians and musical organizations—some firsts, some familiar, many of them treasured concert friends.

★ ★ ★

IMPORTED orchestras this coming year will be the great Vienna Philharmonic Nov. 18) on its first U. S. tour under the baton of Andre Cluytens from the Paris Opera; a return visit by the Berlin Philharmonic (Oct. 27-28) conducted by its music-director, Herbert von Karajan, and a second appearance here of Mantovani and His New Music (Oct. 13 and 14).

Choral groups, some of them assisted by instrumental forces, include such hardy perennials as the Obernkirchen Children's Choir (May 12), Vienna Choir Boys (Jan. 27), both Don Cossack Choruses (contracts and dates pending) and the newly formed "De Paur Opera Gala" (Jan. 13) which will present scenes from Virgil Thomson's "Four Saints in the Three Acts," "Carmen Jones" and "Porgy and Bess."

SOPRANO Inge Borkh will appear as a presentation of the Allied Arts Corp. next season, with a two-day visit next March 16 and 17.

IRMGARD SEEFRIED
Soloist on Dec. 9

LIZ SCHWARZKOPF
Sings here Oct. 21.

New on the choral scene will be the National Swedish Singers (75 male voices, Nov. 4) and two children's choruses: The Singing Boys of Norway (date pending) and Stockholms Gosskor from St. Mary's Church in the Swedish capital (Oct. 7).

★ ★ ★

SOLO SINGERS in 1956-'57 will be sopranos Elisabeth Schwarzkopf (Oct. 21), Irmgard Seefried (Dec. 9) and Inge Borkh (March 16), with the possibility of Adele Addison; contralto Marian Anderson (Feb. 24); tenors Nicolai Gadde (debut Apr. 27) and Leopold Simoneau (Apr. 21), and baritone Igor Gorin (Apr. 20).

Pianists already engaged are Malcuzynski (March 19), Brailowsky (March 24), Vronsky and Babin (Nov. 11), Gary Graffman (Nov. 25), Louis Kentner (Dec. 2), Moiseiwitsch (Feb. 3), Benno Moiseiwtsch (Feb. 10), Serkin (March 10), Solomon (March 31), Jacob Lateiner (Apr. 28), winner of the Society of American Musicians contest (May 5) and Gieseking (Feb. 24). The Russian Gilels is a sure property if the Soviet government consents to a second American tour in 1956-57.

String players next season will include violinists Isaac Stern (Jan. 6), Mischa Elman (Feb. 17), Nathan Milstein (March 2) and Oistrakh (pending as is Gilels); guitarist Andres Segovia (Apr. 14), and cellist Gregor Piatigorsky (Feb. 24).

★ ★ ★

ALLIED ARTS also has booked, definitely, a new chamber-music group called the Festival Quartet—a stellar assembly set to debut this summer at Aspen and play here next Jan. 20. Its members are pianist Victor Babin, violinist Szymon Goldberg, violist William Primrose and cellist Nicolai Graudan. Sounds like Ravinia's famous "million dollar trio" with an extra $333,333.33 artist included for good measure.

Other pending attractions for 1956-57 are, in addition to those elsewhere noted, the Boston Pops Tour Orchestra, Arthur Fiedler in charge; comedienne Anna Russell, and tenors Jan Peerce and Richard Tucker.

And don't forget, in May, 1957, as in May, 1954 and '55 and '56, a six performance visit (maybe longer, if Lyric Theatre doesn't put its doll house in prompt order and give Chicago a fall season) by New York's Metropolitan Opera Association.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
Post & Times Herald
D. & S.
APR 15 1956

Three Orchestras for One

(Third part of a series of four articles on the National Symphony.)

By Paul Hume

THE PURCHASE of the Snow Concert Bureau gave the National Symphony Orchestra what we may term "first call" on the services of the Philadelphia and Boston Orchestras.

Hume

After considering the many angles involved, the National Symphony has decided that it will present next season fifteen pairs of identical concerts, one pair on Tuesday nights (with the exception of one Thursday Boston concert), and one pair on Wednesday nights (with the exception of one Thursday Boston concert).

Calling it without any hesitation, "The Greatest Concert Series Ever Presented," the orchestra's management has scheduled for each series eleven programs by the National, two by the Philadelphia, one by the Boston, and one program (in the Capitol Theater) by the Royal Danish Ballet, a superb company for which the entire National Symphony will play.

IN ADDITION to these concerts, each of which will be heard on successive evenings, there will be two separate and different programs by the Philadelphia Orchestra during the season. This will make a total of four Philadelphia programs in the year for those who wish to hear that orchestra in all its playing here.

The National Symphony is guaranteeing, for the first time in history, a specified sum to each of these out of town orchestras, to come here and play on its series. The present season has heard thirty-one different programs from these three orchestras. Next season they will play a total of seventeen different programs.

It is on this point that many object to the action taken by the National Symphony, and it is from this that the charge of "monopoly" arises. Actually, there is no monopoly at all. The Boston and Philadelphia orchestras were and are under no compulsion to come to Washington for the National Symphony any more than they had to remain with the Snow Bureau. Both orchestras present series in New York City without any local management and could do so here, or they could engage some other bureau.

BUT THE REDUCTION, by half, in the total number of different symphony programs to be presented in Washington is a matter of serious concern to many. And it is to the National Symphony's rejoinder, "There is too much music in this town anyway," that these take exception.

We must point out at once that there are those within the official National Symphony family who say that they hope to see the pairs of concerts increased from fifteen to well over twenty within the next few seasons.

At the present time no one knows how the National Symphony's plans will work out. For two identical concerts in Constitution Hall there are 7600 seats available for sale. The National Symphony hopes for 6000 subscribers next fall, and would break even, according to an early report, with 5000. With around 1500 subscriptions sold already, they are comfortably ahead of their sales last year at this same time.

Next Sunday: the National Symphony today: financially, and artistically, and its prospects for the future.

SEATTLE, WASH.
Post-Intelligencer
Circ. D. 187,322 - S. 268,927
APR 15 1956

Wax Words:

Stern Costars In New Releases

In several recent releases the recording companies seem to have stolen a page from Hollywood to present not one or two but three "stars" in one album.

Two such albums come from Columbia; both have first-rate "costars" to appear with that first-rate violinist, Isaac Stern.

The "stars" of ML-5087 are Stern, Russian violinist David Oistrakh and conductor Eugene Ormandy leading the Fabulous Philadelphia Orchestra in Vivaldi's Concerto in A minor for Two Violins. To fill out this fine record, Stern solos in Bach's Violin Concerto No. 1 in A minor and Oistrakh is the soloist for Bach's Violin Cincerto No. 2 in E major.

Oistrakh's performance (and approach) sounds a shade more lean, a little tougher than Stern's but actually both are such superb violinists there's not a great deal of difference and only the keenest ear can readily identify who is on what side of the Iron Curtain. (Or maybe the similarity in sound and performance results from the recording having been made in the fresh air of freedom.)

FOR ML-5076 Stern is again "costarred," this time with cellist Leonard Rose and conductor Bruno Walter, leading the New York Philharmonic in an excitingly played interpretation of Brahms' Double Concerto for Violin and Cello. Brahms' "Tragic Overture" and the "Variations on a Theme by Haydn," both taken from Walter's plush album of Brahms' music released over a year ago, fill out the recording.

Victor's top violinist, Heifetz, also has a new release—a pairing of Bruch's Concerto No. 2 in D minor with Wieniawski's Concerto No. 2, also in D minor, the work Heifetz played in his American debut in 1917 (LM-1931).

Izler Solomon conducted the RCA Victor Symphony Orchestra for the recording which seems designed to showcase Heifetz' virtuosity. Both Concerti fill this qualification most admirably.

Violinist Johanna Martzy, on Angel (35282), is continuing her recording of Bach's Partitas and Sonatas for Unaccompanied Violin. Her third and newest disk contains Sonata No. 3 in C major and Partita No. 3 in E major. Miss Martzy takes a relaxed, lyrical approach to produce some truly rewarding listening.

STILL ANOTHER violinist, Zino Francescatti, shares a new Columbia album (ML-5049) with pianist Robert Casadesus in playing Faure's two lovely violin-piano sonatas, No. 1 in A major and No. 2 in E minor—a perfect blending in both composition and performance.

A new London release features pianist Guy Fallot and cellist Monique Fallot teaming up for Faure's cello-piano sonatas No. 1 in D minor and No. 2 in G minor, equally lovely, equally listenable as the violin-piano sonatas.

And another notable new disk from RCA Victor spotlights the Boston Symphony String Quartet playing Haydn's "Seven Last Words of Christ," actually seven individual string quartets written, and here performed, with a great feeling of reverence (LM-1949).

Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 179,065

APR 15 1956

Hub Symphony's Season Finale

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra will play its final Providence concert of the season Tuesday night in Veterans Memorial Auditorium. In the same auditorium tonight the La Salle Academy Band will perform its 25th anniversary concert and in Alumnae Hall, Brown University, the University String Quartet will present a chamber music program.

Featured by the Boston Symphony will be Bohuslav Martinu's Symphony No. 6, called "Fantaisies Symphoniques," which conductor Charles Munch will give its first Providence performance. The work was composed for Mr. Munch and performed under his direction for the first time last season. It received the award of the New York Music Critics Circle as "the best new orchestral score" performed in New York City during 1955. The program:

I.
Symphony in D Major, "Haffner" No. 35 K.385 ..Mozart
Overture—Fantasia, "Romeo and Juliet" ..... Tschaikovsky

II.
"Fantaisies symphoniques" (Symphony No. 6) .....Martinu
Three Dances from the Ballet, "El Sombrero de Tres Picos" de Falla

Concerning his symphony, Martinu, now a resident of New York, says: "There is one reason for this work which is clear and certain to me: I wished to write something for Charles Munch. I am impressed and I like his spontaneous approach to the music where music takes shape in a free way, flowing and freely following its movements.

"So I had the intention to write for him a symphony which I would call 'Fantastic,' and I started my idea in a big way, putting three pianos in a very big orchestra." The composer then "came down to earth" and abandoned the title and the three pianos.

"I called the three movements 'Fantaisies,'" he continues, "which they really are. One little fantasy of mine is that I use a few bars quotation from another piece, from my opera 'Juliet,' which, to my mind, fitted in perfectly well. That is of the nature of fantasy. I did it somehow for myself because I like the special orchestral color in it, and thinking that I shall never hear my opera again, I could listen once more to these few bars, which I rewrote by memory."

Academy Program Tonight

Vocal, instrumental and dance soloists, and the La-Salle Academy Orchestra will give diversity to the academy's band concert in Veterans Memorial Auditorium tonight at 8:15. Arthur Paquette is bandmaster, the Rev. Brother Edward and Brother James, moderators. The program:

March, "Liberty Bell" ..... Sousa
Pierce Healey, drum major, conducting Overture, "The Bridal Rose" .....
..... C. Lavallee
Saxophone Ensemble, "Moonlight Serenade" ..... William Hudson
Richard Caruso, Alfred Colletti, John Manzo, Vincent Montecalvo, Vincent Nardacci, Richard Pantano.
Waltz, "Gold and Silver" ... Lehar
Dance routine by Twins and Two Misses, Robert McElroy-Ellen Dunphy, Thomas McElroy-Marianne Dunphy
Saxophone Solo, "Harlem Nocturne" ..... Earle Hagen
Richard Caruso
"American Folk Rhapsody" .....
..... Clare Grundman
March, "Military Escort" .....
Band ..... Harold Bennett
"All at Once You Love Her" .....
..... Hammerstein
"He," vocal by Robert Mainelli .....
"Blue Tango" ..... Mullan
Dance Routine, Twins and Two Misses ..... Anderson
"Seventeen" .....
..... Young, Gorman, and Bennett
"No, Not Much," vocal by Robert Mainelli ..... Stillman
"Tina Marie" ..... Bob Merrill
"My Shawl" .....
"Memories of You" Razaf and Blake
Orchestra ..... Cugat
March, "Washington Post" ... Sousa
Overture, "Argonaut" .....
..... Carl Frangkisser
Brass Ensemble, "My Heart Stood Still" ..... Rodgers
Anthony Celona, George Dubiel, Angelo Ferrari, Eugene Luini, Robert Pencarski
"Jamaican Rumba" Arthur Benjamin
Piano Solo, "Dream of Olven" .....
..... Charles Williams
John Hanagan
Novelty, "The Three Trees" .....
..... Tom McNaughton
William McGroarty, narrator
Clarinet Solo, "Minute Waltz" .....
..... Chopin
Vincent Montecalvo
"Tribute to Romberg" .... Romberg
National Anthem
Band

Mr. Paquette became bandmaster at La Salle in 1951. A graduate of the Boston Conservatory of Music, he is also a member of the Rhode Island Philharmonic Orchestra, in the violin section. John Scardera, Louis Pezzullo, Anthony Esposito and Donald Houghton, band members of the class of '55, are playing with the Rhode Island Junior Philharmonic.

The band had its beginning when Brother Alban Raymund, director of La Salle, and the late Wilfrid V. Roberts, teacher at La Salle and director of the orchestra, decided to expand the orchestra into a band which would play, among other times, at football games. On Nov. 11, 1931, it made its first appearance.

For almost 20 years the combination of Mr. Roberts' music, the drill formations and snappy marching of the late Capt. Edwin K. Devine, made a marked impression. During World War II the band played at numerous bond rallies.

Burgess With Quartet

John Burgess, principal flutist with the Rhode Island Philharmonic Orchestra will assist the University String Quartet in its program tonight at 8:30 in Alumnae Hall. The concert is presented by the Brown University department of music and is open to the public without charge.

Members of the quartet are Arlan R. Coolidge and Charles Dickerson, violins; Martin Fischer, viola, and Otto Van Koppenhagen, cello. Their program:

I
Quartet for Flute, Violin, Viola and Cello in D (K. 285) ..... Mozart
String Quartet No. 7 in B Flat ..... Milhaud

II
String Quartet in F, Op. 74 No. 2 ..... Haydn

Community's Next Season

The Ruth Page Chicago Opera Ballet and a two-piano recital by Robert and Gaby Casadesus are two attractions announced for next season by the Providence Community Concert Association which at an Hour of Music tomorrow at 4 p.m., at the home of Mrs. G. Pierce Metcalf, 66 Cooke St., will launch its annual open membership week.

Frances Bible, brilliant young American mezzo-soprano of the New York City Center and San Francisco opera companies, will be the soloist at the Hour of Music. Miss Bible made her debut with the New York company in 1948 as Cherubino, in "The Marriage of Figaro," and has since won equal success in "Der Rosenkavalier," "Aida," "The Tales of Hoffman" and others. Her success at the Glyndebourne Festival in England last summer led to her re-engagement for the coming summer.

With Stanton Carter as accompanist she will sing the following program: "El Vito," Obradors; "Fior di dolcezza," Del Valle de Paz; "When Love Is Kind," LaForge; "Think on Me," Scott; "The Rich Man," Hageman; Habanera, from "Carmen," Bizet.

The Casadesus recital will open the season Monday Nov. 12. The ballet is booked for Saturday Dec. 8. Three other programs will make up the usual series of five and will be engaged as soon as the association knows what funds it has to work with at the end of the campaign. There is a large percentage of renewals from year to year but some seats are available to new members who apply early. Last season's campaign was a practical sellout.

Dues for sustaining members are $15, for regular members, $8.50, and for students, $5. Some tickets are given free to students through the public schools, the number at present being 50. No tickets are sold for single concerts.

Mrs. Joseph B. Webber and Mrs. L. Ralston Thomas are cochairmen of the campaign committee which includes about 100 volunteer workers. The campaign will extend through April 23. Headquarters are at the Axelrod Music Co., 251 Weybosset St.

At the end of this, its 25th season, the association has a record of 129 concerts. These are broken up into the following categories: 14 orchestras, seven choral groups, 11 ballet and dance groups, 22 pianists, four pairs of duo-pianists, 18 violinists and six other instrumental players, 24 women singers and 13 men singers. Members receive a questionnaire periodically to determine their preference in type of concert.

MacDowell President's Day

The MacDowell Club will hold its President's Day with a dinner and musicale by members at the Providence Art Club tomorrow evening at 6:30.

On the program will be a vocal group directed by Ivy Gray consisting of Kathleen Fraser, Gertrude Brett, Florence Erickson, Elsie Dickie, Helen Arnold, Ruth Wilks and Irma Howe, with Ingeborg Ziegler, accompanist; a trio, Mildred Copeland, violin; Louise Waterman, cello, and Elizabeth Higgins, pianist; Elsie Dickie, contralto, accompanied by Mrs. Ziegler, and Isabel Madden, pianist.

Chaminade President's Day

The Chaminade Club will observe President's Day, in honor of Mrs. Herbert E. Wood, with a musicale and tea at the Music Mansion Thursday at 2:30 p.m. Corrine Curry, soprano, and Elwyn Adams, violinist, will be the soloists, Robert Dunn and William Hutchinson, accompanists.

Both soloists are seniors at the New England Conservatory of Music. Miss Curry is one of the winners of the recent Rhode Island Philharmonic contest and will appear with the orchestra next season. Last spring she was award a scholarship jointly by the R.I. Federation of Music Clubs and Station WEAN, also the Monday Morning Musical Club. She has been active in radio, conservatory and Gardner Museum recitals.

Mr. Adams is the first Negro music student and the only American to enter the violin category of the annual German Radio Festival and competition in Munich, being unanimously selected as one of the five most promising violinists in the world. He was acclaimed as a prodigy violinist at his first public recital in Cleveland and since then has won scholarships and prizes that have taken him to Germany, the Berkshire Music Center and Boston. The program:

Sonata, Op. 47 (Kreutzer) ..Beethoven
Elwyn Adams
"Les Larmes" ..... Massenet
"Claire de Lune" ..... Debussy
"Fantoches" ..... Debussy
Corrine Curry
Air on the G String ..... Bach
Scherzo, Tarantelle, Op. 16 Wieniawski
Elwyn Adams
Two Songs from Goethe's
"Egmont" ..... Beethoven
"Die Trommel Geruhret"
"Freudvoll und Liedvoll"
"Sleep Now" ..... Samuel Barber
"I Hear an Army" ... Samuel Barber
"Daisies" ..... Samuel Barber
Corrine Curry

Boy Choristers May 10, 11

Saint Dunstan's Boy Choristers, T. James Hallan, director, will give their 16th annual operetta and concert May 10 and 11 in Rhode Island school of Design Auditorium. The operetta is "An Old Kentucky Garden," its score based on the music of Stephen C. Foster, adapted and arranged by G. A. Grant-Schaefer.

The libretto is by Theodosia Paynter and tells about a Southern belle, her brother, his Yankee college chum, a stolen ruby and a couple of characters who are after Foster's copyrights.

—George Humphrey Photo

Charles Munch, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, confers with the composer, Bohuslav Martinu, whose Sixth Symphony, 'Fantaisies Symphoniques,' will be given its first Providence performance Tuesday when the Bostonians end their season here.

Sunday Sun
WESTERLY, R. I.
Republican
Circ. 7,349

APR 15 1956

Fenway Park Is Groomed for Sox-Oriole Opener on Tuesday

BOSTON—Everything is set for a great day on Tuesday—opening day of Boston's baseball season at Fenway Park, with the Baltimore Orioles facing the Red Sox.

While the Red Sox have been making headway toward a great 1956 season in Southern cities en route back to Boston, the Red Sox ground crews have been making similar progress in their battle against the elements at the ball park. A minor miracle has been accomplished on Boston's Jersey Street. With a 26-man crew working in the wake of the late-season snowstorms, the playing field has been put into nearly-perfect condition for the opener.

The painting and primping program in the stands also has been carried out despite handicaps, and Fenway will be its handsome self on Tuesday. Within 24 hours after the last flake fell in the most recent storms, there was nary a sign of winter to be seen within the confines of the park.

All the while, a gala pre-game program has been arranged under the sponsorship of the Crosscup-Pishon Post, American Legion of Boston, whose sloogan is "Boost Boston Sports." This pageantry will start at 1:20 p. m. on Tuesday, with the Red Sox taking the field for the start of another American League pennant race promptly at the traditional time of 2 o'clock.

The pre-game festivities will include all the colorful traditional trappings of the past, including the throwing out of the first ball by the Governor of Massachusetts, and the flag raising ceremony by a crack detachment of the United States Marines with the National Anthem to be played under the direction of Arthur Fiedler, famous conductor of the Boston Pops orchestra.

Herald News (e)
FALL RIVER, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 39,811

APR 16 1956

Minor Miracle Accomplished By Red Sox Ground Crews

BOSTON— Everything is set for a great day tomorrow—opening day of Boston's baseball season at Fenway Park.

While the Red Sox were making headway toward a great 1956 season in Southern cities enroute back to Boston, Red Sox ground crews were making similar progress in their battle against the elements at the ball park.

A minor miracle has been accomplishd on Boston's Jersey Street. With a 26-man crew working in the wake of the late-season snowstorms, the playing field has been put into nearly-perfect condition for the opener.

The painting and primping program in the stands also has been carried out despite handicaps, and Fenway will be its handsome self tomorrow. Within 24 hours after the last flake fell in the most recent storms, there was nary a sign of Winter to be seen within the confines of the park.

A gala pre-game program has been arranged under the sponsorship of the Crosscup-Pishon Post, American Legion of Boston, whose slogan is "Boost Boston Sports." This pageantry will start at 1:20 and the Red Sox will take the field promptly at 2.

Governor Herter will throw out the first ball, a crack detachment of U. S. Marines will conduct the flag raising ceremony, the National Anthem will be sung by Brian Sullivan, Metropolitan Opera tenor, with Arthur Fiedler, of the Boston Pops Orchestra, conducting.

RICHMOND, VA.
TIMES-DISPATCH
Circ. D. 123,471 - S. 174,705

APR 15 1956

String Quartet

A string quartet made up of the Boston Symphony's four first-disk men, the Boston Symphony String Quartet, plays Haydn's "Seven Last Words of Christ" on LM-1949. These comprise seven brief quartets written on the traditional biblical narrative. Haydn's devotion makes various of these very moving works, but it must be confessed that powerful as some of the sections are, the effect is not and cannot be greatly varied, and some monotony is likely to creep in unless the work is projected with great vitality by the players. In this respect, to my ears the present group is one of four highly talented performers playing the notes with taste and accuracy, but by no means welded into a group that as one man can give this whole the expressive performance that is necessary. The recording is rather shrill and dry.

The Minneapolis Symphony's concert master, Rafael Druian, violinist, teams with John Simms at the piano in an extension of their previously recorded performances of modern works played with clarity and sympathy. Mercury MG-50096 contains the Violin Sonata No. 1 by Charles Ives, combined with the Sonata No. 2 by Quincy Porter. MG-50097 continues with the Ives No. 2, No. 3, and No. 4 sonatas, all that he wrote. Ives, who died only in 1954, was an American original, an insurance broker in New England who wrote music that in its advanced tonal dislocations, anticipated Stravinsky and the modern school.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
NEWS
Circ. D. 160,658

APR 16 1956

Drive Begun for Concert Memberships

Workers in the 1956-57 Community Concerts membership campaign will be guests at a dinner tonight at 6:30 in the Continental Hotel ballroom.

Renewal of membership for the subscription series, which presented its first concerts here last season, has already started, according to Morey J. Doyle, president of Community Concerts Association. Three of next season's six attractions will be the Chicago Opera Ballet, January 10; Boston Pops Orchestra, conducted by Arthur Fielder, February 19, and Lily Pons, April 27, 1957.

Tickets for the series of six concerts are $10. Special student tickets are $6. No single admissions will be sold. The concerts will be presented in the Murat Theater.

Honor guests at tonight's dinner will include Leonard Exum, Midwest representative of Community Concerts, Inc.; Hertha Stein Dumling, president of the Ft. Wayne Community Concert Association; Edwin Biltcliffe, director of the Indianapolis Symphonic Choir, and Ozan Marsh, resident pianist at Indiana University School of Music. Mrs. Carl A. Kuether is membership chairman.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 369,241

APR 15 1956

Society

MARJORIE WATTS SHERMAN Editor

POPS can mean different things to different people, and pops definitely comes in assorted flavors to Bobbie Haydock, Amy Morse and Kate Morse, who choose their favorites while their mothers address invitations to the annual Vassar Night at Pops May 16, which will benefit the scholarship fund.

ALL PICTURES
BY CHARLES DIXON
AND
PAUL CONNELL,
GLOBE STAFF
PHOTOGRAPHERS

ABOVE - CENTER—Even flowers can help send a girl to college. Mrs. Robert Haydock Jr. explains to two-year-old Sherrard Haydock, when they're sold at the Vassar Pops, May 16, at Symphony Hall. Proceeds will aid the Scholarship Fund.

ENJOYING a very overdue Spring day are committee members Mrs. Thomas Worthin, Mrs. Thomas Homer, Miss Bunny Wells, Mrs. Richard S. Alles, Mrs. Leonard Sommer, who met this week to plan the May 17 Night at Pops which Wells College, Goucher College, and Middlebury College are sharing.

NEWSWEEK
NEW YORK, N. Y.

APR 16 1956

MUSIC:

Triumph in Boston

The 75th Anniversary season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, currently being celebrated, has been a meticulously publicized event. Last week, it reached a proper tempered Boston crescendo. The Commonwealth of Massachusetts honored the BSO with laudatory resolutions from the State Senate and House of Representatives. RCA Victor, which has recorded the symphony for 40 years, gave the orchestra, via its conductors Charles Munch and Arthur Fiedler, a $2,000 diamond-studded baton from Van Cleef and Arpels, New York jewelers.

Informal tributes abounded. Mr. John, the New York hat designer, produced a creation which could have used the baton as a hatpin, but the symphony declined—politely, of course—to take advantage of its publicity potential. As one official said: "It would be like playing basketball in Chartres Cathedral."

"La Même Chose." As an institution, the Boston Symphony is a perfect example of *plus ça change, plus c'est la même chose. Founded and supported financially by one man, Maj. Henry Lee Higginson, it is now governed by a board and, like every other major U.S. symphony, has to scramble to cover each annual deficit. Formerly a nonunion organization, it survived a strike which decimated its ranks and eventually fell into the fold of James Caesar Petrillo's American Federation of Musicians.

Artistically, it was molded, successively, by two Germans (Gericke and Nikisch), a Frenchman (Monteux), a Russian (Koussevitzky), and, currently, another Frenchman. It has remained either one of the greatest orchestras in the U.S., which it was during the first half of its life, or one of the greatest orchestras in the world, which it is today.

Much of the symphony's reputation has been accomplished through the musical independence granted its conductors, a practice which originated with Higginson and has continued ever since. A Boston

*"The more it changes, the more it remains the same"—the original observation of Alphonse Karr, a nineteenth-century Frenchman who hated capital punishment and loved flowers.

PIX

Munch: After "Koussie," shyness

ra—Only the Meanest

roblem to the Boston Symphony. When ll on Oct. 15, 1900, the ladies in the dience were appalled to read in the ns of the City of Boston forbade "any vering which obstructs the view of the for their habitual hattedness, the la- asked if the edict would be enforced. re equal to the occasion: "The gracious pended upon to wear hats, if they wear n on earth could find no indictment." d with a hat of a different color. Mrs. of art and music who was also a rabid noon concert direct from a ball game. d reading "O You Red Sox!"

One-man rule for the BSO was not, however, to die with him. Serge Koussevitzky, who took over the orchestra in 1924 and ruled it until his retirement 25 years later, set up an autocracy which may have been less flamboyant than that enjoyed by Arturo Toscanini at NBC (after all, he was dealing with Boston and not with radio). It was in every way, however, just as effective. Nor was Koussevitzky any less tolerant of budgets than Higginson had been. "My dear Zir," he once admonished a nervous trustee, "music is a paraseet that take many monies."

From Tone to Tone: Charles Munch, the 63-year-old Frenchman from Strasbourg, inherited the "international" style of Koussevitzky in 1950. He was quickly accused of destroying the deep intensity of the "Koussevitzky tone" in favor of a drier, lighter "French tone." During the past two years, however, critics have noted that the orchestra has regained most of the bright, clear, clean, fresh resonance that brought it its greatest distinction.

As a personality, Munch is as unlike Koussevitzky as possible. He is shy, and dislikes the afterconcert receptions that made "Koussie" the idol of the hatted and gloved, if not spurred, Boston matrons (see box). He lives quietly in the suburb of Milton. Cooperative about appearing at public functions, he has yet to live up to the observation of the Cleveland reporter who wrote, years ago: "In Boston, the leader of the orchestra is more important than the mayor."

MONROE, LA.
NEWS-STAR
Circ. D. 15,366

APR 17 1956

Twin City Concert Association Opens Member Campaign

The Twin City Concert association is now conducting its renewal campaign. Renewal memberships are expected to be completed by May 1.

Mrs. Glen Anderson, membership director, urged old members of the association to send in their memberships as soon as possible, either by mail to the Twin City Concert Association, Monroe, Louisiana or through any one of the workers.

No box office admissions are sold to the concerts. Past members should have their memberships in by May 1, Mrs. Anderson said.

The Twin City Concert Association has presented in the past such memorable concerts as Lily Pons, Igor Gorin, The Boston Pops Orchestra, and Rise Stevens.

A return engagement of the Boston Pops Orchestra has been booked for next year's series. Three or four other outstanding concerts will be presented according to the number of memberships enrolled.

An outstanding offer has been made to the first five hundred new members who enroll before May 7. They will be entitled to hear Dorothy Kirsten, who will appear at Neville High on that date, as well as three or four additional attractions, including the famed Boston Pops Orchestra.

Miss Kirsten is considered one of the great operatic soprano's. She has been presented by the Metropolitan and San Francisco operas in the most coveted and glamorous roles of Madame Butterfly, Mimi, Juliet and Margurite. On the top television and radio programs of the day, Miss Kirsten has appeared over and over again with Bing Crosby, Jack Benny, Edgar Bergen and many others.

New members, as well as old ones, were urged to send in their membership promptly.

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
TIMES
Circ. D. 61,943 - S. 66,444

APR 15 1956

55

Baseball Opener On Radio Tuesday

By RONNIE BOTHWELL

Mutual and WTSP's Game of the Day curtain-raiser for the '56 pennant chases in the major leagues is to be the clash in Comiskey Park, Chicago, Tuesday, between the Cleveland Indians and the host White Sox.

All the fanfare and ceremonials of a typical American League opening day will be aired starting at 2:25 p.m., with Bob Neal and former major league hurler Rex Barney handling play-by-play and color descriptions.

The program will preview the major league schedule ahead Monday when it presents Salute to Baseball via interviews with Managers Bucky Harris (Detroit), Pinky Higgins (Boston), Casey Stengel (N.Y. Yankees), Fred Hutchinson (St. Louis), Birdie Tebbetts (Cincinnati), Walter Alston (Brooklyn), Mayo Smith (Philadelphia), Marty Marion (White Sox) and Stan Hack (Cubs) plus reports on their own observations of training camp activities by broadcasters Art Gleeson, John MacLean, Neal and Barney. This show is set for 1:55 p.m. on Mutual and WTSP.

✓ ✓ ✓

Gene Autry, singing cowboy star of CBS Radio's Gene Autry Show, returns to the air tonight following a five-week vacation during which his regular time period, 6:05 p.m. on WDAE was filled by Just Entertainment, starring Burgess Meredith and originating in Chicago.

Autry's vacation marked the first time the noted cowboy star had been off the air, except for his U.S. Army service during World War II, since his first broadcast in January 1941.

✓ ✓ ✓

All radio networks, ABC, MBS, CBS and NBC will carry broadcasts of the wedding of Grace Kelly and Prince Rainier April 16 - 19.

The wedding that has caught the fancy of the world as has no other romance since the king renounced his throne for Wally Simpson will be reported in four half-hour broadcasts over WDAE (CBS) at 12:45 p.m. Five broadcasts will be carried by WTSP (MBS) at 12:15 p.m. Three special broadcasts will be carried over WSUN (ABC) with a time to be announced. NBC and WFLA will broadcast the wedding on its special radio service Weekday two times daily sometime during the 10 a.m. to noon segment and on the 3 to 3:30 p.m. segment.

✓ ✓ ✓

Leonard Bernstein will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in music by two contemporary composers tomorrow on NBC Radio and WFLA at 8:15 p.m. Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist, will be soloist.

The opening work will be Fourteen Variations for Orchestra by Robert Moevs, American composer, who wrote the work on commission from the Roussevitzky Foundation. It was first performed last February in New York by the Symphony of the Air under Bernstein's direction. The remaining portion of the concert will be devoted to Igor Stravinsky's Capriccio for Piano and Orchestra with Jesus Maria Sanroma as soloist.

✓ ✓ ✓

For the first time in 20 years on radio, Edgar Bergen sings—and in Swedish — on WDAE and CBS Radio's Edgar Bergen Hour tonight at 7:05 p.m.

Bergen will sing "Inga Pa Vingo" (Inga in the Lighthouse), a song he heard on a visit to Sweden 25 years ago and brought back with him.

Charlie McCarthy takes a dim view of Bergen's performance. "You've got a voice like Caruso,' he told Bergen. "Robinson Caruso!"

DETROIT, MICH.
NEWS
Circ. D. 442,656 - S. 549,629

APR 15 1956

Masonic Announces New Concert Series

By JOHN FINLAYSON

The growing tendency of audiences to prefer group concert attractions more than individual artists, other than in exceptional cases, is reflected in the new concert series lineup at Masonic Auditorium.

Starting Oct. 11 with the Royal Danish Ballet, a company of 150 making its first tour of the United States, the 24th annual concert series will also present the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo, Dec. 6, and the Boston "Pops" Orchestra, conducted by Arthur Fiedler, March 2.

The individual artists on the series will be pianist Jose Iturbi, Nov. 2; tenor Jan Peerce, Jan. 9; violinist Nathan Milstein, Feb. 22, and the Metropolitan Opera Company soprano Zinka Milanov, Feb. 1.

SYMPHONY SERIES

The great Vienna Philharmonic, conducted by Andre Cluytens and making its first visit to the United States, will be one of the outstanding attractions on the symphony series, appearing Nov. 21. Renewing acquaintance with Detroit audiences, under its new conductor William Steinberg, will be the Pittsburgh Orchestra, scheduled for Jan. 21.

The Boston Symphony, led by Charles Munch, will again open the series, appearing in concert Oct. 16, and the Philadelphia Orchestra, conducted by Eugene Ormandy, will as usual present the final concert May 1. The Cleveland Orchestra, directed by George Szell, completes the lineup, appearing March 11.

THE NEW APPEAL

C. W. Van Lopik, manager of Masonic Auditorium, said the trend to group concert attractions is one that affects most major cities.

"We are moving slowly but surely in that direction," he said.

"On our bookings outside the series we are also relying more on group attractions than single artists. Box office returns indicate audience preference.

"Our lineup is not complete in this respect, but we have again booked Mantovani and his orchestra and will also present the Yogoslav Ballet of Belgrade, which is the government sponsored troupe."

The Masonic Temple manager said that the regular concert and symphony series showed increased attendance last year. Subscription and window sales, Van Lopik said, were up about 10 per cent.

BORGE SHOW BEST

The greatest single attraction at Masonic Auditorium this season was the Victor Borge show, "Comedy in Music." A phenomenon of Broadway show business, Borge did not disappoint here.

Borge's show grossed $32,000 on a two-night stand, with $5,000 worth of tickets sold the day following the first announcement of his coming.

The famous Sadlers Welles Ballet of London grossed $67,000 in its three-day engagement, Van Lopik said. This despite the newspaper strike which, he said, cut down window sales and generally affected ticket purchases adversely.

NEWSWEEK
NEW YORK, N. Y.

APR 16 1956

MUSIC:

Triumph in Boston

The 75th Anniversary season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, currently being celebrated, has been a meticulously publicized event. Last week, it reached a proper tempered Boston crescendo. The Commonwealth of Massachusetts honored the BSO with laudatory resolutions from the State Senate and House of Representatives. RCA Victor, which has recorded the symphony for 40 years, gave the orchestra, via its conductors Charles Munch and Arthur Fiedler, a $2,000 diamond-studded baton from Van Cleef and Arpels, New York jewelers.

Informal tributes abounded. Mr. John, the New York hat designer, produced a creation which could have used the baton as a hatpin, but the symphony declined—politely, of course—to take advantage of its publicity potential. As one official said: "It would be like playing basketball in Chartres Cathedral."

'La Même Chose.' As an institution, the Boston Symphony is a perfect example of *plus ça change, plus c'est la même chose. Founded and supported financially by one man, Maj. Henry Lee Higginson, it is now governed by a board and, like every other major U.S. symphony, has to scramble to cover each annual deficit. Formerly a nonunion organization, it survived a strike which decimated its ranks and eventually fell into the fold of James Caesar Petrillo's American Federation of Musicians.

Artistically, it was molded, successively, by two Germans (Gericke and Nikisch), a Frenchman (Monteux), a Russian (Koussevitzky), and, currently, another Frenchman. It has remained either one of the greatest orchestras in the U.S., which it was during the first half of its life, or one of the greatest orchestras in the world, which it is today.

Much of the symphony's reputation has been accomplished through the musical independence granted its conductors, a practice which originated with Higginson and has continued ever since. A Boston

*"The more it changes, the more it remains the same"—the original observation of Alphonse Karr, a nineteenth-century Frenchman who hated capital punishment and loved flowers.

Munch: After "Koussie," shyness

Pix

ra—Only the Meanest

roblem to the Boston Symphony. When ll on Oct. 15, 1900, the ladies in the dience were appalled to read in the ns of the City of Boston forbade "any vering which obstructs the view of the for their habitual hattedness, the lasked if the edict would be enforced. e equal to the occasion: "The gracious pended upon to wear hats, if they wear n on earth could find no indictment." d with a hat of a different color. Mrs. of art and music who was also a rabid moon concert direct from a ball game. d reading "O You Red Sox!"

One-man rule for the BSO was not, however, to die with him. Serge Koussevitzky, who took over the orchestra in 1924 and ruled it until his retirement 25 years later, set up an autocracy which may have been less flamboyant than that enjoyed by Arturo Toscanini at NBC (after all, he was dealing with Boston and not with radio). It was in every way, however, just as effective. Nor was Koussevitzky any less tolerant of budgets than Higginson had been. "My dear Zir," he once admonished a nervous trustee, "music is a paraseet that take many monies."

From Tone to Tone: Charles Munch, the 63-year-old Frenchman from Strasbourg, inherited the "international" style of Koussevitzky in 1950. He was quickly accused of destroying the deep intensity of the "Koussevitzky tone" in favor of a drier, lighter "French tone." During the past two years, however, critics have noted that the orchestra has regained most of the bright, clear, clean, fresh resonance that brought it its greatest distinction.

As a personality, Munch is as unlike Koussevitzky as possible. He is shy, and dislikes the afterconcert receptions that made "Koussie" the idol of the hatted and gloved, if not spurred, Boston matrons (see box). He lives quietly in the suburb of Milton. Cooperative about appearing at public functions, he has yet to live up to the observation of the Cleveland reporter who wrote, years ago: "In Boston, the leader of the orchestra is more important than the mayor."

MONROE, LA.
NEWS-STAR
Circ. D. 15,366

APR 17 1956

Twin City Concert Association Opens Member Campaign

The Twin City Concert association is now conducting its renewal campaign. Renewal memberships are expected to be completed by May 1.

Mrs. Glen Anderson, membership director, urged old members of the association to send in their memberships as soon as possible, either by mail to the Twin City Concert Association, Monroe, Louisiana or through any one of the workers.

No box office admissions are sold to the concerts. Past members should have their memberships in by May 1, Mrs. Anderson said.

The Twin City Concert Association has presented in the past such memorable concerts as Lily Pons, Igor Gorin, The Boston Pops Orchestra, and Rise Stevens.

A return engagement of the Boston Pops Orchestra has been booked for next year's series. Three or four other outstanding concerts will be presented according to the number of memberships enrolled.

An outstanding offer has been made to the first five hundred new members who enroll before May 7. They will be entitled to hear Dorothy Kirsten, who will appear at Neville High on that date, as well as three or four additional attractions, including the famed Boston Pops Orchestra.

Miss Kirsten is considered one of the great operatic soprano's. She has been presented by the Metropolitan and San Francisco operas in the most coveted and glamorous roles of Madame Butterfly, Mimi, Juliet and Margurite. On the top television and radio programs of the day, Miss Kirsten has appeared over and over again with Bing Crosby, Jack Benny, Edgar Bergen and many others.

New members, as well as old ones, were urged to send in their membership promptly.

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
TIMES
Circ. D. 61,943 - S. 66,444

APR 15 1956

55

Baseball Opener On Radio Tuesday

By RONNIE BOTHWELL

Mutual and WTSP's Game of the Day curtain-raiser for the '56 pennant chases in the major leagues is to be the clash in Comiskey Park, Chicago, Tuesday, between the Cleveland Indians and the host White Sox.

All the fanfare and ceremonials of a typical American League opening day will be aired starting at 2:25 p.m., with Bob Neal and former major league hurler Rex Barney handling play-by-play and color descriptions.

The program will preview the major league schedule ahead Monday when it presents Salute to Baseball via interviews with Managers Bucky Harris (Detroit), Pinky Higgins (Boston), Casey Stengel (N.Y. Yankees), Fred Hutchinson (St. Louis), Birdie Tebbetts (Cincinnati), Walter Alston (Brooklyn), Mayo Smith (Philadelphia), Marty Marion (White Sox) and Stan Hack (Cubs) plus reports on their own observations of training camp activities by broadcasters Art Gleeson, John MacLean, Neal and Barney. This show is set for 1:55 p.m. on Mutual and WTSP.

✓ ✓ ✓

Gene Autry, singing cowboy star of CBS Radio's Gene Autry Show, returns to the air tonight following a five-week vacation during which his regular time period, 6:05 p.m. on WDAE was filled by Just Entertainment, starring Burgess Meredith and originating in Chicago.

Autry's vacation marked the first time the noted cowboy star had been off the air, except for his U.S. Army service during World War II, since his first broadcast in January 1941.

✓ ✓ ✓

All radio networks, ABC, MBS, CBS and NBC will carry broadcasts of the wedding of Grace Kelly and Prince Rainier April 16 - 19.

The wedding that has caught the fancy of the world as has no other romance since the king renounced his throne for Wally Simpson will be reported in four half-hour broadcasts over WDAE (CBS) at 12:45 p.m. Five broadcasts will be carried by WTSP (MBS) at 12:15 p.m. Three special broadcasts will be carried over WSUN (ABC) with a time to be announced. NBC and WFLA will broadcast the wedding on its special radio service Weekday two times daily sometime during the 10 a.m. to noon segment and on the 3 to 3:30 p.m. segment.

✓ ✓ ✓

Leonard Bernstein will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in music by two contemporary composers tomorrow on NBC Radio and WFLA at 8:15 p.m. Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist, will be soloist.

The opening work will be Fourteen Variations for Orchestra by Robert Moevs, American composer, who wrote the work on commission from the Koussevitzky Foundation. It was first performed last February in New York by the Symphony of the Air under Bernstein's direction. The remaining portion of the concert will be devoted to Igor Stravinsky's Capriccio for Piano and Orchestra with Jesus Maria Sanroma as soloist.

✓ ✓ ✓ ✓

For the first time in 20 years on radio, Edgar Bergen sings—and in Swedish — on WDAE and CBS Radio's Edgar Bergen Hour tonight at 7:05 p.m.

Bergen will sing "Inga Pa Vingo" (Inga in the Lighthouse), a song he heard on a visit to Sweden 25 years ago and brought back with him.

Charlie McCarthy takes a dim view of Bergen's performance. "You've got a voice like Caruso,' he told Bergen. 'Robinson Caruso!'"

DETROIT, MICH.
NEWS
Circ. D. 442,656 - S. 549,629

APR 15 1956

Masonic Announces New Concert Series

By JOHN FINLAYSON

The growing tendency of audiences to prefer group concert attractions more than individual artists, other than in exceptional cases, is reflected in the new concert series lineup at Masonic Auditorium.

Starting Oct. 11 with the Royal Danish Ballet, a company of 150 making its first tour of the United States, the 24th annual concert series will also present the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo, Dec. 6, and the Boston "Pops" Orchestra, conducted by Arthur Fiedler, March 2.

The individual artists on the series will be pianist Jose Iturbi, Nov. 2; tenor Jan Peerce, Jan. 9; violinist Nathan Milstein, Feb. 22, and the Metropolitan Opera Company soprano Zinka Milanov, Feb. 1.

SYMPHONY SERIES

The great Vienna Philharmonic, conducted by Andre Cluytens and making its first visit to the United States, will be one of the outstanding attractions on the symphony series, appearing Nov. 21. Renewing acquaintance with Detroit audiences, under its new conductor William Steinberg, will be the Pittsburgh Orchestra, scheduled for Jan. 21.

The Boston Symphony, led by Charles Munch, will again open the series, appearing in concert Oct. 16, and the Philadelphia Orchestra, conducted by Eugene Ormandy, will as usual present the final concert May 1. The Cleveland Orchestra, directed by George Szell, completes the lineup, appearing March 11.

THE NEW APPEAL

C. W. Van Lopik, manager of Masonic Auditorium, said the trend to group concert attractions is one that affects most major cities.

"We are moving slowly but surely in that direction," he said.

"On our bookings outside the series we are also relying more on group attractions than single artists. Box office returns indicate audience preference.

"Our lineup is not complete in this respect, but we have again booked Mantovani and his orchestra and will also present the Yogoslav Ballet of Belgrade, which is the government sponsored troupe."

The Masonic Temple manager said that the regular concert and symphony series showed increased attendance last year. Subscription and window sales, Van Lopik said, were up about 10 per cent.

BORGE SHOW BEST

The greatest single attraction at Masonic Auditorium this season was the Victor Borge show, "Comedy in Music." A phenomenon of Broadway show business, Borge did not disappoint here.

Borge's show grossed $32,000 on a two-night stand, with $5,000 worth of tickets sold the day following the first announcement of his coming.

The famous Sadlers Wells Ballet of London grossed $67,000 in its three-day engagement, Van Lopik said. This despite the newspaper strike which, he said, cut down window sales and generally affected ticket purchases adversely.

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
TIMES
Circ. D. 61,943 - S. 66,444
APR 15 1956

Baseball Opener On Radio Tuesday

By RONNIE BOTHWELL

Mutual and WTSP's Game of the Day curtain-raiser for the '56 pennant chases in the major leagues is to be the clash in Comiskey Park, Chicago, Tuesday, between the Cleveland Indians and the host White Sox.

All the fanfare and ceremonials of a typical American League opening day will be aired starting at 2:25 p.m., with Bob Neal and former major league hurler Rex Barney handling play-by-play and color descriptions.

The program will preview the major league schedule ahead Monday when it presents Salute to Baseball via interviews with Managers Bucky Harris (Detroit), Pinky Higgins (Boston), Casey Stengel (N.Y. Yankees), Fred Hutchinson (St. Louis), Birdie Tebbetts (Cincinnati), Walter Alston (Brooklyn), Mayo Smith (Philadelphia), Marty Marion (White Sox) and Stan Hack (Cubs) plus reports on their own observations of training camp activities by broadcasters Art Gleeson, John MacLean, Neal and Barney. This show is set for 1:55 p.m. on Mutual and WTSP.

✓ ✓ ✓

Gene Autry, singing cowboy star of CBS Radio's Gene Autry Show, returns to the air tonight following a five-week vacation during which his regular time period, 6:05 p.m. on WDAE was filled by Just Entertainment, starring Burgess Meredith and originating in Chicago.

Autry's vacation marked the first time the noted cowboy star had been off the air, except for his U.S. Army service during World War II, since his first broadcast in January 1941.

✓ ✓ ✓

All radio networks, ABC, MBS, CBS and NBC will carry broadcasts of the wedding of Grace Kelly and Prince Rainier April 16 - 19.

The wedding that has caught the fancy of the world as has no other romance since the king renounced his throne for Wally Simpson will be reported in four half-hour broadcasts over WDAE (CBS) at 12:45 p.m. Five broadcasts will be carried by WTSP (MBS) at 12:15 p.m. Three special broadcasts will be carried over WSUN (ABC) with a time to be announced. NBC and WFLA will broadcast the wedding on its special radio service Weekday two times daily sometime during the 10 a.m. to noon segment and on the 3 to 3:30 p.m. segment.

✓ ✓ ✓

Leonard Bernstein will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in music by two contemporary composers tomorrow on NBC Radio and WFLA at 8:15 p.m. Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist, will be soloist.

The opening work will be Fourteen Variations for Orchestra by Robert Moevs, American composer, who wrote the work on commission from the Roussevitzky Foundation. It was first performed last February in New York by the Symphony of the Air under Bernstein's direction. The remaining portion of the concert will be devoted to Igor Stravinsky's Capriccio for Piano and Orchestra with Jesus Maria Sanroma as soloist.

✓ ✓ ✓

For the first time in 20 years on radio, Edgar Bergen sings—and in Swedish — on WDAE and CBS Radio's Edgar Bergen Hour tonight at 7:05 p.m.

Bergen will sing "Inga Pa Vingo" (Inga in the Lighthouse), a song he heard on a visit to Sweden 25 years ago and brought back with him.

Charlie McCarthy takes a dim view of Bergen's performance. "You've got a voice like Caruso,' he told Bergen. "Robinson Caruso!"

DETROIT, MICH.
NEWS
Circ. D. 442,656 - S. 549,629
APR 15 1956

Masonic Announces New Concert Series

By JOHN FINLAYSON

The growing tendency of audiences to prefer group concert attractions more than individual artists, other than in exceptional cases, is reflected in the new concert series lineup at Masonic Auditorium.

Starting Oct. 11 with the Royal Danish Ballet, a company of 150 making its first tour of the United States, the 24th annual concert series will also present the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo, Dec. 6, and the Boston "Pops" Orchestra, conducted by Arthur Fiedler, March 2.

The individual artists on the series will be pianist Jose Iturbi, Nov. 2; tenor Jan Peerce, Jan. 9; violinist Nathan Milstein, Feb. 22, and the Metropolitan Opera Company soprano Zinka Milanov, Feb. 1.

SYMPHONY SERIES

The great Vienna Philharmonic, conducted by Andre Cluytens and making its first visit to the United States, will be one of the outstanding attractions on the symphony series, appearing Nov. 21. Renewing acquaintance with Detroit audiences, under its new conductor William Steinberg, will be the Pittsburgh Orchestra, scheduled for Jan. 21.

The Boston Symphony, led by Charles Munch, will again open the series, appearing in concert Oct. 16, and the Philadelphia Orchestra, conducted by Eugene Ormandy, will as usual present the final concert May 1. The Cleveland Orchestra, directed by George Szell, completes the lineup, appearing March 11.

THE NEW APPEAL

C. W. Van Lopik, manager of Masonic Auditorium, said the trend to group concert attractions is one that affects most major cities.

"We are moving slowly but surely in that direction," he said.

"On our bookings outside the series we are also relying more on group attractions than single artists. Box office returns indicate audience preference.

"Our lineup is not complete in this respect, but we have again booked Mantovani and his orchestra and will also present the Yogoslav Ballet of Belgrade, which is the government sponsored troupe."

The Masonic Temple manager said that the regular concert and symphony series showed increased attendance last year. Subscription and window sales, Van Lopik said, were up about 10 per cent.

BORGE SHOW BEST

The greatest single attraction at Masonic Auditorium this season was the Victor Borge show, "Comedy in Music." A phenomenon of Broadway show business, Borge did not disappoint here.

Borge's show grossed $32,000 on a two-night stand, with $8,000 worth of tickets sold the day following the first announcement of his coming.

The famous Sadlers Wells Ballet of London grossed $67,000 in its three-day engagement, Van Lopik said. This despite the newspaper strike which, he said, cut down window sales and generally affected ticket purchases adversely.

...the Orchestra—Only the Meanest

What to do about hats is no new problem to the Boston Symphony. When the orchestra opened Symphony Hall on Oct. 15, 1900, the ladies in the "exceedingly large and refined" audience were appalled to read in the program that the Revised Regulations of the City of Boston forbade "any person to wear upon the head a covering which obstructs the view of the exhibition or performance." Fearing for their habitual hattedness, the ladies visited the management and asked if the edict would be enforced. Major Higginson and his cohorts were equal to the occasion: "The gracious women whose musical taste can be depended upon to wear hats, if they wear any, again in which the meanest man on earth could find no indictment."

A few years later, they were faced with a hat of a different color. Mrs. Jack Gardner, an eccentric patroness of art and music who was also a rabid baseball fan, came to a Friday afternoon concert direct from a ball game. Emblazoned on her hat was a red band reading "O You Red Sox!"

banker who studied music in Vienna for four years (1856-60) and never got over it, Higginson made of the Boston Symphony "his yacht, his racing stable, his library, and his art gallery." "Never mind the balance sheet!" he once said. "Charge the deficit, if there be any, to profit and forget the loss, for it does not really exist."

Inevitably, in 1918, the dream had to come to an end. "I have had my day," he wrote Judge Frederick P. Cabot. "I may say to you, as an intimate friend, that the burden has become almost intolerable." Shortly after, a board of nine trustees applied for the incorporation of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The following year, Higginson died.

Pix

Munch: After "Koussie," shyness

One-man rule for the BSO was not, however, to die with him. Serge Koussevitzky, who took over the orchestra in 1924 and ruled it until his retirement 25 years later, set up an autocracy which may have been less flamboyant than that enjoyed by Arturo Toscanini at NBC (after all, he was dealing with Boston and not with radio). It was in every way, however, just as effective. Nor was Koussevitzky any less tolerant of budgets than Higginson had been. "My dear Zir," he once admonished a nervous trustee, "music is a paraseet that take many monies."

From Tone to Tone: Charles Munch, the 63-year-old Frenchman from Strasbourg, inherited the "international" style of Koussevitzky in 1950. He was quickly accused of destroying the deep intensity of the "Koussevitzky tone" in favor of a drier, lighter "French tone." During the past two years, however, critics have noted that the orchestra has regained most of the bright, clear, clean, fresh resonance that brought it its greatest distinction.

As a personality, Munch is as unlike Koussevitzky as possible. He is shy, and dislikes the afterconcert receptions that made "Koussie" the idol of the hatted and gloved, if not spurred, Boston matrons (see box). He lives quietly in the suburb of Milton. Cooperative about appearing at public functions, he has yet to live up to the observation of the Cleveland reporter who wrote, years ago: "In Boston, the leader of the orchestra is more important than the mayor."

...and assistant director of education, said somewhat defensively last week: "These clothes were quite suitable . . . Rural science is taught at the school, and poultry and other stock are kept there."

Last week Miss Bury confounded her superiors and confused her pupils with an announcement that explained the ringing breeches rather drastically. Henceforth, she was no longer Miss Olive but Mr. Donald Bury. It was, said Donald, now 39, "simply a legal correction of birth certificate and no change of sex."

As a male teacher, Bury now gets a yearly salary increase of $420. However, the local education committee finally decided not to give him back salary raises for the seventeen years he taught as a woman.

Shrdlu's headmaster, Edward Wa...

MONROE, LA.
NEWS-STAR
Circ. D. 15,366
APR 17 1956

Twin City Concert Association Opens Member Campaign

The Twin City Concert association is now conducting its renewal campaign. Renewal memberships are expected to be completed by May 1.

Mrs. Glen Anderson, membership director, urged old members of the association to send in their memberships as soon as possible, either by mail to the Twin City Concert Association, Monroe, Louisiana or through any one of the workers.

No box office admissions are sold to the concerts. Past members should have their memberships in by May 1, Mrs. Anderson said.

The Twin City Concert Association has presented in the past such memorable concerts as Lily Pons, Igor Gorin, The Boston Pops Orchestra, and Rise Stevens.

A return engagement of the Boston Pops Orchestra has been booked for next year's series. Three or four other outstanding concerts will be presented according to the number of memberships enrolled.

An outstanding offer has been made to the first five hundred new members who enroll before May 7. They will be entitled to hear Dorothy Kirsten, who will appear at Neville High on that date, as well as three or four additional attractions, including the famed Boston Pops Orchestra.

Miss Kirsten is considered one of the great operatic soprano's. She has been presented by the Metropolitan and San Francisco operas in the most coveted and glamorous roles of Madame Butterfly, Mimi, Juliet and Marguirite. On the top television and radio programs of the day, Miss Kirsten has appeared over and over again with Bing Crosby, Jack Benny, Edgar Bergen and many others.

New members, as well as old ones, were urged to send in their membership promptly.

56 Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 130,559
APR 17 1956

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 185,401

Ted in Left as Sox Open Today

... Wight in 4-Run 1st

(Herald Staff Photo by Russ Adams)

PAUSE DURING FAN MAIL READING at Fenway Park while today's starting pitcher Frank Sullivan (left) and right fielder Jackie Jensen discuss the Baltimore Orioles, who will provide the opposition in Boston's 1956 major league opener.

Rookies Malzone, Buddin Face Orioles at Fenway

By ARTHUR SAMPSON

This is it.

Weather permitting, the revamped Red Sox, with Ted Williams available for an opener for the first time in four years, launch their 1956 pennant drive at Fenway Park this afternoon at 2 o'clock. The Baltimore Orioles will provide the opposition.

The Weather Bureau predicts a cloudy, cool day with occasional showers. Such conditions, while not favorable, would not cause a postponement of activities. Baseball openers are usually played if at all possible.

Pre-Game Ceremony

Today's crowd, however, is expected to hit close to 25,000. The heavy advance sale reached 14,000 yesterday, an illustration that the most colorful aggregation of players that Tom Yawkey has been able to assemble in several years has already stimulated baseball interest in this section.

This opener will be preceded by unusually interesting pregame ceremonies sponsored by

(Continued on Page Twenty-six)

...—Breakfast Extra—Sports.
1:35 p.m.—Warm-Up Time.
1:40 p.m.—Tele-Quiz.
1:55 p.m.—Red Sox vs. Baltimore at Boston.
3:55 p.m.—Sports Extra.
5:55 p.m.—Baseball Scoreboard.
6:10 p.m.—Bob Murphy's Sportscope.
6:35 p.m.—Curt Gowdy, Report on Sports.
7:10 p.m.—Sports Final.

ad hoped to do. However, I el confident I will be able to elp the team. That's my main oncern."

Toward the end of the exhibion season, this team played as unit for the most part and perrmed well. Piersall and Jensen ave hit the ball better than er before in spring training. iddin and Malzone will add a ght handed batting punch if ey continue hitting as they ave this spring. Vernon is a asterful performer both in the eld and at bat.

IGHT FORMER OX PITCHER

Because of rain only the Sox tchers and catchers got in a long orkout out-of-doors between rain ops.

The Orioles, are due to arrive is morning. Manager Richards st night announced a line-up hich includes as much punch as can possibly muster.

He plans to start rookie Tito ancona in center field. This ngster from Vancouver has n pounding the ball all spring. replaces the veteran Chuck ring in center field.

Veterans in the Baltimore lineup will include Dave Philley and Jim Dyke in the outfield; Sparky Adams, Freddy Marsh, Willie Miranda and Gus Triandes, in the infield, Hal Smith behind the plate and Wight on the mound.

All except Francona have appeared at the Fens before. Wight, in fact, formerly was a member of the Red Sox. He also has pitched for the Chicago White Sox and the Cleveland Indians. With such experience he shouldn't be nervous.

By LARRY CLAFLIN

FENWAY PARK—Given their best chance to win a pennant in five years, the 1956 Red Sox opened the season today in gaily decorated Fenway Park before a crowd of about 30,000 fans. Sunny skies, cool temperatures and a hitters' wind toward the center field bleachers greeted the Red Sox and Baltimore Orioles.

Frank Sullivan a 6-7 righthander who won 18 games including the opener last year, started for the Red Sox. Bill Wight, a lefty who once pitched for the Red Sox, was Mgr. Paul Richards' choice.

It was obvious that there is no school in Greater Boston this week because the stands were crowded early with children. Like the Pied Piper, Ted Williams had them following his every move in pregame practice.

Gov. Christian Herter a right hander almost as tall as Sullivan, threw out the first ball. Mayor John B. Hynes led the delegation from City Hall.

Pregame music was provided first by the Clover Club band, the Gate of Heaven CYO Band of South Boston and the Ft. Devens Army Band.

The march to centerfield for flag raising ceremonies was led by Col. Ralph M. King and Capt. Francis L. Delaney of the Marine detachment from the Charlestown Naval Base.

Also in the march were delegations from the American Legion, including the Crosscup-Pishon Post which conducted an opening day ticket drive.

The national anthem was sung by Brian Sullivan, under the direction of Arthur Fiedler of the Boston Pops Orchestra.

About the only noticeable change in Fenway Park was in the box seat section. The seats are covered wtih green cloth this season, instead of white as in the past. Hitters complained that the white cloth provided a poor background.

Red Sox owner Tom Yawkey and his wife were on hand for the opener.

Play by Play

By the Associated Press

FIRST INNING

ORIOLES — Marsh fanned. Adams singled. Philley forced Adams, Sullivan to Buddin. Triandos forced Philley, Buddin to Goodman. NO RUNS.

RED SOX—Goodman singled. Malzone flied to Philley. Williams walked. Jensen singled, scoring Goodman and when Dyck let the ball get by him for an error, Williams went to third and Jensen to second. Vernon singled, scoring Williams. Piersall singled, scoring Jensen. Buddin singled, scoring Vernon. Brown replaced Wight. White flied to Francona. Sullivan lined to Francona. FOUR RUNS.

SECOND INNING

ORIOLES — Franconia fanned. Malzone threw out Dyck. Smith fanned. NO RUNS.

RED SOX—Goodman flied to Dyck. Miranda threw out Malzone. Williams doubled to left. Adams threw out Jensen. NO RUNS.

THIRD INNING

ORIOLES—Sullivan threw out Miranda. Brown doubled. Buddin threw out Marsh, Adams walked. Philley flied to Piersall. NO RUNS.

RED SOX—Vernon doubled. Piersall singled scoring Vernon. Buddin singled, White walked. Sullivan hit a sacrifice fly to Philley scoring Piersall, Buddin took third after the catch. When Philley's throw to the plate was bobbled by Smith, White attempted to advance, but was thrown out, Brown to Miranda. Goodman flied to Francona. TWO RUNS.

FOURTH INNIN G

ORIOLES—Triandos popped to Malzone. Francona singled. Dyck flied to Jensen. Smith popped to Buddin. NO RUNS.

RED SOX—Malzone fouled to Triandos. Brown threw out Williams. Jensen walked. Vernon lined to Dyck. NO RUNS.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 130,559
APR 19 1956

WITH OUR COMPLIMENTS . . .

Although this clipping is beyond your order we thought it would interest you.

Please accept it with our compliments.

Sincerely,

NEW ENGLAND NEWSCLIP AGENCY, INC.

HARRY V. LAWRENCE.
Boston

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 196,593
APR 19 1956

MONROE, LA.
WORLD
Circ. D. 17,104
APR 18 1956

Twin City Concert Association Opens Member Campaign

The Twin City Concert association is now conducting its renewal campaign. Renewal memberships are expected to be completed by May 1.

Mrs. Glen Anderson, membership director, urged old members of the association to send in their memberships as soon as possible, either by mail to the Twin City Concert Association, Monroe, Louisiana or through any one of the workers.

No box office admissions are sold to the concerts. Past members should have their memberships in by May 1, Mrs. Anderson said.

The Twin City Concert Association has presented in the past such memorable concerts as Lily Pons, Igor Gorin, The Boston Pops Orchestra, and Rise Stevens.

A return engagement of the Boston Pops Orchestra has been booked for next year's series. Three or four other outstanding concerts will be presented according to the number of memberships enrolled.

An outstanding offer has been made to the first five hundred new members who enroll before May 7. They will be entitled to hear Dorothy Kirsten, who will appear at Neville High on that date, as well as three or four additional attractions, including the famed Boston Pops Orchestra.

Miss Kirsten is considered one of the great operatic soprano's. She has been presented by the Metropolitan and San Francisco operas in the most coveted and glamorous roles of Madame Butterfly, Mimi, Juliet and Margurite. On the top television and radio programs of the day, Miss Kirsten has appeared over and over again with Bing Crosby, Jack Benny, Edgar Bergen and many others.

New members, as well as old ones, were urged to send in their membership promptly.

LONGVIEW, TEX.
JOURNAL
Circ. D. 11,432
APR 17 1956

Boston 'Pops' To Be On Kilgore Program

KILGORE.—The Boston "Pops" orchestra conducted by Arthur Fiedler will headline the Kilgore Community Concert association 1956-57 season, officers announced here after the completion of a membership drive in which more than 1,400 concert-goers joined the organization.

Other attractions named by the association's artists' committee after the drive ended were the Tucson Boys' chorus, with highly original songs of the great Southwest spiced with comedy; Jon Crain, tenor star of the New York City opera who will join the Metropolitan Opera company in the fall; and Vera Franceschi, pianist, protege of Pierre Montieu.

CHICAGO, ILL.
NEWS
Circ. D. 576,350
APR 17 1956

Auditions

Auditions for admission to the opera department at the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Mass., will be held at 11 a.m. Wednesday at Chicago Musical College of Roosevelt University.

Symphony Gets Better Support

The Friends of the Boston Symphony are giving the orchestra better support this year, according to the last report.

Dr. Palfrey Perkins, chairman of the organization, told members attending the annual meeting yesterday that their contributions totalled $151,275, a substantial increase.

Membership fell off slightly, however—to 3,992.

Efforts to interest business in suporting the orchestra brought $8,535 in pledges from Boston firms.

Henry B. Cabot, president of the trustees, anounced that all but $20,000 of the $300,000 needed to send the Boston Symphony on its forthcoming European tour had been pledged. None of the $30,000 is being sought from Friends of the Boston Symphon.

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 185,401

APR 17 1956

Opening Game in Four Years ... 4-Run 1st

...ossetup-Pishon Post, American Legion.

The festivities start at 1:20 P. M. Governor Herter will toss out the first ball following a flag raising ceremony by a crack Marine attachment. Arthur Fiedler conductor of the Boston Pops orchestra, will direct the ~~playing of the~~ national anthem. Guest soloist will be Brian Sullivan of the Metropolitan Opera Company.

In addition, there will be a military show and parade and music by the outstanding army band from Ft. Devens.

Then the fans will see in action the most interesting team the Red Sox have assembled in years. One of the best balanced teams in Boston major league history.

The team which Manager Mike Higgins has selected to open the season may or may not carry the load throughout the long 154-game schedule. It is the team, however, which has won the right to start this opener following six weeks of real competition with another group of capable players.

Only five players who opened the Sox 1955 season at Baltimore will be in today's starting line-up. That quintet includes the battery of Frank Sullivan and Sammy White.

Williams was not available for last year's opener. His place in left field was filled by Faye Throneberry, one of today's reserves.

Jimmy Piersall, Jackie Jensen, and Billy Goodman are the other three who started last year on opening day. Newcomers in addition to Williams include Mickey Vernon, All-Star first baseman of last year, and two rookies from Louisville, Don Buddin and Frank Malzone.

Malzone became a starter at third base yesterday when Higgins was assured Manager Paul Richards of the Orioles was going to pitch left hander Bill Wight.

"I waited until I found out who was going to pitch before I decided between Malzone and Billy Klaus for third base," said Higgins.

With Malzone at third and Buddin at shortstop, the Sox open with two rookies on the left side of the infield.

Sullivan won his starting assignment on two counts. By winning 18 games, he was the leading Sox pitcher last year. In addition, he has pitched well during 37 innings of exhibition competition this spring.

This starting line-up includes three former American League batting champions — Williams, Vernon and Goodman. It includes, in Jensen, the co-holder of the R.B.I. title.

Coming into this opener, the entire Sox squad is in good physical condition. Asked how he felt yesterday, Williams said, "I feel ready to go although I'm not as far advanced as I had hoped to be at this time. Injuries during training prevented me from doing as much exercising as I had hoped to do. However, I feel confident I will be able to help the team. That's my main concern."

Toward the end of the exhibition season, this team played as a unit for the most part and performed well. Piersall and Jensen have hit the ball better than ever before in spring training. Buddin and Malzone will add a right handed batting punch if they continue hitting as they have this spring. Vernon is a masterful performer both in the field and at bat.

WIGHT FORMER SOX PITCHER

Because of rain only the Sox pitchers and catchers got in a long workout out-of-doors between rain drops.

The Orioles, are due to arrive this morning. Manager Richards last night announced a line-up which includes as much punch as he can possibly muster.

He plans to start rookie Tito Francona in center field. This youngster from Vancouver has been pounding the ball all spring. He replaces the veteran Chuck Diering in center field.

Veterans in the Baltimore line-up will include Dave Philley and Jim Dyke in the outfield; Sparky Adams, Freddy Marsh, Willie Miranda and Gus Triandes, in the infield, Hal Smith behind the plate and Wight on the mound.

All except Francona have appeared at the Fens before. Wight, in fact, formerly was a member of the Red Sox. He also has pitched for the Chicago White Sox and the Cleveland Indians. With such experience he shouldn't be nervous.

Faces Sox Today

BILL WIGHT

Today's WHDH Sports

7:30 a.m.—Breakfast Extra—Sports.
1:35 p.m.—Warm-Up Time.
1:40 p.m.—Tele-Quiz.
1:55 p.m.—Red Sox vs. Baltimore at Boston.
3:55 p.m.—Sports Extra.
5:55 p.m.—Baseball Scoreboard.
6:10 p.m.—Bob Murphy's Sportscope.
6:35 p.m.—Curt Gowdy, Report on Sports.
11:10 p.m.—Sports Final.

By LARRY CLAFLIN

FENWAY PARK—Given their best chance to win a pennant in five years, the 1956 Red Sox opened the season today in gaily decorated Fenway Park before a crowd of about 30,000 fans. Sunny skies, cool temperatures and a hitters' wind toward the center field bleachers greeted the Red Sox and Baltimore Orioles.

Frank Sullivan a 6-7 right-hander who won 18 games including the opener last year, started for the Red Sox. Bill Wight, a lefty who once pitched for the Red Sox, was Mgr. Paul Richards' choice.

It was obvious that there is no school in Greater Boston this week because the stands were crowded early with children. Like the Pied Piper, Ted Williams had them following his every move in pregame practice.

Gov. Christian Herter a right hander almost as tall as Sullivan, threw out the first ball. Mayor John B. Hynes led the delegation from City Hall.

Pregame music was provided first by the Clover Club band, the Gate of Heaven CYO Band of South Boston and the Ft. Devens Army Band.

The march to centerfield for flag raising ceremonies was led by Col. Ralph M. King and Capt. Francis L. Delaney of the Marine detachment from the Charlestown Naval Base.

Also in the march were delegations from the American Legion, including the Crosscup-Pishon Post which conducted an opening day ticket drive.

The national anthem was sung by Brian Sullivan, under the direction of Arthur Fiedler of the Boston Pops Orchestra.

About the only noticeable change in Fenway Park was in the box seat section. The seats are covered wtih green cloth this season, instead of white as in the past. Hitters complained that the white cloth provided a poor background.

Red Sox owner Tom Yawkey and his wife were on hand for the opener.

Play by Play

By the Associated Press

FIRST INNING

ORIOLES — Marsh fanned. Adams singled. Philley forced Adams, Sullivan to Buddin. Triandos forced Philley, Buddin to Goodman. NO RUNS.

RED SOX—Goodman singled. Malzone flied to Philley. Williams walked. Jensen singled, scoring Goodman and when Dyck let the ball get by him for an error, Williams went to third and Jensen to second. Vernon singled, scoring Williams. Piersall singled, scoring Jensen. Buddin singled, scoring Vernon. Brown replaced Wight. White flied to Francona. Sullivan lined to Francona. FOUR RUNS.

SECOND INNING

ORIOLES — Franconia fanned. Malzone threw out Dyck. Smith fanned. NO RUNS.

RED SOX—Goodman flied to Dyck. Miranda threw out Malzone. Williams doubled to left. Adams threw out Jensen. NO RUNS.

THIRD INNING

ORIOLES—Sullivan threw out Miranda. Brown doubled. Buddin threw out Marsh, Adams walked. Philley flied to Piersall. NO RUNS.

RED SOX—Vernon doubled. Piersall singled scoring Vernon. Buddin singled, White walked. Sullivan hit a sacrifice fly to Philley scoring Piersall, Buddin took third after the catch. When Philley's throw to the plate was bobbled by Smith, White attempted to advance, but was thrown out, Brown to Miranda. Goodman flied to Francona. TWO RUNS.

FOURTH INNIN G

ORIOLES—Triandos popped to Malzone. Francona singled. Dyck flied to Jensen. Smith popped to Buddin. NO RUNS.

RED SOX—Malzone fouled to Triandos. Brown threw out Williams. Jensen walked. Vernon lined to Dyck. NO RUNS.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 130,559
APR 19 1956

WITH OUR COMPLIMENTS . . .

Although this clipping is beyond your order we thought it would interest you.

Please accept it with our compliments.

Sincerely,

NEW ENGLAND NEWSCLIP AGENCY, INC.

HARRY V. LAWRENCE, Boston

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 196,593
APR 19 1956

MONROE, LA.
WORLD
Circ. D. 17,104
APR 18 1956

Twin City Concert Association Opens Member Campaign

The Twin City Concert association is now conducting its renewal campaign. Renewal memberships are expected to be completed by May 1.

Mrs. Glen Anderson, membership director, urged old members of the association to send in their memberships as soon as possible, either by mail to the Twin City Concert Association, Monroe, Louisiana or through any one of the workers.

No box office admissions are sold to the concerts. Past members should have their memberships in by May 1, Mrs. Anderson said.

The Twin City Concert Association has presented in the past such memorable concerts as Lily Pons, Igor Gorin, The Boston Pops Orchestra, and Rise Stevens.

A return engagement of the Boston Pops Orchestra has been booked for next year's series. Three or four other outstanding concerts will be presented according to the number of memberships enrolled.

An outstanding offer has been made to the first five hundred new members who enroll before May 7. They will be entitled to hear Dorothy Kirsten, who will appear at Neville High on that date, as well as three or four additional attractions, including the famed Boston Pops Orchestra.

Miss Kirsten is considered one of the great operatic soprano's. She has been presented by the Metropolitan and San Francisco operas in the most coveted and glamorous roles of Madame Butterfly, Mimi, Juliet and Margurite. On the top television and radio programs of the day, Miss Kirsten has appeared over and over again with Bing Crosby, Jack Benny, Edgar Bergen and many others.

New members, as well as old ones, were urged to send in their membership promptly.

LONGVIEW, TEX.
JOURNAL
Circ. D. 11,432
APR 17 1956

Boston 'Pops' To Be On Kilgore Program

KILGORE.—The Boston "Pops" orchestra conducted by Arthur Fiedler will headline the Kilgore Community Concert association 1956-57 season, officers announced here after the completion of a membership drive in which more than 1,400 concert-goers joined the organization.

Other attractions named by the association's artists' committee after the drive ended were the Tucson Boys' chorus, with highly original songs of the great Southwest spiced with comedy; Jon Crain, tenor star of the New York City opera who will join the Metropolitan Opera company in the fall; and Vera Franceschi, pianist, protege of Pierre Montieu.

CHICAGO, ILL.
NEWS
Circ. D. 576,350
APR 17 1956

Auditions

Auditions for admission to the opera department at the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Mass., will be held at 11 a.m. Wednesday at Chicago Musical College of Roosevelt University.

Symphony Gets Better Support

The Friends of the Boston Symphony are giving the orchestra better support this year, according to the last report.

Dr. Palfrey Perkins, chairman of the organization, told members attending the annual meeting yesterday that their contributions totalled $151,275, a substantial increase.

Membership fell off slightly, however—to 3,992.

Efforts to interest business in suporting the orchestra brought $8,535 in pledges from Boston firms.

Henry B. Cabot, president of the trustees, anounced that all but $20,000 of the $300,000 needed to send the Boston Symphony on its forthcoming European tour had been pledged. None of the $30,000 is being sought from Friends of the Boston Symphon.

...ssecup-Pishon Post, American Legion.

The festivities ... P. M. Governor ... out the first ball raising ceremony ... Marine attachm ... Fiedler conductor ... Pops orchestra, ... the playing of the ... nal anthem. Guest soloist will be Brian Sullivan of the Metropolitan Opera Company.

In addition, there will be a military show and parade and music by the outstanding army band from Ft. Devens.

Then the fans will see in action the most interesting team the Red Sox have assembled in years. One of the best balanced teams in Boston major league history.

The team which Manager Mike Higgins has selected to open the season may or may not carry the load throughout the long 154-game schedule. It is the team, however, which has won the right to start this opener following six weeks of real competition with another group of capable players.

Only five players who opened the Sox 1955 season at Baltimore will be in today's starting line-up. That quintet includes the battery of Frank Sullivan and Sammy White.

Williams was not available for last year's opener. His place in left field was filled by Faye Throneberry, one of today's reserves.

Jimmy Piersall, Jackie Jensen, and Billy Goodman are the other three who started last year on opening day. Newcomers in addition to Williams include Mickey Vernon, All-Star first baseman of last year, and two rookies from Louisville, Don Buddin and Frank Malzone.

Malzone became a starter at third base yesterday when Higgins was assured Manager Paul ... was ... hander Bill ...

BILL WIGHT

"I waited until I found out who was going to pitch before I decided between Malzone and Billy Klaus for third base," said Higgins.

With Malzone at third and Buddin at shortstop, the Sox open with two rookies on the left side of the infield.

Sullivan won his starting assignment on two counts. By winning 18 games, he was the leading Sox pitcher last year. In addition, he has pitched well during 37 innings of exhibition competition this spring.

This starting line-up includes three former American League batting champions — Williams, Vernon and Goodman. It includes, in Jensen, the co-holder of the R.B.I. title.

Coming into this opener, the entire Sox squad is in good physical condition. Asked how he felt yesterday, Williams said, "I feel ready to go although I'm not as far advanced as I had hoped to be at this time. Injuries during training prevented me from doing as much exercising as I had hoped to do. However, I feel confident I will be able to help the team. That's my main concern."

Toward the end of the exhibition season, this team played as a unit for the most part and performed well. Piersall and Jensen have hit the ball better than ever before in spring training. Buddin and Malzone will add a right handed batting punch if they continue hitting as they have this spring. Vernon is a masterful performer both in the field and at bat.

WIGHT FORMER SOX PITCHER

Because of rain only the Sox pitchers and catchers got in a long workout out-of-doors between rain drops.

The Orioles, are due to arrive this morning. Manager Richards last night announced a line-up which includes as much punch as he can possibly muster.

He plans to start rookie Tito Francona in center field. This youngster from Vancouver has been pounding the ball all spring. He replaces the veteran Chuck Diering in center field.

Veterans in the Baltimore line-up will include Dave Philley and Jim Dyke in the outfield; Sparky Adams, Freddy Marsh, Willie Miranda and Gus Triandes, in the infield, Hal Smith behind the plate and Wight on the mound.

All except Francona have appeared at the Fens before. Wight, in fact, formerly was a member of the Red Sox. He also has pitched for the Chicago White Sox and the Cleveland Indians. With such experience he shouldn't be nervous.

Today's WHDH Sports

7:30 a.m.—Breakfast Extra—Sports.
1:35 p.m.—Warm-Up Time.
1:40 p.m.—Tele-Quiz.
1:55 p.m.—Red Sox vs. Baltimore at Boston.
3:55 p.m.—Sports Extra.
5:55 p.m.—Baseball Scoreboard.
6:10 p.m.—Bob Murphy's Sportscope.
6:35 p.m.—Curt Gowdy, Report on Sports.
11:10 p.m.—Sports Final.

Happy Birthday

To the Editor of the Herald:

April 19 (today) Daniel Kuntz of the Hotel Hemenway is 96 years old. Mr. Kuntz is the last living member of the original Boston Symphony Orchestra, and he played under three of the most celebrated conductors — Hans Richter, Felix Motti and Herman Levi.

Many years ago when Arthur Nikisch was conductor of the orchestra, Mr. Kuntz asked to be excused from morning rehearsal as he was to be married that day. Conductor Nikisch consented and said, "But promise that it won't happen again."

Mr. Kuntz claims that Wilhelm Gerrick first built the Boston Symphony Orchestra up to first rank.

HARRY V. LAWRENCE.
Boston

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 196,593

APR 19 1956

CHICAGO, ILL.
NEWS
Circ. D. 576,350

APR 17 1956

Auditions

Auditions for admission to the opera department at the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Mass., will be held at 11 a.m. Wednesday at Chicago Musical College of Roosevelt University.

Symphony Gets Better Support

The Friends of the Boston Symphony are giving the orchestra better support this year, according to the last report.

Dr. Palfrey Perkins, chairman of the organization, told members attending the annual meeting yesterday that their contributions totalled $151,275, a substantial increase.

Membership fell off slightly, however—to 3,992.

Efforts to interest business in suporting the orchestra brought $8,535 in pledges from Boston firms.

Henry B. Cabot, president of the trustees, anounced that all but $20,000 of the $300,000 needed to send the Boston Symphony on its forthcoming European tour had been pledged. None of the $30,000 is being sought from Friends of the Boston Symphon.

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 185,401

APR 17 1956

Sox KO Wight in 4-Run 1st

By LARRY CLAFLIN

FENWAY PARK—Given their best chance to win a pennant in five years, the 1956 Red Sox opened the season today in gaily decorated Fenway Park before a crowd of about 30,000 fans. Sunny skies, cool temperatures and a hitters' wind toward the center field bleachers greeted the Red Sox and Baltimore Orioles.

Frank Sullivan a 6-7 right-hander who won 18 games including the opener last year, started for the Red Sox. Bill Wight, a lefty who once pitched for the Red Sox, was Mgr. Paul Richards' choice.

It was obvious that there is no school in Greater Boston this week because the stands were crowded early with children. Like the Pied Piper, Ted Williams had them following his every move in pregame practice.

Gov. Christian Herter a right hander almost as tall as Sullivan, threw out the first ball. Mayor John B. Hynes led the delegation from City Hall.

Pregame music was provided first by the Clover Club band, the Gate of Heaven CYO Band of South Boston and the Ft. Devens Army Band.

The march to centerfield for flag raising ceremonies was led by Col. Ralph M. King and Capt. Francis L. Delaney of the Marine detachment from the Charlestown Naval Base.

Also in the march were delegations from the American Legion, including the Crosscup-Pishon Post which conducted an opening day ticket drive.

The national anthem was sung by Brian Sullivan, under the direction of Arthur Fiedler of the Boston Pops Orchestra.

About the only noticeable change in Fenway Park was in the box seat section. The seats are covered wtih green cloth this season, instead of white as in the past. Hitters complained that the white cloth provided a poor background.

Red Sox owner Tom Yawkey and his wife were on hand for the opener.

Play by Play

By the Associated Press

FIRST INNING

ORIOLES — Marsh fanned. Adams singled. Philley forced Adams, Sullivan to Buddin. Triandos forced Philley, Buddin to Goodman. NO RUNS.

RED SOX—Goodman singled. Malzone flied to Philley. Williams walked. Jensen singled, scoring Goodman and when Dyck let the ball get by him for an error, Williams went to third and Jensen to second. Vernon singled, scoring Williams. Piersall singled, scoring Jensen. Buddin singled, scoring Vernon. Brown replaced Wight. White flied to Francona. Sullivan lined to Francona. FOUR RUNS.

SECOND INNING

ORIOLES — Franconia fanned. Malzone threw out Dyck. Smith fanned. NO RUNS.

RED SOX—Goodman flied to Dyck. Miranda threw out Malzone. Williams doubled to left. Adams threw out Jensen. NO RUNS.

THIRD INNING

ORIOLES—Sullivan threw out Miranda. Brown doubled. Buddin threw out Marsh, Adams walked. Philley flied to Piersall. NO RUNS.

RED SOX—Vernon doubled. Piersall singled scoring Vernon. Buddin singled, White walked. Sullivan hit a sacrifice fly to Philley scoring Piersall, Buddin took third after the catch. When Philley's throw to the plate was bobbled by Smith, White attempted to advance, but was thrown out, Brown to Miranda. Goodman flied to Francona. TWO RUNS.

FOURTH INNIN G

ORIOLES—Triandos popped to Malzone. Francona singled. Dyck flied to Jensen. Smith popped to Buddin. NO RUNS.

RED SOX—Malzone fouled to Triandos. Brown threw out Williams. Jensen walked. Vernon lined to Dyck. NO RUNS.

MONROE, LA.
WORLD
Circ. D. 17,104

APR 18 1956

Twin City Concert Association Opens Member Campaign

The Twin City Concert association is now conducting its renewal campaign. Renewal memberships are expected to be completed by May 1.

Mrs. Glen Anderson, membership director, urged old members of the association to send in their memberships as soon as possible, either by mail to the Twin City Concert Association, Monroe, Louisiana or through any one of the workers.

No box office admissions are sold to the concerts. Past members should have their memberships in by May 1, Mrs. Anderson said.

The Twin City Concert Association has presented in the past such memorable concerts as Lily Pons, Igor Gorin, The Boston Pops Orchestra, and Rise Stevens.

A return engagement of the Boston Pops Orchestra has been booked for next year's series. Three or four other outstanding concerts will be presented according to the number of memberships enrolled.

An outstanding offer has been made to the first five hundred new members who enroll before May 7. They will be entitled to hear Dorothy Kirsten, who will appear at Neville High on that date, as well as three or four additional attractions, including the famed Boston Pops Orchestra.

Miss Kirsten is considered one of the great operatic soprano's. She has been presented by the Metropolitan and San Francisco operas in the most coveted and glamorous roles of Madame Butterfly, Mimi, Juliet and Margurite. On the top television and radio programs of the day, Miss Kirsten has appeared over and over again with Bing Crosby, Jack Benny, Edgar Bergen and many others.

New members, as well as old ones, were urged to send in their membership promptly.

LONGVIEW, TEX.
JOURNAL
Circ. D. 11,432

APR 17 1956

Boston 'Pops' To Be On Kilgore Program

KILGORE.—The Boston "Pops" orchestra conducted by Arthur Fiedler will headline the Kilgore Community Concert association 1956-57 season, officers announced here after the completion of a membership drive in which more than 1,400 concert-goers joined the organization.

Other attractions named by the association's artists' committee after the drive ended were the Tucson Boys' chorus, with highly original songs of the great Southwest spiced with comedy; Jon Crain, tenor star of the New York City opera who will join the Metropolitan Opera company in the fall; and Vera Franceschi, pianist, protege of Pierre Montieu.

PORT ARTHUR, TEX.
NEWS
Circ. D. 23,010 - S. 23,383

APR 17 1956

1956-57 Season Is Outlined . . .

Boston Pops Orchestra To Be On Community Concert Agenda

The Boston Pops orchestra under the direction of Arthur Fiedler is to be among the attractions in the 1956-57 Community Concert season.

Announcement of next season's program was made Monday night at a membership dinner in the Goodhue hotel. Eighty of the 97 volunteer workers were on hand for the program, and today workers will begin an intensive sales campaign of 1956-57 concert tickets.

Also to be presented in the 1956-57 season is a joint recital by Eugene Conley and Nadine Conner and the Chicago Opera ballet. The fourth proposed attraction is the noted Chinese bass-baritone, Yi-Kwei Sze.

Conley Former Visitor

Conley appeared in Port Arthur during the 1953-54 concert season. The Metropolitan Opera tenor is as celebrated in recital as in opera. He has appeared with great success at Milan's La Scala and is a frequent guest on Radio-TV's program "Voice of Firestone."

Miss Conner, Metropolitan soprano, is a favorite in Europe, Honolulu and Puerto Rico, as well as North America, where she has an extensive following of admirers who love her in opera, in concerts, as orchestral soloist, on radio and TV, in the movies and on record. Miss Conner is considered by music critics over the country as one of America's most talented and beloved prima donnas.

Dancers Due

Marjorie Tallchief, sister of the famed Maria Tallchief, is to be prima ballerina with the Chicago Opera ballet presented under the direction of Ruth Page. The featured male dancer is George Skibine. The company will do the original ballets "The Merry Widow" and "Revenge," based on the opera "Il Trovatore." The program will be presented with colorful settings and costumes, officials explained. In addition to the soloists and supporting company, a small orchestra is included.

An artist enjoying a current siege of popularity is Yi-Kwei Sze, Chinese bass-baritone who made his debut last season at the New York City Opera company and is a growing favorite in recital all over the country. As an artist of international stature, he has toured extensively in Australia, New Zealand, Hawaii and Alaska. Sze currently is appearing with the San Francisco Opera company. TV viewers perhaps will recall his performance as the high priest in Mozart's "The Magic Flute" presented by the NBC opera last fall.

Begins in November

The concert season will begin in November with the Conley-Conner program. The Boston Pops orchestra is a presentation of early February, while the Chicago Opera ballet is to be seen later in February. Yi-Kwei Sze is the proposed attraction for March.

Volunteer workers, for the next two weeks, will contact present concert members for renewal of their membership. If any tickets are available at the end of the two-week period, downtown tickets sales headquarters will be established in the Goodhue hotel where tickets will be made available to the public.

Concert tickets are priced at $6 each and entitle the holders to see every attraction in the current season. There are no rates for students, and no tickets are sold at the close of the membership drive, which, this year, will end May 3.

One program, the Philadelphia Symphony orchestra, remains in the current concert season. The orchestra, under the baton of Eugene Ormandy, will be presented April 27 at 8:15 p. m. in Woodrow Wilson auditorium.

Program Outlined

Mrs. A. S. Phelan, membership chairman, outlined the 1956-57 program to workers at the dinner and expressed appreciation for their interest and co-operation in making such a program possible. Georg Hampton, president, presided. Guests introduced were Mrs. E. W. McBurnett, campaign secretary, and Mrs. J. T. Dwyer, mother of James Dwyer, former association president.

Receiving special recognition were volunteer workers who this year are joining the campaign forces for the first time—Mesdames Mary E. Blandford, Charles O. Burch, Allen Gafford, O. E. Johnson, John K. Levy, Lois Robertson, H. G. Showalter, B. E. Smith, J. C. Steele, Alex Toom and R. E. Walker; Messrs. Ted Primeaux and David Moriaty and Miss Virginia Pandella.

The Community Concert board includes Hampton; Maurice Born, first vice president; Mrs. Phelan, second vice president; Joe Stasney, treasurer; Mrs. P. A. Drouilhet, secretary; Mrs. A. A. Dupuis, publicity; R. P. Clarke, Mrs. C. H. Comfort, Mrs. Clifford Hall, Walter Kloster, Mrs. Max Lipoff, Mrs. B. T. McWhorter, Herbert Plummer, Mrs. T. B. Sappington, Lucy Stiefel, E. P. Tucker and Mrs. W. W. Zabriskie.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
Brooklyn Heights Press
Circ. W. 1,600

APR 19 1956

[illegible] Mesdames [illegible] Bell; Mrs. Robert Lawrence J. Bolan; [illegible] Daily; Mrs. Fr[illegible] Mrs. Berton J. Del[illegible] Frederick C. Eckardt; M[illegible] Irvin; Mrs. Andrew [illegible] R. Whitney Gosnell; Mrs. [illegible] C. Hallan; Mrs. Irving G. Iiler; Mrs. Darwin R. James III; Mrs. Miles Kastendieck; Mrs. John Bailey King; Mrs. Warner King; Mrs. Raymond K. Pendleton; Mrs. Frederick H. Rohlfs, Mrs. Ainsworth L. Smith; Mrs. Harry Spencer, Mrs. Donald E. Swift, Mrs. Theodore N. Trynin, Mrs. Franklin B. Tuttle, Mrs. Adrian Van Sinderen and Mrs. Thomas K. War. Honored guests were Mr. Thomas D. Perry Jr., Manager of the Boston Symphony, and Mr. Julius Bloom, Director of the Brooklyn Academy of Music.

CINCINNATI, OHIO
ENQUIRER
Circ. D. 220,412 - S. 282,550

APR 19 1956

Mozart Program Set For Berkshires

BOSTON, April 18 (Special) —The "Bach-Mozart" programs of the Berkshire Festival of concerts by a chamber orchestra from the Boston Symphony Orchestra, now in its 75th anniversary season, will be heard in the Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., during the first two weekends of the festival, on Friday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons, July 6, 7, 8 and 13, 14 and 15.

★ ★ ★

THE PROGRAMS offer a variety of Mozart, whose 200th anniversary is being celebrated this year; two of the symphonies, three piano concertos, the Concerto for Clarinet and the Sinfonia Concertante for Woodwinds. On Saturday evening, August 4, in the Music Shed, the Kyrie and Gloria from the C Minor Mass will be performed, and the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center plans to present "Cosi Fan Tutte."

★ ★ ★

OF THE WORKS of Bach in the "Bach-Mozart" series there will be a violin concerto, a piano concerto and a suite for flute among other works, culminating in a performance of the great Passion According to Saint John.

The clarinetist, Benny Goodman, will make his first appearance as soloist at Tanglewood.

★ ★ ★

THE SHED CONCERTS of the festival will take place during the subsequent four weekends on Friday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons (July 20-August 12). Charles Munch will conduct seven of the concerts; Pierre Monteux, two; and Leonard Bernstein, Eleazar de Carvalho and Richard Burgin one each. Soloists will include Rudolf Serkin and Jocy de Oliveira, piano; Zino Francescatti and Ruth Posselt, violin, and the following singers: Margaret Harshaw, Adele Addison, Eunice Alberts, Marguerite Willauer, Albert De Costa, David Lloyd and James Pease.

Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 53,259

APR 18 1956

Music

Boston Symphony Orchestra Gives Providence Concert

By WILLIAM DINNEEN

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, presented its 335th concert in Providence at the Veteran's Memorial Auditorium last evening to conclude its current series here. The usual capacity audience was present to applaud the evening's activity with vigor and enthusiasm. The program:

Mozart ..... Symphony in D major, "Haffner," No. 35 (K. 385)
I. Allegro con spirito
II. Andante
III. Menuetto
IV. Finale: Presto
Tchaikovsky ..... "Romeo and Juliet," Overture-Fantasia
Intermission
Martinu ..... Fantaisies Symphoniques (Symphony No. 6)
I. Lento; Allegro; Lento
II. Allegro
III. Lento; Allegro
Falla ..... Three Dances from the Ballet "El Sombrero de Tres Picos"

The evening opened most auspiciously with a familiar Mozart symphony, and we heard a thoroughly satisfactory reading of the score, except for some quixotic acceleration in the final movement which resulted in some blurring of lines here and there. Nobody, as far as we could tell, was bothered by this — it made for excitement. And this mood was certainly successfully continued by the performance of "Romeo and Juliet," which was frenzied enough in places to suit anybody.

The important work of the evening was a new set of symphonic fantasies by Martinu, who dedicated them to Mr. Munch. As one observer's opinion, it seemed to me that these were well written. They gave the impression of being warm and passionate music with some slight references here and there to Spanish or pseudo-Spanish idioms, and they suffered as a result from being preceded by Tschaikovsky (certainly passionate) and followed by Falla (undoubtedly Spanish). Instead of emerging as a major work, these pieces were turned into a curious transition episode in the program. With all due respect, it was a strange thing to hear.

Martinu inadvertently added to this impression by using a series of chromatic undulating figures as an introductory and unifying idea. Whether he intended it or not, it sounded like a wind in the willows. And winds are things which pass and are gone. I developed some curious images in my mind as this music went along, but the craftsmanship in the writing was of a very high order, and the work should be heard again, preferably with other surrounding material.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 130,559

APR 18 1956

57

Social Chatter

By Alison Arnold

ONCE AGAIN, your surplus books will help make children well. Give your unwanted books of any kind or subject from hobbies to history, sermons to sports, to the Yankee Bookstall where they'll be sold as the spring project of the women's committee of the Children's Medical Center. The sale will be held at 699 Boylston Street (near the Copley subway station) from Thursday, April 26, through Wednesday, May 2, from 10 to 6 o'clock, weekdays, and from 10 to 5, Saturday. This is the second annual Yankee Bookstall and Mrs. Robert H. Hopkins of Brookline is chairman. Mrs. Stewart H. Clifford of Weston is vice-chairman, and Mrs. Philip E. Brickley of Pinckney Street is treasurer. Mrs. Roger A. Perry of Brookline is in charge of collections and Mrs. Charles F. Hovey of Chestnut Hill is publicity chairman. Mrs. Robert B. Almy of Dedham is chairman of the women's committee of the Children's Medical Center and her assistants are Mrs. Charles Crockett of Dedham, Miss Dorothy Rogers and Mrs. Dwight L. Siscoe of Chestnut Hill; and Mrs. Joseph T. Ryerson, Jr., of Brookline.

MRS. HOPKINS

* * *

POPS CONCERTS in Symphony Hall are favorites for spring ~~benefits in Boston.~~ Monday, May 7, will be Daughters of the American Revolution Evening at the Pops and will benefit the educational and patriotic work of promoting the American way of life. At a luncheon next Tuesday at the home of Mrs. Willard F. Richards, regent of the Boston Tea Party Chapter, final plans will be made for the benefit concert. Assisting Mrs. John Hollett and Mrs. Ross Currier on the committee, besides the hostess, are Mrs. James J. Hepburn, Mrs. George Hughes, Miss Marion Decrow, Mrs. Kenneth W. Goepper, Mrs. John J. Kelley, Mrs. John Gallaher, Mrs. J. S. Carleon, Mrs. Arthur Dorr, Mrs. Edward S. Colton, Jr., and Mrs. H. Leland DeRivera. Among those who have reserved tables are the William S. Does, the Allen D. Willards, Mrs. John Clifford Ross, Mrs. Henry J. Winslow, Mrs. Charles Parker, Mrs. Robert Bray, Mrs. Georges Doriot, Mrs. Simeon Whitney, Mrs. Clifford A. Waterhouse, Mrs. George Rockwood of Stockbridge, who has composed the chapter song, and Mrs. Charles F. Lambert of California, who has a Boston Tea Party ancestor.

* * *

THE ANNUAL OPEN HOUSE and exhibition at the North Bennet Street Industrial School, a Red Feather Agency, will be held April 25 and 26, from 1 to 9 o'clock, at the school. Rounding out 75 years of continuous service to the community, the school will welcome many of its friends to tour its buildings and examine the display of work done there. There'll be trade class exhibits, jewelry making, jewelry engraving, sheet metal work, carpentry, watch repair and cabinet making. Girls and women of Social Service House will demonstrate their activities, and the boys who are members of Shaw House are planning particularly interesting attractions. Italian meals will be served both days at noon and in the evening. A special Italian dinner will be served Thursday at 7:15, for which advance reservations are requested. All [illegible] members of the [illegible] e board of man- [illegible] e open house and [illegible] enry B. Bigelow, [illegible] er, Mrs. Henry [illegible] y E. Williams.

*

[illegible] AY to Lucy Davis [illegible] r 19th birthday [illegible] utante daughter [illegible] in Davis, Jr., of [illegible] head. A gradu- [illegible] est School, she's [illegible] the Garland School and is a member of the Vincent Club. Joan Rogers Haskell, debutante daughter of the Roger Sprague Haskells, also of Peach's Point, Marblehead, was 19 years old Sunday. She was graduated from St. Mary's-in-the-Mountains, Littleton, N. H., and is attending the Chamberlain School of Retailing.

MISS DAVIS

Times (e)
PAWTUCKET-
CENTRAL FALLS, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 38,858

APR 18 1956 PAWTUCKET

Music In Review

Concert By Boston Symphony Ends R. I. Series For Season

Charles Munch directed the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night ~~in a thrilling~~ concert, which closed the orchestra's series in Providence for this season in the Veterans Memorial Auditorium.

The program included Mozart's blithe and courtly "Symphony in D-Major, "Haffner," No. 35;" Tchaikovsky's "Romeo and Juliet" Overture-Fantasia which was flavored with oriental rhythms; De Falla's brilliant and provocative suite from the ballet, "El Sombrero de Trois Picos (The Three-Cornered Hat)" and a new work commissioned in observance of the orchestra's 75th anniversary. It was "Fantaisies Symphoniques (Symphony No. 6)" by Martinu.

The latter was acclaimed by New York critics as "the best new orchestral work." Perhaps to the musical ear of New Yorkers, who are tortured by the cacophony of big city noises, it is good music. Admittedly, it had some very fine melodic passages, and some beautiful solo voices. But it is one of those works that must be listened to a dozen times in order to separate the wheat from the chaff.

The gay and spritely Mozart opened the program. The opening movement, allegro con spirito, was a joyous exposition of love music, romantic and imaginative, but rapid and declarative in a boasting manner. The second movement was delayed in starting by late comers finding their seats and Dr. Munch stood frozen on the podium as though trying to hide his annoyance.

The movement was andante and had a singing grace about it that was almost a serenade. The third movement, menuetto, had a courtly stateliness that was relaxing and quietly delightful.

The finale, presto, fairly sang with melody spoken and echoed by each section, ascending to exultation in the closing chords.

The Tchaikovsky was more fantastic than fantasy. The Slavic melancholy of the composer dulled the images of this romantic overture. The harmony was perfect in whatever mood was projected but instead of dazzling in depressed. The coloring was more opalescent than iridescent.

DeFalla's three dances were mocking drollery and delightful in humor. Each had a clean crispness about it and the rhythms made the feet tap and the head nod in accompaniment.

Dr. Munch received great applause and several "bravos" from the large audience.

C. H. L.

PORT ARTHUR, TEX.
NEWS
Circ. D. 23,010 - S. 23,383

APR 17 1956

1956-57 Season Is Outlined . . .

Boston Pops Orchestra To Be On Community Concert Agenda

The Boston Pops orchestra under the direction of Arthur Fiedler is to be among the attractions in the 1956-57 Community Concert season.

Announcement of next season's program was made Monday night at a membership dinner in the Goodhue hotel. Eighty of the 97 volunteer workers were on hand for the program, and today workers will begin an intensive sales campaign of 1956-57 concert tickets.

Also to be presented in the 1956-57 season is a joint recital by Eugene Conley and Nadine Conner and the Chicago Opera ballet. The fourth proposed attraction is the noted Chinese bass-baritone, Yi-Kwei Sze.

Conley Former Visitor

Conley appeared in Port Arthur during the 1953-54 concert season. The Metropolitan Opera tenor is as celebrated in recital as in opera. He has appeared with great success at Milan's La Scala and is a frequent guest on Radio-TV's program "Voice of Firestone."

Miss Conner, Metropolitan soprano, is a favorite in Europe, Honolulu and Puerto Rico, as well as North America, where she has an extensive following of admirers who love her in opera, in concerts, as orchestral soloist, on radio and TV, in the movies and on record. Miss Conner is considered by music critics over the country as one of America's most talented and beloved prima donnas.

Dancers Due

Marjorie Tallchief, sister of the famed Maria Tallchief, is to be prima ballerina with the Chicago Opera ballet presented under the direction of Ruth Page. The featured male dancer is George Skibine. The company will do the original ballets "The Merry Widow" and "Revenge," based on the opera "Il Trovature." The program will be presented with colorful settings and costumes, officials explained. In addition to the soloists and supporting company, a small orchestra is included.

An artist enjoying a current siege of popularity is Yi-Kwei Sze, Chinese bass-baritone who made his debut last season at the New York City Opera company and is a growing favorite in recital all over the country. As an artist of international stature, he has toured extensively in Australia, New Zealand, Hawaii and Alaska. Sze currently is appearing with the San Francisco Opera company. TV viewers perhaps will recall his performance as the high priest in Mozart's "The Magic Flute" presented by the NBC opera last fall.

Begins in November

The concert season will begin in November with the Conley-Conner program. The Boston Pops orchestra is a presentation of early February, while the Chicago Opera ballet is to be seen later in February. Yi-Kwei Sze is the proposed attraction for March.

Volunteer workers, for the next two weeks, will contact present concert members for renewal of their membership. If any tickets are available at the end of the two-week period, downtown tickets sales headquarters will be established in the Goodhue hotel where tickets will be made available to the public.

Concert tickets are priced at $6 each and entitle the holders to see every attraction in the current season. There are no rates for students, and no tickets are sold at the close of the membership drive, which, this year, will end May 3.

One program, the Philadelphia Symphony orchestra, remains in the current concert season. The orchestra, under the baton of Eugene Ormandy, will be presented April 27 at 8:15 p. m. in Woodrow Wilson auditorium.

Program Outlined

Mrs. A. S. Phelan, membership chairman, outlined the 1956-57 program to workers at the dinner and expressed appreciation for their interest and co-operation in making such a program possible. Georg Hampton, president, presided. Guests introduced were Mrs. E. W. McBurnett, campaign secretary, and Mrs. J. T. Dwyer, mother of James Dwyer, former association president.

Receiving special recognition were volunteer workers who this year are joining the campaign forces for the first time—Mesdames Mary E. Blandford, Charles O. Burch, Allen Gafford, O. E. Johnson, John K. Levy, Lois Robertson, H. G. Showalter, B. E. Smith, J. C. Steele, Alex Tooth and R. E. Walker; Messrs. Ted Primeaux and David Moriaty and Miss Virginia Pandella.

The Community Concert board includes Hampton; Maurice Born, first vice president; Mrs. Phelan, second vice president; Joe Stasney, treasurer; Mrs. P. A. Drouilhet, secretary; Mrs. A. A. Dupuis, publicity; R. P. Clarke, Mrs. C. H. Comfort, Mrs. Clifford Hall, Walter Kloster, Mrs. Max Lipoff, Mrs. B. T. McWhorter, Herbert Plummer, Mrs. T. B. Sappington, Lucy Stiefel, E. P. Tucker and Mrs. W. W. Zabriskie.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
Brooklyn Heights Press
Circ. W. 1,600

APR 19 1956

Attending a tea in behalf of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the home of Mrs. Carroll J. Dickson on Tuesday afternoon were Mesdames Elias J. Audi; Mrs. H. H. Bell; Mrs. Robert F. Blum; Mrs. Lawrence J. Bolvig; Mrs. Wm. T. Daily; Mrs. Frederick I. Daniels, Mrs. Berton J. Delmhorst; Mrs. Remick C. Eckardt; Mrs. Edwin L. Garvin; Mrs. Andrew L. Gomory; Mrs. R. Whitney Gosnell; Mrs. Arthur C. Hallan; Mrs. Irving G. Idler; Mrs. Darwin R. James III; Mrs. Miles Kastendieck; Mrs. John Bailey King; Mrs. Warner King; Mrs. Raymond K. Pendleton; Mrs. Frederick H. Rohlfs, Mrs. Ainsworth L. Smith; Mrs. Harry Spencer, Mrs. Donald E. Swift, Mrs. Theodore N. Trynin, Mrs. Franklin B. Tuttle, Mrs. Adrian Van Sinderen and Mrs. Thomas K. Ware. Honored guests were Mr. Thomas D. Perry Jr., Manager of the Boston Symphony, and Mr. Julius Bloom, Director of the Brooklyn Academy of Music.

CINCINNATI, OHIO
ENQUIRER
Circ. D. 220,412 - S. 282,550

APR 19 1956

JBS

val Arranged i On Saturday

Clubs

Bridgetown ... led by the Re... Church.

Delhi Towns... night; musical... ble male chor...

Hoffman PT... summer recre... Naish. Art ... board of educ... tion commissi...

Oyler PTA: ... "The April F... Miss Elaine L...

the festival, on Friday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons, July 6, 7, 8 and 13, 14 and 15.

★ ★ ★

THE PROGRAMS offer a variety of Mozart, whose 200th anniversary is being celebrated this year; two of the symphonies, three piano concertos, the Concerto for Clarinet and the Sinfonia Concertante for Woodwinds. On Saturday evening, August 4, in the Music Shed, the Kyrie and Gloria from the C Minor Mass will be performed, and the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center plans to present "Cosi Fan Tutte."

★ ★ ★

OF THE WORKS of Bach in the "Bach-Mozart" series there will be a violin concerto, a piano concerto and a suite for flute among other works, culminating in a performance of the great Passion According to Saint John.

The clarinetist, Benny Goodman, will make his first appearance as soloist at Tanglewood.

★ ★ ★

THE SHED CONCERTS of the festival will take place dur-

Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 53,259

APR 18 1956

Music

Boston Symphony Orchestra Gives Providence Concert

By WILLIAM DINNEEN

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, presented its 335th concert in Providence at the Veteran's Memorial Auditorium last evening to conclude its current series here. The usual capacity audience was present to applaud the evening's activity with vigor and enthusiasm. The program:

Mozart ..... Symphony in D major, "Haffner, No. 35 (K. 385)
I. Allegro con spirito
II. Andante
III. Menuetto
IV. Finale: Presto
Tchaikovsky ..... "Romeo and Juliet," Overture-Fantasia

Intermission

Martinu ..... Fantaisies Symphoniques (Symphony No. 6)
I. Lento; Allegro; Lento
II. Allegro
III. Lento; Allegro
Falla ..... Three Dances from the Ballet "El Sombrero de Tres Picos"

The evening opened most auspiciously with a familiar Mozart symphony, and we heard a thoroughly satisfactory reading of the score, except for some quixotic acceleration in the final movement which resulted in some blurring of lines here and there. Nobody, as far as we could tell, was bothered by this — it made for excitement. And this mood was certainly successfully continued by the performance of "Romeo and Juliet," which was frenzied enough in places to suit anybody.

The important work of the evening was a new set of symphonic fantasies by Martinu, who dedicated them to Mr. Munch. As one observer's opinion, it seemed to me that these were well written. They gave the impression of being warm and passionate music with some slight references here and there to Spanish or pseudo-Spanish idioms, and they suffered as a result from being preceded by Tschaikovsky (certainly passionate) and followed by Falla (undoubtedly Spanish). Instead of emerging as a major work, these pieces were turned into a curious transition episode in the program. With all due respect, it was a strange thing to hear.

Martinu inadvertently added to this impression by using a series of chromatic undulating figures as an introductory and unifying idea. Whether he intended it or not, it sounded like a wind in the willows. And winds are things which pass and are gone. I developed some curious images in my mind as this music went along, but the craftsmanship in the writing was of a very high order, and the work should be heard again, preferably with other surrounding material.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 130,559

APR 18 1956

Social Chatter

By Alice Arnold

ONCE AGAIN, your surplus books will help make children well. Give your unwanted books of any kind or subject from hobbies to history, sermons to sports, to the Yankee Bookstall where they'll be sold as the spring project of the women's committee of the Children's Medical Center. The sale will be held at 699 Boylston Street (near the Copley subway station) from Thursday, April 26, through Wednesday, May 2, from 10 to 6 o'clock, weekdays, and from 10 to 5, Saturday. This is the second annual Yankee Bookstall and Mrs. Robert H. Hopkins of Brookline is chairman. Mrs. Stewart H. Clifford of Weston is vice-chairman, and Mrs. Philip E. Brickley of Pinckney Street is treasurer. Mrs. Roger A. Perry of Brookline is in charge of collections and Mrs. Charles F. Hovey of Chestnut Hill is publicity chairman. Mrs. Robert B. Almy of Dedham is chairman of the women's committee of the Children's Medical Center and her assistants are Mrs. Charles Crockett of Dedham, Miss Dorothy Rogers and Mrs. Dwight L. Siscoe of Chestnut Hill; and Mrs. Joseph T. Ryerson, Jr., of Brookline.

MRS. HOPKINS

* * *

POPS CONCERTS in Symphony Hall are favorites for spring benefits in Boston. Monday, May 7, will be Daughters of the American Revolution Evening at the Pops and will benefit the educational and patriotic work of promoting the American way of life. At a luncheon next Tuesday at the home of Mrs. Willard F. Richards, regent of the Boston Tea Party Chapter, final plans will be made for the benefit concert. Assisting Mrs. John Hollett and Mrs. Ross Currier on the committee, besides the hostess, are Mrs. James J. Hepburn, Mrs. George Hughes, Miss Marion Decrow, Mrs. Kenneth W. Goepper, Mrs. John J. Kelley, Mrs. John Gallaher, Mrs. J. S. Carleon, Mrs. Arthur Dorr, Mrs. Edward S. Colton, Jr., and Mrs. H. Leland DeRivera. Among those who have reserved tables are the William S. Does, the Allen D. Willards, Mrs. John Clifford Ross, Mrs. Henry J. Winslow, Mrs. Charles Parker, Mrs. Robert Bray, Mrs. Georges Doriot, Mrs. Simeon Whitney, Mrs. Clifford A. Waterhouse, Mrs. George Rockwood of Stockbridge, who has composed the chapter song, and Mrs. Charles F. Lambert of California, who has a Boston Tea Party ancestor.

* * *

THE ANNUAL OPEN HOUSE and exhibition at the North Bennet Street Industrial School, a Red Feather Agency, will be held April 25 and 26, from 1 to 9 o'clock, at the school. Rounding out 75 years of continuous service to the community, the school will welcome many of its friends to tour its buildings and examine the display of work done there. There'll be trade class exhibits, jewelry making, jewelry engraving, sheet metal work, carpentry, watch repair and cabinet making. Girls and women of Social Service House will demonstrate their activities, and the boys who are members of Shaw House are planning particularly interesting attractions. Italian meals will be served both days at noon and in the evening. A special Italian dinner will be served Thursday at 7:15, for which advance reservations are requested. All former members of the school are invited to attend. Members of the board of managers interested in the open house and exhibition are Mrs. Henry B. Bigelow, Mrs. J. Lewis Bremer, Mrs. Henry Lyman and Miss Mary E. Williams.

MISS DAVIS

* * *

HAPPY BIRTHDAY to Lucy Davis who is celebrating her 19th birthday today. She's the debutante daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lincoln Davis, Jr., of Peach's Point, Marblehead. A graduate of the Garrison Forest School, she's attending the Garland School and is a member of the Vincent Club. Joan Rogers Haskell, debutante daughter of the Roger Sprague Haskells, also of Peach's Point, Marblehead, was 19 years old Sunday. She was graduated from St. Mary's-in-the-Mountains, Littleton, N. H., and is attending the Chamberlain School of Retailing.

Times (e)
PAWTUCKET-
CENTRAL FALLS, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 88,858

APR 18 1956

Music In Review

Concert By Boston Symphony Ends R. I. Series For Season

Charles Munch directed the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night in a thrilling concert, which closed the orchestra's series in Providence for this season in the Veterans Memorial Auditorium.

The program included Mozart's blithe and courtly "Symphony in D-Major, "Haffner," No. 35;" Tchaikovsky's "Romeo and Juliet" Overture-Fantasia which was flavored with oriental rhythms; De Falla's brilliant and provocative suite from the ballet, "El Sombrero de Trois Picos (The Three-Cornered Hat)" and a new work commissioned in observance of the orchestra's 75th anniversary. It was "Fantaisies Symphoniques (Symphony No. 6)" by Martinu.

The latter was acclaimed by New York critics as "the best new orchestral work." Perhaps to the musical ear of New Yorkers, who are tortured by the cacophony of big city noises, it is good music. Admittedly, it had some very fine melodic passages and some beautiful solo voices. But it is one of those works that must be listened to a dozen times in order to separate the wheat from the chaff.

The gay and spritely Mozart opened the program. The opening movement, allegro con spirito, was a joyous exposition of love music, romantic and imaginative, but rapid and declarative in a boasting manner. The second movement was delayed in starting by late comers finding their seats and Dr. Munch stood frozen on the podium as though trying to hide his annoyance.

The movement was andante and had a singing grace about it that was almost a serenade. The third movement, menuetto, had a courtly stateliness that was relaxing and quietly delightful.

The finale, presto, fairly sang with melody spoken and echoed by each section, ascending to exultation in the closing chords.

The Tchaikovsky was more fantastic than fantasy. The Slavic melancholy of the composer dulled the images of this romantic overture. The harmony was perfect in whatever mood was projected but instead of dazzling in depressed. The coloring was more opalescent than iridescent.

De Falla's three dances were moving drollery and delightful in humor. Each had a clean crispness about it and the rhythms made the feet tap and the head nod in accompaniment.

Dr. Munch received great applause and several "bravos" from the large audience.

C. E. L.

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, gave the 22d program of the 75th season in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. The soloists were Zino Francescatti, violin, and Samuel Mayes, cello. The program:

"Francesca da Rimini".....Tchaikovsky
Concerto No. 2 in G minor, Op. 63 Prokofieff
Concerto in A minor for Violin and Cello, Op. 102.....Brahms

By RUDOLPH ELIE

It is more than likely that many of the audience yesterday afternoon came away with the impression that this was one of the most memoriable concerts of the season. In many ways it was, too, and the reason isn't hard to isolate: A superb performance of Brahms' Concerto for Violin and Cello.

The astonishing thing is that this work hasn't been given at these concerts for 32 years. To be sure, virtuosos do not as a rule team up and tour together, so the opportunities for hearing this work—and a good many others, such as Beethoven's Triple Concerto — are pretty limited. Happily enough, Zino Francescatti, who provided us with an enchanting performance of Prokofieff's G minor Concerto in the first half, did join with Samuel Mayes, the orchestra's virtuoso first cellist for this occasion. The results could not have been happier, for these two personalities blended technically and stylistically to set forth this beautiful work with a radiance of tone and a perfection of phrase.

Two Solo Voice

The Concetro, one of Brahms' final utterances, though dominated by a mood of gentle melancholy save in the rondo finale, presents the two solo voice now in dialogue, again in powerful unison, now in sharp conflict, again in repose. The thematic content, from the opening statement of the solo cello, to the emergence of the noble proclamation in the finale, is Brahms at his most felicitous level. The sentiment, often colored by Gypsy overtones, never gets out of hand, nor does the composer ever turn to sheer virtuosity for its own sake in the solo voices, though there is virtuosity enough.

It was to be expected that Mr. Francescatti, who is a violinist of the greatest taste and accomplishment, would soar in the performance of the Concerto. Less to be expected was the incomparably fine performance by Mr. Mayes, for it is no easy task to step out of the more or less anonymous position of the orchestral player, even though he be the first desk man, and turn virtuoso. That he would be technically secure in the role was a foregone conclusion, but he displayed the temperamental elan of the solo virtuoso as well, pairing with Mr. Francescatti in a performance marvelous for its unanimity of style. Needless to say Mr. Munch, whose accompanying art is of the highest character, supplied them with a glowing orchestra background.

The Prokofieff Concerto, which is vintage Prokofieff in his finest period, went extraordinarily well. Mr. Francescatti always conveys the impression of complete security, complete mastery of his instrument and himself. He achieves a tone that is alive but that glows as well. And in the slow movement, one of the most beautiful things in all Prokofieff, he reached moments of great expressivity.

"Francesca da Rimini" is not, if the truth be known, very good Tchaikovsky save in the long romantic passage in the middle. The outer sections, depicting the tortures and agonies of the damned as Virgil leads Dante into the second circle of Hell, depict all right. But it all seems a little distraught and somehow empty of anything but theatricality. It is effective, however, and Mr. Munch gave it the necessary turbulence, in a performance that didn't always seem any too tidy.

The program next week begins with "The Faithful Shepherd" Suite of Handel, Mozart's Piano Concerto in D major (K. 451), Honegger's Symphony No. 3 and "Chant de joie."

"HEAR! HEAR!" — Norma Douglas who has a featured role in Fred Waring's revue, "Hear! Hear!" which comes to the Boston Opera House April 27 only.

LAST TIME SUN. NIGHT
McGUIRE Sisters
Reservations Available For Both SUN. NIGHT SHOWS 7:30 & 10 P.M.
NEXT WEEK JANE MORGAN
N.B.C. SINGING STAR
BLINSTRUB'S
308 B'WAY AN 8-5440

SCREEN

...en all together, this was one ...e memorable concerts of the ...h. It was also a study in con..., from the heat and tumult ...rancesca da Rimini," through ...ofieff and Brahms. The two ...rtos, heard in succession, ...set off the other. The Proko... with its spare orchestral tex... its melody which is tender ...ever too sentimental, and its ...nt finale with extremely ...r out-of-key harmonies, was ...antly astringent. Brahms' ...odied work, with its peculiar ...ng of classic structure with ...ving romantic ardor, was an equally pleasant antithesis.

You may or may not admire the febrile orchestral fantasia of Tchaikovsky, although as a tone poem it omits no detail of the unfortunate outcome of the afternoon literary sessions of Paolo and Francesca. As interpretation and orchestral performance, Mr. Munch's reading lacked nothing. It was powerful and tender in turn, of the greatest intensity, and it was never coarse. The orchestra showed a richness of color, and a refinement of sonority which were proof that the Boston Symphony again is at its exalted best. Especially was this true of the strings, which have regained their old depth and sheen.

Next week Mr. Munch will present the Beecham arrangement of a Suite from Handel's "The Faithful Shepherd"; Mozart's D major Piano Concerto (K. 451), with Rudolf Firkusny as soloist; Honegger's Third Symphony ("Liturgique"), and "Chant de Joie," the latter new to these concerts.

AMUSEMENTS

NEW ENGLAND ...review

By TUCKER KEISER

If the listener with notions or preconceptions about Beethoven's Ninth "Choral" checks them at the door, he will have a good time at the symphony concert this week end. Conductor Charles Munch has conceived this work in the broadest possible theatrical terms, both personally and musically.

The conductor has removed all restraint. He shouts, sings, shushes, stamps, leaps and lunges. Beethoven's magnificent music lifts him emotionally into a passionate paean.

Musically the score emerges as a series of intensely brilliant effects, mounting steadily until the choral finale, a veritable apocalyptic trauma. Tempi are pushed almost beyond physical endurance, details ignored, and whole phrases swallowed in the mad-long rush. Urgency soon becomes overwhelming. The listener is swept along helplessly in the torrent of sound.

The end comes suddenly. The silence itself seems thunderous. The listener is stunned for a moment, then reacts with almost hysterical applause.

The opening "Psalm of Praise" by Mabel Daniels, a short festive piece composed for chorus, string, percussion, and trumpets and written for the 75th anniversary of Radcliffe College, was dwarfed by the Ninth that followed.

Assisting in yesterday's performance was the Boston Symphony, the Harvard-Radcliffe Chorus, and a quartet including Adele Addison, Eunice Alberts, David Lloyd and Mac Morgan.

...ert began with a graceful reading of ...mphony in A ma... which hardly put in the proper frame listen to Moevs' ...ariations.

...curious work util... ...h too complicated ...s own good. The ...s brutal, the or... intense, and the ...o complex. It is ...music, yet its mas... ...h and energetic ...l attention with ...ying fascination. ...must be a very

...Boston favorite, ...Sanroma, joined ...r. Bernstein and ...give a jocularly ...ding of Stravin... ...o."

...closed with an ...performance of ...ty and urbane ...5.

Herald April 28

MUSIC

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Beethoven Ninth Ends Season

The Boston Symphony Orchestra played yesterday the afternoon concert of the 24th and last pair in the Friday-Saturday series, at Symphony Hall. Charles Munch conducted. The program: Mabel Daniels: A Psalm of Praise, for Mixed Chorus, Three Trumpets, Percussion and Strings (first time at these concerts); Beethoven: Ninth Symphony, in D minor. The Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, prepared by G. Wallace Woodworth, assisted. The soloists were Adele Addison, soprano; Eunice Alberts, contralto; David Lloyd, tenor, and Mac Morgan, bass.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Since a Boston Symphony season must come to an end, what better conclusion than the great and visionary Ninth Symphony of Beethoven? Appropriately Charles Munch chose it for the final concerts of the orchestra's 75th Anniversary season, yesterday afternoon and tonight.

The final regular concerts, that is to say, for an extra program will be given at Symphony Hall tomorrow evening as a sort of coda to the Anniversary observances, and to help raise funds for the European tour in the Summer. At this special concert Mr. Munch will conduct the Seventh Symphony of Beethoven and the Sixth, or "Pathetique," Symphony by Tchaikovsky.

During yesterday's performanee of the mighty Ninth, I was reminded of a complimentary appraisal of Mr. Munch, said to me privately last week, by an admiring colleague, also a conductor: "He is a true maker of music." This performance was a true making of music. Such a giant score might intimidate some conductors, or, peculiarly, urge them to special effects of displayful eloquence.

"The Long Line" Kept

Not with Charles Munch. Every measure, every page of the Ninth sounded with the devoted simplicity, the precise care for the smallest details, and the continuity from section to section, movement to movement, which is the quality of the man as interpreter. This continuity, known more fashionably these days as "the long line," is of utmost importance to the whole structure—and the interpretation of so long, noble and overwhelming a masterpiece.

Through it all the orchestra really "sang," and the song never failed to touch the heart. All was in proportion, all sounded with the beauty of a rich, deep sonority; the "recitative" of the finale was cleanly and expressively phrased by cellos and double-basses. Above all these excellences was an intensity of spirit which carried you up into that world of purity and nobility, which is great music.

The difficulties, and they are many and varied, for the vocal parts in the choral finale, are an old story. No doubt a performance of these pages perfect in every way will never be heard from human chorus or soloists. Yesterday the Harvard and Radcliffe singers did exceptionally well. Here, perhaps, is an exception to the rule that mature men and women do better, in tonal volume, than youngsters. Mr. Woodworth's chorus navigated the high notes and the speed with remarkable agility, which, perhaps, a chorus of older people might not have done so well.

Daniels Piece Fine

Of the soloists, the soprano voice of Adele Addison stood out most plainly. But the work of Eunice Alberts was resonant and as musical; David Lloyd dealt with the tenor part admirably, and though Mac Morgan has not yet mastered the smoothness and the flexibility which the opening baritone solo demands, his voice was an integral part of the solid tone when all four soloists were heard together.

The rushing measures of the prestissimo coda, and the concluding D major chord were hardly sounded when a storm of cheers broke from the audience. Applause and cries of "Bravo!" continued as Mr. Munch and the soloists bowed again and again. Then, for him alone, a noisy ovation.

The concert was exceptionally short, for there was no intermission. Mr. Munch happily chose for opening piece a short choral work by the Boston composer, Mabel Daniels, who was present and received cordial acknowledgement from the audience. This was the Psalm of Praise, composed for the 75th Anniversary of Radcliffe College, and which was heard this week in an instrumentally expanded version for three trumpets, percussion and strings.

This is a fine piece, compact, of an Oriental coloring which beautifully reflects the character of the Old Testament text. There is joy in the words and in the vigorous, plangent music. Harmonically, Miss Daniels' writing is bold and brave, of a dissonance which is expressive but not smothering, and altogether logical for the musical conception as a whole. The Psalm of Praise deserves to take its place in the choral repertory.

STAGE IN TOWN
LYRIC CI 7-8190
Eves. Tues. thru Sun.
SHAW'S
"DEVIL'S DISCIPLE"
8:40 P. M.
NR. SYMPHONY

chorus, and it ends on a note of triumph. The idiom is personal, makes little use of dissonance, but its contrapuntal lines in the outer sections are somewhat angular in a more contemporary vein. The modulations are free and interesting and, all in all, it is the agreeable product of a lively and gifted mind. Miss Daniels was in the audience and most cordially received.

ENORMOUS WORK

I am always at a loss for words with the Ninth, there being virtually nothing to add to the literature on this enormous work, so it always comes down to the performance. Until the later stages of the melodramatic choral finale, it was a very fine performance indeed. Mr. Munch did the scherzo with particular effect, catching the lightning tempo without rushing and bringing out its heroically playful nuances with great sensitivity. The slow movement was a mood of sombre yet tender lyricism on the highest level of expres-

THE BOSTON DAILY GLOBE—SATURDAY, APRIL 14, 1956

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Francescatti Violin Soloist

Charles Munch conducted yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall the first of the 22d pair of concerts in the Friday–Saturday series by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The program: "Francesca da Rimini," Tchaikovsky; Violin Concerto in G minor, No. 2 (Zino Francescatti, soloist), Prokofieff; Concerto in A minor for Violin and Cello (Zino Francescatti and Samuel Mayes, soloists), Brahms.

BY CYRUS DURGIN

Where to begin, in telling of the Boston Symphony concert yesterday afternoon. Most politely, perhaps, with the visiting soloist of the week: that exemplary master of the violin, Zino Francescatti. Thanks to a most fortunate choice of program, we all heard him twice, in music as far apart in style as in chronology.

First, of course, came the Prokofieff G minor Concerto, now a little over two decades old. Not quite such a devil's magic of technical trickery—as its elder brother in D major, the G minor is yet a demanding, even fearsome, work of virtuosity. But again like its brother, it is also notable modern music, and no empty display piece.

Since the G minor is so fascinating, Mr. Francescatti, one of the great artists of the violin, and the Boston Symphony what it is, the result was a performance whose brilliance defies adequate description. It could have been taken for granted that Mr. Francescatti would deal with the fireworks with all his accustomed flair and dextrous accuracy. That he surely did.

Virtuoso Performances

Those who are familiar with the extremely musical character of his playing also expected and received a performance of exterior grace and inward profundity. Mr. Francescatti, with his lithe bowing arm, could not turn a phrase that was without sheer beauty of sound or some aspect of emotional expression. Nor would he ever distort or otherwise modify the nature of any rhythm.

When he joined with the Boston Symphony's splendid first cellist, Samuel Mayes, in the long and unaccountably neglected Double Concerto of Brahms, Mr. Francescatti had a partner of equal talent. Together, and with a superbly vital and glowing collaboration from Mr. Munch and the orchestra, the two soloists achieved a gorgeous performance of music rich and romantic.

Applause had been generou when the Prokofieff Concerto wa ended. But the audience could no wait to acclaim the two soloists—and of course conductor and orchestra, as well—and burst in upon the final chord of Brahms. The ovation that followed was noisy and sustained.

A Most Memorable Day

Taken all together, this was one of the memorable concerts of the season. It was also a study in contrasts, from the heat and tumult of "Francesca da Rimini," through Prokofieff and Brahms. The two concertos, heard in succession, each set off the other. The Prokofieff, with its spare orchestral texture, its melody which is tender but never too sentimental, and its piquant finale with extremely clever out-of-key harmonies, was pleasantly astringent. Brahms' full-bodied work, with its peculiar coupling of classic structure with out-giving romantic ardor, was an equally pleasant antithesis.

You may or may not admire the febrile orchestral fantasia of Tchaikovsky, although as a tone poem it omits no detail of the unfortunate outcome of the afternoon literary sessions of Paolo and Francesca. As interpretation and orchestral performance, Mr. Munch's reading lacked nothing. It was powerful and tender in turn, of the greatest intensity, and it was never coarse. The orchestra showed a richness of color, and a refinement of sonority which were proof that the Boston Symphony again is at its exalted best. Especially was this true of the strings, which have regained their old depth and sheen.

Next week Mr. Munch will present the Beecham arrangement of a Suite from Handel's "The Faithful Shepherd"; Mozart's D major Piano Concerto (K. 451), with Rudolf Firkusny as soloist; Honegger's Third Symphony ("Liturgique"), and "Chant de Joie," the latter new to these concerts.

AMUSEMENTS

At ATC Drive-Ins

Walt Disney's "Song of the South," in color, and Eve Arden in "Our Miss Brooks" will play Sunday through Tuesday at ATC's North Reading Drive-In. Charlton Heston in "Private War of Major Benson," Technicolor comedy, is paired with "The Looters" in the bill opening tomorrow at Saugus. Also beginning Sunday is a new bill at Weymouth—Clark Gable in "Soldier of Fortune" and "Blowing Wild."

AMUSEMENTS AMUSEMENTS

Coca worked hard but in vain.

Music in Review

Music in Review
Music in Review

By T
Leonard to the p
Hall, afte years, to l phony in to the me
sevitsky.
of Moevs'
for Orche played wer Koussevitzk course, Mr. is the lat
protege.
The perfo explosive in did in a se lamentably this 75th witnessed sc ring momen
but we have program tha exciting until Bernstein temporary mu ability to dr
every dissona decibel of sc scores. His p graphic, to p

mere cheer leader very movement is ert began with a graceful reading of mphony in A ma-

which hardly put in the proper frame listen to Moevs'
riations.
curious work util-
h too complicated
s own good. The s brutal, the or-intense, and the complex. It is music, yet its mas-
and energetic l attention with ying fascination.
must be a very

Boston favorite,
Sanroma, joined
r. Bernstein and give a jocularly ding of Stravin-
o."
closed with an performance of ty and urbane
5.

By TUCKER KEISER

If the listener with notions or preconceptions about Beethoven's Ninth "Choral" checks them at the door, he will have a good time at the symphony concert this week end. Conductor Charles Munch has conceived this work in the broadest possible theatrical terms, both personally and musically.

The conductor has removed all restraint. He shouts, sings, shushes, stamps, leaps and lunges. Beethoven's magnificent music lifts him emotionally into a passionate paean.

Musically the score emerges as a series of intensely brilliant effects, mounting steadily until the choral finale, a veritable apocalyptic trauma. Tempi are pushed almost beyond physical endurance, details ignored, and whole phrases swallowed in the mad-long rush. Urgency soon becomes overwhelming. The listener is swept along helplessly in the torrent of sound.

The end comes suddenly. The silence itself seems thunderous. The listener is stunned for a moment, then reacts with almost hysterical applause.

The opening "Psalm of Praise" by Mabel Daniels, a short festive piece composed for chorus, string, percussion, and trumpets and written for the 75th anniversary of Radcliffe College, was dwarfed by the Ninth that followed.

Assisting in yesterday's performance was the Boston Symphony, the Harvard-Radcliffe Chorus, and a quartet including Adele Addison, Eunice Alberts, David Lloyd and Mac Morgan.

THE BOSTON HERALD, SATURDAY, APRIL 14, 1956 A

Industry Rush for Loans Touched off Boost in Rate

Sale is Denied For 3 N. H. Mills

E BOSTON DAILY GLOBE—SATURDAY, APRIL 28, 19

ON TV

JACKIE GLEASON SHOW: Ralph Kramden is invigled into appearing in an amateur theatrical venture and suddenly decides he's the answer to what happened to all the matinee idols. 8 (7-12).

STAGE SHOW: Singer Tony Bennett, the Delacorte Sisters, comedian Roger Ray, violin virtuoso Charles Castle-

Why Gr

By JOSEPHIN

Shudder at Thoug

Does "Going to the beach" make you shudder? Did you miss swim-

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, gave the 24th program of the 75th season in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. The soloists were Adele Addison, soprano; Eunice Alberts, contralto; David Lloyd, tenor and Mac Morgan, bass. Assisting were the Radcliffe Choral Society and the Harvard Glee Club, G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor. The program:

A Psalm of Praise ..... Mabel Daniels
Symphony No. 9 in D minor, Op. 125 ..... Beethoven

By RUDOLPH ELIE

There is no event in the calendar year I view with more mingled emotions than this, the last regular symphony concert of the season.

On the one hand there is the end of the music season, a long and arduous one for the reviewer who must trot about to musical events three and four or more times a week; on the other the end of the refreshing stimulations of these weekly concerts, which add the special dimension of grateful personal contacts among the listeners as well as the musical communication with the orchestra. The weather may occasionally intrude and the fatigues of the winter season may pile up, but for a brief two hours on a Friday afternoon or a Saturday night, there is repose, respite, re-invigoration.

ANNUAL RITE

The final program was but an hour and a quarter long, for it was the annual rite of the Ninth Symphony. But an unusual aspect was the presence on the program of a work by Mabel Daniels, who shares with but six other women the distinction of having her music performed by the Boston Symphony in the whole 75 years of its existence.

It is a curious thing, it has always seemed to me, that music is the one field in all art, indeed in all human endeavor, that women have never achieved a masterpiece corresponding even to those of lesser masters in music. In years gone by the orchestra has played music by Ethel Leginska, Margaret Lang, Helen Hopekirk, Mrs. H. M. A. Beach, Henriette Bosman and Lili Boulanger; it has never repeated it and there is very little likelihood it ever will be revived.

Nor, in its present form, does it seem likely Miss Daniels' very fine "Psalm of Praise" for mixed chorus, three trumpets, percussion and strings, will take its place in the repertoire. By "present form" I mean as a concert hall work; it will undoubtedly have many a performance in its original form with piano, trumpets and percussion, for it is a sound and vigorous work echoing the jubilation of the text from the Old Testament. Its inner part is lovely supplicatory lyric beautifully suited to the mixed chorus, and it ends on a note of triumph. The idiom is personal, makes little use of dissonance, but its contrapuntal lines in the outer sections are somewhat angular in a more contemporary vein. The modulations are free and interesting and, all in all, it is the agreeable product of a lively and gifted mind. Miss Daniels was in the audience and most cordially received.

ENORMOUS WORK

I am always at a loss for words with the Ninth, there being virtually nothing to add to the literature on this enormous work, so it always comes down to the performance. Until the later stages of the melodramatic choral finale, it was a very fine performance indeed. Mr. Munch did the scherzo with particular effect, catching the lightning tempo without rushing and bringing out its heroic and playful nuances with great sensitivity. The slow movement was a mood of sombre yet tender lyricism on the highest level of expression, though it was briefly marred by the entrance of a horn noticeably sharp in pitch.

The finale, which contains what is certainly the most ungrateful part for a solo quartet ever composed, lost its big lines in a fierce driving conclusion, but the chorus was with the conductor every second and sang with elan and a splendid balance, the sopranos this time getting on top and attacking vigorously and cleanly. Adele Addison, Eunice Alberts, David Lloyd and Mac Morgan as the soloists contending with the impossible almost made it seem possible, Miss Addison in particular soaring above the tumult in striking fashion, though the others traversed the notes with equal brilliance.

And so, with bravos and a standing, applauding audience making a demonstration, the 75th season of the Boston Symphony orchestra came to a conclusion in an ocean of sound. It seems, at this moment, a long, long time to October. Sunday night, incidentally, the orchestra will give a concert to benefit its forthcoming European trip, the program consisting of Beethoven's Seventh Symphony and Tchaikovsky's Sixth.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Francescatti Violin Soloist

Charles Munch conducted yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall the first of the 22d pair of concerts in the Friday–Saturday series by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The program: "Francesca da Rimini," Tchaikovsky; Violin Concerto in G minor, No. 2 (Zino Francescatti, soloist), Prokofieff; Concerto in A minor for Violin and Cello (Zino Francescatti and Samuel Mayes, soloists), Brahms.

BY CYR

Where to k
the Boston Sy terday aftern perhaps, with of the week: t
ter of the vi

AMU

catti. Thanks to a most fortunate choice of program, we all heard him twice, in music as far apart in style as in chronology.

First, of course, came the Prokofieff G minor Concerto, now a little over two decades old. Not quite such a devil's magic of tech- as its elder broth- r, the G minor is ng, even fearsome, sity. But again like t is also notable and no empty dis-

minor is so fascinating, Mr. Francescatti, one of the great artists of the violin, and the Boston Symphony what it is, the result was a performance whose brilliance defies adequate description. It could have been taken for granted that Mr. Francescatti would deal with the fireworks with all his accustomed flair and dextrous accuracy. That he surely did.

Virtuoso Performances

Those who are familiar with the extremely musical character of his playing also expected and received a performance of exterior grace and inward profundity. Mr. Francescatti, with his lithe bowing arm, could not turn a phrase that was without sheer beauty of sound or some aspect of emotional expression. Nor would he ever distort or otherwise modify the nature of any rhythm.

When he joined with the Boston Symphony's splendid first cellist, Samuel Mayes, in the long and unaccountably neglected Double Concerto of Brahms, Mr. Francescatti had a partner of equal talent. Together, and with a superbly vital and glowing collaboration from Mr. Munch and the orchestra, the two soloists achieved a gorgeous performance of music rich and romantic.

Applause had been generou when the Prokofieff Concerto wa ended. But the audience could no wait to acclaim the two soloists—and of course conductor and orchestra, as well—and burst in upon the final chord of Brahms. The ovation that followed was noisy and sustained.

A Most Memorable Day

Taken all together, this was one of the memorable concerts of the season. It was also a study in contrasts, from the heat and tumult of "Francesca da Rimini," through Prokofieff and Brahms. The two concertos, heard in succession, each set off the other. The Prokofieff, with its spare orchestral texture, its melody which is tender but never too sentimental, and its piquant finale with extremely clever out-of-key harmonies, was pleasantly astringent. Brahms' full-bodied work, with its peculiar coupling of classic structure with out-giving romantic ardor, was an equally pleasant antithesis.

You may or may not admire the febrile orchestral fantasia of Tchaikovsky, although as a tone poem it omits no detail of the unfortunate outcome of the afternoon literary sessions of Paolo and Francesca. As interpretation and orchestral performance, Mr. Munch's reading lacked nothing. It was powerful and tender in turn, of the greatest intensity, and it was never coarse. The orchestra showed a richness of color, and a refinement of sonority which were proof that the Boston Symphony again is at its exalted best. Especially was this true of the strings, which have regained their old depth and sheen.

Next week Mr. Munch will present the Beecham arrangement of a Suite from Handel's "The Faithful Shepherd"; Mozart's D major Piano Concerto (K. 451), with Rudolf Firkusny as soloist; Honegger's Third Symphony ("Liturgique"), and "Chant de Joie," the latter new to these concerts.

At ATC Drive-Ins

Walt Disney's "Song of the South," in color, and Eve Arden in "Our Miss Brooks" will play Sunday through Tuesday at ATC's North Reading Drive-In. Charlton Heston in "Private War of Major Benson," Technicolor comedy, is paired with "The Looters" in the bill opening tomorrow at Saugus. Also beginning Sunday is a new bill at Weymouth—Clark Gable in "Soldier of Fortune" and "Blowing Wild."

AMUSEMENTS

AMUSEMENTS

Gabriel .15e	4	8	7⅞	7⅞	.....
Gair. Rbt 1.50	7	32¼	31⅝	32¼	+ ½
Gamble Sk .60	11	10	9⅝	9⅝	− ⅛
Gam Sk pf 2.50	1	43½	43½	43½	− 1½
Gamewell .80e	4	27⅝	27½	27⅝	+ ⅛
Gar Wood	79	8	7⅝	7⅞	+ ⅝
Gar Wd pf	5	34¼	33	34¾	+ 2¾
Garrett 2	27	47¼	46¼	47¼	+ 1¼
Gen Aniline .75e	8	7½	7½	7½	.....
Gen Baking .60	2	8½	8½	8½	.....
Gen Bronze .40	3	14¾	14¾	14¾	.....
Gen Cable .60	2	13½	13½	13½	.....
Gen Cigar .50	2	16½	16½	16½	.....
Gen Dyestuff 1	2	44½	44½	44½	.....
Gen Electric .60	27	42⅝	42⅜	42⅝	+ ⅛
Gen Foods 1.20	13	61⅝	60⅞	61⅝	+ ⅝
Gen Foods pf 4.20	260	101	101	101	.....
Gen Motors .75e	32	66	65	66	+ 1½
Gen Motors 2	78	58⅝	57⅝	58⅛	+ ⅛
Gen Motors 1.60	32	18⅞	18⅝	18⅞	+ ⅛
Gen Tel 1.40	18	40⅛	39⅝	39⅞	+ ⅛
Gen Tire 1.40b	11	10⅞	10⅝	10⅝	.....
Gillette .75e	4	12½	12¼	12¼	− ⅛
Gimbel Bros	13	92	88½	92	+ 3
Glidden .60	181	36⅝	36¼	36⅝	− ⅛
Goodrich 1	2330	94	93	94	+ 1⅛
Goodyear 1.40	4	7⅞	7⅞	7⅞	.....
Grace 1.40	7	32¼	31⅝	32¼	+ ½
Granby 5	1	43½	43½	43½	− ½
Gt Atl & Pac .50	4	27⅝	27½	27⅝	+ ⅛
Gt Nor pf 2	79	8	7⅝	7⅞	+ ⅝
Grt Nor Ore .75	5	34¼	33	34¾	+ 2¾
Grt Nor Ry pf 2	27	47¼	46¼	47¼	+ 1¼

Dow-Jones Bo

40 Bonds	.....
10 Higher Grade Rails	.....
10 Second Grade Rails	.....
10 Public Utilities	.....
10 Industrials	.....
Income Rails	.....

Eversharp 1	44	19⅛	18⅞	18⅞	.....
Ex-Cell-O 2	5	83¼	82¾	83¼	+ ⅛
Fairb Mor .70e	7	39¼	38¾	39¼	+ ⅛
Fairch E .25e	88	13⅞	13⅛	13⅝	+ ⅛
Falstaff Br 1	49	18⅝	18	18½	− ⅝
Fam Fin 1.50	2	24	24	24	.....
Fansteel .25e	80	43¾	41⅛	43½	+ 2⅛
Fawick 15e	1	6⅞	6⅞	6⅞	.....
Fedd Quiz .30e	19	12⅝	12⅝	12⅝	− ⅛
Fedd Q pf 2.75	3	51	49¼	49⅝	− 1⅛
Fed Mogul 2a	13	39⅝	37⅛	39½	+ 2½
Fed Pac El .60	15	15⅝	15	15⅛	+ ⅛
Fed Pap Bd 1.80	8	34½	34	34½	+ ⅛
Fed D Str 1.60	46	33¾	32¾	33¾	+ 1
Feit & Tart	29	10⅛	9⅞	10	+ ⅝
Ferro Cp .40e	8	38	37⅝	37⅝	+ ⅛
Fid P Fire 2	6	53¾	53⅝	53¾	+ ⅛
Filtrol 1.80	27	76⅝	74⅝	76⅝	+ 2⅛
Firestone 1.15e	24	77	75⅝	76⅝	+ 1⅝
Firest pf 4.50	210	105	105	105	+ ⅝
First N Str 2a	10	56⅛	55	55	− 1
Firth Cpt .60	3	12	11⅞	11⅞	− ⅛
Flintkote 2.40b	4	37⅛	37	37⅛	+ ⅛
Florsh Stv	10	18	17⅝	18	+ ⅛
Fla Pw 1.60	9	49⅛	48⅞	49⅛	+ ⅛
Fla P & L 1.2c	17	42⅝	42⅛	42⅝	.....
Food Fair 1b	33	61⅝	60⅞	61⅝	+ ⅝
Food F pf 4.20	260	101	101	101	.....
Food Mach 2	32	66	65	66	+ 1½
Ford Mot .60e	78	58⅝	57⅝	58⅛	+ ⅛
Forem Dair 1	32	18⅞	18⅝	18⅞	+ ⅛
Post Wheel 1.60	18	40⅛	39⅝	39⅞	+ ⅛
Francis S .25e	11	10⅞	10⅝	10⅝	.....
Frank Sgtr .80	4	12½	12¼	12¼	− ⅛
Freepl Sul 3	13	92	88½	92	+ 3
French Tra 1.40b	181	36⅝	36¼	36⅝	− ⅛
French T pf 4	2330	94	93	94	+ 1⅛
Gabriel .15e	4	8	7⅞	7⅞	.....
Gair. Rbt 1.50	7	32¼	31⅝	32¼	+ ½
Gamble Sk .60	11	10	9⅝	9⅝	− ⅛
Gam Sk pf 2.50	1	43½	43½	43½	− 1½
Gamewell .80e	4	27⅝	27½	27⅝	+ ⅛
Gar Wood	79	8	7⅝	7⅞	+ ⅝
Gar Wd pf	5	34¼	33	34¾	+ 2¾
Garrett 2	27	47¼	46¼	47¼	+ 1¼

Dow-Jones Sto

April 27	High	Lo
30 Industrials	513.98	507.
20 Rails	178.03	176.
15 Utilities	65.34	64.
65 Stocks	182.60	180.

Total sales	2,760,0

Coca worked ha

Market Bas

Volume of T

...ewsactions on

By TUCKER KEISER

Leonard Bernstein returned to the podium in Symphony Hall, after an absence of four years, to lead the Boston Symphony in an unofficial tribute to the memory of Serge Koussevitsky. With the exception of Moevs' Fourteen Variations for Orchestra, all the pieces played were associated with the Koussevitzky regime—and, of course, Mr. Bernstein, himself, is the late conductor's star protege.

The performance hit with an explosive impact, coming as it did in a season that has been lamentably routine. Not that this 75th anniversary hasn't witnessed some genuinely stirring moments, because it has, but we have had no particular program that has been aurally exciting until this one.

Bernstein understands contemporary music, and he has the ability to draw every nuance, every dissonance, and every decibel of sound from these scores. His podium manner is graphic, to put it mildly, but he is not a mere cheer leader and his every movement is graceful.

The concert began with a warm and graceful reading of Mozart's Symphony in A major (K.201), which hardly put the audience in the proper frame of mind to listen to Moevs' Fourteen Variations.

This is a curious work utilizing a much too complicated theme for its own good. The dissonance is brutal, the orchestration intense, and the craftsmanship complex. It is not "pretty" music, yet its massive strength and energetic speech compel attention with almost horrifying fascination. The composer must be a very angry man.

Another Boston favorite, Jesus Maria Sanroma, joined forces with Mr. Bernstein and orchestra to give a jocularly whimsical reading of Stravinsky's "Capriccio."

The concert closed with an exhilarating performance of Prokofieff's witty and urbane Symphony No. 5.

Industry Rush for Loans

Sale Is Denied

For 3N. H. Mills

...off Boost in Rate

Why Gr...

By JOSEPHIN...

Shudder at Thoug...

on TV

JACKIE GLEASON SHOW: Ralph Kramden is unveiled into appearing in an amateur theatrical venture and suddenly decides he's the answer to what happened to all the matinee idols! 8 (7-12).

STAGE SHOW: Elmer Tony Memelli, the Delaroco Sisters, comedian Roger Ray, violin virtuoso Charles Castle-...

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, gave the 24th program of the 75th season in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. The soloists were Adele Addison, soprano; Eunice Alberts, contralto; David Lloyd, tenor and Mac Morgan, bass. Assisting were the Radcliffe Choral Society and the Harvard Glee Club, G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor. The program:

A Psalm of Praise ..... Mabel Daniels
Symphony No. 9 in D minor, Op. 125 ..... Beethoven

By RUDOLPH ELIE

There is no event in the calendar year I view with more mingled emotions than this, the last regular symphony concert of the season.

On the one hand there is the end of the music season, a long and arduous one for the reviewer who must trot about to musical events three and four or more times a week; on the other the end of the refreshing stimulations of these weekly concerts, which add the special dimension of grateful personal contacts among the listeners as well as the musical communication with the orchestra. The weather may occasionally intrude and the fatigues of the winter season may pile up, but for a brief two hours on a Friday afternoon or a Saturday night, there is repose, respite, re-invigoration.

ANNUAL RITE

The final program was but an hour and a quarter long, for it was the annual rite of the Ninth Symphony. But an unusual aspect was the presence on the program of a work by Mabel Daniels, who shares with but six other women the distinction of having her music performed by the Boston Symphony in the whole 75 years of its existence.

It is a curious thing, it has always seemed to me, that music is the one field in all art, indeed in all human endeavor, that women have never achieved a masterpiece corresponding even to those of lesser masters in music. In years gone by the orchestra has played music by Ethel Leginska, Margaret Lang, Helen Hopekirk, Mrs. H. M. A. Beach, Henriette Bosman and Lili Boulanger; it has never repeated it and there is very little likelihood it ever will be revived.

Nor, in its present form, does it seem likely Miss Daniels' very fine "Psalm of Praise" for mixed chorus, three trumpets, percussion and strings, will take its place in the repertoire. By "present form" I mean as a concert hall work; it will undoubtedly have many a performance in its original form with piano, trumpets and percussion, for it is a sound and vigorous work echoing the jubilation of the text from the Old Testament. Its inner part is lovely supplicatory lyric beautifully suited to the mixed chorus, and it ends on a note of triumph. The idiom is personal, makes little use of dissonance, but its contrapuntal lines in the outer sections are somewhat angular in a more contemporary vein. The modulations are free and interesting and, all in all, it is the agreeable product of a lively and gifted mind. Miss Daniels was in the audience and most cordially received.

ENORMOUS WORK

I am always at a loss for words with the Ninth, there being virtually nothing to add to the literature on this enormous work, so it always comes down to the performance. Until the later stages of the melodramatic choral finale, it was a very fine performance indeed. Mr. Munch did the scherzo with particular effect, catching the lightning tempo without rushing and bringing out its heroically playful nuances with great sensitivity. The slow movement was a mood of sombre yet tender lyricism on the highest level of expression, though it was briefly marred by the entrance of a horn noticeably sharp in pitch.

The finale, which contains what is certainly the most ungrateful part for a solo quartet ever composed, lost its big lines in a fierce driving conclusion, but the chorus was with the conductor every second and sang with elan and a splendid balance, the sopranos this time getting on top and attacking vigorously and cleanly. Adele Addison, Eunice Alberts, David Lloyd and Mac Morgan as the soloists contending with the impossible almost made it seem possible, Miss Addison in particular soaring above the tumult in striking fashion, though the others traversed the notes with equal brilliance.

And so, with bravos and a standing, applauding audience making a demonstration, the 75th season of the Boston Symphony orchestra came to a conclusion in an ocean of sound. It seems, at this moment, a long, long time to October. Sunday night, incidentally, the orchestra will give a concert to benefit its forthcoming European trip, the program consisting of Beethoven's Seventh Symphony and Tchaikovsky's Sixth.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Music in Review

By TUCKER KEISER

The highlight of yesterday's concert by the Boston Symphony was the superbly integrated playing by Zina Francescatti and Samuel Mayes of the solo parts in Brahms' Double Concerto. Both, of course are outstanding soloists in their own right, and for this work they maintained a rapport that was well-high perfect.

Throughtout the three movements the composer has fashioned a duet for violin and cello which calls for the most careful balancing of mood and color. Francescatti's style is basically a violin bel canto; Mayes foremost characteristic is dramatic vigor (he can also mold a cantabile of the purest gold when the music demands it).

One would not suspect that these two artists would so perfectly complement each other, yet they proved to be an ideal combination for the piece. In the figures which begin in one instrument and continue in the other it was almost impossible to tell when one stopped and the other took over. In the passages of octave doubling, they were precisely in tune. In other sections where Brahms has written double stops, they sounded like a seasoned string quartet.

Happily the two artists made up in warmth and vibrancy for the rather square-cut unBrahmsian reading Charles Munch gave to the orchestral part.

Mr. Francescatti earlier in the concert performed the Prokofieff Second Violin Concerto, one of the loveliest and wittiest of contemporary scores. Neither conductor nor soloist were temperamentally suited to realize effectively this urbane, but not unemotional, music. It was a plodding performance with heavy-paced, uninteresting tempos.

Had the conductor rationed some of the verve he expended so lavishly on the opening "Francesca da Rimini" by Tchaikovsky, saving it for the Prokofieff, both the concerto and the tone poem would have been more vivid musical experiences.

Violin Soloist

Thanks to a most fortu- choice of program, we all him twice, in music as far in style as in chronology. t, of course, came the Proko- G minor Concerto, now a over two decades old. Not such a devil's magic of tech- trickery—as its elder broth- D major, the G minor is demanding, even fearsome, of virtuosity. But again like rother, it is also notable n music, and no empty dis- piece.

e the G minor is so fascinating, Mr. Francescatti, one of the great artists of the violin, and the Boston Symphony what it is, the result was a performance whose brilliance defies adequate description. It could have been taken for granted that Mr. Francescatti would deal with the fireworks with all his accustomed flair and dextrous accuracy. That he surely did.

Virtuoso Performances

Those who are familiar with the extremely musical character of his playing also expected and received a performance of exterior grace and inward profundity. Mr. Francescatti, with his lithe bowing arm, could not turn a phrase that was without sheer beauty of sound or some aspect of emotional expression. Nor would he ever distort or otherwise modify the nature of any rhythm.

When he joined with the Boston Symphony's splendid first cellist, Samuel Mayes, in the long and unaccountably neglected Double Concerto of Brahms, Mr. Francescatti had a partner of equal talent. Together, and with a superbly vital and glowing collaboration from Mr. Munch and the orchestra, the two soloists achieved a gorgeous performance of music rich and romantic.

Applause had been generou when the Prokofieff Concerto wa ended. But the audience could no wait to acclaim the two soloists— and of course conductor and orchestra, as well—and burst in upon the final chord of Brahms. The ovation that followed was noisy and sustained.

A Most Memorable Day

Taken all together, this was one of the memorable concerts of the season. It was also a study in contrasts, from the heat and tumult of "Francesca da Rimini," through Prokofieff and Brahms. The two concertos, heard in succession, each set off the other. The Prokofieff, with its spare orchestral texture, its melody which is tender but never too sentimental, and its piquant finale with extremely clever out-of-key harmonies, was pleasantly astringent. Brahms' full-bodied work, with its peculiar coupling of classic structure with out-giving romantic ardor, was an equally pleasant antithesis.

You may or may not admire the febrile orchestral fantasia of Tchaikovsky, although as a tone poem it omits no detail of the unfortunate outcome of the afternoon literary sessions of Paolo and Francesca. As interpretation and orchestral performance, Mr. Munch's reading lacked nothing. It was powerful and tender in turn, of the greatest intensity, and it was never coarse. The orchestra showed a richness of color, and a refinement of sonority which were proof that the Boston Symphony again is at its exalted best. Especially was this true of the strings, which have regained their old depth and sheen.

Next week Mr. Munch will present the Beecham arrangement of a Suite from Handel's "The Faithful Shepherd"; Mozart's D major Piano Concerto (K. 451), with Rudolf Firkusny as soloist; Honegger's Third Symphony ("Liturgique"), and "Chant de Joie," the latter new to these concerts.

At ATC Drive-Ins

Walt Disney's "Song of the South," in color, and Eve Arden in "Our Miss Brooks" will play Sunday through Tuesday at ATC's North Reading Drive-In. Charlton Heston in "Private War of Major Benson," Technicolor comedy, is paired with "The Looters" in the bill opening tomorrow at Saugus. Also beginning Sunday is a new bill at Weymouth—Clark Gable in "Soldier of Fortune" and "Blowing Wild."

AMUSEMENTS

where he became slightly famous in South Carolina. It has a skin diamond and the outfield is rough and uneven, but if you want to play baseball it's perfectly adequate.

His coach, Herb Rollins, who was an important factor in Don's career, has moved on to a new job at Lake City High School, the nearest city of any size.

"When Don was playing his senior year," Mr. Truluck remembered, "we drew 1200 to 1400 people every game. They stood two and three deep around the outfield. People drove 150 miles to see him play and yet it never seemed to affect him. He knew he was going to be a professional baseball player and he knew this was just the early days of his life.

"I'll tell you something of what a natural athlete Don is. One day a man who had been playing golf for years brought his clubs over and hit a few shots in that field across the street. Don borrowed the club and just swung it and hit the ball farther than the man who had been playing for years."

Tom Courtney, Splashes

Industry Rush for Loans Sale is Denied
For 3 N. H. Mills Slid Off Boost in Rate

Ched Pac Bd .60	15	15⅝	15	15⅛	+ ⅛
Ched Pap Bd 1.80	8	34½	34	34½	+ ⅛
Ched D Str 1.60	46	33¾	32⅞	33¾	+1
Chelt & Tarr	29	10⅛	9⅞	10	+ ⅜
Chero Cp .40e	8	38	37⅞	37⅞	+ ⅛
Chrld P Fire 2	6	53¾	53⅝	53¾	+ ⅛
Chrlrol 1.80	27	76⅝	74⅝	76⅝	+2⅛
Chrlstone 1.15e	24	77	75⅝	76½	+1⅜
Chrlest pf 4.50	210	105	105	105	+ ⅝
First N Str 2a	10	56⅝	55	55	-1
Firth Cpt .60	3	12	11⅞	11⅞	- ⅛
Flintkote 2.40t	4	37⅝	37	37½	+ ⅛
Florsn Stv	10	18	17⅞	18	+ ⅛
Fla Pw 1.60	9	49⅝	48⅞	49⅝	+ ⅛
Fla P & L 1.2t	17	42⅝	42½	42⅝	.....
Food Fair 1b	23	61⅝	60⅞	61⅝	+ ⅝
Food F pf 4.20	260	101	101	101	.....
Food Mach 2	32	66	65	66	+1⅛
Ford Mot .60e	78	58⅝	57⅝	58⅜	+ ⅛
Forem Dair 1	32	18⅝	18⅜	18⅝	+ ⅛
Foxb Wheel 1.60	18	40⅛	39⅝	39⅝	+ ⅝
Francis S .25f	11	10⅛	10⅛	10⅝	.....
Frank Sqir .80	4	12⅝	12⅛	12⅛	- ⅛
Freept Sul 3	13	92	88⅝	92	+3
French Tra 1.40t	181	36⅝	36⅛	36⅝	- ⅛
French T pf 4	2330	94	93	94	+1⅛
Gabriel .15e	4	8	7⅞	7⅞	.....
Gair. Rbt 1.50	7	32⅛	31⅝	32⅛	+ ⅛
Gamble Sk .60	11	10	9⅞	9⅞	- ⅛
Gam Sk pf 2.50	1	43⅛	43⅛	43⅛	-1⅛
Gamewell .80e	4	27⅝	27½	27⅝	+ ⅛
Gar Wood	79	8	7⅝	7⅞	+ ⅝
Gar Wd pf	5	34½	33	34⅝	+2⅝
Garrett 2	27	47⅛	46⅛	47⅛	+1⅛

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, gave the 24th program of the 75th season in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. The soloists were Adele Addison, soprano; Eunice Alberts, contralto; David Lloyd, tenor and Mac Morgan, bass. Assisting were the Radcliffe Choral Society and the Harvard Glee Club. G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor. The program:

A Psalm of Praise ..... Mabel Daniels
Symphony No. 9 in D minor, Op. 125 ..... Beethoven

By RUDOLPH ELIE

There is no event in the calendar year I view with more mingled emotions than this, the last regular symphony concert of the season.

On the one hand there is the end of the music season, a long and arduous one for the reviewer who must trot about to musical events three and four or more times a week; on the other the end of the refreshing stimulations of these weekly concerts, which add the special dimension of grateful personal contacts among the listeners as well as the musical communication with the orchestra. The weather may occasionally intrude and the fatigues of the winter season may pile up, but for a brief two hours on a Friday afternoon or a Saturday night, there is repose, respite, re-invigoration.

ANNUAL RITE

The final program was but an hour and a quarter long, for it was the annual rite of the Ninth Symphony. But an unusual aspect was the presence on the program of a work by Mabel Daniels, who shares with but six other women the distinction of having her music performed by the Boston Symphony in the whole 75 years of its existence.

It is a curious thing, it has always seemed to me, that music is the one field in all art, indeed in all human endeavor, that women have never achieved a masterpiece corresponding even to those of lesser masters in music. In years gone by the orchestra has played music by Ethel Leginska, Margaret Lang, Helen Hopekirk, Mrs. H. M. A. Beach, Henriette Bosman and Lili Boulanger; it has never repeated it and there is very little likelihood it ever will be revived.

Nor, in its present form, does it seem likely Miss Daniels' very fine "Psalm of Praise" for mixed chorus, three trumpets, percussion and strings, will take its place in the repertoire. By "present form" I mean as a concert hall work; it will undoubtedly have many a performance in its original form with piano, trumpets and percussion, for it is a sound and vigorous work echoing the jubilation of the text from the Old Testament. Its inner part is lovely supplicatory lyric beautifully suited to the mixed chorus, and it ends on a note of triumph. The idiom is personal, makes little use of dissonance, but its contrapuntal lines in the outer sections are somewhat angular in a more contemporary vein. The modulations are free and interesting and, all in all, it is the agreeable product of a lively and gifted mind. Miss Daniels was in the audience and most cordially received.

ENORMOUS WORK

I am always at a loss for words with the Ninth, there being virtually nothing to add to the literature on this enormous work, so it always comes down to the performance. Until the later stages of the melodramatic choral finale, it was a very fine performance indeed. Mr. Munch did the scherzo with particular effect, catching the lightning tempo without rushing and bringing out its heroically playful nuances with great sensitivity. The slow movement was a mood of sombre yet tender lyricism on the highest level of expression, though it was briefly marred by the entrance of a horn noticeably sharp in pitch.

The finale, which contains what is certainly the most ungrateful part for a solo quartet ever composed, lost its big lines in a fierce driving conclusion, but the chorus was with the conductor every second and sang with elan and a splendid balance, the sopranos this time getting on top and attacking vigorously and cleanly. Adele Addison, Eunice Alberts, David Lloyd and Mac Morgan as the soloists contending with the impossible almost made it seem possible, Miss Addison in particular soaring above the tumult in striking fashion, though the others traversed the notes with equal brilliance.

And so, with bravos and a standing, applauding audience making a demonstration, the 75th season of the Boston Symphony orchestra came to a conclusion in an ocean of sound. It seems, at this moment, a long, long time to October. Sunday night, incidentally, the orchestra will give a concert to benefit its forthcoming European trip, the program consisting of Beethoven's Seventh Symphony and Tchaikovsky's Sixth.

ON TV

JACKIE GLEASON SHOW: Ralph Kramden is invelgled into appearing in an amateur theatrical venture and suddenly decides he's the answer to what happened to all the matinee idols! 8 (7-12).

STAGE SHOW: Singer Tony Bennett, the Delfonics sisters, comedian Roger May, violin virtuoso Charles Castle-

Why Gr
By JOSEPHIN
Shudder at Thoug
Does "Going to the beach" make

-Bernstein Returning as Guest

George Humphrey

Robert Moevs, whose Variations for Orchestra wi gram, for the first time in Boston when Leonard Bernste occur nently the Boston Symphony concerts this afternoon, Satu
Sunday afternoon, and Tuesday night.

Mr. Moevs has spent five years under Nadia Boulanger's guidance, plus some time in Italy on a Prix de Rome. His music, to judge by this one composition, is not in the least precious, as happens to be the

Music for Weekend Concerts And Future Plans Discussed

By Harold Rogers

This week Leonard Bernstein returns to Boston—after a four-year absence—to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He was a frequent guest on the Symphony Hall podium during Serge Koussevitzky's last years as conductor. He considers his program for the forthcoming concerts something of "a sentimental tribute" to Dr. Koussevitzky, his mentor and friend.

"Koussevitzy is closely associated with each of the pieces I have chosen," he said in an interview earlier this week. "We open with Mozart's little Symphony in A major, No. 29, one of Koussevitzy's favorites which I heard him conduct many times.

"Then we will play the first Boston performances of a new work by Robert Moevs—Variations for Orchestra. This young composer, now living and teaching in Boston, first played me portions of this work when he was composing it while studying in Rome. It was commissioned by the Koussevitzy Foundation."

"The Stravinsky Capriccio for Piano and Orchestra," he continued, "is a work that Koussevitzky introduced to the United States and played here many, many times. In fact, Jesús María Sanromá appeared as the soloist 27 times. He'll be playing it another five times in Symphony Hall during the next few days.

"And the Prokofiev Fifth Symphony—well, Koussevitzky also gave the American première and often played it afterward. It is unquestionably Prokofiev's masterpiece, one of the great symphonies of our time."

* * *

Mr. Bernstein has been having a busy week. He discovered, to his dismay, that the program he chose required more rehearsing than he anticipated. Then he was asked by Charles Munch to conduct the orchestra's concert last night in Hartford—the one postponed when a snowstorm prevented the men from getting to Connecticut. Tonight he will conduct the open rehearsal in Symphony Hall, beginning at 7:30. Tickets for this rehearsal are on sale at the box office. And then he will conduct the regular concerts on Friday afternoon, Saturday night, Sunday afternoon, and Tuesday night.

What are his plans for the future?

His schedule is too carefully planned for comfort, he said. From May 1 until Christmas he will devote his entire time to the musical version of Voltaire's "Candide" that he is preparing with Lillian Hellman. Miss Hellman is making the adaptation. Tyrone Guthrie will be the director. A young poet, Richard Wilbur, will fashion the lyrics. Mr. Bernstein, Miss Hellman, and Mr. Guthrie expect to retire to Martha's Vineyard until the job is done.

* * *

Then Mr. Bernstein will have a month of conducting appearances with the New York Philharmonic-Symphony, beginning with Christmas week. He will conduct a complete performance of Handel's "Messiah" and will record it. A male alto will be employed in keeping with the style of performance that prevailed in Handel's day.

When this stint is over Mr. Bernstein will complete the production plans for another musical, as yet untitled, that he is working on now.

"This is something of a telling of the Romeo and Juliet legend against a background of teen-age gangs in New York City," he said. "Arthur Laurents is preparing the book, Jerome Robbins will direct, and Steve Sondheim will collaborate with me on the lyrics.

"As a matter of fact, there is no precedent for either of the musicals I'm working on. 'Candide' will be something of an opéra comique. The Romeo story will be something of a tragic musical comedy, whatever that may mean. 'Candide' is slated for production in the fall. The other one will be ready in the spring.

"Meanwhile," he sighed in resignation, "I have accepted a commission for a large symphonic work for the 75th anniversary of the Boston Symphony. I've been granted an extension on the time until next season, since I couldn't possibly get to it this year. But now I'm beginning to worry about finding enough time to complete it by next season!"

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Leonard Bernstein conducting, gave the 21st program of the 75th season in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. The soloist was Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist. The program:

Symphony in A (K. 201) ..... Mozart
Fourteen Variations ..... Moevs
Capriccio ..... Stravinsky
Symphony No. 5 ..... Prokofieff

By RUDOLPH ELIE

It isn't a very nice thing to welcome Leonard Bernstein back for a brief appearance as guest conductor with a little reproach, but it seemed to me he came up with a program yesterday afternoon devised largely to weary the spirit of the most dauntless.

Aside from the Mozart, which is a perfect gem, he offered three contemporary works, each interesting in its own right but mutually destructive when lumped together. And it all went on much too long. It may well have been a temporal accident, in that Jesus Maria Sanroma could not appear on a later program and Mr. Bernstein didn't want to sacrifice the Boston debut of Moevs' Variations, but the results were not any too happy from an esthetic point of view.

Moevs' Fourteen Variations for Orchestra disclosed from the outset a powerful musical mind at work. There was about it, it is true, a faint sense of the orchestral exercise as if the composer were still feeling his way, and there was also a good deal of what seemed to me unnecessary shrillness in the instrumental clashes.

Using a brief, angular motto that appears again and again as a sort of point of reference, the composer has displayed great ingenuity in the handling of his materials. The build-up to the climactic tenth variation is exciting to a degree, while the two ensuing variations are both charming and arresting. The work as a whole was arresting, in fact, often suggesting the Moussorgsky of "Pictures at an Exhibition" though of course in a wholly different musical language. Mr. Bernstein, who may have been just a little soft with Mozart, gave it a vivid reading. The composer was in the audience and was very well received.

Heart Warming

The return of Jesus Maria Sanroma in Stravinsky's Capriccio, a work he introduced to American audiences in Boston in 1930, was a heart-warming occasion. He has been too long away, and he played for his numberless friends in Boston with great elan and force. The work, when insulated with older works, is delightful, but under the circumstances of following such a high-pressure work as Moevs' Variations, its rhythmic piquancy and its melodic dexterity do not emerge. Mr. Sanroma, who appears not to have changed at all in his years in his native Porto Rico (eight, to be exact), demonstrated a mature and a persuasive art, his formidable technic having matured with it.

I have never been won over to Prokofieff's Fifth Symphony. On its first performance late in 1945 I find my reactions were mixed but mostly unfavorable. I liked the scherzo then and I do now: it is Prokofieff at the very top of his form. But the opening movement, after a lovely start, is over-written and its themes are often banal. The slow movement, a Beethovenate adagio, loses its way, and the finale turns to sheer bombast. The program tells us the composer wrote it in a month. I can well believe it, for he seems to throw everything into it. It is a perfectly legitimate procedure of course, and many masterpieces have been completed in an even shorter time. But it would seem the Prokofieff failed to cull out the dead wood, the redundancies, the toppling dimensions of the symphony, which for a man celebrated for the economy of his means in other works, is not easily comprehended.

In any case Mr. Bernstein, who conducted the work from memory, is obviously convinced of the validity of the utterance, and pantomined its emotional stresses with great physical abandon, not failing, however, to cue the orchestra with astonishing clarity. For its part, the orchestra responded with a dazzling virtuosity.

Mr. Munch returns next week with Tchaikovsky's "Francesa Da Rimini," Prokofieff's G minor Violin Concerto and Brahms' Double Concerto for Violin and Cello. Zino Francescatti and Samuel Mayes are the soloists.

present yesterday, and was politely received. Another time he likely will have written better music which will garner more applause. Of his yet unmatured talent, there is no doubt.

Very much like old times it was to hear Jesus Maria Sanroma giving a crisp, clear, rhythmically ebullient performance of the piano part in Stravinsky's Capriccio. Mr. Sanroma, in Boston, has a special identification with the piece, for he played it several

INTOWN SCREEN

ıtti at Sym

Violinist Heard in And Prokofie

By Harold Roger

We are grateful for superb violinists wherever we find them —whether in the Soviet Union, the home of David Oistrakh, or in the United States, where we have Isaac Stern and Zino Francescatti. If there were any reason to offer a challenge to Mr. Oistrakh, it is likely that Mr. Francescatti is the man to do it.

According to their disks, the two men have much in common in tone and technique; and when Mr. Francescatti appeared as soloist yesterday afternoon with the Boston Symphony, he was again impressive for his stylistic elegance. Perhaps he does not play with Oistrakh's bravura, but he knows the power he can gain by restraint.

He was heard in two works— in Prokofiev's Violin Concerto No. 2 in G minor, and in Brahms' Concerto in A minor for Violin and Violoncello. For the latter he was joined by Samuel Mayes, first cellist of the Boston Symphony, and we heard a pair of beautifully matched soloists.

This Prokofiev Concerto is almost the antithesis of his Fifth Symphony, conducted by Leonard Bernstein during a recent visit. For the Fifth the composer used an augmented orchestra for an augmented sound, and its aural magnificence still rings in the memory. For this violin concerto, however, he scaled the orchestra down to classical dimensions, and he also treated the work in a quasi-classical style.

Mr. Francescatti, too, reined in his resources to illuminate the graceful phrases, the lacy figures, t middle with his

This i certo, n popular s ... Scythian Suite or "Lieutenant Kije." If it were the only concerto on a program, one might feel a bit cheated—not that it lacks musical substance. It lacks virtuosic intensity.

Charles Munch's programing was ideal in that it gave us Mr. Francescatti first as the pure artist, and second, as a virtuoso in the Brahms Double Concerto. In the latter his collaboration with Mr. Mayes was on an equal footing dynamically and interpretively. They both have the silken tone and the romantic verve, and they obviously enjoyed the balanced interplay of Brahms' skillful writing. Their listeners enjoyed the total effect.

Mr. Munch, in rare form after his two-week vacation, opened with Tchaikovsky's seldom-heard "Francesca da Rimini," an Orchestral Fantasia after Dante. Though a bit overlong, it is an impassioned piece of writing, redolent of the Italian Renaissance, and Mr. Munch whipped his musicians into a fiery if not altogether polished performance.

Next week Rudolf Firkusny will be the visiting artist in Mozart's Piano Concerto No. 16 in D major, K. 451. The program will include a Honegger work new to the orchestra's repertoire —"Chant de joie"—as well as a revival of his Third Symphony. Mr. Munch will open with Sir Thomas Beecham's arrangement of a suite from Handel's "The Faithful Shepherd."

's — Symphony Plans Extra Concert

George Humphrey

Robert Moevs, whose Variations for Orchestra will be heard for the first time in Boston when Leonard Bernstein conducts the Boston Symphony concerts this afternoon, Saturday night, Sunday afternoon, and Tuesday night.

Mr. Moevs has spent five years under Nadia Boulanger's guidance, plus some time in Italy on a Prix de Rome. His music, to judge by this one composition, is not in the least precious, as happens to be the

Management Seeking Ways To Complete Fund for Tour

By Harold Rogers

The Boston Symphony Orchestra must raise $25,000 to complete the fund for its European tour this summer. In order to secure a portion of this amount, the management has scheduled an extra concert, the details of which are given below.

The total cost of the tour—as explained to the press yesterday by the manager, Thomas D. Perry—will be $300,000. This will cover the orchestra's expenses for five-and-a-half weeks. Only $100,000 can be earned from the concerts of the tour, which leaves $200,000 to be raised from other sources.

Most of this amount—$175,000 of it—has already been contributed by anonymous donors.

The management hopes to raise part of the remaining $25,000—perhaps $5,000—by selling its main commodity — music. Charles Munch will contribute his services as conductor for the extra concert, to be held in Symphony Hall Sunday evening, April 29, the day after the regular season has closed. The program will consist of two favorites, the Beethoven Symphony No. 7 and the Tchaikovsky "Pathétique" Symphony No. 6.

The public seat sale for this concert will not open until Monday, April 16. Meanwhile, season subscribers, but not the general public, may obtain the seats of their choice from the Symphony Hall box office.

It is to be hoped that many Boston business concerns, as well as private individuals—all those interested in promoting the good name and good will of Boston abroad—will assist in completing the tour fund.

Spies Wins Award

The Board of Judges of the Lili Boulanger Memorial Fund has granted the 1956 award to Claudio Spies—a young Chilean composer—for his "Music for Ballet."

Mr. Spies received his Master's degree in 1954 from Harvard, where he studied composition with Walter Piston. He has won two other prizes for choral works from the Universidad de Chile, but this is his first successful attempt at a major orchestral work.

The Fund, which has its headquarters at 122 Bay State Road, Boston, was founded in 1939 in memory of Lili Boulanger (1893-1918), Nadia Boulanger's sister. Awards are made without regard to nationality and have been won by American, Brazilian, Czech, French, Polish, Scottish, and Turkish musicians.

The Board of Judges consists of Nadia Boulanger, Aaron Copland, Alexei Haieff, Walter Piston, and Igor Stravinsky.

'Arnita Organ Recital

Salvator Arnita, organist, will give a recital Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock in the MIT Chapel. His program, to which the public is invited, will include works by Corelli, Buxtehude, Bach, Handel, and Edouard Silas.

Mr. Arnita is chairman of the music department at the American University in Beirut, Lebanon. This year he is studying at Harvard University under a fellowship from the Rockefeller Foundation.

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Leonard Bernstein conducting, gave the 21st program of the 75th season in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. The soloist was Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist. The program:

Symphony in A (K. 201).....Mozart
Fourteen Variations.....Moevs
Capriccio.....Stravinsky
Symphony No. 5.....Prokofieff

By RUDOLPH ELIE

It isn't a very nice thing to welcome Leonard Bernstein back for a brief appearance as guest conductor with a little reproach, but it seemed to me he came up with a program yesterday afternoon devised largely to weary the spirit of the most dauntless.

Aside from the Mozart, which is a perfect gem, he offered three contemporary works, each interesting in its own right but mutually destructive when lumped together. And it all went on much too long. It may well have been a temporal accident, in that Jesus Maria Sanroma could not appear on a later program and Mr. Bernstein didn't want to sacrifice the Boston debut of Moevs' Variations, but the results were not any too happy from an esthetic point of view.

Moevs' Fourteen Variations for Orchestra disclosed from the outset a powerful musical mind at work. There was about it, it is true, a faint sense of the orchestral exercise as if the composer were still feeling his way, and there was also a good deal of what seemed to me unnecessary shrillness in the instrumental clashes.

Using a brief, angular motto that appears again and again as a sort of point of reference, the composer has displayed great ingenuity in the handling of his materials. The build-up to the climactic tenth variation is exciting to a degree, while the two ensuing variations are both charming and arresting. The work as a whole was arresting, in fact, often suggesting the Moussorgsky of "Pictures at an Exhibition" though of course in a wholly different musical language. Mr. Bernstein, who may have been just a little soft with Mozart, gave it a vivid reading. The composer was in the audience and was very well received.

Heart Warming

The return of Jesus Maria Sanroma in Stravinsky's Capriccio, a work he introduced to American audiences in Boston in 1930, was a heart-warming occasion. He has been too long away, and he played for his numberless friends in Boston with great elan and force. The work, when insulated with older works, is delightful, but under the circumstances of following such a high-pressure work as Moevs' Variations, its rhythmic piquancy and its melodic dexterity do not emerge. Mr. Sanroma, who appears not to have changed at all in his years in his native Porto Rico (eight, to be exact), demonstrated a mature and a persuasive art, his formidable technic having matured with it.

I have never been won over to Prokofieff's Fifth Symphony. On its first performance late in 1945 I find my reactions were mixed but mostly unfavorable. I liked the scherzo then and I do now: it is Prokofieff at the very top of his form. But the opening movement, after a lovely start, is over-written and its themes are often banal. The slow movement, a Beethovenate adagio, loses its way, and the finale turns to sheer bombast. The program tells us the composer wrote it in a month. I can well believe it, for he seems to throw everything into it. It is a perfectly legitimate procedure of course, and many masterpieces have been completed in an even shorter time. But it would seem the Prokofieff failed to cull out the dead wood, the redundancies, the toppling dimensions of the symphony, which for a man celebrated for the economy of his means in other works, is not easily comprehended.

In any case Mr. Bernstein, who conducted the work from memory, is obviously convinced of the validity of the utterance, and pantomined its emotional stresses with great physical abandon, not failing, however, to cue the orchestra with astonishing clarity. For its part, the orchestra responded with a dazzling virtuosity.

Mr. Munch returns next week with Tchaikovsky's "Francesa Da Rimini," Prokofieff's G minor Violin Concerto and Brahms' Double Concerto for Violin and Cello. Zino Francescatti and Samuel Mayes are the soloists.

INTOWN SCREEN

present yesterday, and was politely received. Another time he likely will have written better music which will garner more applause. Of his yet unmatured talent, there is no doubt.

Very much like old times it was to hear Jesus Maria Sanroma giving a crisp, clear, rhythmically ebullient performance of the piano part in Stravinsky's Capriccio. Mr. Sanroma, in Boston, has a special identification with the piece, for he played it several

ıtti at Symphony

Violinist Heard in Brahms And Prokofiev Concertos

By Harold Rogers

We are grateful for superb violinists wherever we find them —whether in the Soviet Union, the home of David Oistrakh, or in the United States, where we have Isaac Stern and Zino Francescatti. If there were any reason to offer a challenge to Mr. Oistrakh, it is likely that Mr. Francescatti is the man to do it.

According to their disks, the two men have much in common in tone and technique; and when Mr. Francescatti appeared as soloist yesterday afternoon with the Boston Symphony, he was again impressive for his stylistic elegance. Perhaps he does not play with Oistrakh's bravura, but he knows the power he can gain by restraint.

He was heard in two works—in Prokofiev's Violin Concerto No. 2 in G minor, and in Brahms' Concerto in A minor for Violin and Violoncello. For the latter he was joined by Samuel Mayes, first cellist of the Boston Symphony, and we heard a pair of beautifully matched soloists.

This Prokofiev Concerto is almost the antithesis of his Fifth Symphony, conducted by Leonard Bernstein during a recent visit. For the Fifth the composer used an augmented orchestra for an augmented sound, and its aural magnificence still rings in the memory. For this violin concerto, however, he scaled the orchestra down to classical dimensions, and he also treated the work in a quasi-classical style.

Mr. Francescatti, too, reined in his resources to illuminate the graceful phrases, the lacy figures, the songful moods. The middle Andante was buoyant with his sustained singing tone.

This is not a well-known concerto, nor is it dramatic in the popular sense of the Scythian Suite or "Lieutenant Kije." If it were the only concerto on a program, one might feel a bit cheated—not that it lacks musical substance. It lacks virtuosic intensity.

Charles Munch's programing was ideal in that it gave us Mr. Francescatti first as the pure artist, and second, as a virtuoso in the Brahms Double Concerto. In the latter his collaboration with Mr. Mayes was on an equal footing dynamically and interpretively. They both have the silken tone and the romantic verve, and they obviously enjoyed the balanced interplay of Brahms' skillful writing. Their listeners enjoyed the total effect.

Mr. Munch, in rare form after his two-week vacation, opened with Tchaikovsky's seldom-heard "Francesca da Rimini," an Orchestral Fantasia after Dante. Though a bit overlong, it is an impassioned piece of writing, redolent of the Italian Renaissance, and Mr. Munch whipped his musicians into a fiery if not altogether polished performance.

Next week Rudolf Firkusny will be the visiting artist in Mozart's Piano Concerto No. 16 in D major, K. 451. The program will include a Honegger work new to the orchestra's repertoire —"Chant de joie"—as well as a revival of his Third Symphony. Mr. Munch will open with Sir Thomas Beecham's arrangement of a suite from Handel's "The Faithful Shepherd."

—Bernstein Guest at the Symphony

Variations by Robert Moevs Heard in Boston Première

By Harold Rogers

Leonard Bernstein has returned to Symphony Hall after a four-year absence, trailing clouds of Koussevitzkian glory. He has set up a program—substantial, emotional, and musically exciting—which he calls "a sentimental tribute" to the former conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Most of Mr. Bernstein's listeners were doubtless carried back to an earlier day when the proceedings at Symphony Hall, however great or small, were infused with a powerful sense of the dramatic. This aura prevailed yesterday afternoon, and there is every reason to believe it will continue during Mr. Bernstein's guest appearances tonight, Sunday afternoon, and Tuesday night.

He opened with one of Koussevitzky's favorite Mozart symphonies—the A major, K. 201—and gave this adroitly fashioned little gem a tender traversal. From this point, however, we stepped irretrievably into the 20th century, and the going was great.

This contemporary parade was led off by a work new to Boston—the Fourteen Variations for Orchestra by Robert Moevs (pronounced to rhyme with raves)—a young composer on the music faculty at Harvard. It is heartening to see a name from the younger generation of Boston composers on the program, something that should occur more often in this eminently musical community.

* * *

Mr. Moevs has spent five years under Nadia Boulanger's guidance, plus some time in Italy on a Prix de Rome. His music, to judge by this one composition, is not in the least precious, as happens to be the case with many of "the Boulangerie," Aaron Copland and Walter Piston being notable exceptions.

Mr. Moevs is an imaginative composer, one who is going places with a will and an uncompromising way. His audience yesterday was friendly in its response, if not overjoyed; but his Variations show clearly that he is the kind of composer who will win supporters to his cause.

* * *

His writing is forceful and granitic; his harmonies are pungent; his rhythms frenetic; his climaxes built with unrelenting tension. He makes deft use of measured silence (and Mr. Bernstein made dramatic use of every rest). He revels in ostinato effects that are almost mechanistic in their increasing momentum. Through an additive construction he builds one climax to an almost unbearable emotional impact.

On the other hand, he can achieve flights of lyricism. He can be pensive, even apprehensive. There are plateaus of troubled waiting. In one variation he deftly tosses a short rhythmic fragment like a ball from choir to choir. This work was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. He is a composer worth his salt.

Jesús María Sanroma made his 29th appearance with the Boston Symphony as a soloist in Stravinsky's Capriccio for Piano and Orchestra. His conception seems to have mellowed somewhat from his recorded performance, made a good 15 years ago, but in the climaxes his finger work produced dazzling effects. His playing was altogether ingratiating from first to last, and the work itself holds enduring charm.

As for Mr. Bernstein, it was evident that a deeper maturity has come into the work of this most gifted musician. In the past he has been criticized for his virtuosic style, especially when it draws attention away from the music.

There were times when this happened yesterday, but not until he became involved with the inspiring score of Prokofiev's Fifth Symphony. By and large his gestures are now musically justified, if sometimes overly graphic. He knows what he wants, and he knows how to get it. In the Prokofiev he let nothing fall to the ground. He extracted the last ounce of emotion from every effect, and he won a justified salvo of bravos.

BU Collegium Musicum

The concert of Boston University's Collegium Musicum under the direction of Karl Geiringer, postponed on account of weather conditions, will be held Tuesday evening at 8:15 in the Recital Hall, 84 Exeter Street.

The program will include choral and orchestral works by Purcell, Buxtehude, Johann Ernst Bach, Christoph Friedrich Bach, Michael Haydn, and Mozart. The public is invited to attend without charge.

Baxter Piano Recital

Katharine Baxter will give a piano recital Thursday evening, April 12, at 8 o'clock in Bardwell Auditorium, Wellesley. She will play selections by Bach, Beethoven, Poulenc, and Chopin. This is the final recital of the season offered by the Bardwell Concert Course, sponsored by the Dana Hall Schools.

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Leonard Bernstein conducting, gave the 21st program of the 75th season in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. The soloist was Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist. The program:

Symphony in A (K. 201) ..... Mozart
Fourteen Variations ..... Moevs
Capriccio ..... Stravinsky
Symphony No. 5 ..... Prokofieff

By RUDOLPH ELIE

It isn't a very nice thing to welcome Leonard Bernstein back for a brief appearance as guest conductor with a little reproach, but it seemed to me he came up with a program yesterday afternoon devised largely to weary the spirit of the most dauntless.

Aside from the Mozart, which is a perfect gem, he offered three contemporary works, each interesting in its own right but mutually destructive when lumped together. And it all went on much too long. It may well have been a temporal accident, in that Jesus Maria Sanroma could not appear on a later program and Mr. Bernstein didn't want to sacrifice the Boston debut of Moevs' Variations, but the results were not any too happy from an esthetic point of view.

Moevs' Fourteen Variations for Orchestra disclosed from the outset a powerful musical mind at work. There was about it, it is true, a faint sense of the orchestral exercise as if the composer were still feeling his way, and there was also a good deal of what seemed to me unnecessary shrillness in the instrumental clashes.

Using a brief, angular motto that appears again and again as a sort of point of reference, the composer has displayed great ingenuity in the handling of his materials. The build-up to the climactic tenth variation is exciting to a degree, while the two ensuing variations are both charming and arresting. The work as a whole was arresting, in fact, often suggesting the Moussorgsky of "Pictures at an Exhibition" though of course in a wholly different musical language. Mr. Bernstein, who may have been just a little soft with Mozart, gave it a vivid reading. The composer was in the audience and was very well received.

Heart Warming

The return of Jesus Maria Sanroma in Stravinsky's Capriccio, a work he introduced to American audiences in Boston in 1930, was a heart-warming occasion. He has been too long away, and he played for his numberless friends in Boston with great elan and force. The work, when insulated with older works, is delightful, but under the circumstances of following such a high-pressure work as Moevs' Variations, its rhythmic piquancy and its melodic dexterity do not emerge. Mr. Sanroma, who appears not to have changed at all in his years in his native Porto Rico (eight, to be exact), demonstrated a mature and a persuasive art, his formidable technic having matured with it.

I have never been won over to Prokofieff's Fifth Symphony. On its first performance late in 1945 I find my reactions were mixed but mostly unfavorable. I liked the scherzo then and I do now: it is Prokofieff at the very top of his form. But the opening movement, after a lovely start, is over-written and its themes are often banal. The slow movement, a Beethovenate adagio, loses its way, and the finale turns to sheer bombast. The program tells us the composer wrote it in a month. I can well believe it, for he seems to throw everything into it. It is a perfectly legitimate procedure of course, and many masterpieces have been completed in an even shorter time. But it would seem the Prokofieff failed to cull out the dead wood, the redundancies, the toppling dimensions of the symphony, which for a man celebrated for the economy of his means in other works, is not easily comprehended.

In any case Mr. Bernstein, who conducted the work from memory, is obviously convinced of the validity of the utterance, and pantomined its emotional stresses with great physical abandon, not failing, however, to cue the orchestra with astonishing clarity. For its part, the orchestra responded with a dazzling virtuosity.

Mr. Munch returns next week with Tchaikovsky's "Francesa Da Rimini," Prokofieff's G minor Violin Concerto and Brahms' Double Concerto for Violin and Cello. Zino Francescatti and Samuel Mayes are the soloists.

INTOWN SCREEN

ıtti at Symphony

Violinist Heard in Brahms And Prokofiev Concertos

By Harold Rogers

We are grateful for superb violinists wherever we find them—whether in the Soviet Union, the home of David Oistrakh, or in the United States, where we have Isaac Stern and Zino Francescatti. If there were any reason to offer a challenge to Mr. Oistrakh, it is likely that Mr. Francescatti is the man to do it.

According to their disks, the two men have much in common in tone and technique; and when Mr. Francescatti appeared as soloist yesterday afternoon with the Boston Symphony, he was again impressive for his stylistic elegance. Perhaps he does not play with Oistrakh's bravura, but he knows the power he can gain by restraint.

He was heard in two works—in Prokofiev's Violin Concerto No. 2 in G minor, and in Brahms' Concerto in A minor for Violin and Violoncello. For the latter he was joined by Samuel Mayes, first cellist of the Boston Symphony, and we heard a pair of beautifully matched soloists.

This Prokofiev Concerto is almost the antithesis of his Fifth Symphony, conducted by Leonard Bernstein during a recent visit. For the Fifth the composer used an augmented orchestra for an augmented sound, and its aural magnificence still rings in the memory. For this violin concerto, however, he scaled the orchestra down to classical dimensions, and he also treated the work in a quasi-classical style.

Mr. Francescatti, too, reined in his resources to illuminate the graceful phrases, the lacy figures, the songful moods. The middle Andante was buoyant with his sustained singing tone.

This is not a well-known concerto, nor is it dramatic in the popular sense of the Scythian Suite or "Lieutenant Kije." If it were the only concerto on a program, one might feel a bit cheated—not that it lacks musical substance. It lacks virtuosic intensity.

Charles Munch's programing was ideal in that it gave us Mr. Francescatti first as the pure artist, and second, as a virtuoso in the Brahms Double Concerto. In the latter his collaboration with Mr. Mayes was on an equal footing dynamically and interpretively. They both have the silken tone and the romantic verve, and they obviously enjoyed the balanced interplay of Brahms' skillful writing. Their listeners enjoyed the total effect.

Mr. Munch, in rare form after his two-week vacation, opened with Tchaikovsky's seldom-heard "Francesca da Rimini," an Orchestral Fantasia after Dante. Though a bit overlong, it is an impassioned piece of writing, redolent of the Italian Renaissance, and Mr. Munch whipped his musicians into a fiery if not altogether polished performance.

Next week Rudolf Firkusny will be the visiting artist in Mozart's Piano Concerto No. 16 in D major, K. 451. The program will include a Honegger work new to the orchestra's repertoire—"Chant de joie"—as well as a revival of his Third Symphony. Mr. Munch will open with Sir Thomas Beecham's arrangement of a suite from Handel's "The Faithful Shepherd."

nstein Guest at the Symphony

Moevs Heard in Boston Première

"the Bouopland and ing notable imaginative

o is going and an un-
His audience
dy in its reyed; but his arly that he mposer who will win supporters to his cause.

* * *

His writing is forceful and granitic; his harmonies are pungent; his rhythms frenetic; his climaxes built with unrelenting tension. He makes deft use of measured silence (and Mr. Bernstein made dramatic use of every rest). He revels in ostinato effects that are almost mechanistic in their increasing momentum. Through an additive construction he builds one climax to an almost unbearable emotional impact.

On the other hand, he can achieve flights of lyricism. He can be pensive, even apprehensive. There are plateaus of troubled waiting. In one variation he deftly tosses a short rhythmic fragment like a ball from choir to choir. This work was commissioned by the Koussevitsky Music Foundation. He is a composer worth his salt.

Jesús María Sanromá made his 29th appearance with the Boston Symphony as a soloist in Stravinsky's Capriccio for Piano and Orchestra. His conception seems to have mellowed somewhat from his recorded performance, made a good 15 years ago, but in the climaxes his finger work produced dazzling effects. His playing was altogether ingratiating from first to last, and the work itself holds enduring charm.

As for Mr. Bernstein, it was evident that a deeper maturity has come into the work of this most gifted musician. In the past he has been criticized for his virtuosic style, especially when it draws attention away from the music.

There were times when this happened yesterday, but not until he became involved with the inspiring score of Prokofiev's Fifth Symphony. By and large his gestures are now musically justified, if sometimes overly graphic. He knows what he wants, and he knows how to get it. In the Prokofiev he left nothing fall to the ground. He extracted the last ounce of emotion from every effect, and he won a justified salvo of bravos.

BU Collegium Musicum

The concert of Boston University's Collegium Musicum under the direction of Karl Geiringer, postponed on account of weather conditions, will be held Tuesday evening at 8:15 in the Recital Hall, 84 Exeter Street.

The program will include choral and orchestral works by Purcell, Buxtehude, Johann Ernst Bach, Christoph Friedrich Bach, Michael Haydn, and Mozart. The public is invited to attend without charge.

Baxter Piano Recital

Katharine Baxter will give a piano recital Thursday evening, April 12, at 8 o'clock in Bardwell Auditorium, Wellesley. She will play selections by Bach, Beethoven, Poulenc, and Chopin. This is the final recital of the season offered by the Bardwell Concert Course, sponsored by the Dana Hall Schools.

THE BOSTON HERALD, SATURDAY, APRIL 7, 1956 B 11

SHIPPING NEWS

2 Colleges Censured, 2 Cleared

ST. LOUIS, April 6 (AP)—St. Louis University and North Dakota Agricultural College were censured by the American Assn. of University Professors today for violation of the association's principles of academic freedom and tenure.

The association also voted to remove from its censure list Evansville (Ind) College, which was censured in 1950, and Middle Tennessee State College of Murfreesboro, Tenn. The Tennessee institution was censured in 1943, when it was known as State Teachers College.

Action on a recommendation that six other schools be censured was postponed until tomorrow.

The six facing action tomorrow are Oklahoma, California, Temple University, the Jefferson Medical College of Philadelphia, Brigham Young University of New Brunswick, N.J., and Ohio state.

Their censure was recommended by the council, 30-member governing body of the association, and a special committee headed by Benjamin Glass, biology professor of Johns Hopkins University.

All of the cases involved the limiting or suspension of faculty members for alleged "immoral" but that some teachers might be unwilling to accept posts at the censured schools.

LaRosa Will Marry Miss Meyer Today

MANITOWOC, Wis., April 6

ARRIVED

AMERICAN PACKER, Dublin, Glasgow; cargo; Pier 1, Boston & Albany Piers, East Boston; U.S. Lines.
CILCO LOGGER, British Columbia, Jumbo; Berth 17, Castle Island, South Boston; Peabody & Lane, Inc.
EASTERN PRINCE (British), Far East via Halifax; cargo; Pier 2, Hoosac Dock, Charlestown; Furness, Withy & Co., Ltd.
ESSO ANNAPOLIS, Baytown, oil; Esso White Fuel Co., South Boston; Esso Shipping Co.
GOVERNMENT CAMP, Lake Charles, oil; Cities Service Oil Co., East Braintree.
POLYDORUS (Dutch), East Indies; cargo; Pier 3, Boston & Albany Piers, East Boston; shifts to Berth 5, Army Base, South Boston; Patterson, Wylde & Co.
SACONA, Beaumont, oil; Socony-Mobil Oil Co., East Boston.
SAN PABLO (Panamanian), Aruba; Esso Shipping Co.; Esso Standard Oil Co., Everett.
WENDOVER (British), New Zealand via New York; cargo; Pier 1, Mystic Terminal, Charlestown; Cunard Lines, Ltd.

SAILED

ROYAL OAK, Lake Charles.
ESSO NEW HAVEN, Baytown.
PIONEER GULF, New York.
ITALAI (Swedish), Philadelphia.
AMERICAN PACKER, New York.
POLYDORUS (Dutch), Baltimore.

DUE TODAY

AMERICAN RANGER, LeHavre via New York; cargo; Pier 1, Boston & Albany Piers, East Boston; U.S. Lines.
FIFIE MAERSK (Danish), Providence; cargo; Pier 5, Commonwealth Piers, South Boston; Sprague SS Co., Boston.
MANAGUI (Honduran), Cuba, sugar; Reeve Sugar Refinery, Charlestown; United Fruit Co.
MATTHEW LUCKENBACH, West Coast via New York; cargo; Pier 5, Commonwealth Piers, South Boston.
PIERCE (Liberian), Venezuela, oil; White Fuel Co., South Boston; Peabody & Lane Inc.
PRESIDENT HAYES, Far East via Mediterranean and New York; cargo; Pier 5, Commonwealth Piers, South Boston; American President Lines.
RADJA (Dutch), East Indies, cargo; Patterson, Wylde & Co., Philadelphia, oil.
SOUTH CAROLINA, Philadelphia, oil; Union Oil Co.; Revere; The Texas Co.
TUNGUS (Norwegian), Far East via Mediterranean and New York; cargo; Berth 8, Army Base, South Boston; Peabody & Lane, Inc.

DUE TOMORROW

ESSO STOCKHOLM, Aruba, oil; Esso Standard Oil Co., Everett; shifts to Shipping Co., South Boston; Esso White Fuel Co.
JULIA (Panamanian), Europe, loads East Boston; Bernard S. Coselio.
NEBRASKA (Swedish), Scandinavia; cargo; Pier 3, Hoosac Docks, Charlestown; Furness, Withy & Co., Ltd.

BOSTON AIRPORT

(Expected Overseas Airline Arrivals, Departures)

INBOUND

Flight 135—Bermuda; due 3:00 P.M. (PAA).

OUTBOUND

Flight 078—Paris; leaves 8:00 P.M. (AIR FRANCE).
Flight 552—Glasgow, London; leaves 7:55 P.M. (BOAC).
Flight 984—Gander, Santa Maria, Lisbon, Madrid, Algiers, Tunis, Rome; leaves 3:30 P.M. (TWA).
Flight 156—Santa Maria, Lisbon, Barcelona, Rome, Beirut; leaves 3:00 P.M. (PAA).
Flight 054—Shannon, London; leaves 3:45 P.M. (PAA).
Flight 134—Bermuda; leaves 5:00 P.M. (PAA).

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Bernstein Leads Moevs Music

Leonard Bernstein is guest conductor of the 21st program of the Friday afternoon-Saturday evening series of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at Symphony Hall. The program: Mozart: Symphony in A major (K. 201); Robert Moevs: Fourteen Variations for Orchestra (first performances in Boston); Stravinsky: Capriccio (Jesus Maria Sanroma, piano soloist); Prokofieff: Fifth Symphony.

By CYRUS DURGIN

The multifariously gifted Leonard Bernstein has returned as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony, his first such appearances since 1952, bringing with him a score by Robert Moevs, who is a member of the music faculty at Harvard. This is the Fourteen Variations for Orchestra, new to Boston and commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation.

The 35-year-old Mr. Moevs (whose name rhymes with raves), is, as we have known from certain small pieces already performed here, a man of talent and of learning. His Variations make sense and logic, and they can be counted off as each begins, though the musical fabric shows scarcely a break between any of them. His theme is individual, with its seconds dominant features a sustained trill followed by a downward octave leap.

Perhaps, however, this theme is not inherently suitable for variation, for while the numbers have definite points of interest, there is nowhere near enough variety in figuration, not enough in harmonic foundation, and very little in orchestral color. It is one thing to write variations, each separate and each with a close; it is another and a much more difficult thing to create a continuous fabric, which is what Moevs has attempted.

A Growing Talent

That the Variations are, candidly, monotonous; that his scoring seems to jump from a thin chamber-music manner to heavy full orchestra, and that there is little inward motion, need not discourage the composer. He was present yesterday, and was politely received. Another time he likely will have written better music which will garner more applause. Of his yet unmatured talent, there is no doubt.

Very much like old times it was to hear Jesus Maria Sanroma giving a crisp, clear, rhythmically ebullient performance of the piano part in Stravinsky's Capriccio. Mr. Sanroma, in Boston, has a special identification with the piece, for he played it several times in the days of Koussevitzky. Yesterday's performance, orchestrally and in solo, could hardly be bettered. I had never enjoyed the Capriccio very much until now; it used to seem dry and not at all the peculiar blend of classic directness and a light romantic style that it is. Perhaps Bernstein heightened the flavor of it all. Or, more likely, I at last have grown into the music. At any rate, it was sheer delight.

Mr. Bernstein has grown as a conductor. He still looks boyish, and he still dances on the stand, and his gestures still remind you of Koussevitzky. But what the ear receives is the proof of approaching maturity. He has not yet achieved the height of real simplicity: Mozart he conducted, phrased and accented too elaborately, the first movement was a hair too slow and the second a hair too fast.

A Tour de Force

But what Bernstein can do with such a demanding and complex work as the Prokofieff Fifth Symphony! Here was a mastery of technic and expression in the highest degree. The orchestra played superbly for him, with a tone of loveliness. This work of Prokofieff is music of genuine stature, overlong to be sure, but superb in its melodic invention, deeply moving, emotionally, and in the dimensions of its form of a size you could call huge.

To conduct it as Bernstein did, with obvious knowledge of the score from start to finish, with such accurate style, such drive, force, architectural sense, and such beautiful command of details, including those difficult matters of rhythm; to do this takes enormous ability. His performance was a tour de force, thoroughly meriting the applause and the cries of "Bravo!" it received. But I do wish he would stop dancing, for it detracts from the excellence of his work. A conductor ought to be expressive down to the waist, and from there to his feet as rigidly motionless as possible!

Next week Charles Munch will conduct Tchaikovsky's "Francesca da Rimini"; the Prokofieff Violin Concerto in G Minor (No. 2), with Zino Francescatti as soloist, and the Brahms Double Concerto, with Mr. Francescatti and Samuel Mayes, first cello, as soloists.

Art—Music—Theater 11

utti at Symphony

Violinist Heard in Brahms And Prokofiev Concertos

By Harold Rogers

We are grateful for superb violinists wherever we find them—whether in the Soviet Union, the home of David Oistrakh, or in the United States, where we have Isaac Stern and Zino Francescatti. If there were any reason to offer a challenge to Mr. Oistrakh, it is likely that Mr. Francescatti is the man to do it.

According to their disks, the two men have much in common in tone and technique; and when Mr. Francescatti appeared as soloist yesterday afternoon with the Boston Symphony, he was again impressive for his stylistic elegance. Perhaps he does not play with Oistrakh's bravura, but he knows the power he can gain by restraint.

He was heard in two works—in Prokofiev's Violin Concerto No. 2 in G minor, and in Brahms' Concerto in A minor for Violin and Violoncello. For the latter he was joined by Samuel Mayes, first cellist of the Boston Symphony, and we heard a pair of beautifully matched soloists.

This Prokofiev Concerto is almost the antithesis of his Fifth Symphony, conducted by Leonard Bernstein during a recent visit. For the Fifth the composer used an augmented orchestra for an augmented sound, and its aural magnificence still rings in the memory. For this violin concerto, however, he scaled the orchestra down to classical dimensions, and he also treated the work in a quasi-classical style.

Mr. Francescatti, too, reined in his resources to illuminate the graceful phrases, the lacy figures, the songful moods. The middle Andante was buoyant with his sustained singing tone.

This is not a well-known concerto, nor is it dramatic in the popular sense of the Scythian Suite or "Lieutenant Kije." If it were the only concerto on a program, one might feel a bit cheated—not that it lacks musical substance. It lacks virtuosic intensity.

Charles Munch's programing was ideal in that it gave us Mr. Francescatti first as the pure artist, and second, as a virtuoso in the Brahms Double Concerto. In the latter his collaboration with Mr. Mayes was on an equal footing dynamically and interpretively. They both have the silken tone and the romantic verve, and they obviously enjoyed the balanced interplay of Brahms' skillful writing. Their listeners enjoyed the total effect.

Mr. Munch, in rare form after his two-week vacation, opened with Tchaikovsky's seldom-heard "Francesca da Rimini," an Orchestral Fantasia after Dante. Though a bit overlong, it is an impassioned piece of writing, redolent of the Italian Renaissance, and Mr. Munch whipped his musicians into a fiery if not altogether polished performance.

Next week Rudolf Firkusny will be the visiting artist in Mozart's Piano Concerto No. 16 in D major, K. 451. The program will include a Honegger work new to the orchestra's repertoire—"Chant de joie"—as well as a revival of his Third Symphony. Mr. Munch will open with Sir Thomas Beecham's arrangement of a suite from Handel's "The Faithful Shepherd."

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 122,000
APR 18 1956

Society: How Your Old Books May Aid to Bring New Life to Ill Child

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

Old books gathering dust on your shelves can help give a sick child a better chance to get well—if you'll give the books you don't want to the Yankee Bookstall.

This ingeniously-planned benefit, the annual Spring project of the Women's Committee of the Children's Medical Center, will find unusual treasures in rare books of every kind when the sale opens on April 26 at 660 Boylston st., near the Copley subway station. The sale continues through Wednesday, May 2, and will be from 10 to 6 daily, except for Saturday, the 28, when it will close at five.

Mrs. Robert Hopkins of Brookline is chairman of the Yankee Bookstall Committee, and working with her are Mrs. Stewart Clifford of Weston, Mrs. Philip Brickey of Boston, Mrs. Roger Perry of Brookline and Mrs. Charles F. Hovey of Chestnut Hill. Mrs. Robert B. Almy of Dedham is chairman of the Women's Committee of the Children's Medical Center, and also helping this most appealing cause are Mrs. Joseph Ryerson Jr. of Brookline, Mrs. Dwight Siscoe and Miss Dorothy Rogers of Chestnut Hill and Mrs. Charles Crockett of Dedham.

25 YEARS OF SERVICE in teaching crafts at the North Bennet Street Industrial School will be observed April 25 and 26 at the annual open house and exhibition. Classes in social service, jewelry, metal work, carpentry, cabinet making and watch repair will have demonstrations. Italian delicacies will be served at lunch and at supper on both days.

Henry L. Shattuck is honorary president of the board, headed by Henry V. Greenough, Mrs. Henry B. Bigelow, Mrs. J. Lewis Bremer, Mrs. Henry Lyman and Miss Mary E. Williams.

HERE AND IN SWITZERLAND announcement is being made of the engagement of Mrs. Louise Shonk of Dublin, N. H., to William R. Nonnenmacher of Lausanne. Mrs. Shonk, the widow of Lt (j.g.) Herbert B. Shonk, is the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Wyman Whittemore of Boston and director of music at the Dublin School.

Mr. Nonnenmacher was formerly married to Margaret G. Salmen of Boston, who died in 1953. He studied in Switzerland and served as assistant director of the Brillantment School in Lausanne. He now heads the French department at the Dublin School.

ACTOR RUSSELL NYPE will be honored at a supper party at the Westwood house of Mr. and Mrs. David D. McNeish after the Saturday night performance of "Wake Up, Darling" on Saturday, April 21. The Gordon Pollock play opened last night at the Plymouth. Guests at the party will include Mr. and Mrs. James McGeough, Mr. and Mrs. John D. McNeish Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Malcolm B. Leslie, Mr. and Mrs. Richard F. Brackett, Mr. and Mrs. Donald P. Babson, Mr. and Mrs. Frederic J. Gardner, Mr. and Mrs. Paul W. Boyd, Mr. and Mrs. Richard L. Gardner, Mr. and Mrs. Robert T. Harvey, Mr. and Mrs. Andrew J. Lord Jr., Mr. and Mrs. John D. Deacon, Mr. and Mrs. David F. Hall, Mr. and Mrs. Francis E. Kavanaugh, Dean and Mrs. John J. McKenzie, Mr. and Mrs. Mark Haller, and Mr. and Mrs. R. Willis Leith Jr.

(Luckett)

A FALL WEDDING is planned by Miss Alice Williams, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Williams of Holliston, who are announcing her engagement to Phillip C. Howard, son of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Howard of Swampscott. She is a MacDuffie School graduate and a student at Pembroke. He is a Brown University senior.

A FIRST CHILD, Edward, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Stanley L. Weinbaum (Joan M. Zimmon) of Dorchester March 31 at Beth Israel Hospital. He is the grandson of Mr. and Mrs. Isadore Zimmon of Roxbury and of Mrs. Michael Weinbaum of Newton. Mrs. Harry Leish of Brockton is the boy's great grandmother.

AT MIAMI BEACH on their wedding trip are Sherman J. Morrison and his bride, the former Joanne S. Everett, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. B. H. Everett of St. John, New Brunswick. They were married on April 15 at the Hotel Kenmore's Wedgewood Room.

Richard S. Morrison of Newton was best man and Mrs. Morrison was matron of honor. Miss Martha L. Everett of St. John was maid of honor. Mr. and Mrs. Morrison plan to live in Brookline.

AMERICAN MUSIC will be featured at the Pops night of the Boston Tea Party Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution on May 7. Mrs. John Hollett and Mrs. Ross Currier head the committee, serving with Mrs. James J. Hepburn, Mrs. George Hughes, Miss Marion Decrow, Mrs. Kenneth W. Goepper, Mrs. John J. Kelley, Mrs. John Gallagher, Mrs. J. S. Barleon, Mrs. Arthur Dorr, Mrs. Edward S. Colton Jr. and Mrs. H. Leland DeRivera.

Those taking tables include the William S. Does, the Allen D. Willards, Mrs. John C. Ross, Mrs. Henry J. Winslow, Mrs. Henry A. Webster Jr., Mrs. Holcomb J. Brown, Mrs. Charles Parker, Mrs. Robert Bray, Mrs. A. B. Joy, Mrs. Herbert F. Perry, Mrs. Georges Doriot, Mrs. Simeon Whitney, Mrs. Clifford A. Waterhouse, Mrs. George Rockwood and Mrs. Charles F. Lambert.

PATRIOTS' DAY tomorrow will find Concord families ready for visitors. At the Concord Anti-

Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 10,000 Free
APR 19 1956

Symphony Will End Season With Extra Concert

During the next week Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with five concerts in eight days, will conclude the regular Boston winter series of concerts in this, the orchestra's 75th anniversary season.

At the final pair of Friday afternoon-Saturday evening subscription concerts, April 27-28, the orchestra will be joined by the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, under the direction of G. Wallace Woodworth, for performances of "A Psalm of Praise" for mixed chorus and orchestra by Mabel Daniels, composed for the 75th anniversary of Radcliffe College and to be performed at these concerts for the first time, and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. The soloists in the Ninth Symphony will be Adele Addison, soprano; Eunice Alberts, contralto; David Lloyd, tenor; and Mac Morgan, bass.

This Sunday at 3 p.m., the final concert in the season's Sunday afternoon series will be given with the following program: Mozart's "Haffner" Symphony; "Romeo and Juliet" Overture-Fantasy by Tchaikovsky; Bohuslav Martinu's Sixth Symphony (called "Fantaisies Symphoniques"); and Three Dances from the Ballet "The Three-Cornered Hat" by Manuel de Falla.

The Tuesday evening series will conclude next Tuesday with a Suite from Handel's "The Faithful Shepherd" arranged by Sir Thomas Beecham, and two symphonies—the Third or "Liturgique" by Honegger and the Fourth by Brahms.

Sunday evening, April 29, at 8:30, Mr. Munch and the orchestra will give an extra concert from which proceeds will be used to help supply funds still needed for the European tour next August and September. The program will consist of two of the best-loved symphonies in the repertoire — Beethoven's Seventh and Tchaikovsky's "Pathetique." Remaining tickets for this concert are on sale at the Symphony Hall box office.

Post (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 285,839
APR 21 1956

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony program opened yesterday with a beautiful reading of Handel's "The Faithful Shepherd" Suite, arranged by Beecham. Charles Munch elicited a finely balanced performance from the orchestra and alternated the Handelian allegro and cantabile in an extraordinarily perceptive manner.

The string section provided a radiance no other group can duplicate. By some strange Munch alchemy the finale was made to sound uncommonly like Berlioz Hungarian March.

Rudolf Firkusny joined the orchestra for a spirited performance of Mozart's Piano Concerto in D (K.451), heard for the first time at these concerts. The soloist played gracefully and accurately, maintaining a limpid line in the andante. Integration between piano and band was notable for its nuances.

Honegger's Third Symphony and "Chant de Joie" followed intermission. For all its pretensions, complexities, and detailed program, the symphony is basically unmusical, completely devoid of that emotional impulse which strikes a response in the listener's heart. The conductor, either piqued at the chill audience reaction or rapt in oblivious personal approval, refused to acknowledge the smattering of applause it did receive.

New Englan
Box 2078, Bo
Ro
BOS
In Ci
APR

Symp

During the Munch and t
Orchestra, w eight days, w
chestra's 75t
son. At the afternoon-Sa scription co
the Orchestr
the Harvard

NEW YORK, N. Y.
World-Telegram & Sun
Circ. D. 518,809 - S. 172,502
APR 18 1956

Brooklyn

SOCIETY

By RUTH G. DAVIS.

THE BOYS' WELCOME HALL, at 185 Chauncey St., which is the oldest boys' club in Brooklyn, will benefit from a card party to be given by the Women's Guild, at Kismet Temple, 92 Herkimer St. It will take place tomorrow evening.

Ruth G. Davis

Mrs. William Falconer is president of the Women's Guild and she will be assisted at the benefit by Mrs. Henry C. Halboth and Mrs. Katherine McEwen in charge of a fancy work table; Mrs. Jacques Hirsch, chairman of refreshments; Mrs. John Cashmore and Miss Erna Kraemer, cake and candy table; and Mrs. Edward Hill and Mrs. Daniel Dans, prizes.

Miss Nancy Delaporte will direct a junior committee selling candy and other donated articles.

* * *

Mr. and Mrs. W. Vincent Hall of Brooklyn Heights will leave tomorrow by United Air Lines for Hawaii. They will remain in the islands until May 22 when they will sail on the Steel Chemist, returning to Brooklyn June 10. The Halls entertained at the last of a series of cocktail and supper parties at their home on Sunday. Their guests were William J. Rudolph, Mr. and Mrs. Raymond McGowan and Mr. and Mrs. Joseph McNulty.

* * *

Chiropean, Mrs. Edward S. Candidus president, will meet at the Towers Hotel tomorrow. Following a business meeting and luncheon, Mrs. Edwin B. Wilson, chairman of Municipal Affairs, will present Walter J. Cogan, who will talk on "The Port of New York Authority, a Partnership."

A conference of officers was held at the home of Mrs. Cord A. Meyer last week, when plans were made for future programs. Delegates were chosen to attend the convention of the New York City Federation of Women's Clubs, Inc., on Friday, May 4, at the Hotel New Yorker. Delegates to be sent to the second district meeting of the N. Y. State Federation of Women's Club Inc. at the Garden City Casino on Monday also were elected.

Members of Chiropean also will join the New York City Federation's spring outing on the sightseeing yacht Knickerbocker around Manhattan Island on Monday, May 21, at 2:30 p.m.

The annual philanthropic bridge party was set for Nov. 30 at 1:30 p.m. and will be held at the Towers Hotel. At the close of the meeting, tea was served, with Mrs. LeRoy S. Edwards and Mrs. William C. Knoll presiding.

* * *

A spring meeting and tea in behalf of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was held yesterday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Carroll J. Dickson, 160 Henry St. Mrs. Dickson is chairman of the women's committee for the orchestra's annau series of concerts at the Academy of Music.

Honored guests were Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the orchestra, and Julius Bloom, director of the academy.

Ways were discussed of increasing subscriptions to the series, which are held at the academy under the musical direction of Charles Munch. The concerts scheduled for next season are: Nov. 16, Dec. 14, Jan. 11, Feb. 8 and March 22.

Mrs. Edwin P. Maynard Jr. was elected vice president of the committee, which includes, besides Mrs. Dickson: Mrs. Edward C. Blum and Mrs. H. Haughton Bell, vice chairmen; Mrs. Irving G. Idler, chairman of boxes; and Mrs. Miles Kastendieck, chairman of membership. About 30 attended the tea.

* * *

Mrs. John W. Schaefer, president of St. Joseph's Guild of the Nursing Sisters of the Sick Poor, welcomed the guests at the annual spring card party for the benefit of the sisters in Bay Ridge, on Saturday at the Sheraton-Astor Hotel. Mrs. Schaefer wore a bronze iridescent faille frock trimmed with sequins and pearls and a navy blue satin leaf chapeau. She had a corsage of orchids. Mrs. Vincent Cantales and Mrs. Frank Corigliano were general chairmen of the party. The former wore a black peau de soie gown with a cranberry-colored, flowered hat and had a corsage of camellias to match. Mrs. Corigliano was in a navy blue embroidered organza and taffeta dress with a lipstick-red chiffon hat. She had red Peruvian lilies.

They had assisting them many members, including past presidents Mrs. William F. Datri, Mrs. Brian J. Mitko and Mrs. Albert H. Chambers. Chairmen of the committees were: Mrs. William D. Colgan, Mrs. Walter E. Doud, Mrs. William J. McCarthy, Mrs. James A. Dempsey, Mrs. Arnold Gennarelli, Mrs. John W. Angus, Mrs. George S. Johnson, Mrs. Charles Joseph Reilly, Mrs. Edward Schultz, Mrs. Michael F. Quinn, Mrs. Harold C. Kenney, Mrs. Joseph J. Eschenbrenner, Mrs. John F. Ryan, Mrs. Robert F. Cranston, Mrs. Charles A. Butler. Among the winners of special prizes were Mrs. William Ceckley, who received a silver set for 12, and M. A. DeVita a china dinner set.

* * *

Michael Anthony Kilgallen Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Kilgallen, of 539 Fourth St., had his fifth birthday celebration at a party at his home last week. Attending were: Kerry Cavanagh, Brian Cavanagh, Arthur De Coursey Jr., James Driscoll Jr., Christopher Huang and Allan Kramer 2nd.

* * *

The Library Associates of Brooklyn College will meet at the home of Mrs. Robert A. Sewell, 435 80th St., on Friday at 3:30 p.m. Mrs. Thomas G. Evans is president of the group and Professor H. G. Bousfield is chief librarian at the college.

75th Season With Beethoven Ninth ety under the dillace Woodworth of "A Psalm of el Daniels, com-

h anniversary of inth Symphony in which the so-

ddison, soprano;
contralto; David
Lloyd, tenor; and Mac Morgan, bass.

Next Sunday afternoon at 3:00 the final concert in the Sunday series will be given. The program includes Mozart's "Haffner" Symphony; the "Romeo and Juliet" Overture-Fantasy by Tchaikovsky; Bohuslav Martinu's Sixth Symphony, and Three Dances from the Ballet, "The Three-Cornered Hat," by de Falla.

The Tuesday evening series will conclude April 24 with a Suite from Handel's "The Faithful Shepherd," arranged by Sir Thomas Beecham, and two symphonies—the Third, or "Liturgique," by Honegger, and the Fourth by Brahms.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 122,000
APR 18 1956

Society: How Your Old Books May Aid to Bring New Life to Ill Child

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

Old books gathering dust on your shelves can help give a sick child a better chance to get well—if you'll give the books you don't want to the Yankee Bookstall.

This ingeniously-planned benefit, the annual Spring project of the Women's Committee of the Children's Medical Center, will find unusual treasures in rare books of every kind when the sale opens on April 26 at 660 Boylston st., near the Copley subway station. The sale continues through Wednesday, May 2, and will be from 10 to 6 daily except for Saturday, the 28, when it will close at five.

Mrs. Robert Hopkins of Brookline is chairman of the Yankee Bookstall Committee, and working with her are Mrs. Stewart Clifford of Weston, Mrs. Philip Brickey of Boston, Mrs. Roger Perry of Brookline and Mrs. Charles F. Hovey of Chestnut Hill. Mrs. Robert B. Almy of Dedham is chairman of the Women's Committee of the Children's Medical Center, and also helping this most appealing cause are Mrs. Joseph Ryerson Jr. of Brookline, Mrs. Dwight Siscoe and Miss Dorothy Rogers of Chestnut Hill and Mrs. Charles Crockett of Dedham.

5 YEARS OF SERVICE in teaching crafts at the North Bennet Street Industrial School will be observed April 25 and 26 at the annual open house and exhibition. Classes in social service, jewelry, metal work, carpentry, cabinet making and watch repair will have demonstrations. Italian delicacies will be served at lunch and at supper on both days.

Henry L. Shattuck is honorary president of the board, headed by Henry V. Greenough, Mrs. Henry B. Bigelow, Mrs. J. Lewis Bremer, Mrs. Henry Lyman and Miss Mary E. Williams.

HERE AND IN SWITZERLAND announcement is being made of the engagement of Mrs. Louise Shonk of Dublin, N. H., to William R. Nonnenmacher of Lausanne. Mrs. Shonk, the widow of Lt (j.g.) Herbert B. Shonk, is the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Wyman Whittemore of Boston and director of music at the Dublin School.

Mr. Nonnenmacher was formerly married to Margaret G. Salmen of Boston, who died in 1953. He studied in Switzerland and served as assistant director of the Brillantment School in Lausanne. He now heads the French department at the Dublin School.

ACTOR RUSSELL NYPE will be honored at a supper party at the Westwood house of Mr. and Mrs. David D. McNeish after the Saturday night performance of "Wake Up, Darling" on Saturday, April 21. The Gordon Pollock play opened last night at the Plymouth. Guests at the party will include Mr. and Mrs. James McGeough, Mr. and Mrs. John D. McNeish Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Malcolm B. Leslie, Mr. and Mrs. Richard F. Brackett, Mr. and Mrs. Donald P. Babson, Mr. and Mrs. Frederic J. Gardner, Mr. and Mrs. Paul W. Boyd, Mr. and Mrs. Richard L. Gardner, Mr. and Mrs. Robert T. Harvey, Mr. and Mrs. Andrew J. Lord Jr., Mr. and Mrs. John D. Deacon, Mr. and Mrs. David F. Hall, Mr. and Mrs. Francis E. Kavanaugh, Dean and Mrs. John J. McKenzie, Mr. and Mrs. Mark Haller, and Mr. and Mrs. R. Willis Leith Jr.

(Luckett)

A FALL WEDDING is planned by Miss Alice Williams, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Williams of Holliston, who are announcing her engagement to Phillip C. Howard, son of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Howard of Swampscott. She is a MacDuffie School graduate and a student at Pembroke. He is a Brown University senior.

A FIRST CHILD, Edward, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Stanley L. Weinbaum (Joan M. Zimmon) of Dorchester March 31 at Beth Israel Hospital. He is the grandson of Mr. and Mrs. Isadore Zimmon of Roxbury and of Mrs. Michael Weinbaum of Newton. Mrs. Harry Leish of Brockton is the boy's great grandmother.

AT MIAMI BEACH on their wedding trip are Sherman J. Morrison and his bride, the former Joanne S. Everett, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. B. H. Everett of St. John, New Brunswick. They were married on April 15 at the Hotel Kenmore's Wedgewood Room.

Richard S. Morrison of Newton was best man and Mrs. Morrison was matron of honor. Miss Martha L. Everett of St. John was maid of honor. Mr. and Mrs. Morrison plan to live in Brookline.

AMERICAN MUSIC will be featured at the Pops night of the Boston Tea Party Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution on May 7. Mrs. John Hollett and Mrs. Ross Currier head the committee, serving with Mrs. James J. Hepburn, Mrs. George Hughes, Miss Marion Decrow, Mrs. Kenneth W. Goepper, Mrs. John J. Kelley, Mrs. John Gallagher, Mrs. J. S. Barleon, Mrs. Arthur Dorr, Mrs. Edward S. Colton Jr. and Mrs. H. Leland DeRivera.

Those taking tables include the William S. Does, the Allen D. Willards, Mrs. John C. Ross, Mrs. Henry J. Winslow, Mrs. Henry A. Webster Jr., Mrs. Holcomb J. Brown, Mrs. Charles Parker, Mrs. Robert Bray, Mrs. A. B. Joy, Mrs. Herbert F. Perry, Mrs. Georges Doriot, Mrs. Simeon Whitney, Mrs. Clifford A. Waterhouse, Mrs. George Rockwood and Mrs. Charles F. Lambert.

PATRIOTS' DAY tomorrow will find Concord families ready for visitors. At the Concord Antiquarian Society Museum, Mrs. Harding C. Newman will serve tea from 3 to 5 to guests visiting the period rooms arranged from the 17th century through the Victorian era, the Paul Revere room, and the model battlefield of the Concord Fight.

Special exhibits will include Oriental ivories collected by the late Theodore P. Gooding of Boston, on loan by his nephew, Frederic Gooding of Concord. Hostesses aiding Mrs. Newman will include Mrs. Henry Seton, Mrs. John K. Spring, Mrs. A. Page Browne, Mrs. Paul Ceresole, Mrs. Alfred A. Lane and Mrs. Russell Robb.

Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 10,000 Free
APR 19 1956

Symphony Will End Season With Extra Concert

During the next week Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with five concerts in eight days, will conclude the regular Boston winter series of concerts in this, the orchestra's 75th anniversary season.

At the final pair of Friday afternoon-Saturday evening subscription concerts, April 27-28, the orchestra will be joined by the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, under the direction of G. Wallace Woodworth, for performances of "A Psalm of Praise" for mixed chorus and orchestra by Mabel Daniels, composed for the 75th anniversary of Radcliffe College and to be performed at these concerts for the first time, and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. The soloists in the Ninth Symphony will be Adele Addison, soprano; Eunice Alberts, contralto; David Lloyd, tenor; and Mac Morgan, base.

This Sunday at 3 p.m., the final concert in the season's Sunday afternoon series will be given with the following program: Mozart's "Haffner" Symphony; "Romeo and Juliet" Overture-Fantasy by Tchaikovsky; Bohuslav Martinu's Sixth Symphony (called "Fantaisies Symphoniques"); and Three Dances from the Ballet "The Three-Cornered Hat" by Manuel de Falla.

The Tuesday evening series will conclude next Tuesday with a Suite from Handel's "The Faithful Shepherd" arranged by Sir Thomas Beecham, and two symphonies—the Third or "Liturgique" by Honegger and the Fourth by Brahms.

Sunday evening, April 29, at 8:30, Mr. Munch and the orchestra will give an extra concert from which proceeds will be used to help supply funds still needed for the European tour next August and September. The program will consist of two of the best-loved symphonies in the repertoire — Beethoven's Seventh and Tchaikovsky's "Pathetique." Remaining tickets for this concert are on sale at the Symphony Hall box office.

Post (m)
STON, Mass.
ndent Democrat
rc. 285,839
1 1956

...y Concert

Symphony pro- yesterday with a ...ding of Handel's ...l Shepherd" Suite, Beecham. Charles ...ed a finely balanced from the orchestra ...ated the Handelian ...l cantabile in an ...ly perceptive man- ...ection provided a

JEFF COBB—Reporte

NEW YORK, N. Y.
World-Telegram & Sun
Circ. D. 518,809 - S. 172,502
APR 18 1956

Brooklyn

SOCIETY

By RUTH G. DAVIS.

THE BOYS' WELCOME HALL, at 185 Chauncey St., which is the oldest boys' club in Brooklyn, will benefit from a card party to be given by the Women's Guild, at Kismet Temple, 92 Herkimer St. It will take place tomorrow evening.

Ruth G. Davis

Mrs. William Falconer is president of the Women's Guild and she will be assisted at the benefit by Mrs. Henry C. Halboth and Mrs. Katherine McEwen in charge of a fancy work table; Mrs. Jacques Hirsch, chairman of refreshments; Mrs. John Cashmore and Miss Erna Kraemer, cake and candy table; and Mrs. Edward Hill and Mrs. Daniel Dans, prizes.

Miss Nancy Delaporte will direct a junior committee selling candy and other donated articles.

* * *

Mr. and Mrs. W. Vincent Hall of Brooklyn Heights will leave tomorrow by United Air Lines for Hawaii. They will remain in the islands until May 22 when they will sail on the Steel Chemist, returning to Brooklyn June 10. The Halls entertained at the last of a series of cocktail and supper parties at their home on Sunday. Their guests were William J. Rudolph, Mr. and Mrs. Raymond McGowan and Mr. and Mrs. Joseph McNulty.

* * *

Chiropean, Mrs. Edward S. Candidus president, will meet at the Towers Hotel tomorrow. Following a business meeting and luncheon, Mrs. Edwin B. Wilson, chairman of Municipal Affairs, will present Walter J. Cogan, who will talk on "The Port of New York Authority, a Partnership."

A conference of officers was held at the home of Mrs. Cord A. Meyer last week, when plans were made for future programs. Delegates were chosen to attend the convention of the New York City Federation of Women's Clubs, Inc., on Friday, May 4, at the Hotel New Yorker. Delegates to be sent to the second district meeting of the N. Y. State Federation of Women's Club Inc. at the Garden City Casino on Monday also were elected.

Members of Chiropean also will join the New York City Federation's spring outing on the sightseeing yacht Knickerbocker around Manhattan Island on Monday, May 21, at 2:30 p.m.

The annual philanthropic bridge party was set for Nov. 30 at 1:30 p.m. and will be held at the Towers Hotel. At the close of the meeting, tea was served, with Mrs. LeRoy S. Edwards and Mrs. William C. Knoll presiding.

* * *

A spring meeting and tea in behalf of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was held yesterday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Carroll J. Dickson, 160 Henry St. Mrs. Dickson is chairman of the women's committee for the orchestra's annual series of concerts at the Academy of Music.

Honored guests were Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the orchestra, and Julius Bloom, director of the academy.

Ways were discussed of increasing subscriptions to the series, which are held at the academy under the musical direction of Charles Munch. The concerts scheduled for next season are: Nov. 16, Dec. 14, Jan. 11, Feb. 8 and March 22.

Mrs. Edwin P. Maynard Jr. was elected vice president of the committee, which includes, besides Mrs. Dickson: Mrs. Edward C. Blum and Mrs. H. Haughton Bell, vice chairmen; Mrs. Irving G. Idler, chairman of boxes; and Mrs. Miles Kastendieck, chairman of membership. About 30 attended the tea.

* * *

Mrs. John W. Schaefer, president of St. Joseph's Guild of the Nursing Sisters of the Sick Poor, welcomed the guests at the annual spring card party for the benefit of the sisters in Bay Ridge, on Saturday at the Sheraton-Astor Hotel. Mrs. Schaefer wore a bronze iridescent faille frock trimmed with sequins and pearls and a navy blue satin leaf chapeau. She had a corsage of orchids. Mrs. Vincent Cantales and Mrs. Frank Corigliano were general chairmen of the party. The former wore a black peau de soie gown with a cranberry-colored, flowered hat and had a corsage of camellias to match. Mrs. Corigliano was in a navy blue embroidered organza and taffeta dress with a lipstick-red chiffon hat. She had red Peruvian lilies.

They had assisting them many members, including past presidents Mrs. William F. Datri, Mrs. Brian J. Mitko and Mrs. Albert H. Chambers. Chairmen of the committees were: Mrs. William D. Colgan, Mrs. Walter E. Doud, Mrs. William J. McCarthy, Mrs. James A. Dempsey, Mrs. Arnold Gennarelli, Mrs. John W. Angus, Mrs. George S. Johnson, Mrs. Charles Joseph Reilly, Mrs. Edward Schultz, Mrs. Michael F. Quinn, Mrs. Harold C. Kenney, Mrs. Joseph J. Eschenbrenner, Mrs. John F. Ryan, Mrs. Robert F. Cranston, Mrs. Charles A. Butler. Among the winners of special prizes were Mrs. William Ceckley, who received a silver set for 12, and M. A. DeVita a china dinner set.

* * *

Michael Anthony Kilgallen Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Kilgallen, of 539 Fourth St., had his fifth birthday celebration at a party at his home last week. Attending were: Kerry Cavanagh, Brian Cavanagh, Arthur De Coursey Jr., James Driscoll Jr., Christopher Huang and Allan Kramer 2nd.

* * *

The Library Associates of Brooklyn College will meet at the home of Mrs. Robert A. Sewell, 435 80th St., on Friday at 3:30 p.m. Mrs. Thomas G. Evans is president of the group and Professor H. G. Bousfield is chief librarian at the college.

New Englan...
Box 2078, Be...
R...
BOS...
In...
Ci...
APR

Symp...

During the ... Munch and t... Orchestra, w... eight days, w... chestra's 75t... son. At the ... afternoon-Sa... scription co... the Orchestr... the Harvard...

75th Season With Beethoven Ninth

...ety under the di- ...llace Woodworth ... of "A Psalm of ...el Daniels, com- ...h anniversary of ...inth Symphony ... in which the so- ...Addison, soprano; ...contralto; David Lloyd, tenor; and Mac Morgan, bass.

Next Sunday afternoon at 3:00 the final concert in the Sunday series will be given. The program includes Mozart's "Haffner" Symphony; the "Romeo and Juliet" Overture-Fantasy by Tchaikovsky; Bohuslav Martinu's Sixth Symphony, and Three Dances from the Ballet, "The Three-Cornered Hat," by de Falla.

The Tuesday evening series will conclude April 24 with a Suite from Handel's "The Faithful Shepherd," arranged by Sir Thomas Beecham, and two symphonies—the Third, or "Liturgique," by Honegger, and the Fourth by Brahms.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 122,000
APR 18 1956

Society: How Your Old Books May Aid to Bring New Life to Ill Child

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

Old books gathering dust on your shelves can help give a sick child a better chance to get well—if you'll give the books you don't want to the Yankee Bookstall.

This ingeniously-planned benefit, the annual Spring project of the Women's Committee of the Children's Medical Center, will find unusual treasures in rare books of every kind when the sale opens on April 26 at 660 Boylston st., near the Copley subway station. The sale continues through Wednesday, May 2, and will be from 10 to 6 daily except for Saturday, the 28, when it will close at five.

Mrs. Robert Hopkins of Brookline is chairman of the Yankee Bookstall Committee, and working with her are Mrs. Stewart Clifford of Weston, Mrs. Philip Brickey of Boston, Mrs. Roger Perry of Brookline and Mrs. Charles F. Hovey of Chestnut Hill. Mrs. Robert B. Almy of Dedham is chairman of the Women's Committee of the Children's Medical Center, and also helping this most appealing cause are Mrs. Joseph Ryerson Jr. of Brookline, Mrs. Dwight Siscoe and Miss Dorothy Rogers of Chestnut Hill and Mrs. Charles Crockett of Dedham.

25 YEARS OF SERVICE in teaching crafts at the North Bennet Street Industrial School will be observed April 25 and 26 at the annual open house and exhibition. Classes in social service, jewelry, metal work, carpentry, cabinet making and watch repair will have demonstrations. Italian delicacies will be served at lunch and at supper on both days.

Henry L. Shattuck is honorary president of the board, headed by Henry V. Greenough, Mrs. Henry B. Bigelow, Mrs. J. Lewis Bremer, Mrs. Henry Lyman and Miss Mary E. Williams.

HERE AND IN SWITZERLAND announcement is being made of the engagement of Mrs. Louise Shonk of Dublin, N. H., to William R. Nonnenmacher of Lausanne. Mrs. Shonk, the widow of Lt (j.g.) Herbert B. Shonk, is the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Wyman Whittemore of Boston and director of music at the Dublin School.

Mr. Nonnenmacher was formerly married to Margaret G. Salmen of Boston, who died in 1953. He studied in Switzerland and served as assistant director of the Brillantment School in Lausanne. He now heads the French department at the Dublin School.

ACTOR RUSSELL NYPE will be honored at a supper party at the Westwood house of Mr. and Mrs. David D. McNeish after the Saturday night performance of "Wake Up, Darling" on Saturday, April 21. The Gordon Pollock play opened last night at the Plymouth. Guests at the party will include Mr. and Mrs. James McGeough, Mr. and Mrs. John D. McNeish Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Malcolm B. Leslie, Mr. and Mrs. Richard F. Brackett, Mr. and Mrs. Donald P. Babson, Mr. and Mrs. Frederic J. Gardner, Mr. and Mrs. Paul W. Boyd, Mr. and Mrs. Richard L. Gardner, Mr. and Mrs. Robert T. Harvey, Mr. and Mrs. Andrew J. Lord Jr., Mr. and Mrs. John D. Deacon, Mr. and Mrs. David F. Hall, Mr. and Mrs. Francis E. Kavanaugh, Dean and Mrs. John J. McKenzie, Mr. and Mrs. Mark Haller, and Mr. and Mrs. R. Willis Leith Jr.

(Luckett)

A FALL WEDDING is planned by Miss Alice Williams, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Williams of Holliston, who are announcing her engagement to Phillip C. Howard, son of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Howard of Swampscott. She is a MacDuffie School graduate and a student at Pembroke. He is a Brown University senior.

A FIRST CHILD, Edward, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Stanley L. Weinbaum (Joan M. Zimmon) of Dorchester March 31 at Beth Israel Hospital. He is the grandson of Mr. and Mrs. Isadore Zimmon of Roxbury and of Mrs. Michael Weinbaum of Newton. Mrs. Harry Leish of Brockton is the boy's great grandmother.

AT MIAMI BEACH on their wedding trip are Sherman J. Morrison and his bride, the former Joanne S. Everett, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. B. H. Everett of St. John, New Brunswick. They were married on April 15 at the Hotel Kenmore's Wedgewood Room.

Richard S. Morrison of Newton was best man and Mrs. Morrison was matron of honor. Miss Martha L. Everett of St. John was maid of honor. Mr. and Mrs. Morrison plan to live in Brookline.

AMERICAN MUSIC will be featured at the Pops night of the Boston Tea Party Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution on May 7. Mrs. John Hollett and Mrs. Ross Currier head the committee, serving with Mrs. James J. Hepburn, Mrs. George Hughes, Miss Marion Decrow, Mrs. Kenneth W. Goepper, Mrs. John J. Kelley, Mrs. John Gallagher, Mrs. J. S. Barleon, Mrs. Arthur Dorr, Mrs. Edward S. Colton Jr. and Mrs. H. Leland DeRivera.

Those taking tables include the William S. Does, the Allen D. Willards, Mrs. John C. Ross, Mrs. Henry J. Winslow, Mrs. Henry A. Webster Jr., Mrs. Holcomb J. Brown, Mrs. Charles Parker, Mrs. Robert Bray, Mrs. A. B. Joy, Mrs. Herbert F. Perry, Mrs. Georges Doriot, Mrs. Simeon Whitney, Mrs. Clifford A. Waterhouse, Mrs. George Rockwood and Mrs. Charles F. Lambert.

PATRIOTS' DAY tomorrow will find Concord families ready for visitors. At the Concord Antiquarian Society Museum, Mrs. Harding C. Newman will serve tea from 3 to 5 to guests visiting the period rooms arranged from the 17th century through the Victorian era, the Paul Revere room, and the model battlefield of the Concord Fight.

Special exhibits will include Oriental ivories collected by the late Theodore P. Gooding of Boston, on loan by his nephew, Frederic Gooding of Concord. Hostesses aiding Mrs. Newman will include Mrs. Henry Seton, Mrs. John K. Spring, Mrs. A. Page Browne, Mrs. Paul Cereole, Mrs. Alfred A. Lane and Mrs. Russell Robb.

Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 10,000 Free
APR 19 1956

Symphony Will End Season With Extra Concert

During the next week Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with five concerts in eight days, will conclude the regular Boston winter series of concerts in this, the orchestra's 75th anniversary season.

At the final pair of Friday afternoon-Saturday evening subscription concerts, April 27-28,

Mount Vernon
Church of Boston
(Congregational)
Beacon St. at Mass. Ave.
The Rev. Chalmers Coe,
Minister
11 a.m. Morning Worship
Sermon by
Mr. Coe
"The Trouble With Miracles"
6:15 Mt. Vernon Fellowship
7:30 Evening Worship
Wednesday 12:10 p.m.
"Prayers"

Rev. John U. Miller, Minister
Divine Worship Sunday
11 a.m.
7 p.m. Evening Service
Stillman Chapel

Post (m)
STON, Mass.
ndent Democrat
rc. 285,839
1 1956

...y Concert

Symphony pro- yesterday with a ...ding of Handel's ...l Shepherd" Suite, Beecham. Charles ...ed a finely balanced ...e from the orchestra ...nated the Handelian ...and cantabile in an ...marly perceptive man- ...ection provided a

JEFF COBB—Report...

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 397,884
APR 18 1956

NEW YORK, N. Y.
World-Telegram & Sun
Circ. D. 518,809 - S. 172,502
APR 18 1956

Brooklyn

SOCIETY

By RUTH G. DAVIS.

THE BOYS' WELCOME HALL, at 185 Chauncey St., which is the oldest boys' club in Brooklyn, will benefit from a card party to be given by the Women's Guild, at Kismet Temple, 92 Herkimer St. It will take place tomorrow evening.

Ruth G. Davis

Mrs. William Falconer is president of the Women's Guild and she will be assisted at the benefit by Mrs. Henry C. Halboth and Mrs. Katherine McEwen in charge of a fancy work table; Mrs. Jacques Hirsch, chairman of refreshments; Mrs. John Cashmore and Miss Erna Kraemer, cake and candy table; and Mrs. Edward Hill and Mrs. Daniel Dans, prizes.

Miss Nancy Delaporte will direct a junior committee selling candy and other donated articles.

* * *

Mr. and Mrs. W. Vincent Hall of Brooklyn Heights will leave tomorrow by United Air Lines for Hawaii. They will remain in the islands until May 22 when they will sail on the Steel Chemist, returning to Brooklyn June 10. The Halls entertained at the last of a series of cocktail and supper parties at their home on Sunday. Their guests were William J. Rudolph, Mr. and Mrs. Raymond McGowan and Mr. and Mrs. Joseph McNulty.

* * *

Chiropean, Mrs. Edward S. Candidus president, will meet at the Towers Hotel tomorrow. Following a business meeting and luncheon, Mrs. Edwin B. Wilson, chairman of Municipal Affairs, will present Walter J. Cogan, who will talk on "The Port of New York Authority, a Partnership."

A conference of officers was held at the home of Mrs. Cord A. Meyer last week, when plans were made for future programs. Delegates were chosen to attend the convention of the New York City Federation of Women's Clubs, Inc., on Friday, May 4, at the Hotel New Yorker. Delegates to be sent to the second district meeting of the N. Y. State Federation of Women's Club Inc. at the Garden City Casino on Monday also were elected.

Members of Chiropean also will join the New York City Federation's spring outing on the sightseeing yacht Knickerbocker around Manhattan Island on Monday, May 21, at 2:30 p.m.

The annual philanthropic bridge party was set for Nov. 30 at 1:30 p.m. and will be held at the Towers Hotel. At the close of the meeting, tea was served, with Mrs. LeRoy S. Edwards and Mrs. William C. Knoll presiding.

* * *

A spring meeting and tea in behalf of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was held yesterday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Carroll J. Dickson, 160 Henry St. Mrs. Dickson is chairman of the women's committee for the orchestra's annau series of concerts at the Academy of Music.

Honored guests were Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the orchestra, and Julius Bloom, director of the academy.

Ways were discussed of increasing subscriptions to the series, which are held at the academy under the musical direction of Charles Munch. The concerts scheduled for next season are: Nov. 16, Dec. 14, Jan. 11, Feb. 8 and March 22.

Mrs. Edwin P. Maynard Jr. was elected vice president of the committee, which includes, besides Mrs. Dickson: Mrs. Edward C. Blum and Mrs. H. Haughton Bell, vice chairmen; Mrs. Irving G. Idler, chairman of boxes; and Mrs. Miles Kastendieck, chairman of membership. About 30 attended the tea.

* * *

Mrs. John W. Schaefer, president of St. Joseph's Guild of the Nursing Sisters of the Sick Poor, welcomed the guests at the annual spring card party for the benefit of the sisters in Bay Ridge, on Saturday at the Sheraton-Astor Hotel. Mrs. Schaefer wore a bronze iridescent faille frock trimmed with sequins and pearls and a navy blue satin leaf chapeau. She had a corsage of orchids. Mrs. Vincent Cantales and Mrs. Frank Corigliano were general chairmen of the party. The former wore a black peau de soie gown with a cranberry-colored, flowered hat and had a corsage of camelias to match. Mrs. Corigliano was in a navy blue embroidered organza and taffeta dress with a lipstick-red chiffon hat. She had red Peruvian lilies.

They had assisting them many members, including past presidents Mrs. William F. Datri, Mrs. Brian J. Mitko and Mrs. Albert H. Chambers. Chairmen of the committees were: Mrs. William D. Colgan, Mrs. Walter E. Doud, Mrs. William J. McCarthy, Mrs. James A. Dempsey, Mrs. Arnold Gennarelli, Mrs. John W. Angus, Mrs. George S. Johnson, Mrs. Charles Joseph Reilly, Mrs. Edward Schultz, Mrs. Michael F. Quinn, Mrs. Harold C. Kenney, Mrs. Joseph J. Eschenbrenner, Mrs. John F. Ryan, Mrs. Robert F. Cranston, Mrs. Charles A. Butler. Among the winners of special prizes were Mrs. William Ceckley, who received a silver set for 12, and M. A. DeVita a china dinner set.

* * *

Michael Anthony Kilgallen Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Kilgallen, of 539 Fourth St., had his fifth birthday celebration at a party at his home last week. Attending were: Kerry Cavanagh, Brian Cavanagh, Arthur De Coursey Jr., James Driscoll Jr., Christopher Huang and Allan Kramer 2nd.

* * *

The Library Associates of Brooklyn College will meet at the home of Mrs. Robert A. Sewell, 435 80th St., on Friday at 3:30 p.m. Mrs. Thomas G. Evans is president of the group and Professor H. G. Bousfield is chief librarian at the college.

Symphony Concludes 75th Season With Beethoven Ninth

During the next week Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with five concerts in eight days, will conclude the Orchestra's 75th anniversary season. At the final pair of Friday afternoon-Saturday evening subscription concerts, April 27-28, the Orchestra will be joined by the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society under the direction of G. Wallace Woodworth for performances of "A Psalm of Praise," by Mabel Daniels, composed for the 75th anniversary of Radcliffe College.

Beethoven's Ninth Symphony will also be given, in which the soloists are Adele Addison, soprano; Eunice Alberts, contralto; David Lloyd, tenor; and Mac Morgan, bass.

Next Sunday afternoon at 3:00 the final concert in the Sunday series will be given. The program includes Mozart's "Haffner" Symphony; the "Romeo and Juliet" Overture-Fantasy by Tchaikovsky; Bohuslav Martinu's Sixth Symphony, and Three Dances from the Ballet, "The Three-Cornered Hat," by de Falla.

The Tuesday evening series will conclude April 24 with a Suite from Handel's "The Faithful Shepherd," arranged by Sir Thomas Beecham, and two symphonies—the Third, or "Liturgique," by Honegger, and the Fourth by Brahms.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR
Circ. D. 245,642 - S. 273,244
APR 19 1956

NEWS OF MUSIC

Novelty Introduced In Choral Concert

By IRVING LOWENS

Washington [illegible] Cathedral Choral Societies [illegible] Callaway, conductor; [illegible] soprano; Soloists [illegible] Beverly Wolff [illegible] Mozart; baritone Leslie Chabay [illegible] Protestant [illegible] K. 117a, [illegible] affanni; Mozart [illegible] K. 169; Mozart from Davidde [illegible] Penitente, K. 469; Mozart Aria [illegible] Penitente, K. 469; music from Davidde [illegible] Kierkegaard; Barber [illegible]

Conductor Paul Callaway, the massive Washington and Cathedral Choral Societies, a good portion of the National Symphony Orchestra, four excellent soloists and an audience of about 2,500 music-lovers were on hand last night at the Washington Cathedral as Mozart's unnished C minor Mass and Samuel Barber's magnificent new "Prayers of Kierkegaard" were heard.

The Mozart work was presented in novel fashion, with two arias from a sacred cantata in Italian, "Davidde Penitente," (itself fashioned out of the music of the incomplete Mass) being interpolated after the Gloria at the point where a Gradual would normally come in the liturgy. As a resut, tenor Leslie Chabay had an unexpected chance to star in a piece where he normally has very little to do, and soprano Adele Addison thrilled the audience with her sensational singing of a highly Italianate aria, complete with florid cadenza and equivalent vocal pyrotechnics.

Mr. Callaway's proved to be a surprisingly romantic conception of the Mass, conceived more in 19th-century than in contemporary terms, and no doubt based on the enormous choral and instrumental resources at his command. In many ways, the reading was reminiscent of the storied English performances of Victorian days, with Gargantuan choruses that swept the hearer along on waves of enthusiasm with sheer mass of sound.

In the homophonic and antiphonal choral portions of the Mass, such as in the Credo and the Sanctus, there was blazing power and overwhelming grandeur, and in the quiet, legato passages Mr. Callaway's remarkable way with a large chorus was evident. So far as this reviewer is concerned, however, the high spots were not sufficient compensation for the almost inevitable lack of definition in the great fugues and the buzzing fuzziness in contrapuntal passages.

The interpolated arias, while good grist for the soloists' mill, were not an unqualified success in helping to give the torso of the Mass balance. The contrast between the Latin and the Italian is unfortunate. Furthermore, Mozart wrote the arias in a strongly operatic idiom which clashes, stylistically, to a certain extent, with that of the C minor Mass despite its rococo lines. In the "Davidde Penitente," the tenor aria comes after the Domine Deus and the soprano aria after the Qui Tollis; in last night's version, both were inserted after the Cum Sancto Spiritu. The result seemed to be a breaking of the mood of the Mass rather than an enhancing.

The Barber "Prayers of Kierkegaard," on the other hand, was a resounding and brilliant success. Premiered by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Charles Munch with Leontyne Price as featured soloist only a little more than a year ago, it has been warmly received throughout the world. Mr. Callaway's version was the second of the Washington season, Warner Lawson having conducted the piece with the Howard University Choir and the National Symphony Orchestra just a few months back. On repetition, it still sounds much like a modern masterpiece.

This was a work after Mr. Callaway's heart, and to it he brought tremendous power and awe-inspiring eloquence. Here the choral work was superb, from the whispered pianissimos to the the frenzied climaxes, with the orchestral men in a particularly virtuosic mood.

Adele Addison was the soprano soloist in the Barber (as she was in Dean Lawson's performance). Her beautiful voice, well known from frequent Washington concerts, gave to the piece great tenderness. She was also the busiest of the singers in the Mozart with two solo arias, half a duet, a third of a trio, and a quarter of a quartet. To her parts she brought the style and authority of a great artist.

New to Washington audiences was mezzo - soprano Beverly Wolff, who showed exceptionally fine tone quality and exquisite musicianship in her Laudamus Te solo and in ensemble work.

Mr. Chabay's big moment came with the interpolated "A te, fra tanti affanni" aria, which revealed him once again as an excellent tenor, while Mac Morgan's dependable baritone was heard only as a member of the quartet in the Benedictus and very briefly in the "Prayers of Kierkegaard."

Call (e)
WOONSOCKET, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 25,494
APR 19 1956

Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 58,894
APR 19 1956

—Associated Press Wirephoto

VETERAN CONCERT-GOER—Conductor Charles Munch greets Mrs. Ellen Perry Locke, 102, of Providence, during Boston Symphony concert in the Rhode Island capital. A native of Boston's Back Bay, Mrs. Locke attended the Boston Symphony's initial concert 75 years ago.

ored during the orchestra's appearance in Veterans Memorial Auditorium, Providence, last night where she was greeted by Conductor Charles Munch. (AP wirephoto).

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 20,000
APR 19 1956

MUSIC IN REVIEW

By GERALD A. BERLIN

BSO PERFORMS RUSSIAN WORKS

Editor's Note:—This week's column is by Allan Sly, pianist and composer, whose criticism often appears here.

Recent details of Boston Symphony programing had led me to wonder whether we had been having enough Russian music lately. As if in response to such a notion the twenty-second Saturday program of the orchestra, featuring M. Munch's return, consisted of two Russian works and a Brahms. However, the former did not sound exotic; rather, all three works seemed to possess some family likenesses, all being strongly rooted in the best European traditions and giving the listener more than one reminder of the debt we owe to Italian influences.

Tchaikovsky's Francesca da Rimini, after Dante (and long after Liszt), was a perfect vehicle for Mr. Munch's now well-known flair for orchestral virtuosity in performance. But even so, the composition came to us in very concise terms, and for my part, supported my present disposition to regard Tchaikovsky as a classicist. What superb proportions, what self control, what fine drawing is there! The only fault I could find during the playing of this work had nothing to do with the activity on the stage but a great deal to do with the house management. An individual made a most unseemly, untimely and unnecessary demonstration of how to reach a certain part of the house regardless of what was in progress. Ignoring five or six doors that were nearer to his destination than where he entered, he disturbed some hundreds of listeners as he zig-zagged to his objective and pounded on the floor with his heels a rhythmic pattern which asserted itself above those coming from the stage. In a life-time of concert attendance I have never seen the like of it. Surely the house management could avoid intrusions such as the one described, especially as to the manner in which the urgency, whatever it was, was attended to. The orchestra, the conductor and the audience must be guaranteed the setting up of tolerable conditions in Symphony Hall.

After the unfortunate latecomers, who had patiently awaited their cue, were seated, Zino Francescatti was presented as soloist in the Prokofieff G minor concerto. The scaled-down orchestra provided an apt milieu for the golden tone and serene eloquence of his playing, but the performance had a defect in that the orchestra seemed to respond slowly to the increases in animation that the soloist wished to initiate here and there. I have noticed this dilemma before in the playing of concertos and am inclined to think that the soloist must share some responsibility for these occasional maladjustments. A soloist sometimes appears to be the victim of his own eagerness and strives to be heard first, however the orchestral background tries to adjust to his rhetoric. On Saturday the frustration of this contretemps (it was not of large proportions and to some listeners may have seemed to be an acoustical problem rather than one of performance) became the genesis of a short memory lapse on Mr. Franeescatti's part. While this was unfortunate, an experienced listener was able to hold the threads together for himself and to assimilate the many outstanding virtues of the composition and of its presentation.

After Intermission, Mr. Francescatti was joined by Samuel Mayes in the Brahms Double Concerto, opus 102, in A minor. Not too well known in Boston, the subtleties of this great symphonic work tended to be overshadowed by the intriguing interplay of the medium. Mr. Munch captained the performance in the grand manner that we now take for granted and Mr. Mayes matched his guest colleague's eloquence of delivery and beauty of tone to great effect.

Next weekend Mr. Munch will conduct the Handel "Faithful Shepherd" Suite, the Mozart D major piano concerto, K. 451, with Rudolf Firkusny as soloist, and two works by Honegger—the third symphony ("Liturgique") and "Chant de joie" (new to Boston).

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,872
APR 20 1956

Valente

Rudolf Firkusny will be the piano soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra this afternoon and Saturday night.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
NEWS
Circ. D. 166,814
APR 20 1956

61

The New Recordings

By M. B.

ANGEL has had the great Russian violinist, David Oistrakh, do another outstanding Prokofiev sonata—No. 2 in D major (Ang 35203). This is coupled with the Khatchaturian G minor sonata. The Prokofiev work is a lighter work than the No. 1 which Mr. Oistrakh played here, and has more immediate appeal. Both sonatas on the disk are melodic and reflect the sure touch of composers who have both imagination and technical mastery. Engineering-wise it is very good, too . . . Some sparkling Haydn is played for ANGEL (35312) by Kiev-born Igor Markevitch and the Orchestre National de la Radiodiffusion Francaise. The recording contains two Haydn favorites—the Symphony No. 101 in D (Clock) and No. 102 in B flat. The orchestra's woodwinds come thru with unusual beauty of tone.

* * *

COLUMBIA MASTERWORKS obtained a happy combination to do Faure's two very fine sonatas—the No. 1 in A major and No. 2 in E minor (ML 5049). Zino Francescatti, violinist with a warm tone, and Robert Casadesus, one of the more sensitive pianists, have particular sympathy for and understanding of Faure, as they have displayed in Library of Congress' recitals. An excellent disk all around . . . Mr. Francescatti, with the very capable Artur Balsam at the piano, also gives an highly appealing Ravel recital for COLUMBIA MASTERWORKS. The disk (ML 5058) contains the Sonata for violin and piano; Tzigane; Kaddisch (Prayer for the Dead) and Piece en Forme de Habanera and Berceuse. Mr. Francescatti's style is particularly suited to Ravel. Incidentally, this is the first complete long-play collection of the composer's violin-piano works.

* * *

VOX offers an outstanding recording in the Schubert Mass in A flat major (PL 97760). This magnificent work is performed most impressively by the Academy Chamber Chorus and Pro Musica Orchestra of Vienna under Ferdinand Grossman's authoritative direction. The excellent soloists are Amy Felb Mayer, soprano; Sadako Sasaki, alto; Murray Dickie, tenor, and Norman Foster, bass.

* * *

RCA VICTOR marked the Easter season by issuing Haydn's The Seven Last Words of Christ. The version here consists of seven individual string quartets beautifully performed by first desk Boston Symphony members. These are Richard Burgin, concert master; Alfred Krips, second violin; Joseph de Pasquale, viola, and Samuel Mayes cello. It is a chamber group to be proud of, and RCA VICTOR is to be congratulated for planning more of their recordings. The sound in this, their first one, is fine . . . The engineering is also proficient in RCA VICTOR'S new Tchaikovsky Symphony No. 4 (LM 1953). Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony give a sumptuous account of the work. The disk is another in the Boston Symphony 75th anniversary series . . . Whether or not his musical ideas appeal to you, Bartok is well worth listening to. Particularly RCA VICTOR'S recording of his Concerto for Orchestra (LM 1934). This one by Fritz Reiner and the Chicago Symphony is well engineered and well performed. Mr Reiner has been acquainted with the work from the days Bartok created it . . . Mario Lanza sings well in the RCA VICTOR disk of the sound track from his film "Serenade." (LM 1996). This story of an opera singer is filled with such popular arias from Rosenkavalier, Rigoletto Otello and such popular songs as La Danza and Torna a Surriento.

Herald (m)
BOSTON. Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 130,559
APR 20 1956

71st Pops Season To Start on May 1

America's most famous springtime musical fare, the concerts of the Boston Pops Orchestra, will begin in Symphony Hall on Tuesday evening, May first, for the 71st season. Arthur Fiedler has been the conductor of the Boston Pops concerts since 1930.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR
Circ. D. 245,642 - S. 273,244
APR 19 1956

NEWS OF MUSIC

Novelty Introduced In Choral Concert

By IRVING LOWENS

Washington [illegible] Cathedral Choral Societies [illegible] Callaway, conductor. Soloists [illegible] Addison, soprano; Beverly [illegible] mezzo-soprano; Leslie Chabay [illegible] baritone. Program: Mozart: Mass [illegible] Mozart: Aria [illegible] aflanni, from Don Giovanni [illegible] Mozart: Aria [illegible] from Don Giovanni [illegible] Mozart: Prayers of Kierkegaard, Barber.

Conductor Paul Callaway, the massive Washington and Cathedral Choral Societies, a good portion of the National Symphony Orchestra, four excellent soloists and an audience of about 2,500 music-lovers were on hand last night at the Washington Cathedral as Mozart's unfinished C minor Mass and Samuel Barber's magnificent new "Prayers of Kierkegaard" were heard.

The Mozart work was presented in novel fashion, with arias from a sacred cantata in Italian, "Davidde Penitente" (itself fashioned out of the music of the incomplete Mass) being interpolated after the Gloria, at the point where a Gradual would normally come in the liturgy. As a result, tenor Leslie Chabay had an unexpected chance to star in a piece where he normally has very little to do, and soprano Adele Addison thrilled the audience with her sensational singing of a highly Italianate aria, complete with florid cadenza and equivalent vocal pyrotechnics.

Mr. Callaway's proved to be a surprisingly romantic conception of the Mass, conceived more in 19th-century than in contemporary terms, and no doubt based on the enormous choral and instrumental resources at his command. In many ways, the reading was reminiscent of the storied English performances of Victorian days, with Gargantuan choruses that swept the hearer along on waves of enthusiasm with sheer mass of sound.

In the homophonic and antiphonal choral portions of the Mass, such as in the Credo and the Sanctus, there was blazing power and overwhelming grandeur, and in the quiet, legato passages Mr. Callaway's remarkable way with a large chorus was evident. So far as this reviewer is concerned, however, the high spots were not sufficient compensation for the almost inevitable lack of definition in the great fugues and the buzzing fuzziness in contrapuntal passages.

The interpolated arias, while good grist for the soloists' mill, were not an unqualified success in helping to give the torso of the Mass balance. The contrast between the Latin and the Italian is unfortunate. Furthermore, Mozart wrote the arias in a strongly operatic idiom which clashes, stylistically, to a certain extent, with that of the C minor Mass despite its rococo lines. In the "Davidde Penitente," the tenor aria comes after the Domine Deus and the soprano aria after the Qui Tollis; in last night's version, both were inserted after the Cum Sancto Spiritu. The result seemed to be a breaking of the mood of the Mass rather than an enhancing.

The Barber "Prayers of Kierkegaard," on the other hand, was a resounding and brilliant success. Premiered by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Charles Munch with Leontyne Price as featured soloist only a little more than a year ago, it has been warmly received throughout the world. Mr. Callaway's version was the second of the Washington season, Warner Lawson having conducted the piece with the Howard University Choir and the National Symphony Orchestra just a few months back. On repetition, it still sounds much like a modern masterpiece.

This was a work after Mr. Callaway's heart, and to it he brought tremendous power and awe-inspiring eloquence. Here the choral work was superb, from the whispered pianissimos to the the frenzied climaxes, with the orchestral men in a particularly virtuosic mood.

Adele Addison was the soprano soloist in the Barber (as she was in Dean Lawson's performance).

ENGLISH ROAST BEEF, YORKSHIRE
Our Quahog Chowder
Chicken Chow Mein
Fresh Seafood, Sauté a la Newburg
Assorted Relishes
Barbecued Tiny Spare Ribs
Chicken Salad
Tunafish
Oysters
Littlenecks
Stuffed Eggs
SUNDAY NIGHT SMORG
April 22nd — 4 p.m. to
130 LB. ENGLISH ROAST BEEF on Sundays st
The Jolly Whaler will serve a sumptuous
The New Bedford

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 20,000
APR 19 1956

MUSIC IN REVIEW

By GERALD A. BERLIN

BSO PERFORMS RUSSIAN WORKS

Editor's Note:—This week's column is by Allan Sly, pianist and composer, whose criticism often appears here.

Recent details of Boston Symphony programing had led me to wonder whether we had been having enough Russian music lately. As if in response to such a notion the twenty-second Saturday program of the orchestra, featuring M. Munch's return, consisted of two Russian works and a Brahms. However, the former did not sound exotic; rather, all three works seemed to possess some family likenesses, all being strongly rooted in the best European traditions and giving the listener more than one reminder of the debt we owe to Italian influences.

Tchaikovsky's Francesca da Rimini, after Dante (and long after Liszt), was a perfect vehicle for Mr. Munch's now well-known flair for orchestral virtuosity in performance. But even so, the composition came to us in very concise terms, and for my part, supported my present disposition to regard Tchaikovsky as a classicist. What superb proportions, what self control, what [illegible] he only fault I could find during the [illegible] nothing to do with the activity on the [illegible] do with the house management. An [illegible] unseemly, untimely and unnecessary [illegible] reach a certain part of the house re[illegible] gress. Ignoring five or six doors that [illegible] tion than where he entered, he dis[illegible] steners as he zig-zagged to his objec[illegible] or with his heels a rhythmic pattern [illegible] e those coming from the stage. In [illegible] lance I have never seen the like of it. [illegible] nent could avoid intrusions such as [illegible] lly as to the manner in which the [illegible] was attended to. The orchestra, the [illegible] must be guaranteed the setting up [illegible] ymphony Hall.

[illegible] atecomers, who had patiently awaitZino Francescatti was presented as [illegible] minor concerto. The scaled-down [illegible] milieu for the golden tone and serene [illegible] ut the performance had a defect in [illegible] o respond slowly to the increases in [illegible] wished to initiate here and there. [illegible] before in the playing of concertos [illegible] t the soloist must share some respon[illegible] maladjustments. A soloist some[illegible] m of his own eagerness and strives [illegible] the orchestral background tries to [illegible] aturday the frustration of this con[illegible] e proportions and to some listeners [illegible] acoustical problem rather than one [illegible] genesis of a short memory lapse [illegible] While this was unfortunate, an ex[illegible] hold the threads together for him[illegible] ny outstanding virtues of the com[illegible] on.

[illegible] Francescatti was joined by Samuel [illegible] e Concerto, opus 102, in A minor. [illegible] n, the subtleties of this great sym[illegible] ershadowed by the intriguing inter[illegible] inch captained the performance in [illegible] eloquence of delivery and beauty [illegible] h will conduct the Handel "Faithful [illegible] D major piano concerto, K. 451, [illegible] soloist, and two works by Honegger — the third symphony ("Liturgique") and "Chant de joie" (new to Boston).

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,872
APR 20 1956

75 YEARS OF SYMPHONY

. . . Mrs. Ellen Perry Locke, 102, of Providence, a native of Boston's Back Bay, who attended the Boston Symphony Orchestra's initial concert 75 years ago, was honored during the orchestra's appearance in Veterans Memorial Auditorium, Providence, last night where she was greeted by Conductor Charles Munch. (AP wirephoto).

Valente

Rudolf Firkusny will be the piano soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra this afternoon and Saturday night.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
NEWS
Circ. D. 166,814
APR 20 1956

The New Recordings

By M. B.

ANGEL has had the great Russian violinist, David Oistrakh, do another outstanding Prokofiev sonata—No. 2 in D major (Ang 35203). This is coupled with the Khatchaturian G minor sonata. The Prokofiev work is a lighter work than the No. 1 which Mr. Oistrakh played here, and has more immediate appeal. Both sonatas on the disk are melodic and reflect the sure touch of composers who have both imagination and technical mastery. Engineering-wise it is very good, too . . . Some sparkling Haydn is played for ANGEL (35312) by Kiev-born Igor Markevitch and the Orchestre National de la Radiodiffusion Francaise. The recording contains two Haydn favorites—the Symphony No. 101 in D (Clock) and No. 102 in B flat. The orchestra's woodwinds come thru with unusual beauty of tone.

* * *

COLUMBIA MASTERWORKS obtained a happy combination to do Faure's two very fine sonatas—the No. 1 in A major and No. 2 in E minor (ML 5049). Zino Francescatti, violinist with a warm tone, and Robert Casadesus, one of the more sensitive pianists, have particular sympathy for and understanding of Faure, as they have displayed in Library of Congress' recitals. An excellent disk all around . . . Mr. Francescatti, with the very capable Artur Balsam at the piano, also gives an highly appealing Ravel recital for COLUMBIA MASTERWORKS. The disk (ML 5058) contains the Sonata for violin and piano; Tzigane; Kaddisch (Prayer for the Dead) and Piece en Forme de Habanera and Berceuse. Mr. Francescatti's style is particularly suited to Ravel. Incidentally, this is the first complete long-play collection of the composer's violin-piano works.

* * *

VOX offers an outstanding recording in the Schubert Mass in A flat major (PL 97760). This magnificent work is performed most impressively by the Academy Chamber Chorus and Pro Musica Orchestra of Vienna under Ferdinand Grossman's authoritative direction. The excellent soloists are Amy Felbl Mayer, soprano; Sadako Sasaki, alto; Murray Dickie, tenor, and Norman Foster, bass.

* * *

RCA VICTOR marked the Easter season by issuing Haydn's The Seven Last Words of Christ. The version here consists of seven individual string quartets beautifully performed by first desk Boston Symphony members. These are Richard Burgin, concert master; Alfred Krips, second violin; Joseph de Pasquale, viola, and Samuel Mayes cello. It is a chamber group to be proud of, and RCA VICTOR is to be congratulated for planning more of their recordings. The sound in this, their first one, is fine . . . The engineering is also proficient in RCA VICTOR'S new Tchaikovsky Symphony No. 4 (LM 1953). Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony give a sumptuous account of the work. The disk is another in the Boston Symphony 75th anniversary series . . . Whether or not his musical ideas appeal to you, Bartok is well worth listening to. Particularly RCA VICTOR'S recording of his Concerto for Orchestra (LM 1934). This one by Fritz Reiner and the Chicago Symphony is well engineered and well performed. Mr Reiner has been acquainted with the work from the days Bartok created it . . . Mario Lanza sings well in the RCA VICTOR disk of the sound track from his film "Serenade." (LM 1996). This story of an opera singer is filled with such popular arias from Rosenkavalier, Rigoletto, Otello and such popular songs as La Danza and Torna a Surriento.

Herald (m)
BOSTON. Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 130,559
APR 20 1956

71st Pops Season To Start on May 1

America's most famous springtime musical fare, the concerts of the Boston Pops Orchestra, will begin in Symphony Hall on Tuesday evening, May first, for the 71st season. Arthur Fiedler has been the conductor of the Boston Pops concerts since 1930.

62

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 130,559

APR 19 1956

Friends of Boston Symphony Give $151,275 for Support

The Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra contributed $151,275 toward the orchestra's support, a substantial increase over last year, Dr. Palfrey Perkins, chairman of the organization, announced at the annual meeting yesterday in Symphony Hall.

He said the current membership of 3,992 represented a slight decline. About 1,500 Friends attended the meeting and heard Dr. Palfrey report that one contribution was 50 cents, from an 11-year-old boy member.

The orchestra's attempt to interest business in supporting it had met with increasing success, it was reported, with $8,535 pledged by Boston firms.

Henry B. Cabot, president of the trustees, announced that all but $20,000 already had been pledged of the $300,000 necessary for the orchestra's forthcoming second European tour. A substantial part of the amount pledged came from the President's Fund.

Cabot emphasized that none of the $300,000 was being sought from the Friends. The tour will begin in August, and there is still a possibility that the orchestra will visit Russia, he said.

After the meeting, the orchestra played Mozart's Haffner Symphony and three dances by Falla. The concert was followed by a reception and tea in the art gallery.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 122,000

APR 19 1956

Friends Give $151,275

Former Symphony Violinist Hailed for Fund-Raising Help

At the annual meeting of the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall yesterday—the largest to date—both progress and continuing problems relating to the financial requirements of the orchestra were presented by Dr. Palfrey Perkins, chairman of the Friends, and by Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra's board of trustees.

The total number of Friends for this season was given by Dr. Perkins as just under 4000, of which 324 were new members. This included businesses and industries. Donors ranged in age from 11 to 90. Their combined contributions to the support of the orchestra amounted to $151,275.

It was pointed out that a turn for the better in enlisting the support of business and industry had been achieved through the efforts of Carlos Pinfield. He, it was explained, after retiring as a violinist in the orchestra for 43 years, had volunteered to help raise money, and had been of great help by his "energy, tact, and persistence." Introduced to the meeting by Cabot, he was applauded enthusiastically.

It remained a fact, however, Cabot said, that "all in all our financial situation is very serious, and we want to increase the number of Friends, and we may be calling on many of you to help us do this. We believe that this community will not be willing to let this great orchestra fail for lack of support."

Referring to forthcoming commitments of the orchestra, Cabot said:

"The remainder of this 75th season is a busy one. After the Pops, the Esplanade and the Berkshire season our orchestra embarks on the European tour. With generous but not entire financing by the United States Government, through the President's Fund, they will give concerts in Ireland, Scotland, Norway, Sweden, Finland, Denmark, West Germany, Austria, we hope Italy, Switzerland, France and England. Now such a tour has many advantages both for the orchestra, Boston and the United States. As ambassadors of good will our orchestra can't be surpassed—but the whole thing is very expensive. I want to assure you that no part of this expense comes out of Boston Symphony Orchestra funds. This trip will be wholly financed by funds given for this trip and designated for this trip only."

Following the addresses, Charles Munch conducted the full orchestra in Mozart's "Haffner" Symphony, and dances from "The Three Cornered Hat," by de Falla. The Friends and members of the orchestra were then guests at tea in the Symphony Hall Art Gallery.

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 185,401

APR 20 1956

FRIENDS OF BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA received tea yesterday from Mrs. Henry B. Cabot of Dover. At the tea table were, left to right, Charles Munch, director; Edward A. Taft of Boston a trustee, and Thomas D. Perry, Jr., orchestra manager. The organization held its annual meeting in Symphony Hall.

MUSICAL FUTURE OF BOSTON was bolstered yesterday at the Friends of Boston Symphony Orchestra tea where, left to right, Theodore Banks of Cambridge, a trustee, Mrs. Lucy Putnam of Boston, and Henry B. Cabot of Dover, president of the board of trustees, chatted.

EDINBURGH FESTIVAL

Boston Symphony to Give 5 Concerts

Seven symphony orchestras and programs of drama, ballet, opera and chamber music will be featured at the Edinburgh Festival, scheduled for Aug. 19 through [illegible] Travel Association has announced.

[illegible]etimes [illegible] of the [illegible]th an- [illegible]c and [illegible] at least [illegible] United [illegible] three- [illegible]ccessive [illegible]mphony, [illegible]let, the [illegible] Com- [illegible] Piccolo [illegible] will al- [illegible]irection [illegible]nt con- [illegible]eux, its [illegible] its 75th [illegible]nniver- [illegible]sary of the death of Serge Koussevitsky, the orchestra has commissioned several new works from distinguished composers.

The Royal Philharmonic will be heard under the direction of Sir Thomas Beecham, doyen of British conductors. Other orchestras scheduled are: Vienna Hofmusikkapelle, London Mozart Players, Scottish National Orchestra, B.B.C. Scottish Orchestra, National Youth Orchestra of Great Britain.

Four productions will be given by the Hamburg State Opera, including Mozart's Die Zauberflote and Strawinsky's Oedipus and Mavra.

Among artists engaged for individual recitals are Myra Hess, Wolfgang Schneiderhan, Robert Casadesus, Isaac Stern and Irmgard Seefried.

Programs of chamber music will be given by the Amadeus String Quartet, the Vegh String Quartet and the new Edinburgh Quartet.

On the drama side of the festival, Canada will be repesented by the Stratford Ontario Festival Company presenting Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Balanced against this company will be the Piccolo Teatro of Milan, which will perform the Goldoni comedy, Arlecchino, and another play by Pirandello. This brilliant Italian company acknowledged to be the finest in that country, has appeared in all major European capitals and in South America. Since the war it has appeared in London, where it met a sensational success.

Matching anything else on the program, at least for sheer color, will be the traditional military tattoo. Staged within the walls of Edinburgh Castle dominated only by flood and spotlights the tattoo is famous for precision drilling and marching by kilted clansmen and bagpipe band, pouring out unearthly music.

Returning as old friends will be the Sadler's Wells Ballet, which will appear under the direction of Dame Ninette de Valois. For the first time, Edinburgh will hear the Ram Gopal Indian Ballet in a specially-commissioned dance of "The Legend of the Taj Mahal."

Reservations will open on April 2, and because of the anticipated demand from all parts of the world, visitors are advised to place their orders on or about that date. Applications should be addressed to your travel agent or to the Edinburgh Festival Society Ltd., Synod Hall, Castle Terrace, Edinburgh 1, Scotland.

Pops Open 71st Season Tuesday Night

America's most famous springtime musical fare, the Boston Pops Orchestra concerts, will begin in Symphony Hall on Tuesday night, May 1, for the 71st season. Arthur Fiedler has been the conductor of the B. P. concerts since 1930.

With its light musical content played in an atmosphere of gay and friendly informality including liquid and gustatory refreshments, a Pops night, however, remains steadfastly and exclusively indigenous to Boston and the Boston Pops.

As always, many local organizations and businesses have arranged their own special Nights at the Pops. Among those who will be in attendance during the first week are the New England Grenfell Association, the American Society of Orthodontists, the Women's City Club, Colby Junior College, Peter Bent Brigham Hospital, Mount Ida Junior College, Dana Hall and Regis College.

The season beginning Tuesday, May 1, will continue through Saturday, June 30. During the first five weeks there will be concerts every night including Sunday. After the fifth week the concerts will be played Monday through Saturday evenings, with no Sunday concerts. Tickets for each of the first-week concerts are now on sale at the Symphony Hall boxoffice, and tickets will be on sale throughout the season one week in advance of each concert.

62

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 130,559

APR 19 1956

Friends of Boston Symphony Give $151,275 for Support

The Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra contributed $151,275 toward the orchestra's support, a substantial increase over last year, Dr. Palfrey Perkins, chairman of the organization, announced at the annual meeting yesterday in Symphony Hall.

He said the current membership of 3,992 represented a slight decline. About 1,500 Friends attended the meeting and heard Dr. Palfrey report that one contribution was 50 cents, from an 11-year-old boy member.

The orchestra's attempt to interest business in supporting it had met with increasing success, it was reported, with $8,535 pledged by Boston firms.

Henry B. Cabot, president of the trustees, announced that all but $20,000 already had been pledged of the $300,000 necessary for the orchestra's forthcoming second European tour. A substantial part of the amount pledged came from the President's Fund.

Cabot emphasized that none of the $300,000 was being sought from the Friends. The tour will begin in August, and there is still a possibility that the orchestra will visit Russia, he said.

After the meeting, the orchestra played Mozart's Haffner Symphony and three dances by Falla. The concert was followed by a reception and tea in the art gallery.

FRIENDS OF BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA received tea yesterday from Mrs. Henry B. Cabot of Dover. At the tea table were, left to right, Charles Munch, director; Edward A. Taft of Boston a trustee, and Thomas D. Perry, Jr., orchestra manager. The organization held its annual meeting in Symphony Hall.

MUSICAL FUTURE OF BOSTON was bolstered yesterday at the Friends of Boston Symphony Orchestra tea where, left to right, Theodore Banks of Cambridge, a trustee, Mrs. Lucy Putnam of Boston, and Henry B. Cabot of Dover, president of the board of trustees, chatted.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 122,000

APR 19 1956

Friends Give $151,275

Former Symphony Violinist Hailed for Fund-Raising Help

At the annual meeting of the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall yesterday—the largest to date—both progress and continuing problems relating to the financial requirements of the orchestra were presented by Dr. Palfrey Perkins, chairman of the Friends, and by Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra's board of trustees.

The total number of Friends for this season was given by Dr. Perkins as just under 4000, of which 324 were new members. This included businesses and industries. Donors ranged in age from 11 to 90. Their combined contributions to the support of the orchestra amounted to $151,275.

It was pointed out that a turn for the better in enlisting the support of business and industry had been achieved through the efforts of Carlos Pinfield. He, it was explained, after retiring as a violinist in the orchestra for 43 years, had volunteered to help raise money, and had been of great help by his "energy, tact, and persistence." Introduced to the meeting by Cabot, he was applauded enthusiastically.

It remained a fact, however, Cabot said, that "all in all our financial situation is very serious, and we want to increase the number of Friends, and we may be calling on many of you to help us do this. We believe that this community will not be willing to let this great orchestra fail for lack of support."

Referring to forthcoming commitments of the orchestra, Cabot said:

"The remainder of this 75th season is a busy one. After the Pops, the Esplanade and the Berkshire season our orchestra embarks on the European tour. With generous but not entire financing by the United States Government, through the President's Fund, they will give concerts in Ireland, Scotland, Norway, Sweden, Finland, Denmark, West Germany, Austria, we hope Italy, Switzerland, France and England. Now such a tour has many advantages both for the orchestra, Boston and the United States. As ambassadors of good will our orchestra can't be surpassed—but the whole thing is very expensive. I want to assure you that no part of this expense comes out of Boston Symphony Orchestra funds. This trip will be wholly financed by funds given for this trip and designated for this trip only."

Following the addresses, Charles Munch conducted the full orchestra in Mozart's "Haffner" Symphony, and dances from "The Three Cornered Hat," by de Falla. The Friends and members of the orchestra were then guests at tea in the Symphony Hall Art Gallery.

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 185,401

APR 20 1956

Pops Open 71st

America's most famous springtime musical fare, the Boston Pops Orchestra concerts, will begin in Symphony Hall on Tuesday night, May 1, for the 71st season. Arthur Fiedler has been the conductor of the B. P. concerts since 1930.

With its light musical content played in an atmosphere of gay and friendly informality including liquid and gustatory refreshments, a Pops night, however, remains steadfastly and exclusively indigenous to Boston and the Boston Pops.

As always, many local organizations and businesses have arranged their own special Nights at the Pops. Among those who will be in attendance during the first w Grenfel

Steve Allen

can So
Women
College
pital, N
Dana H
The May 1
urday,

This is one of those w
, one after the other. Late now, has been designated a

Starting in late June, Allen ll head the Sunday-night "Comy Hour" spot, from 8 to 9, on regular basis. From then on,
'll cut down his "Tonight"
ores to three or four nights a

EDINBURGH FESTIVAL

Boston Symphony to Give 5 Concerts

Seven symphony orchestras and programs of drama, ballet, opera and chamber music will be featured at the Edinburgh Festival, scheduled for Aug. 19 through Sept. 8, the British Travel Association has announced.

The Scottish capital, sometimes called "the festival city of the world," will celebrate the 10th anniversary of its great music and drama fete. Artists from at least six countries, including the United States, will take part.

Some highlights of the three-week event include five successive concerts by the Boston Symphony, the Ram Gopal Indian Ballet, the Stratford Ontario Festival Company from Canada and the Piccolo Teatro of Italy.

The Boston Symphony will alternately play under the direction of Charles Munch, permanent conductor and Pierre Monteux, its former maestro. To mark its 75th anniversary and the fifth anniversary of the death of Serge Koussevitsky, the orchestra has commissioned several new works from distinguished composers.

The Royal Philharmonic will be heard under the direction of Sir Thomas Beecham, doyen of British conductors. Other orchestras scheduled are: Vienna Hofmusikkapelle, London Mozart Players, Scottish National Orchestra, B.B.C. Scottish Orchestra, National Youth Orchestra of Great Britain.

Four productions will be given by the Hamburg State Opera, including Mozart's Die Zauberflote and Strawinsky's Oedipus and Mavra.

Among artists engaged for individual recitals are Myra Hess, Wolfgang Schneiderhan, Robert Casadesus, Isaac Stern and Irmgard Seefried.

Programs of chamber music will be given by the Amadeus String Quartet, the Vegh String Quartet and the new Edinburgh Quartet.

On the drama side of the festival, Canada will be repesented by the Stratford Ontario Festival Company presenting Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Balanced against this company will be the Piccolo Teatro of Milan, which will perform the Goldoni comedy, Arlecchino, and another play by Pirandello. This brilliant Italian company acknowledged to be the finest in that country, has appeared in all major European capitals and in South America. Since the war it has appeared in London, where it had a sensational success.

Matching anything else on the program, at least for spectacular color, will be the traditional military tattoo. Staged within the walls of Edinburgh Castle dominated only by flood and spotlights, the tattoo is famous for precision drilling and marching by kilted clansmen and bagpipe bands blasting out unearthly music.

Returning as old friends will be the Sadler's Wells Ballet, which will appear under the direction of Dame Ninette de Valois. For the first time, Edinburgh will present the Ram Gopal Indian Ballet and a specially-commissioned dance of "The Legend of the Taj Mahal."

Reservations will open on April 1 and because of the anticipated demand from all parts of the world, visitors are advised to place their orders on or about that date. Applications should be addressed to your travel agent or to the Edinburgh Festival Society Ltd., Synod Hall, Castle Terrace, Edinburgh 1, Scotland.

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,872

APR 21 1956

Fund Campaign Asked

Hub Says Library Cost Burden Unfair

By Everett G. Martin
Staff Writer of The Christian Science Monitor

When it comes to giving service, the Boston Public Library belongs to the entire Greater Boston area. But when it comes to paying its operating bill, it becomes the exclusive property of Boston.

Attempts to remedy this situation were rebuffed in the State Legislature this year when a bill asking that the city be reimbursed for a portion of the money it spends on the library's reference section was turned down.

Now the Boston City Council has asked the library trustees to consider a solicitation campaign for gifts to meet the operating expenses. As yet no action has been taken on this request.

The annual operating expense of the library is approximately $3,350,000. Its reference and research facilities, which are classed among the finest in the country, cost the city of Boston about $1,000,000 a year.

Yet up to 50 per cent of the users of the facilities are out-of-towners. It is argued that Boston should be reimbursed for the facilities it maintains for the use of the entire Boston area.

State Avoids Bill

A payment of $500,000 a year from the state has been suggested, but legislators have not risen to the bait. In fact, a bill that asked for only about 30 per cent of the reference costs ($333,000) was reported unfavorably this year by the Committee on State Administration.

Legislators from the western parts of the state are not eager to vote funds for any Boston project.

Another suggestion has been to recognize the regional nature of the library as has been done in the case of the water system and MTA.

Nonresident borrowers' cards, which cost $3 a year, are to be found in 256 out of the 351 cities and towns in the commonwealth. In each of 22 of the cities and towns surrounding Boston there is an average of 320 nonresident borrowers' cards. A total of 10,590 such cards have been issued.

The number of cards, however, does not tell the whole story, because it does not account for the persons who drop in to use the reference material. But it gives a good indication of the use to which the library is put by residents of surrounding communities.

Extensive Collections

The presence of extensive collections of volumes on a great variety of subjects at the Boston library, has made it unnecessary for other libraries in the commonwealth to amass their own collections, it is argued.

Boston, for instance, has two full-time employees who do nothing but handle inter-library loan requests from other public libraries in the Commonwealth.

In view of this, it has been put forth that some type of metropolitan district setup for the library should be instituted that would spread the cost more equitably among the library's users.

Governor Herter's Administrative Library Commission recommended recently that the state should provide funds to aid local public libraries. Based on the formula for distribution of such grant-in-aid funds suggested by the commission, Boston would receive $241,500.

The formula calls for the state to pay half the salaries, or $1,500, whichever is smaller, for each library employee per 5,000 population of the town it serves.

Problem Remains

Spokesmen for the Boston library hasten to point out that this amount, while necessary to the city, would not go toward reimbursing the city for outsiders' use of its reference services. Rather it would go toward the more adequate development of book collections and services in common with other public libraries in the state.

Reimbursement for the expense of its reference section would be an additional need to the proposed state grants-in-aid, because of the unique position of the Boston library.

Another source of revenue, which is largely untapped by the Boston library, is private gifts from firms and foundations.

Boston City Councilor Gabriel F. Piemonte has pointed to the success of such donations in supporting the New York Public Library and asked that trustees of the Boston Public Library consider a "continuing program of annual solicitation and giving."

N.Y. Endowment

Through private gifts and endowment income, the New York library pays for its reference division. It took a period of over 10 years to build up the gifts to a sizable amount, but in fiscal 1955 they amounted to $429,000.

Boston library put on a drive during its centennial year that raised only $50,000, but it was an inconclusive campaign. However, it indicated the potential, Mr. Piemonte argues.

The major groups who give to the New York library are publishers, insurance companies, petroleum companies, foundations, and lawyers. An effort is made to reach groups that make particular use of the reference facilities.

Boston would face difficulties in starting a solicitation program, it is argued. It has been a public library since 1854—it was the first large municipal library in the nation—and the prospective donors might feel that they are being asked to contribute to what should be a city function. They might argue that they pay taxes for those functions.

The New York library's situation is slightly different in this respect, because it is actually a private library operating through a contract with the city.

Boston Fund Restricted

Boston has endowments which total about $2,000,000 and produce an income of $50,000 annually, but these funds are mostly limited for specific purposes such as building funds or purchase of certain items, so that the library is not free to spend the income where it needs to.

The New York library's endowments total $52,400,000 and produced an income of $2,485,600 in fiscal 1955. Since the way in which the income could be spent was not so strictly limited as in Boston's case, nearly the entire sum—$2,465,600—was spent for the reference library.

The New York library conducts a quiet campaign with prominent business leaders behind it. Irving S. Olds, retired chairman of the board of United States Steel, and Devereux C. Josephs, president of the New York Life Insurance Company, were cochairmen of last year's drive.

It is felt that Boston, too, needs the efforts of leaders in its business community to initiate and follow through on an annual fund-raising campaign that over a period of years might prove to be an important factor in supporting the library. Like the Boston Symphony, the library also needs its "friends," it is argued.

Private foundations are a source of revenue that has not been developed fully in Boston's case. New York received $61,000 from them in fiscal 1955.

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 154,241

APR 21 1956

Symphony Musicians, Staffs Guests of Munch at Supper

Conductor Charles Munch last night played host to the entire Boston Symphony Orchestra family—musicians, trustees, managerial staff, secretaries, executive staff and maintenance staff—at a sumptuous supper at the Somerset.

The noted conductor explained to the 250 guests, including wives, that he arranged the party to meet with his colleagues away from the stage and also to honor the 75th season, just completed, of the famed orchestra.

Among the guests were Francis Lee Higginson, a nephew of Henry Lee Higginson, who founded the orchestra in October of 1881, and Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra. Former and retired members of the Symphony also were on hand.

Telegrams were received from conductors Dmitri Mitropoulos and Leonard Bernstein; Mayor Hynes, and from former soloists with the orchestra, including violinist Zino Francescatti and pianist Robert Casadesus.

Although Munch had insisted that there were to be no speeches, Richard Burgin, associate conductor and concert master, paid tribute to Munch. And music was written especially for the occasion.

Munch was hailed as "Charles Le Beau, Charles Le Beau, Who Came to Us From Sunny France" by the entire assemblage in a composition by Jacobus Langendoen, cellist and composer of the company. The words were written by violinist James Nagy, also of the orchestra. Arthur Fiedler was at the piano.

The famed conductor told the group "the memory of this occasion will always be one of the most pleasant experiences of my life. I thank you from the bottom of my heart."

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,872

APR 21 1956

63

'Outdoor Art Gallery' Attracts Wide Attention to Boston Symphony

Advertising Aids Public

Billboard Campaigns

By Everett M. Smith
Staff Writer of The Christian Science Monitor

For many years, the outdoor advertising industry has contributed, each month, a portion of its facilities to serve at least one cause or public service advancing or contributing to the public health, safety, morals, and general welfare.

Last year, nearly $2,000,000 worth of poster space, including 69,508 24-sheet postings, was contributed to national public service campaigns alone. This figure does not include the value of space given for many local campaigns.

The outdoor advertising industry cooperates very closely with other media in the programs as arranged by the Advertising Council, successor to the War Advertising Council, which is carefully scheduled each month covering various themes of particular urgency—such as the Crusade for Freedom, Radio Free Europe, the Ground Observer Corps, the Red Cross, and the Boys' Clubs of America.

In addition, many regional and local firms cooperate regularly with the larger outdoor advertising companies in promoting or aiding civic and private enterprises, highway safety campaigns, and other public services.

Symphony Billboard

An example of this sort of contribution is found in the huge billboard at the intersection of Brookline Avenue and the Riverway in Boston's Fenway, where members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have been reproduced so realistically that several persons have said they could recognize various musician friends in the group.

Others—and many have written in praise of the display—have expressed a facetious desire that the framed "salute" to the orchestra by the Boston Envelope Company might be "moved occasionally to one side so as to afford a glimpse of the other members of the famous orchestra."

Seventy-five years ago, when the Boston Symphony began its career, and for nearly 40 years after, only one wealthy man—its founder, Henry Lee Higginson—made up its deficits. He could foresee the orchestra's great contribution to Boston's culture and musical knowledge.

However, with the tax situation what it is today, the Boston Symphony has been obliged to rely more and more on individual contributions from music lovers and from industry for help.

An example of such industrial cooperation is found in what many who pass the Fenway billboard have come to regard as Boston's "outdoor art gallery." Their fan mail, both to the envelope company and to the Donnelly Advertising Corporation, tells of their enjoyment and appreciation of this billboard, the theme of which is changed every three months.

Three-Dimensional Effect

The current display, featuring Boston Symphony, has an almost third-dimensional effect which serves to enhance the reality of the musicians depicted.

Preparation for this series of displays highlighting points of historic and scenic interest in Greater Boston is the work of varied skills. Those who execute the finished drawings are artists of the first rank, holding many awards and prizes in the field of both "fine" and "commercial" art.

Whatever the nature of the billboard "copy," exhaustive research is undertaken to assure the authenticity of detail; picture collections are consulted in many cases, and color photographs are taken.

From these source materials, a half-dozen preliminary pencil drawings are prepared. By process of elimination, one or two of these pencil "roughs" are selected for further development.

Second drawings, known as "color comprehensives," are just what the name implies. While still not "finished art," nevertheless they permit everyone concerned to visualize with reasonable accuracy what may be expected from the final rendering.

Final Drawing

The final, full-scale — (one inch to one foot) — drawing is usually done in a combination of transparent and opaque watercolors. After approval, the drawing is sent to what is known as the "pounce room," so-called because of the use of small, porous cloth bags filled with ground charcoal, lampblack, or burnt umber, and called pounces.

The pounce room actually is a large gallery which can be completely darkened, and which is entirely bare save for a Baloptican or opaque projection machine. The drawing is placed in this machine and is projected full size upon a wall which previously has been covered with huge sheets of paper.

On these sheets, the image is meticulously traced by the pounce makers—highly skilled men who follow each line and contour of the art work as it is projected.

These patterns are then perforated—much in the manner of a dressmaker's pattern—and the "pounces" are ready for the painters.

Design Blocked Out

Meantime, skilled color mixers have been preparing the paints to be used in the final outdoor rendering.

On arrival at the scene, and after the previous design has been "blocked out" or covered, the perforated sheets are placed on the surface of the panel, one at a time, in exactly the same relative position they occupied on the pounce room wall.

The small porous cloth bag, or pounce, is then tamped over the entire design. The fine powder filters through the thousands of minute perforations in the paper, and the design is thus transferred to the sign itself.

To the inexperienced, the pattern of innumerable dotted lines looks very much like an elaborate weather map. But, to the experienced painter, they provide an accurate guide.

And, by constant reference to the original art work, he is able to render a remarkably faithful reproduction of the original.

Finally, illumination experts add their bit in the way of assuring perfect night time visibility—and, there is little wonder, as many have expressed in their letters, that those who view this particular billboard almost expect to see the Boston Symphony swing into action.

Post (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 285,839

APR 21 1956

Music Review

Symphony Concert

By TUCKER KEISER

The Boston Symphony program opened yesterday with a beautiful reading of Handel's "The Faithful Shepherd" Suite, arranged by Beecham. Charles Munch elicited a finely balanced performance from the orchestra and alternated the Handelian allegro and cantabile in an extraordinarily perceptive manner.

The string section provided a radiance no other group can duplicate. By some strange Munch alchemy the finale was made to sound uncommonly like Berlioz Hungarian March.

Rudolf Firkusny joined the orchestra for a spirited performance of Mozart's Piano Concerto in D (K.451), heard for the first time at these concerts. The soloist played gracefully and accurately, maintaining a limpid line in the andante. Integration between piano and band was notable for its nuances.

Honegger's Third Symphony and "Chant de Joie" followed intermission. For all its pretensions, complexities, and detailed program, the symphony is basically unmusical, completely devoid of that emotional impulse which strikes a response in the listener's heart. The conductor, either piqued at the chill audience reaction or rapt in oblivious personal approval, refused to acknowledge the smattering of applause it did receive.

"Chant de Joie," another local premiere, is not even a good "Pops" encore.

64

Firkusny Symphony Soloist

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 130,559

APR 21 1956

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, gave the 23d program of the 75th season in Symphony Hall Yesterday afternoon. The soloist was Rudolf Firkusny, pianist. The program:

Suite for "Faithful Sherherd" ..... Handel-Beecham
Concerto in D (K. 451) ..... Mozart
Symphony No. 3; "Chant de joie" ..... Honegger

By RUDOLPH ELIE

In a gesture few virtuoso pianists would make, Rudolph Firkusny came to town yesterday afternoon to do a little-known Mozart Concerto and one that provided almost no opportunity for a display of pianistic technique. He did it beautifully, too, in a style at once sensitive and radiant.

With this concerto and its two immediate predecessors Mozart began the perfection of his style in this form. It is a style in which the concerto is not a vehicle for virtuoso display, but a perfect fusion of the orchestra and the piano. The orchestra supports, colors and reinforces the solo instrument in a discourse revealing a continuous interplay of the two. One, in short, despite the conventional orchestral tuttis, is not massed against the other. The consequence is a beguiling integration as pure musically as any music ever written.

This particular work, never heard at these concerts before, is roughly number 15 in the total body of concertos for the piano (There are roughly 26), and it is a happy work throughout. It is not a big work, but one on a smaller scale, and in it the influence of Haydn is very clear. The opening movement is light and gallant, the adagio is untroubled, the rondo jaunty, and it was interesting to note that Mr. Firkusny used the composer's own cadenzas in the two outer movements. This again underlines his integrity in the matter, for most pianist are here tempted to show off their technique in later, more brilliant cadenzas. But the fleetness, clarity and delicacy of his playing was apparent to all.

DELIGHTFUL TO HEAR

The concert opened with Handel's sunny suite from "The Faithful Shepherd," a set of five members arranged in a heavier orchestral scoring by Sir Thomas Beecham. From its stately beginning to its jolly conclusion it is delightful to hear, and it was made even more so in this case by a warm reading by Mr. Munch and a superb flute solo by Mrs. Doriot Anthony Dwyer.

While I was again enormously impressed with Honegger's Liturgical Symphony as a work of the greatest conviction and power, I was again dismayed by the program making that introduced the same composer's "Chant de joie" next on the program. The Chant is a good, lively piece of perhaps five or six minute's duration, but it totally erased whatever impression the Symphony had achieved and proved only that a man's ups and downs needn't necessarily be offered on the same day. Not that the Chant is much of a down, but in contrast to the Third Symphony it certainly is.

The final concert next week offers Mabel Daniel's Psalm of Praise for chorus, three trumpets, percussion and strings, and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,872

APR 21 1956

3 Recordings Over 50 Yrs. Become Unit

BOSTON, (AP) — A recording commemorating the 75th anniversary season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra features the group playing the same piece under the batons of three conductors.

Three recordings of Berlioz's "Hungarian March" made over a period of nearly half a century were dubbed together electronically to sound as one continuous performance.

Karl Muck, who became conductor in 1906, starts the march. The late Serge Koussevitzy "takes over" in the middle section and Charles Munch, the present director, concludes the piece.

SANTA MARIA, CALIF.
TIMES
Circ. D. 5,160

APR 24 1956

Pianist Plays Mozart Work; Honegger's Third Presented

By Harold Rogers

It was a concert of extremes—of the graces of Handel and Mozart in contrast with the intensities of Honegger.

Charles Munch opened with the suite for orchestra arranged by Sir Thomas Beecham from Handel's opera, "The Faithful Shepherd," and the Boston Symphony traversed its jolly dances, its Arcadian pastorale. No genteel shepherd or shepherdess could hope to tend their docile sheep to lovelier music. Doriot Anthony Dwyer's flute set the air a-shimmer with its sunny melodies.

★ ★ ★

Rudolf Firkusny then gave us a completely satisfying performance of Mozart's Piano Concerto in D major, K. 451, heard for the first time at these concerts. (It seems incredible that there are piano concertos by Mozart still unplayed by the Boston Symphony.)

Mr. Firkusny does not play Mozart in the crisp, dry manner chosen by most pianists, nor does he sentimentalize the music in a romantic way. Since the piece was composed for an early pianoforte, Mr. Firkusny treated it pianistically. He used the pedal with proper restraint; his tone was warm and glowing, his scale passages clean and limpid, And his listeners were pleased, of that there is no doubt.

Mr. Munch devoted the post-intermission period to Honegger — a giant among modern symphonists. The composer wrote the last four of his five symphonies between 1941 and his passing last year. In the second, third, and fifth he achieves emotional heights second to none in this century.

His third, the Symphonie Liturgique heard yesterday, is not one to please those who resist a high dissonance content, yet never was dissonance more aptly employed. Some listeners feel that contemporary composers use dissonance to express the stresses of our troubled times. In this work Honegger uses it to express the age-old battle between good and evil that goes on in the human heart; and those who know something of this battle also know that it is not accompanied by lyrical and diatonic harmony.

★ ★ ★

It is a cataclysmic struggle, and in the first two movements the composer establishes an intense aspiration through a marvelous choice of harmonic frictions. The cataclysm is reached in the third and final movement, after which the prayer—"Dona nobis pacem"—is answered by music of great celestial peace. There is no doubt that Mr. Munch has a profound understanding of the inner meanings of this work.

The conductor then brought the concert to an inspiring close with Honegger's "Chant de joie" of 1923. It is a breezy, more harmonious piece, with straws in the wind pointing to the music of the composer's maturity.

Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 179,065

APR 22 1956

Extra Concert Set By Hub Symphony

An extra concert to wind up the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 75th season will be conducted by Charles Munch next Sunday night in Symphony Hall, Boston. The proceeds will be used to help provide funds still needed for the orchestra's European tour next August and September. The program will consist of two symphonies, Beethoven's Seventh and Tschaikovsky's Sixth, the "Pathetique."

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 122,000

APR 21 1956

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Munch Conducts Honegger

The Boston Symphony Orchestra played yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall the first concert in the 23rd pair of Friday—Saturday programs. Charles Munch conducted. The program: Handel: Suite from "The Faithful Shepherd" (arranged by Sir Thomas Beecham); Mozart: Piano Concerto in D major (K 451; first time at these concerts), Rudolf Firkusny, soloist; Honegger: Symphony No. 3, "Liturgique"; "Chant de Joie" (first time at these concerts.)

By CYRUS DURGIN

The powerful and distinctive music of the late Arthur Honegger seemed to overshadow the rest of the program by the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon. That this should be true, even when the afternoon contained a relatively unfamiliar Piano Concerto by Mozart, is strange, but so matters turned out.

Conservative members of the audience likely turned pale—and some of them did leave after a bit—at the tremendous force and the piercing dissonances of the first movement of Honeggar's "Liturgical" Symphony. Those of us with more taste for such a style were impressed, perhaps overwhelmed, with the composer's evocation of a Day of Wrath. This Symphony, as Honeggar said, is expression of personal feelings, and the titles of the movements—Dies Irae, De profundis clamavi and Dona nobis pacem—have close association with the character of the music in each.

Applause Spoils Mood

One can but approximate all that was in the composer's mind and heart as he wrote this Symphony; surely it cannot be taken merely as musical sonorities and patterns without losing most of its essence. This is music of strong and deep feeling, expressed in an idiom of modernity, logical and technically expert. I think you can say it is music of rebellion against certain ugliness of this world, and, in its final movement and the quiet, intimate coda—hope (even if a vain hope) for release from that ugliness. In any event, here you have a work very human, very emotional, and altogether compelling.

Evidently Mr. Munch wished to go quickly from the Symphony into the contrasting "Song of Joy," for he kept his hands in the air and waited just long enough for Bernard Zighera to make his way from piano to his harp. But the impetuous, restless-palmed applauders got the jump, and the seemingly intended effect of sustained mood was ruined.

The "Song of Joy," now about 35 years old and new to these concerts, is an ebullient, healthy short piece all in one aspect and one mood: Joy. It is interesting that the writing for orchestra, bold and full of color and rhythmic strength, is not nearly so subtle as that of the Symphony, which came about 23 years afterward.

Wanted: Less Pedal

Rudolf Firkusny, the soloist of the afternoon, is a fine pianist and a true artist, but not precisely my notion of a first-rate Mozart player. All went well, but a little heavily, a little square-cut and with too much reliance upon that aid to pianistic romanticism, the sustaining pedal. I would have preferred more grace, a lighter approach, and less pedal to affirm the lyrical beauty of the slow movement. This was, however, not a poor performance, but neither was it a fine one. Mr. Firkusny, nonetheless, was cordially applauded.

Mr. Munch and the orchestra, a little coarse of ensemble at the outset of Beecham's heavy-tweed arrangement of Handel, improved in Mozart. With Honegger they were a marvel of tonal splendor and technical precision.

The final concerts of the season, next week, will bring the "Psalm of Praise," by the Boston composer, Mabel Daniels, and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. The Harvard and Radcliffe choruses will assist, and the soloists will be Adele Addison, soprano; Eunice Alberts, contralto; David Lloyd, tenor, and Mac Morgan, bass.

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 369,241

APR 22 1956

Boston Symphony Season Ends This Week; Extra Benefit Concert on Next Sunday

During the next week Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with five concerts in eight days, will conclude the regular Boston Winter series of concerts in this the orchestra's 75th anniversary season.

★ ★ ★

At the final pair of Friday afternoon-Saturday evening subscription concerts next week-end the orchestra will be joined by the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society under the direction of G. Wallace Woodworth for performances of "A Psalm of Praise" for mixed chorus and orchestra by Mabel Daniels, composed for the 75th anniversary of Radcliffe College and to be performed at these concerts for the first time, and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. The soloists in the Ninth Symphony will be Adele Addison, soprano; Eunice Alberts, contralto; David Lloyd, tenor; and Mac Morgan, bass.

Extra Concert

This afternoon at 3 o'clock the final concert in this season's Sunday afternoon series will be given with the following program: Mozart's "Haffner" Symphony; the "Romeo and Juliet" Overture-Fantasy by Tchaikovsky; Bohuslav Martinu's Sixth Symphony (called "Fantaisies Symphoniques"); and Three Dances from the Ballet "The Three-Cornered Hat" by Manuel de Falla.

The Tuesday evening series will conclude this Tuesday with a Suite from Handel's "The Faithful Shepherd" arranged by Sir Thomas Beecham, and two symphonies—the Third or "Liturgique" by Honegger and the Fourth by Brahms.

Next Sunday evening at 8:30 Mr. Munch and the Orchestra will give an extra concert from which proceeds will be used to help supply funds still needed for the European tour next August and September. The program will consist of two of the best-loved symphonies in the repertoire — Beethoven's Seventh and Tchaikovsky's "Pathetique." Remaining tickets for this concert are on sale at the Symphony Hall box-office.

Sunday Post
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 230,930

APR 22 1956

LEAGUE CONCERT

The North Shore Catholic Charity League is sponsoring its annual pop concert at the New Ocean House, Swampscott Sunday evening at 8:15. Leo Litwin will conduct the Boston Symphony Players and Margo Stagliano will again be guest soloist. Working with Mrs. Thomas O'Connell, president of the league, are Mrs. Fred A. Donovan, Mrs. Henry J. O'Donnell, Jr., Mrs. William F. Regan and Mrs. Thomas A. O'Keefe.

APR 22 1956

Pops Music—Light, Peppy And Airy

With A Song In Your Heart

That's How You'll Leave Sunday 'Twilight Concerts' At Encanto

Jerome Kern, Leroy Anderson, Rodgers and Hammerstein, Iriving Berlin, Cole Porter, Franz Lehar, George Gershwin, Victor Herbert.

Sound like long-hair music?

No siree!

And you'll hear no long-hair music at the "Twilight Concerts" to be given by the Phoenix Symphony Pops Orchestra for five consecutive Sundays, beginning next Sunday.

The place—Encanto Bandshell.

The time—7 p.m.

The orchestra will be made up of 46 key musicians from the Phoenix Symphony Orchestra. Dr. Leslie Hodge, symphony conductor, will be on the podium.

MUSIC WILL be a complete departure from the serious symphonic programs heard throughout the regular concert season.

Something you'll be able to hum—to whistle.

Like musical comedy, popular and light opera selections.

The idea of a series of pops twilight concerts came from the musicians themselves. They put it up to the "POPS." Spelled out that's Promoters of the Phoenix Symphony. They are the sponsors.

"The Twilight Concerts," says William C. Turner, president of POPS, "represent an innovation in Phoenix musical entertainment. If successful, as they have proved in other areas of the country, these concerts will become an annual event. For many years the Boston Pops Orchestra, made up entirely of players from the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has presented a spring series of outdoor pop concerts. They were immediately successful for they offered varied and popular programming, which appealed to all kinds of tastes."

Of pops music, Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Symphony and the Boston Pops, put it this way: "A Strauss waltz is as good a thing of its kind as a Beethoven symphony. It's nice to eat a good chunk of beef, but you want a slice of nice dessert, too."

The Phoenix Pops Orchestra will dish up the dessert at its Twilight Concerts.

THE MUSICIANS will not be the only ones to let their "hair down" at the pops concerts. No need for the audience to dress up for these concerts. Come in comfortable clothes. POPS officials suggest a late afternoon picnic at Encanto Park, then stay for a concert under the stars, to climax a delightful family Sunday.

In the one pops concert given by the orchestra last year, as a sort of tryout on the public, close to 2,000 persons attended.

So benches at the bandshell may be at a premium.

But there's plenty of lawn. That's where most of the folks sit at the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Mass.

The committee comes up with these suggestions for those who come too late to occupy benches.—bring your car robes (who has 'em in the Valley of the Sun?) or blankets or rugs, just in case the grass is damp. Or bring camp stools or your folding lawn chairs.

Tickets for the concerts may be purchased at the Phoenix Symphony Orchestra Association office, 19 E. Coronado Rd., just one block north of the Phoenix Public Library; or, at the Republic and Gazette World Travel Service, 120 E. Van Buren.

Admission is 50 cents for adults; 25 cents for children from 6 to 12. Children under 6 will be admitted free.

Here's the program for next Sunday's concert:

The January February March	Don Gillis
Pavane	Morton Gould
Doll Dance	Nacio Herb Brown
Deep Purple	Peter De Rose
Tango in D	Albeniz
A Trumpeter's Lullaby	LeRoy Anderson
"Juba Dance from the Suite 'In the Bottom'"	R. Nathaniel Dett
Overture from "Kismet"	Borodin
Dancing Violins	Gerhard Winkler
Waltz from the ballet "The Sleeping Princess	Tschaikowsky
Highlights from "Show Boat"	Jerome Kern
Themes for "Scheherazade	Rimsky-Korsakov

66 MIAMI, FLA.
HERALD
Circ. D. 244,295 - S. 284,929
APR 22 1956

Radio Highlights

Current Events

TOWN MEETING OF THE AIR—8 p.m., ABC-WQAM—"Is Moderation Good for the Country?" will be discussed by political analyst Samuel Lubell, author of "Revolt of the Moderates," and other speakers. Shepherd L. Witman will be moderator.

Variety

E. POWER BIGGS—10:05 a.m., CBS-WGBS—Organist Biggs will play an all-Handel program with members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

WHAT'S NEW IN MUSIC?—1 p.m., CBS-WGBS—Canadian-American friendship will be hailed with the premiere performance of Percy Faith's new composition, "A Dream of Lisa." Gisele MacKenzie is guest star.

SYMPHONETTE—2 p.m., CBS-WGBS—Saxophonist Vincent J. Abato is soloist for the aria, "Dawn With Her Rosy Mantle" from Rossini's "The Barber of Seville."

MONITOR—2 p.m., NBC-WIOD—Interview with Anne Jeffries and Robert Sterling. Monitor also visits a collection of music boxes in Chicago.

I WAS A COMMUNIST FOR THE FBI—6:30 p.m., WQAM—Matt Cvetic is ordered by the Commies to slow down the work of a super calculating machine.

EDGAR BERGEN HOUR—7:05 p.m., CBS-WGBS—Rudy Wissler, 27-year-old singer pinch-hits for Gary Crosby who is making a two-month tour of England and Australia with Louis Armstrong's band.

MONITOR—7:30 p.m., NBC-WIOD—Woody Herman discusses jazz with the Rev. Norman O'Connor, jazz authority, at Marquette University Festival in Wisconsin.

MITCH MILLER SHOW—9:05 p.m., CBS-WGBS—Singer Teresa Brewer, Judy Tyler, star of the Broadway musical, "Pipe Dream," and jazz pianist, Teddy Wilson, are Mitch's guests.

TREASURY OF GREAT MUSIC—10 p.m., WQAM—Gene Perazzo's featured recorded work is Beethoven's Symphony No. 5 as performed by the Boston Symphony under the direction of Charles Munch.

NEW YORK PHILHARMONIC-SYMPHONY—10 p.m., CBS-WGBS—Violinist Tossy Spivakovsky will perform the Sibelius Violin Concerto in D Minor with the orchestra. Conductor Dimitri Mitropoulos will open the concert with Brahms Symphony No. 2 in D Major.

Religion

CHURCH OF THE AIR—9:30 a.m., CBS-WGBS—Rev. Fred M. Holloday of First Presbyterian, Rutherford, N. J., preaches on "Religious Growth."

NATIONAL RADIO PULPIT—10 a.m., NBC-WIOD—Dr. Carl W. Segerhammar, president, California Conference of the Augustana Evangelical Lutheran Church, talks on "A New Look at Life."

MESSAGE OF ISRAEL—10:35 a.m., ABC-WQAM—Rabbi James A. Wax, Temple Israel, Memphis, Tenn., speaks on "Pride and Prejudice."

THE LUTHERAN HOUR—1:30 p.m., MBS-WKAT—Dr. Oswald Hoffman's topic is "Peace of Christ."

THE CATHOLIC HOUR—2:30 p.m., NBC-WIOD—Rt. Rev. Msgr. Paul J. Glenn, rector of St. Charles Borromeo Seminary, Columbus, Ohio, speaks on "Peace Be to You."

Sunday Herald
BRIDGEPORT, Conn.
Non-partisan
Circ. 93,769
APR 22 1956

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
Circ. D. 336,443 - S. 528,253
APR 22 1956

Paris Opera Wracked By Managerial Storm

By FRANCIS D. PERKINS

Paris's operatic weather is calm, but a managerial and political storm is sweeping around the Opera and Opera-Comique in Paris in the wake of the announcement that Georges Hirsch will return as their administrator. According to a recent report from the French capital, Mr. Hirsch has become the target of a violent campaign launched first in "Le Figaro" and later in "Le Monde," which has dug up an old story imputing that all was not financially sound in a South American tour made by the Opera.

Mr. Hirsch was administrator, from 1946 to 1951, when he was succeeded by Maurice Lehmann; the noted composer Jacques Ibert took over the job last fall. Mr. Hirsch, whose appointment is to take effect in October, would like to take the managerial reins immediately. Since Mr. Ibert had accepted the position under protest and has been ill most of the winter, his opposition to Mr. Hirsch's taking charge in advance seemed unlikely, but he has suddenly picked up interest in his operatic duties and planned great things for the fall. But, even if Mr. Hirsch waits until the official date for assuming command, Mr. Ibert will not have much time to carry out these intentions.

Jacques Ibert

Philadelphia also has a managerial opera row, which has held up a municipal grant of $25,000 for that city's Grand Opera Company. The company was formed last year by a merger of the Philadelphia La Scala and Civic Grand Opera groups. Partisans of Humbert Pelosi, former head of the Scala group, contend that he was ignored in favor of Anthony Terraciano, of the Civic company in this season's productions and the ten planned for 1956-'57. The civic check will not be presented until the factions agree.

* * *

Londoners to Russia

The London Philharmonic will probably win the distinction of being the first orchestra from outside the Soviet orbit to visit Russia. It is to tour the Soviet Union, with Sir Adrian Boult conducting, from Sept. 19 to Oct. 4. Maura Lympany will be the soloist. The Philadelphia Orchestra has had to decline an official bid to visit Russia early this fall and, at least thus far, there have been no tangible results from the Boston Symphony's expression of its willingness to extend its coming European tour to the U. S. S. R.

As for visits in the other direction, both Emil Gilels and David Oistrakh are expected to be back in America next season, although definite arrangements are not complete. But they will not arrive before January, 1957, at the earliest.

* * *

Award for Symphony

The Symphony of the Air has received a medal from the University of the Philippines proclaiming it to be "the visiting musical entity of the year". The presentation was made in Manila March 15, and accepted by the United States Ambassador, Homer Ferguson, on behalf of the orchestra.

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 154,241
APR 25 1956

Boston Symphony to Play Work of Hub Woman

The magic number at Symphony Hall this week-end will be 75.

At the final concert of its 75th year, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play a composition written for Radcliffe College's 75th anniversary.

It is the "Psalm of Praise" by Mabel Daniels, Radcliffe 1900. It was performed last year for the first time at Radcliffe's Diamond Jubilee Concert by the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society in Sanders Theatre.

Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, the choruses will repeat their performance at Symphony Hall.

Miss Daniels' work was originally scored for mixed chorus, trumpets, percussion, and piano and has now been orchestrated for stringed instruments. Charles Munch will conduct.

Only two other women have ever had symphony works performed by the B. S. O. Miss Daniels, a resident of Boston, is a well known composer.

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 106,753
APR 22 1956

BOSTON SYMPHONY PROGRAMS PLANNED

Leonard Bernstein again will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the broadcast tomorrow (NBC Radio, 8.15 p. m., EST). The broadcast will be devoted entirely to Prokofiev's Symphony No. 5. The work is four movements—andante, allegro moderato, adagio and allegro giocoso.

For the broadcast of Monday, the 30th, the orchestra's regular music director, Charles Munch, will be on the podium. His all-Russian program will include the symphonic poem, "Francesca da Rimini" by Tchaikovsky, and the Violin Concerto No. 2 in G minor by Prokofiev, with Zino Francescatti as soloist.

Taking The Air

ABC Steps Up Jazz, Dance Band Music

By LEO MILLER

LET US ALL who esteem jazz and music salute the ABC radio network, which has begun some of the best band features a broadcaster has introduced in years . . . On "American Music Hall" at 8 to 9:25 weeknights (except from 8:30 to 9 Mondays) the network presents 35-piece dance, concert and string orchestras with such special guests as Bobby Hackett, Peanuts Hucko, Billy Butterfield and Earl Wilde. . . . From 9:30 to 9:55 the same nights and 8:05 to 9 P. M. Saturdays "Best Bands in the Land" finds Paul Whiteman introducing a name aggregation from a hotel or ballroom, under the auspices of Dance Orchestra Leaders of America, a new organization dedicated to furthering the popularity of dance music throughout the country.

"WEEKDAY" DIETS

ABC ALSO schedules a "rock 'n' roll" feature, "Rhythm on Parade," with Willie Bryant and Maurice King's orchestra, from a Detroit spot at 11:30 Monday nights and 9:05 Saturdays . . . Jazz also makes inroads into Bridgeport's Ritz ballroom, where trumpeter Jimmy McPartland presents an all-star combination this Sunday . . . Two of the talents of the latter group, trombonist Vic Dickenson and tenor sax Bud Freeman, top Tuesday night's "Jazz at the Westnor" in Westport . . . Connee Russell presides over "Magic of Music" on the Mutual network at 12:05-1 Saturday afternoons.

TOSSY SPIVAKOVSKY, the Wilton violin virtuoso, will be the soloist with the N. Y. Philharmonic under Dimitri Mitropoulos' direction at 2:30 Sunday on CBS; he will do the Sibelius concerto in D minor, the composer's only work for solo instrument and orchestra . . . Thomas L. Thomas, the baritone, will be the guest soloist on ABC at 8:30 Monday night.

NBC's "WEEKDAY" gives a daily demonstration of effective dieting at 11:45 Monday through Friday as five stout women, along with hostess Virginia Graham, and the husbands of two of the participants go on a four-week routine especially prepared by doctors and nutritionists . . . Hartford's fine actor Ed Begley, who was graduated from WTIC, will be the "Weekday" guest at 11:15 A. M. Tuesday, and Adlai E. Stevenson has a date in the same spot Wednesday.

HAPPY 10th anniversary at the New York flagship station of NBC to Tex and Jinx McCrary, who began it all 15,000 guests ago on WEAF, which became WRCA by way of WEAF . . . The knowing couple celebrates the decade Monday with a party at the Waldorf-Astoria, which is their headquarters . . . Of the two, in the opinion of most of it, Jinx is the superior, easily as fine in her specialty as any hostess on either radio or TV, a gal who can do—and does do—as well with a man-oh-Manischewitz commercial as she does with an interview with a top world diplomat.

BOB BEST BET

"SOUNDS OF THE YWCA," a commentary with descriptive material on the authentic recorded sounds of YWCA activities all over the country in observance of National YWCA Week, will be heard on NBC at 5:15 P. M. Monday with Arnold Moss as narrator . . . WDRC personnel gave a party for Engineer Herman Goodstine, who left for a high-paying job with the United Aircraft engineering department . . . Blanche Thebom, the Metropolitan Opera mezzo-soprano, sings the "Habanera" from Bizet's "Carmen" at 9 Monday night on NBC ... Incidentally, Leonard Bernstein conducts the Boston Symphony Monday night on NBC at 8:15.

BY THIS TIME all of us who do any listening in the radius of WICC know that there has been no disk jockey in New England history more outstanding than Bob Crane, who works from 6 to 10 weekday mornings . . . But it took a column in Sponsor magazine by Robert L. Foreman, vice-president of Batten, Barton, Durstine and Osborn advertising agency, to put the clincher on it . . . Foreman calls Crane "as intelligently and amusingly capable as the early Godfrey of the WTOP days. His humor is infectious and his candor refreshing. He can also pour it on when the straight sell is called for. Furthermore, he is a master of the smooth segue from show to copy, a necessity for as sold-out a program as he presents" . . . All of which is true . . . Crane is easily one of the greatest in his field anywhere.

Sunday Post
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 230,930
APR 22 1956

Boston Symphony Has Busy Final Week

During the coming week the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give five concerts in eight days. This afternoon they play a program of Mozart, Tchaikovsky and Martinu (Fantaisies Symphoniques). Tuesday evening the concert features two symphonies, Honegger's Third and Brahms' Fourth, and Friday and Saturday, the season ends with Beethoven's Ninth with chorus and soloists. A special concert to aid the European tour fund is slated for next Sunday evening. The pieces to be played are Beethoven's Seventh Symphony and Tchaikovsky's Sixth.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
Circ. D. 526,215 - S. 1,146,860

APR 22 1956

WORLD OF MUSIC: NEW HEAD FOR SALZBURG

Herbert von Karajan Selected Festival Leader for Three-Year Period

By ROSS PARMENTER

IN the past, the leadership of the Salzburg Festivals has been in the hands of a board of directors. Individual conductors have had most of the authority over their allotted projects. Sometimes the lack of centralized authority has led to confusion. To offset this, the Salzburg Festival Committee finally has decided to install an artistic director, starting with the 1957 festival. The man the committee has engaged for the post is Herbert von Karajan, and he has received a three-year contract. This means he will be in charge of the 1957, 1958 and 1959 festivals.

Up to now, von Karajan has not conducted at the festival, so his appointment means the injection of a new personality into a familiar picture. But von Karajan will not take over the whole foreground. His conducting—the only work he will be paid for—will be restricted to two of the festival operas and two, or perhaps three, of the orchestral concerts. Other top-ranking conductors will be engaged for the other operas and concerts. Starting next year, too, a visiting foreign orchestra will be invited to Salzburg each summer to provide the orchestral concerts for the first half of the festival. This has been made necessary because the additional orchestral concerts in the first half of the festival have become too heavy a load for the Vienna Philharmonic, which is unduly occupied at this time with both rehearsing and playing for the operatic productions.

Meanwhile, it has been learned that the move to engage von Karajan as the new director of the Vienna Opera has come to nothing. One factor was the protest of the Berlin Philharmonic, which did not want to release him from his commitments as its musical director.

AIR LIFT: The A. C. Spark Plug Division of General Motors engaged Hilde Gueden for a Sunday concert. Wanting to publicize it, they asked the soprano if she could come to Flint, Mich., the Thursday before to be photographed and to give a press conference. The singer protested that it would tire her too much, since she had to sing on Saturday night at the Metropolitan. Think nothing of it, said the big corporation, we'll whisk you back and forth for the conference in a private plane. It won't tire you at all. Thereupon Miss Gueden agreed. But even General Motors occasionally must bow to the forces of nature. The day of the press conference was stormy. The company could not get its plane to New York. Miss Gueden had to make her way to Detroit and back by commercial planes, frantically getting her own tickets at the last moment. The best the company could manage was private plane service both ways between Detroit and Flint.

'CELLIST: Gregor Piatigorsky has long felt that, when a musician visits a city, he should do more than give a concert and take the next train out. His engagement with the Louisville Orchestra last month gave him an opportunity to try out the sort of visit he would like to make general in his touring. He made a point of reaching the city almost a week in advance, and, because he was there Sunday night, he attended the Chamber Music Society's final concert of the season, a program by the Budapest Quartet. During the intermission, a plot was hatched to have him sit in with the quartet and play Schubert's Quintet in C major, which calls for a second 'cello. He agreed. Not expecting such a thing, the audience didn't mind the wait while a taxi went for Mr. Piatigorsky's 'cello. On Tuesday he gave a public lecture at the University of Louisville School of Music and stayed for hours afterward, meeting young musicians, answering their questions and even listening to them play. On Wednesday he finally played with the orchestra.

HEMIDEMISEMIQUAVERS: Norman Scott sang Sarastro when the Metropolitan Opera opened its week in Boston. Jerome Hines, who was to have sung the part, came down with mumps. . . . Lee Shaynen, formerly of the New York City Opera, recently conducted "Aïda" at the Munich Opera. . . . Jennie Tourel is going to Storrs, Conn., on April 30 to sing Dido in a performance of Purcell's "Dido and Aeneas," which Philip Treggor will conduct with the concert choir and orchestra of the University of Connecticut. . . . The State Publishing House of Music in the Soviet Union is preparing a complete edition of the works of Glinka to be issued next year to commemorate the centennial of the composer's death. . . . Wells Hively's opera "Junipero Serra" had its première last month in Mallorca. . . . The American Guild of Organists will hold its twenty-third national convention in New York from June 25 to 29. . . . Contemporary Concerts, a new organization that has been formed in Chicago, will present its first program there on May 2. . . . Because the Boston Symphony still has not raised all the money it needs for its European tour, it will give an extra concert next Sunday, and all the proceeds will go into the tour fund. Beethoven's Seventh Symphony and Tchaikovsky's "Pathétique" will be the selections. . . . Lukas Foss' "The Jumping Frog of Calaveras County" recently had its European première in Cologne.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y.
TIMES HERALD
APR 22 1956

Concert Committee Starts Campaign Week

Shown at last night's kick-off dinner of the subscription week for next year's Community Concerts series are the officers and executive committee of the Concert Association, with a young prospective member. Standing, left to right, are Dr. W. Mortimer Clark, president; William Miles, New York representative; Richard Kainu, concert chairman; Mrs. Martin Rosenblum, publicity chairman; and Howard M. Diver, treasurer. Seated in the same order are Elizabeth Spector, daughter of the new general chairman of the campaign; Mrs. Maurice Spector of Goshen, general chairman; Mrs. Clark, acting secretary; and Mrs. Charles J. Hooker of Goshen, vice president. Dr. William J. Hicks is also a vice president. The drive for members will continue through Saturday night.—Photo by Stewart.

Boston "Pops" Orchestra Announced As Next Season's Featured Group

With the announcement that the Boston "Pops" Orchestra, one of the nation's most famous and popular orchestras, has been obtained for next season's Community Concert Series, campaign week for subscriptions for the year 1956-57 opened last night with a kick-off dinner for committee workers at the Mitchell Inn. Campaign headquarters has been established at the hotel, and the drive will continue all week. Dr. W. Mortimer Clark, president, introduced the new campaign chairman, Mrs. Maurice Spector of Goshen, and William Miles of New York, Community Concerts representative. Mr. Spector announced that the programs for the concert series to be held in Port Jervis, Suffern and Liberty would be included in the local program, so that subscribers would be able to plan to attend other concerts in the area, a privilege which is included in the subscriptions. Mr. Miles added that membership in the plan allows attendance at a concert at any of the 800-odd cities throughout the country where the series is held, provided it is not sold out or otherwise reserved. He mentioned a salesman who attended 38 concerts in one year by taking advantage of this opportunity.

Both speakers stressed the value of "live" music, and of the special chance to hear locally music of the finest quality, provided by such group endeavor. Mr. Miles stated that in the United States "there are 25% more concerts every year than in all the countries of Europe, and of these, 80% are under some organized audience plan".

It was also noted that the recent concerts for children sponsored by the Central PTA Council and given by the Rochester Civic Orchestra, whose personnel is made up of members of the Rochester Philharmonic, could not have been presented if the orchestra had not been scheduled to appear here first under the auspices of the Concert Series. It was stressed that school and college students get special consideration.

Headquarters in the Inn lobby will be open today through Thursday from 10 a.m. to six p.m., and Friday and Saturday from 10 a.m. to nine p.m.

Other officers of the Association are Dr. William J. Hicks of Middletown and Mrs. Charles J. Hooker of Goshen, vice presidents; Mrs. W. Mortimer Clark, acting secretary; and Howard M. Diver, treasurer. Executive committee members are Mrs. Spector, Mrs. Martin Rosenblum, publicity chairman; and Richard Kainu, concert chairman.

The Rev. Robert Hoag of Chester offered grace.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
DAILY NEWS
Circ. D. 2,092,455 - S. 3,653,302

APR 26 1956

Marion Marlowe has been signed by Ed Sullivan for five additional guest shows on his Channel 2 show. . . . Tempus Fugit Dept.: Harvey Fischman, once a Quiz Kid, is now a program coordinator for Robert Q. Lewis' daytime TV series. . . . June Havoc is the hostess of NBC-TV's Comedy Hour, Sunday, May 6, 8 P. M.

* * *

NBC's Television Theatre enters its tenth year on Wednesday, May 2, marking the longest continous run of any network drama series. It will celebrate the occasion by offering a repeat, via kinescope, of its acclaimed "A Night to Remember," an adaptation of the Walter Lord book first presented March 28.

* * *

The Boston Pops Orchestra, under the baton of Arthur Fiedler, returns to NBC-Radio for a series of Monday night concerts, starting May 7, 8:15 P. M. . . . WMGM's Big Joe Rosenfield will be heard in a special five-hour anniversary program, next Monday at midnight, launching a drive to equip a "Happiness Exchange Ward" at New York's Knickerbocker Hospital.

—Rudy Bergman.

Norfolk County Free Press
NORWOOD, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 7,300

APR 26 1956

Page Twenty

Reverend Robert J. Gannon, S.J. Guest Of Boston Eire Society

The Eire Society of Boston will have as its honored guest speaker at its annual dinner on Saturday evening, May 5, Very Reverend Robert I. Gannon, S.J., former president of Fordham University. Msgr. Gannon will receive the Eire Society Gold Medal for 1956. This award is given in recognition of Msgr. Gannon's "outstanding contributions as a true educator of men and priest of God."

Bringing greetings from Ireland at the annual dinner will be John J. Hearne, ambassador for Ireland to the United States.

Michael T. Kelleher will receive, on behalf of the trustees of Boston Symphony Orchestra, a gift of $1,000 from the Eire Society in grateful appreciation of the concerts to be given by this famed orchestra in Cork and Dublin, Ireland.

Joseph Gannon, president of the Eire Society, will make the presentation of the check to the Symphony Orchestra.

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 106,753

APR 22 1956

Second Thoughts in Music

Rococo Ensemble Heard In Excellent Performance

Group Includes Violin, Viola, Double Bass and Harpsichord; Junior Extension Concludes Season With Recital; Tanglewood Features Noted

By WILLARD M. CLARK

One of the high lights of the current music season was provided by the Tuesday Morning Music Club when they presented the Rococo Ensemble. This unique group consists of violin, viola, double bass and harpsichord played by Charles Treger, Paul Doktor, Michael Krasnopolsky and Robert Conant.

With such an instrumentation programs are quite different from the usual run; so is the texture of the sound. Each player is a virtuoso and each has had a wide experience in ensemble playing. The result was a series of impeccable performances of such works as Sonata in G for violin, vola, harpsichord and bass; Duo in C for violin and viola by Stamitz, Sonata da Camera in G minor, for solo viola, harpsichord and bass and the fascinating "L 'Apotheose de Lulli" by Couperin.

The Junior Extension

The Junior Extension of the Tuesday Morning Music Club concluded is 32d season with a recital by a few of its talented members. The Extension is about the only place where young people have a chance to appear publicly or meet those with similar interests. At one time or another, practically all of our important musicians have been members of the Extension.

The parent club gives an annual scholarship of $100 and a second known as the Minnie W. Scott scholarship, also of $100, is available. These were awarded Ann Staniski and Jerry Hakes, pianist and organist, respectively.

Festival Notes

Looking over the programs scheduled for the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood July 4—Aug. 12, it appears that no one composer will be featured. The past two seasons, Berlioz and Beethoven were featured. It is inevitable that much music by Mozart will be heard because of the anniversary.

The Wednesday night chamber music series is particularly interesting for it includes the Kroll String Quartet, the Boston Symphony String Quartet, the Beaux Arts and Trio Rudolf Serkin and the Boston Symphony Woodwind Quartet.

In the Bach-Mozart series "The Passion According to St. John." will be sung with Adele Addison, David Lloyd and Mac Morgan as soloists. An all-Mozart program will be given by Luboshutz, Nemenoff and Goldovsky. The program will feature the Concerto in F major, for three pianos: the Concerto in E flat major, for two pianos and the Concerto in A major for piano. Lukas Foss, pianist, will play the Bach Piano Concerto in D minor and the fabulous Doriot Anthony Dwyer will be the soloist in the Bach Suite No. 2 in B minor for flute and strings.

Shed Concerts

The Shed concerts will be conducted by Charles Munch, Leonard Bernstein, Eleazar de Carvalho, Richard Burgin and Pierre Monteux. Two of the programs will feature operatic excerpts, namely the first act of "Die Walkure" with Margaret Harshaw, Albert de Costa and James Pease as soloists and the opening and final scene of Act 3 of "Die Meistersinger." Soloists for this excerpt will be De Costa, Pease and Marguerite Willauer.

Eleazar de Carvalho has not been at Tanglewood for several seasons. His program includes "Mathis der Maler" by Hindemith. The Oavel piano concert played by Jocy de Oliveira and the complete "Petrouchka."

As usual, Leonard Bernstein will conduct the concert in memory of Koussevitzky. He has programmed the "Kyrie" and "Gloria" from Mozart's Mass in C Minor, Prokofieff's fifth symphony and "Variations for Orchestra" by Moevs. Soloists in the Mass will be Adele Addison, Eunice Alberts and David Lloyd. It looks like an interesting season with plenty of variety.

68 Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 39,259

APR 24 1956

Charles Munch Interview Inspires Visiting Editor

(The author of the following is an Israeli journalist who is spending three months at the Quincy Patriot Ledger under arrangements made by the U.S. State Department.)

By DAVID PORTER
Coeditor, Tel Aviv Haboker

This is the 75th anniversary season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, three-quarters of a century of creative work and aspiration.

Among Greatest

One of Boston's enlightened and enterprising sons, Henry L. Higginson, has laid down the foundations in the New World of what was due to become one of the world's greatest philharmonic achievements. The Boston Symphony was obviously one of the first institutions on my studying list, when I learned that my U.S. visit is to be intimately linked with Massachusetts.

Faithful to its artistic ideals, the Boston Symphony has undertaken one of the most ambitious and imaginative endeavors in the annals of musical enterprise, in creating the Berkshire Festival and Musical Center. Ever since the Hawthornian mansions of Tanglewood have had something of a magnetic charm for universal students and lovers of music.

Met Koussevitzky

Having had the privilege of meeting one of the great architects of that almost unique talent finding and stimulating a center the late Serge Koussevitzky—during an unforgetful visit to my country, my path to the Boston Symphony was well nigh predisposed.

And there was, of course, the highly attractive personality of the present conductor of the Boston Symphony, Charles Munch, for whose gentle baton the music loving public in my country as elsewhere is longing, since his visit about a decade ago.

Music, especially symphonic music, has been one of the sources of inspiration to my nation, both in its dispersion and at home. In some of the gloomiest moments of our history, music has often served as the one moral subterfuge, where to lay our weary head in peace, if only for a moment.

Mother Of Tongues

To many of us, music has always meant considerably more than it meant to the average concert goer. On many occasions our philosophy and our will to survive and surmount all physical and moral obstacle, has been under the spell of the all-enticing vibration of that human mother of tongues—music.

This minor "catechism," defining what I, for one, came to regard as a profound moral factor in my nation's psychoanalysis, often guides me in my attempt to contemplate and study some of the driving force, behind the works of great musicians and humanists alike, of whom the Munch-Schweitzer family is an outstanding example.

Cultural Crossroads

Alsace, the home of the two great musicians and humanists, lies on the crossroads of two rich and influencial cultures—the French and the Germanic—that so often clashed, within the last two centuries. The provinces of Alsace-Lorraine, have changed hands several times, their inhabitants being torn between nationalities, two languages and civilizations, with all the ensuing embarassments and temptations.

Caught between the two conflicting powers and influences, Conductor Charles Munch was conscripted to the German Army in World War I, and was wounded in the battle for Verdun, against what he regarded as his chosen people—France. Under similar tragic circumstances, a member of another branch of the same family, Dr. Albert Schweitzer, equally a great musician and humanist, who has undertaken a one man humane mission to Equatorial Africa, was interned as an "alien enemy."

Parallel Humanitarianism

The personal tragedy of these two personalities has lead them to a more profound and thorough devotion to music and humanitarianism, two directions which have proved to be closely connected with each other. Albert Schweitzer, a distinguished organist. (I know of no other instrument more apt to interpret the noblest of human feelings), has also taken up medicine to help save many Africans from disease, and has made Equatorial Africa his "outpost" in order to help those human beings who were deprived of the boons of civilization.

Charles Munch's father, Earnest, and uncle, Eugene, too were organists, decendants of an old family of organists and music teachers. Of Eugene Munch, his organ teacher, Dr. Albert Schweitzer said: "this was a musician who on his deathbed sang recitatives from Bach's 'Passion according to St. Matthew' until his dry throat could no longer utter a word."

'Music Box' Home

The home of the Munch family in Niederbronn, Vosges Hills, was named the "music box." No wonder that from this magic "box" came forth also the intransigent and unconquerable spirit of true humanity, surviving in its unwavering integrity two gruesome world wars. In fact the two Alsatians, who were forced by political circumstances, to fight their way through prejudices and dangers, belong to the entire human race no less than they belong to their homeland.

With these introductory reflections in mind, I have slipped into the front balcony of the solemn and mysteriously empty Symphony Hall, where Maestro Munch rehearsed his full orchestra, the "finishing touches" on the first passages of Tchaikovsky's "Francesca da Rimmini Phantasy." He was just pointing out, by all means of manifestation, including his own human voice, how better to accentuate the moaning motives of human sufferings, embodied in the entrance to the Russian master of lamentations' sound version of Dante's "inferno."

Worth Trip

To a music lover this extemporaneous spur of the moment alone, would have been worth traveling the whole way across the Atlantic, just for the sake of beholding it. In his book "Je suis Chef d'Orchestre" ("I am a Conductor") Charles Munch offers the following definition to the art of which he himself is one of the supreme interpreters: "Music is the art of expressing the inexpressible."

I recalled this formula, when I was making a vain attempt to put on paper some of my impressions of the orchestra's collective reading of the scores, under the inspiring guidance of Charles Munch. Words seemed just mute unavailing tools, to portray what was going on, in the course of a few seconds on the platform. To the naked eye it was merely an inexplicable gesture of two human limbs and a thin nearly invisible baton, accompanied by words in several languages and sounds. Yet myriads of celestial inexpressible feelings were exchanged between the conductor and his orchestra, in just a flash of a moment, in a superhuman language that only the musical organ in the human soul could grasp.

CHARLES MUNCH is conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra now celebrating its 75th anniversary.

Other Works

Two more works were rehearsed on the same morning: Serge Prokofieff's Violin Concerto in G minor, with as graceful and brilliant a solo virtuoso as Zino Francescatti, and Brahams's Double Concerto, in which the orchestra's first cellist, Samuel Mayse, joined as second soloist, and drew a fervent applause from his colleagues for the fine performance of his part.

This classical work requires trained co-operation between the two solo instruments, as well as disciplined accompaniment by the orchestra. Only accomplished and well trained soloists are usually entrusted with a joint public performance of the work. The enthusiasm of the members of the orchestra at their fellow musician's success (who, I learned, was of Indian descent), was both understandable and admirable.

Special Interview

These vivid impressions of several hours' rehearsal of the orchestra, under Charles Munch, culminated in a special interview, the maestro was magnanimous enough to accord, after the thorough reading of three symphonic works and before the orchestra starts its concert tour in Europe. The conductor looked satisfied, inspite of the trying and tiring hours of the day. In a smiling dreamy look he gave me some of his reminiscences of the Holy Land for whose people he had some warm and encouraging words, in reviving his impressions of our National Symphonic Orchestra and the music loving public. But I wanted him to review the last symphonic season, and to hear whether he personally had something to stress the 75th anniversary year.

"I have a lot to say" - Mr. Munch remarked in a somewhat "desperate" tone, as if to warn me that whatever he was going to say was just a trifle of what he had to. On being satisfied that I well understood his misgivings, he reassuringly gave some details of his reflections.

American Works

"We traversed quite an artistic ground during this season," he said. "In addition to the normal classical and modern curriculum, the works of some 15 American-born and Americanized composers have been presented to the public, from Aaron Copeland to Buhuslav Martinu (a Czech born composer who has made the U.S. his home). All the work have been well received by the audiences."

Asked what the response to modern music was in Boston, the maestro was satisfied that it was encouraging.

"The Boston concert-goer is trained in the listening to new music," he said. "He would listen attentively and patiently to a first performance, and would not be shy to admit that he did not understand the work at once. But he would try again and again, until the inherent true values of the symphonic work would occur to him."

Really Great Day

With this thoughtful appraisal of the Boston music loving public, expressed by a great conductor, I parted from Maestro Charles Munch and the president and secretary of the Orchestra, feeling that my first day in the pursuit of New England's institutions of learning and culture was a really great day.

Courier
CAMBRIDGE, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 11,000 Free

APR 26 1956

Radcliffe Graduate To Open Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open the final concert of its 75th year with a composition written for Radcliffe College's 75th Anniversary by one of the fe and perhaps most distinguished women composers today, Mabel Daniels.

Originally scored for mixed chorus, trumpets, percussion and piano, the "Psalm of Praise'" was performed for the first time last year at Radcliffe's Diamond Jubilee Concert by the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society in Sanders Theatre, Cambridge.

The two undergraduate choruses will repeat the work which has been orchcestrated for stringed instruments, Friday afternoon and Saturday evening (April 27 and 28) in Symphony Hall with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Charles Munch conducting.

A graduate of Radcliffe with the class of 1900, Miss Daniel's compositions have been marked by a contemporary style which has not only kept abreast of the times, but has been experimental as well.

Orchestra preludes and symphonic works for chorus and orchestra which have been performed by Koussevitsky, Barbirolli, Hanson and other oustanding conductors, have expressed the musical times in which they were written.

In 1929, Miss Daniels wrote "Exultate Deo", a ccomposition for mixed chorus, for Of this composition which the Harvard and Radcliffe choruses also performed with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall, H.T. Parker of the Boston Transcript said "Rarely does a woman composer write in such a lofty vein and large scale fashior.".

Twenty-five years later, "The Psalm of Praise" reflected through its structure and sonority the more complex harmonies and rhythms which have emerged during the last decades. Of this compostion, a Boston critic wrote "The Music is well wrought, bold and vigorous, contemporary in the best sense, Miss Daniels has the gift of good melodic invention, a talent that emerge at this work.

Miss Daniels' musical background set the stage for her career. Her father was president of the Handel and Haydn Society in Boston for many years. But although music played at large part in her childhood, it did not become an important part of her life until she entered Radcliffe College. As an undergraduate, she was the leader and soloist of the Choral Society and composed music for three operettas in which she either conducted the orchestra or sang the principal part. Josephine Hull, Radcliffe '99, was also a member of the cast.

After receiving an A. B. magna cum laude, she studied composition and orchestration with George W. Chadwick in Boston and Ludwig Thuille in Munich. In 1905, she wrte "an American Girl in Munich", a book based on her impressions as a music student there.

Miss Daniels received an honorary degree from Tufts University in 1933, from Boston University in 1939 and a citation fro Radcliffe College as its 75th Anniversary celebration. She is a trustee of the New England Conservatory of music, corporate member of the MacDowell Colony, and is a director of the friends of Music of Boston Universary and the Zimbler Sinfonietta. She was formerly an alumma trhstee of Radcliffe College and an honorary member of Phi Beta Kappa. She lives in Boston.

Only two other women have had symphony works performed y the Goston Symphony Orchestra. The Orchestra gave two performances of compositions of Margaret Ruthven Lang and H. H. A. Beech, composer and pianist, before the turn of the century.

With "The Psalm of Praise", the Boston Symphony Orchestra will have performed three compositions of Miss Daniels The others were "Exulate Deo" in 1933 and "Deep Forest" in 1937.

The Friday concert will make Miss Daniels not only the only woman to have had works performed by the BSO during this century, but also the woman who has had the most compositions performed by the Orchestra.

Messenger (e)
NORWOOD, Mass.
Tri-Weekly Independent
Circ. 4,750

Press
WESTWOOD, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 2,300

APR 26 1956

Reverend Robert J. Gannon, S.J. Guest Of Boston Eire Society

The Eire Society of Boston will have as its honored guest speaker at its annual dinner on Saturday evening, May 5, Very Reverend Robert I. Gannon, S.J., former president of Fordham University. Msgr. Gannon will receive the Eire Society Gold Medal for 1956. This award is given in recognition of Msgr. Gannon's "outstanding contributions as a true educator of men and priest of God."

Bringing greetings from Ireland at the annual dinner will be John J. Hearne, ambassador for Ireland to the United States.

Michael T. Kelleher will receive, on behalf of the trustees of Boston Symphony Orchestra, a gift of $1,000 from the Eire Society in grateful appreciation of the concerts to be given by this famed orchestra in Cork and Dublin, Ireland.

Joseph Gannon, president of the Eire Society, will make the presentation of the check to the Symphony Orchestra.

Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 39,259

APR 27 1956

Boston Symphony To End Anniversary

BOSTON, April 27—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will conclude its 75th anniversary season with an extra concert Sunday afternoon. The program will include Beethoven's 7th and Tchaikovsky's "Pathetique" symphonies.

The orchestra is scheduled to play in Cork and Dublin, Ireland Aug. 24 and 25. Some of the liveliest themes of Beethoven's 7th Symphony originate from a collection of Irish songs, for which the composer has set arrangements previously.

Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 39,259

APR 24 1956

Charles Munch Interview Inspires Visiting Editor

(The author of the following is an Israeli journalist who is spending three months at the Quincy Patriot Ledger under arrangements made by the U.S. State Department.)

By DAVID PORTER
Coeditor, Tel Aviv Haboker

This is the 75th anniversary season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, three-quarters of a century of creative work and aspiration.

Among Greatest

One of Boston's enlightened and enterprising sons, Henry L. Higginson, has laid down the foundations in the New World of what was due to become one of the world's greatest philharmonic achievements. The Boston Symphony was obviously one of the first institutions on my studying list, when I learned that my U.S. visit is to be intimately linked with Massachusetts.

Faithful to its artistic ideals, the Boston Symphony has undertaken one of the most ambitious and imaginative endeavors in the annals of musical enterprise, in creating the Berkshire Festival and Musical Center. Ever since the Hawthornian mansions of Tanglewood have had something of a magnetic charm for universal students and lovers of music.

Met Koussevitzky

Having had the privilege of meeting one of the great architects of that almost unique talent finding and stimulating a center the late Serge Koussevitzky—during an unforgetful visit to my country, my path to the Boston Symphony was well nigh predisposed.

And there was, of course, the highly attractive personality of the present conductor of the Boston Symphony, Charles Munch, for whose gentle baton the music loving public in my country as elsewhere is longing, since his visit about a decade ago.

Music, especially symphonic music, has been one of the sources of inspiration to my nation, both in its dispersion and at home. In some of the gloomiest moments of our history, music has often served as the one moral subterfuge, where to lay our weary head in peace, if only for a moment.

Mother Of Tongues

To many of us, music has always meant considerably more than it meant to the average concert goer. On many occasions our philosophy and our will to survive and surmount all physical and moral obstacle, has been under the spell of the all-enticing vibration of that human mother of tongues—music.

This minor "catechism," defining what I, for one, came to regard as a profound moral factor in my nation's psychoanalysis, often guides me in my attempt to contemplate and study some of the driving force, behind the works of great musicians and humanists alike, of whom the Munch-Schweitzer family is an outstanding example.

Cultural Crossroads

Alsace, the home of the two great musicians and humanists, lies on the crossroads of two rich and influencial cultures—the French and the Germanic—that so often clashed, within the last two centuries. The provinces of Alsace-Lorraine, have changed their in-conscripted to the German Army in World War I, and was wounded in the battle for Verdun, against what he regarded as his chosen people—France. Under similar tragic circumstances, a member of another branch of the same family, Dr. Albert Schweitzer, equally a great musician and humanist, who has undertaken a one man humane mission to Equatorial Africa, was interned as an "alien enemy."

Parallel Humanitarianism

The personal tragedy of these two personalities has lead them to a more profound and thorough devotion to music and humanitarianism, two directions which have proved to be closely connected with each other. Albert Schweitzer, a distinguished organist. (I know of no other instrument more apt to interpret the noblest of human feelings), has also taken up medicine to help save many Africans from disease, and has made Equatorial Africa his "outpost" in order to help those human beings who were deprived of the boons of civilization.

Charles Munch's father, Earnest, and uncle, Eugene, too were organists, decendants of an old family of organists and music teachers. Of Eugene Munch, his organ teacher, Dr. Albert Schweitzer said: "this was a musician who on his deathbed sang recitatives from Bach's 'Passion according to St. Matthew' until his dry throat could no longer utter a word."

'Music Box' Home

The home of the Munch family in Niederbronn, Vosges Hills, was named the "music box." No wonder that from this magic "box" came forth also the intransigent and unconquerable spirit of true humanity, surviving in its unwavering integrity two gruesome world wars. In fact the two Alsatians, who were forced by political circumstances, to fight their way through prejudices and dangers, belong to the entire human race no less than they belong to their homeland.

With these introductory reflections in mind, I have slipped into the front balcony of the solemn and mysteriously empty Symphony Hall, where Maestro Munch rehearsed his full orchestra, the "finishing touches" on the first passages of Tchaikovsky's "Francesca da Rimmini Phantasy." He was just pointing out, by all means of manifestation, including his own human voice, how better to accentuate the moaning motives of human sufferings, embodied in the entrance to the Russian master of lamentations' sound version of Dante's "inferno."

Worth Trip

To a music lover this extemporaneous spur of the moment alone, would have been worth traveling the whole way across the Atlantic, just for the sake of beholding it. In his book "Je suis Chef d'Orchestre" ("I am a Conductor") Charles Munch offers the following definition to the art of which he himself is one of the supreme interpreters: "Music is the art of expressing the inexpressible."

I recalled this formula, when I was making a vain attempt to put on paper some of my impressions of the orchestra's collective reading of the scores, under the inspiring guidance of Mr. Munch. Words seemed a thin nearly invisible baton, accompanied by words in several languages and sounds. Yet myriads of celestial inexpressible feelings were exchanged between the conductor and his orchestra, in just a flash of a moment, in a superhuman language that only the musical organ in the human soul could grasp.

CHARLES MUNCH is conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra now celebrating its 75th anniversary.

Other Works

Two more works were rehearsed on the same morning: Serge Prokofieff's Violin Concerto in G minor, with as graceful and brilliant a solo virtuoso as Zino Francescatti, and Brahams's Double Concerto, in which the orchestra's first cellist, Samuel Mayse, joined as second soloist, and drew a fervent applause from his colleagues for the fine performance of his part.

This classical work requires trained co-operation between the two solo instruments, as well as disciplined accompaniment by the orchestra. Only accomplished and well trained soloists are usually entrusted with a joint public performance of the work. The enthusiasm of the members of the orchestra at their fellow musician's success (who, I learned, was of Indian descent), was both understandable and admirable.

Special Interview

These vivid impressions of several hours' rehearsal of the orchestra, under Charles Munch, culminated in a special interview, the maestro was magnanimous enough to accord, after the thorough reading of three symphonic works and before the orchestra starts its concert tour in Europe. The conductor looked satisfied, inspite of the trying and tiring hours of the day. In a smiling dreamy look he gave me some of his reminiscences of the Holy Land for whose people he had some warm and encouraging words, in reviving his impressions of our National Symphonic Orchestra and the music loving public. But I wanted him to review the last symphonic season, and to hear whether he personally had something to stress the 75th anniversary year.

"I have a lot to say" - Mr. Munch remarked in a somewhat "desperate" tone, as if to warn me that whatever he was going to say was just a trifle of what he had to. On being satisfied that I well understood his misgivings, he reassuringly gave some details of his reflections.

American Works

"We traversed quite an artistic ground during this season," he said. "In addition to the normal classical and modern curriculum, the works of some 15 American-born and Americanized composers have been presented to the public, from Aaron Copeland to Buhuslav Martinu (a Czech born composer who has made the U.S. his home). All the work have been well received by the audiences."

Asked what the response to modern music was in Boston, the maestro was satisfied that it was encouraging.

"The Boston concert-goer is trained in the listening to new music," he said. "He would listen attentively and patiently to a first performance, and would not be shy to admit that he did not understand the work at once. But he would try again and again, until the inherent true values of the symphonic work would occur to him."

Really Great Day

With this thoughtful appraisal of the Boston music loving public, expressed by a great conductor, I parted from Maestro Charles Munch and the president and secretary of the Orchestra, feeling that my first day in the pursuit of New England's institutions of learning and culture was a really great day.

YOUR HOSPITAL

By MARY J. MURPHY

Echoes from the Charity Ball still linger with enthusiastic comments on the good time everyone enjoyed, the lovely garden-like atmosphere and the danceable music.

sentation of the check to the Symphony Orchestra.

Courier
CAMBRIDGE, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 11,000 Free

APR 26 1956

Radcliffe Graduate To Open Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open the final concert of its 75th year with a composition written for Radcliffe College's 75th Anniversary by one of the few and perhaps most distinguished women composers today, Mabel Daniels.

Originally scored for mixed chorus, trumpets, percussion and piano, the "Psalm of Praise'" was performed for the first time last year at Radcliffe's Diamond Jubilee Concert by the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society in Sanders Theatre, Cambridge.

The two undergraduate choruses will repeat the work which has been orchcestrated for stringed instruments, Friday afternoon and Saturday evening (April 27 and 28) in Symphony Hall with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Charles Munch conducting.

A graduate of Radcliffe with the class of 1900, Miss Daniel's compositions have been marked by a contemporary style which has not only kept abreast of the times, but has been experimental as well.

Orchestra preludes and symphonic works for chorus and orchestra which have been performed by Koussevitsky, Barbirolli, Hanson and other oustanding conductors, have expressed the musical times in which they were written.

In 1929, Miss Daniels wrote "Exultate Deo", a ccomposition for mixed chorus, for Of this composition which the Harvard and Radcliffe choruses also performed with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall, H.T. Parker of the Boston Transcript said "Rarely does a woman composer write in such a lofty vein and large scale fashion".

Twenty-five years later, "The Psalm of Praise" reflected through its structure and sonority the more complex harmonies and rhythms which have emerged during the last decades. Of this compostion, a Boston critic wrote "The Music is well wrought, bold and vigorous, contemporary in the best sense, Miss Daniels has the gift of good melodic invention, a talent that emerge at this work.

Miss Daniels' musical background set the stage for her career. Her father was president of the Handel and Haydn Society in Boston for many years. But although music played at large part in her childhood, it did not become an important part of her life until she entered Radcliffe College. As an undergraduate, she was the leader and soloist of the Choral Society and composed music for three operettas in which she either conducted the orchestra or sang the principal part. Josephine Hull, Radcliffe '99, was also a member of the cast.

After receiving an A. B. magna cum laude, she studied composition and orchestration with George W. Chadwick in Boston and Ludwig Thuille in Munich. In 1905, she wrte "an American Girl in Munich", a book based on her impressions as a music student there.

Miss Daniels received an honorary degree from Tufts University in 1933, from Boston University in 1939 and a citation fro Radcliffe College as its 75th Anniversary celebration. She is a trustee of the New England Conservatory of music, corporate member of the MacDowell Colony, and is a director of the friends of Music of Boston Universary and the Zimbler Sinfonietta. She was formerly an alumma trhstee of Radcliffe College and an honorary member of Phi Beta Kappa. She lives in Boston.

Only two other women have had symphony works performed y the Goston Symphony Orchestra. The Orchestra gave two performances of compositions of Margaret Ruthven Lang and H. H. A. Beech, composer and pianist, before the turn of the century.

With "The Psalm of Praise", the Boston Symphony Orchestra will have performed three compositions of Miss Daniels The others were "Exulate Deo" in 1933 and "Deep Forest" in 1937.

The Friday concert will make Miss Daniels not only the only woman to have had works performed by the BSO during this century, but also the woman who has had the most compositions performed by the Orchestra.

Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 39,259

APR 27 1956

Boston Symphony To End Anniversary

BOSTON, April 27—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will conclude its 75th anniversary season with an extra concert Sunday afternoon. The program will include Beethoven's 7th and Tchaikovsky's "Pathetique" symphonies.

The orchestra is scheduled to play in Cork and Dublin, Ireland Aug. 24 and 25. Some of the liveliest themes of Beethoven's 7th Symphony originate from a collection of Irish songs, for which the composer has set arrangements previously.

Page Twelve

Reverend Robert J. Gannon, S.J. Guest Of Boston Eire Society

The Eire Society of Boston will have as its honored guest speaker at its annual dinner on Saturday evening, May 5, Very Reverend Robert I. Gannon, S.J., former president of Fordham University. Msgr. Gannon will receive the Eire Society Gold Medal for 1956. This award is given in recognition of Msgr. Gannon's "outstanding contributions as a true educator of men and priest of God."

Bringing greetings from Ireland at the annual dinner will be John J. Hearne, ambassador for Ireland to the United States.

Michael T. Kelleher will receive, on behalf of the trustees of Boston Symphony Orchestra, a gift of $1,000 from the Eire Society in grateful appreciation of the concerts to be given by this famed orchestra in Cork and Dublin, Ireland.

Joseph Gannon, president of the Eire Society, will make the presentation of the check to the Symphony Orchestra.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 122,000

APR 25 1956

Society — Century-Old Composition to Have Premiere Here

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

Providing musical training for young Bostonians at nominal fees the Boston Music School will observe its 48th year of community service with a chamber music concert on April 30. The 8:30 program at 251 Commonwealth ave. will benefit the work of the school, which is also supported by Red Feather allocations and gifts of friends.

John Holmes and Paul and Helen Keaney will offer from manuscript a trio for oboe, horn and piano believed unheard before, although it was written by Heinrich von Herzogenberg in Brahms' day. Norma Farber will be the soprano soloist in pieces by Steffani and Bach and a poem, To the Lighthouse, set to music by John Bavicchi. The program will begin with trios by Ignaz and Franz Lachner.

Sponsors planning to take guests to the benefit include Mrs. Charles S. Richardson, Mrs. Alexander Steinert, Mr. and Mrs. Carl A. Weyerhaeuser, Mrs. H. S. Parson Rowe, Mrs. John A. Lunn, Mr. and Mrs. Kendall Preston, Mrs. Frederic Galacar, Mr. and Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller and Mr. and Mrs. John E. Boit.

Others interested in the performance include Mrs. John T. Bottomley, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Boyden, Mr. and Mrs. John Codman, George M. Butler Jr., Miss Susanna R. Dabney, Mr. and Mrs. William W. Dunnell Jr., Ernest Edler, Mrs. Richard A. Ehrlich, Mrs. Israel Friedlander and Mrs. Langdon Frothingham.

(Bachrach)

IN VIRGINIA on her wedding trip is Mrs. John J. Finnigan (Patricia Carey), who was married April 21 at the Basilica of Our Lady of Perpetual Help. The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William A. Carey of Jamaica Plain.

(Loring)

OCTOBER 13 is the wedding date chosen by Miss Mary T. Corcoran, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Francis A. Corcoran of Burlington, who are announcing her engagement to Francis P. Harte, son of Thomas F. Harte of Waltham.

GIVING A PARTY Saturday for Miss Mary K. Simonds and Samuel Parkman, who are to be married in June, are Mrs. W. M. Parker Mitchell and Mrs. Oliver H. P. Rodman. Mrs. Rodman will be hostess at her Brookline house, the guests including Mrs. Lester O. Simonds, Mrs. Francis Parkman, Mrs. Frederic D. Lawrence, Mrs. Bigelow Heath, Mrs. Charles W. Brockunier, Mrs. David Van-Buskirk, Miss Mary Burk Miss Waring Inge, Miss Pri cilla Dunphy, Miss Anne Eise man, Miss Penny Pownin Mrs. Philip Drinker, Mis Ishbel Keefer and Mis Barbara Ames.

THE FINAL SYMPHONY CON CERT this week by the Bosto Symphony Orchestra will feat ture Mabel Daniels' "Psalm o Praise" written for Radcliffe' 75th anniversary last year. Th work will be offered at the Fr day afternoon and Saturda evening concerts conducted b Charles Munch and performe by members of the Harvard Gle Club and Radcliffe Choral So ciety.

ACTIVITIES FOR OLDER PEO PLE will be the theme of th hobby show to be staged a Horticultural Hall May 11. Spon sored by the Red Feather's Com munity Recreation Service, the annual "60-plus" show will include collections as well as crafts and paintings. Show patrons include Miss Emma S. Alden, Miss Eleanor W. Allen, Lewis Armistead, F. Gregg Bemis, Mrs. William A. Burnham, Mrs. J. Templeman Coolidge, Mrs. Livingston Davis, Mrs. Henry G. Everett Jr., Mrs. David Forbes, Mrs. Marie Griggs, Mrs. Brinley M. Hall, Alan Hay, Charles Jackson, Ernest Jacoby, Mrs. Atherton Loring, Mrs. Albert G. Mason, Rev. John U. Miller, Arthur G. Rotch, Mrs. William P. Smith, Thomas J. Turley, Mrs. Guy Waring, Mrs. Eva Whiting White and Mrs. W. W. Dunnell.

NEW GARDENS surrounding old Beacon Hill houses not shown before by the Beacon Hill Garden Club will be open from 10 until 6, giving visitors a chance to see those of Mrs. Clayton B. Craig at 8 Wes Cedar st., Mrs. Edward A Taft at 8 Walnut st., Mr Thomas C. Howard at 46 M Vernon st., Mrs. Frederick Stagg at 14 Walnut st., Mr Polly Hebert at 32 West Ced st., Mrs. Thomas E. P. Rice 54 Chestnut st. and Mr James C. White at 34 M Vernon st.

A PRACTICAL DEMONSTR TION of the services contribut to the Beverly Hospital by volunteers was given yesterd afternoon at the annual meeti

NEFIT CHAIRMAN 5 at Pops which will College Night, is Mrs. F on, who is serving with M m Graham.

e hospital's aid associat ing at St. Peter's Episco ch in Beverly, White and members of o hes of volunteer se nstrated their roles.

Harry B. Duane Jr., of the volunteer serv ribute to Mrs. Sears T and Mrs. George who have served Ladies for 14 y taking part in the ncluded Miss Grace ector of nursing serv omas J. Fitzpatrick, rs. Jacob H. Fine of y committee.

West Roxbury Transcript
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 6324

Parkway Transcript
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 7,994

APR 26 1956

Emmanuel Night At Pops May 14

Emmanuel College Alumnae and students from West Roxbury are planning for the annual Emmanuel Night at the Pops to be held May 14.

Committee members are working hard to make the Symphony Hall event a family night as well, with students and alumnae attending in family groups with their parents, brothers, sisters, husbands and children.

Mrs. George H. Sweeney of Arlington is chairman and Mrs. Edward C. Keane of West Roxbury as co-chairmen.

A special feature of the Pops' program will be the presentation of songs by t Emmanu College Glee Club.

Proceeds of the concert, spo sored by the Alumnae Asso ation will benefit the colleg building program. Tickets ho ever, must be obtained by Ma 6 if benefits from the sale a to be realized.

Serving on the committe from West Roxury are: Mr James Travers, Mrs. James Co way, Mrs. John R. Barry, Mr Edmond J. Donlan, Mrs. Pa Markey, Mrs. Thomas Gaqu and Mrs. Matthew Butler.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 130,559

APR 25 1956

Undergraduate Choruses to Sing

Boston Symphony to Play New Mabel Daniels Work

By ELINOR HUGHES

"Psalm of Praise," the latest choral composition by Mabel Daniels, outstanding woman composer and celebrated graduate of Radcliffe College, will be performed at the final pair of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening at Symphony Hall.

This work was written by Miss Daniels for the 75th anniversary of Radcliffe and first was presented at Radcliffe's Diamond Choral Society in Sanders Theater, Cambridge, last year.

3D WOMAN HONORED

The same undergraduate choruses will sing "Psalm of Praise" with the Boston Symphony under the direction of Charles Muench and also will be heard in Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, the other work on the program.

Miss Daniels is only the third woman to have a symphonic work played by the Boston Symphony, the other composers having been Margaret Ruthven Lang and H. H. A. Beech, whose compositions were performed prior to the turn of the century. "Psalm of Praise," moreover, is her third work to be given at Symphony Hall, the others being "Exultate Deo" in 1933 and "Deep Forest" in 1937. "Exultate Deo," incidentally, was also written in honor of Radcliffe College at the time of the college's 50th anniversary.

That Mabel Daniels should have devoted her life to music is not surprising because her father was president of the Handel and Haydn Society for many years. As an undergraduate at Radcliffe she was the leader and soloist of the Choral Society and composed music for three operettas in which she either conducted the orchestra or sang the principal part. Josephine Hull, Radcliffe '99, was also a member of the cast.

Following her graduation, magna cum laude, she studied composition with George W. Chadwick in Boston and Ludwig Thuille in Munich, and in 1905 wrote "An American Girl in Munich," impressions of her life as a music student in that historic city.

Through her career her music has been marked by a contemporary style and a willingness to experiment. Her orchestra preludes and symphonic works have won high praise not only from music critics but also from such distinguished conductors as Koussevitzky, Barbirolli, Howard Hanson and others, and in recognition of her contribution to American music she has received honorary degrees from Tufts, Boston University and her own alma mater. She is a trustee of the New England Conservatory of Music, a corporate member of the MacDowell Colony and a director of the Friends of Music of Boston University and the Zimbler Sinfonietta.

Her compositions, in addition to those already mentioned, include "Songs of Elfland," a sonata for piano and violin; "Pirate's Island," "The Holy Star," "A Holiday Fantasy" and "The Christ Child." She has won numerous prizes for compositions, including a National Federation of Music Clubs award, and for several years was director of music at Simmons College.

NEWARK, N. J.
N. J. Afro-American
Circ. W. 9,489
APR 28 1956

Betty Allen gives recital

TALLAHASSEE — Betty Allen, promising young mezzo-soprano appeared in concert at Florida A. and M. University, Sunday evening, under the auspices of the artists and lyceum committee.

Miss Allen was born in Ohio and was graduated from Wilberforce University.

Her career was launched when Charles Munch selected her as soloist with the Boston Symphony in Symphony Hall, Tanglewood, and in Carnegie Hall performances of Honegger's La Danse des Morts. She also appeared at the Theatre des Champs Elysees in Paris as part of the International Exposition of the Arts.

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Republican
Circ. 80,746

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
Circ. D. 526,215 - S. 1,146,860

APR 28 1956

BOSTON SYMPHONY MAY PLAY IN RUSSI

WASHINGTON, April 27 (A —The State Department is look ing to the Boston Symphony Or chestra to take the place of the Philadelphia Orchestra, which as canceled plans to play in the oviet Union this year.

Department officials said to- y that the substitution of the oston orchestra, if it could be ranged, would have the added rtue of costing the Government othing.

Donald L. Engle, manager of he 105-member Philadelphia Orhestra, telegraphed the State Department last night that the roup had voted unanimously gainst going through with a roposed trip to the Soviet Union beginning Aug. 15.

The Boston Symphony, which also has a world reputation, is going to be in Western Europe and the Scandinavian countries during August and September. Officials said they hoped a way could be found to extend this tour into the Soviet Union for about five days.

They said the Soviet Government would act as impresario, as it did in the case of the "Porgy and Bess" opera troupe. This would guarantee expenses and a profit no matter what the gate receipts turned out to be.

Record (m)
MERIDEN, Conn.
Independent Republican
Circ. 15,700

Patriot (e)
BANGOR, Me.
Independent
Circ. 20,000

Herald (m)
RUTLAND, Vt.
Independent
Circ. 20,790

APR 28 1956

Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 113,081

APR 28 1956

Boston Symphony Asked To Tour in Russia

Boston —(UP)— The Boston Symphony is expected to visit of Russia this Summer.

The 104-piece orchestra was asked by the State Department yesterday to substitute for the Philadelphia Symphony, which was forced to cancel its planned Soviet tour because of a labor dispute.

Consent of orchestra members remained the only point to be completed. The State Department said there would be no trouble in arranging visas and travel accommodations.

Union Aug. 15.

This closed the negotiations which had been dogged by more than the usual U.S.-Soviet discord in such cases. There also was union-management trouble. This labor dispute over a pension plan spilled over into the efforts to send the world famous group to Russia.

The Boston Symphony is going to be in West Europe and the Scandinavian countries during August and September. Officials said they hope a way can be found to extend this tour into Russia for five days or so.

No cost to the U.S. government would be involved, they said. The Soviet government would act as impressario, as it did in the case of the Porgy and Bess Opera Co. This would guarantee expenses and a profit no matter what the gate receipts turned out to be.

A spokesman for the Boston Symphony said there is time available in the orchestra's European tour schedule to fit in the Russian concerts if they can be arranged. He said the orchestra management would have a statement "as soon as things are definite."

Sun (m)
LEWISTON-AUBURN, Me.
Independent
Circ. 21,208

Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 26,118

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER
Circ. D. 647,807 - S. 1,146,321

APR 28 1956

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
Circ. D. 336,443 - S. 528,253

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 196,593

Times (e)
PAWTUCKET-CENTRAL FALLS, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 28,059

Bulletin (e)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 146,283

Enterprise & Times (e)
BROCKTON, Mass.
Non-Partisan
Circ. 42,005

Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 39,259

APR 28 1956

MAY TOUR RUSSIA

BOSTON, April 28 (UP)—The Boston Symphony is expected to visit Russia this summer.

The 104-piece orchestra was asked by the State Department yesterday to substitute for the Philadelphia Symphony, which was forced to cancel its planned Soviet tour because of a labor dispute.

Actual consent by the orchestra members remained the only point to be completed.

Karakul lamb pelts are taken from the animals as soon after birth as possible.

The Symphony already has made plans to leave in mid-August for a month-long tour of Europe. After appearances in Scotland and Ireland, the group will visit Finland and Czechoslovakia. It has open dates for Sept. 5 and 6, at which time it is expected the orchestra would be able to go from Helsinki, Finland, to Moscow.

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 154,241

Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 58,894

News (e)
NEWBURYPORT, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 6,504

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 27,538

APR 30 1956

BSO Awaits Bid From Moscow for Soviet Concert

BOSTON (UP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra today awaited a formal invitation from Moscow for a trip to the Soviet Union.

The Russian cultural attache in Washington has made preliminary overtures to the Boston Symphony which already had scheduled a West European tour this summer. The Philadelphia orchestra was asked to go but members of that group voted unanimously against the trip late last week.

Monday night, the Boston Symphony ended its 75th anniversary season with a special concert to raise additional funds for its first European tour since 1953.

The 71st annual season of Boston pops concerts will open Tuesday night under the direction of Arthur Fiedler. It will be his 27th year as conductor of the popular concert series.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 122,000

APR 25 1956

Society — Century-Old Composition to Have Premiere Here

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

Providing musical training for young Bostonians at nominal fee the Boston Music School will observe its 48th year of community service with a chamber music concert on April 30. The 8:30 program at 251 Commonwealth ave. will benefit the work of the school, which is also supported by Red Feather allocations and gifts of friends.

John Holmes and Paul and Helen Keaney will offer from manuscript a trio for oboe, horn and piano believed unheard before, although it was written by Heinrich von Herzogenberg in Brahms' day. Norma Farber will be the soprano soloist in pieces by Steffani and Bach and a poem "To the Lighthouse" set to music by John Bavicchi. The program will begin with trios by Ignaz and Franz Lachner.

Sponsors planning to take guests to the benefit include Mrs. Charles S. Richardson, Mrs. Alexander Steinert, Mr. and Mrs. Carl A. Weyerhaeuser, Mrs. J. S. Payson Rowe, Mrs. John A. Lunn, Mr. and Mrs. Kendall Preston, Mrs. Frederic Galacar, Mr. and Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller and Mr. and Mrs. John E. Boit.

Others interested in the performance include Mrs. John T. Bottomley, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Boyden, Mr. and Mrs. John Coolidge, George M. Butler Jr., Miss Susanna R. Dabney, Mr. and Mrs. William W. Dunnell Jr., Ernest Spencer and Castleman Wortlington, making their second start of the season, opener to a four-game series over the Phils, 5 to 5, in last night as the Giants handsomely at the Polo Grounds. Well, all three came in sixth—Worthington, Giants' Mound Victor.

Said Manager Bill Rigney: "These three come through rehabilitation program and Foster Castleman—Al Worthington, Daryl—heavily on their young shoulders. Throughout their campaign this spring the Giants made it clear they were not a four-man team. Said Foster Castleman: "I'm proud of my teammates. Al Worthington, Daryl Spencer and Ray Katt made it possible for us to win. We all knew we could go places." By JOHN DRESKIN

4-Bagger Scores Cas

(Bachrach)

IN VIRGINIA on her wedding trip is Mrs. John J. Finnigan (Patricia Carey), who was married April 21 at the Basilica of Our Lady of Perpetual Help. The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William A. Carey of Jamaica Plain.

Edler, Mrs. Richard A. Ehrlich, Mrs. Israel Friedlander and Mrs. Langdon Frothingham.

GIVING A PARTY Saturday for Miss Mary K. Simonds and Samuel Parkman, who are to be married in June, are Mrs. W. M. Parker Mitchell and Mrs. Oliver H. P. Rodman. Mrs. Rodman will be hostess at her Brookline house, the guests including Mrs. Lester O. Simonds, Mrs. Francis Parkman, Mrs. Frederic D. Lawrence, Mrs. Bigelow Heath, Mrs. Charles W. Brockunier, Mrs. David Van-Buskirk, Miss Mary Burk Miss Waring Inge, Miss Pri cilla Dunphy, Miss Anne Eise man, Miss Penny Pownin Mrs. Philip Drinker, Mis Ishbel Keefer and Mis Barbara Ames.

THE FINAL SYMPHONY CONCERT this week by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will feature Mabel Daniels' "Psalm of Praise" written for Radcliffe's 75th anniversary last year. The work will be offered at the Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts conducted by Charles Munch and performed by members of the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society.

ACTIVITIES FOR OLDER PEOPLE will be the theme of the hobby show to be staged at Horticultural Hall May 11. Sponsored by the Red Feather's Community Recreation Service, the annual "60-plus" show will include collections as well as crafts and paintings. Show patrons include Miss Emma S. Alden, Miss Eleanor W. Allen, Lewis Armistead, F. Gregg Bemis, Mrs. William A. Burnham, Mrs. J. Templeman Coolidge, Mrs. Livingston Davis, Mrs. Henry G. Everett Jr., Mrs. David Forbes, Mrs. Marie Griggs, Mrs. Brinley M. Hall, Alan Hay, Charles Jackson, Ernest Jacoby, Mrs. Atherton Loring, Mrs. Albert G. Mason, Rev. John U. Miller, Arthur G. Rotch, Mrs. William P. Smith, Thomas J. Turley, Mrs. Guy Waring, Mrs. Eva Whiting White and Mrs. W. W. Dunnell.

NEW GARDENS surrounding old Beacon Hill houses not shown before by the Beacon Hill Garden Club will be open from 10 until 6, giving visitors a chance to see those of Mrs. Clayton B. Craig at 8 West Cedar st., Mrs. Edward A. Taft at 8 Walnut st., Mrs. Thomas C. Howard at 46 Mt. Vernon st., Mrs. Frederick L. Stagg at 14 Walnut st., Mrs. Polly Hebert at 32 West Cedar st., Mrs. Thomas E. P. Rice at 54 Chestnut st. and Mrs. James C. White at 34 Mt. Vernon st.

A PRACTICAL DEMONSTRATION of the services contributed to the Beverly Hospital by volunteers was given yesterday afternoon at the annual meeting

West Roxbury Transcript
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 6824

Parkway Transcript
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 7,994

APR 26 1956

Emmanuel Night At Pops May 14

Emmanuel College Alumnae and students from West Roxbury are planning for the annual Emmanuel Night at the Pops to be held May 14.

Committee members are working hard to make the Symphony Hall event a family night as well, with students and alumnae attending in family groups with their parents, brothers, sisters, husbands and children.

Mrs. George H. Sweeney of Arlington is chairman and Mrs. Edward C. Keane of West Roxbury as co-chairmen.

A special feature of the Pops' program will be the presentation of songs by the Emmanuel College Glee Club.

Proceeds of the concert, sponsored by the Alumnae Association will benefit the college building program. Tickets however, must be obtained by May 6 if benefits from the sale are to be realized.

Serving on the committee from West Roxury are: Mrs. James Travers, Mrs. James Conway, Mrs. John R. Barry, Mrs. Edmond J. Donlan, Mrs. Paul Markey, Mrs. Thomas Gaquin and Mrs. Matthew Butler.

Sun (m)
LEWISTON-AUBURN, Me.
Independent
Circ. 21,908

Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 26,118

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER
Circ. D. 647,807 - S. 1,146,321

APR 28 1956

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
Circ. D. 336,443 - S. 528,253

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 196,593

ROOF LEAK, $14
NEW ROOF, $179
Painting, gutters, chimneys.
All work fully guaranteed.

...EFIT CHAIRMAN ...5 at Pops which will ... College Night, is Mrs. F... ...on, who is serving with ...m Graham.

...e hospital's aid associa... ...ing at St. Peter's Episc... ...ch in Beverly, White ... and members of ... ...hes of volunteer se... ...nstrated their roles.

... Harry B. Duane Jr. ... of the volunteer serv... ...ribute to Mrs. Sears T... and Mrs. George ... who have serve... Ladies for 14 y... taking part in the ncluded Miss Grace ...ector of nursing serv... ...omas J. Fitzpatrick, ...s. Jacob H. Fine o... ...y committee.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 130,559

APR 25 1956

Undergraduate Choruses to Sing

Boston Symphony to Play New Mabel Daniels Work

By ELINOR HUGHES

"Psalm of Praise," the latest choral composition by Mabel Daniels, outstanding woman composer and celebrated graduate of Radcliffe College, will be performed at the final pair of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening at Symphony Hall.

This work was written by Miss Daniels for the 75th anniversary of Radcliffe and first was presented at Radcliffe's Diamond Choral Society in Sanders Theater, Cambridge, last year.

3D WOMAN HONORED

The same undergraduate choruses will sing "Psalm of Praise" with the Boston Symphony under the direction of Charles Muench and also will be heard in Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, the other work on the program.

Miss Daniels is only the third woman to have a symphonic work played by the Boston Symphony, the other composers having been Margaret Ruthven Lang and H. H. A. Beech, whose compositions were performed prior to the turn of the century. "Psalm of Praise," moreover, is her third work to be given at Symphony Hall, the others being "Exultate Deo" in 1933 and "Deep Forest" in 1937. "Exultate Deo," incidentally, was also written in honor of Radcliffe College at the time of the college's 50th anniversary.

That Mabel Daniels should have devoted her life to music is not surprising because her father was president of the Handel and Haydn Society for many years. As an undergraduate at Radcliffe she was the leader and soloist of the Choral Society and composed music for three operettas in which she either conducted the orchestra or sang the principal part. Josephine Hull, Radcliffe '99, was also a member of the cast.

Following her graduation, magna cum laude, she studied composition with George W. Chadwick in Boston and Ludwig Thuille in Munich, and in 1905 wrote "An American Girl in Munich," impressions of her life as a music student in that historic city.

Through her career her music has been marked by a contemporary style and a willingness to experiment. Her orchestra preludes and symphonic works have won high praise not only from music critics but also from such distinguished conductors as Koussevitzky, Barbirolli, Howard Hanson and others, and in recognition of her contribution to American music she has received honorary degrees from Tufts, Boston University and her own alma mater. She is a trustee of the New England Conservatory of Music, a corporate member of the MacDowell Colony and a director of the Friends of Music of Boston University and the Zimbler Sinfonietta.

Her compositions, in addition to those already mentioned, include "Songs of Elfland," a sonata for piano and violin; "Pirate's Island," "The Holy Star," "A Holiday Fantasy" and "The Christ Child." She has won numerous prizes for compositions, including a National Federation of Music Clubs award, and for several years was director of music at Simmons College.

NEWARK, N. J.
N. J. Afro-American
Circ. W. 9,489

APR 28 1956

Betty Allen gives recital

TALLAHASSEE — Betty Allen, promising young mezzo-soprano appeared in concert at Florida A. and M. University, Sunday evening, under the auspices of the artists and lyceum committee.

Miss Allen was born in Ohio and was graduated from Wilberforce University.

Her career was launched when Charles Munch selected her as soloist with the Boston Symphony in Symphony Hall, Tanglewood, and in Carnegie Hall performances of Honegger's La Danse des Morts. She also appeared at the Theatre des Champs Elysees in Paris as part of the International Exposition of the Arts.

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 154,241

Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 58,894

News (e)
NEWBURYPORT, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 6,504

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 27,538

APR 30 1956

Record (m)

State Dept. Asks Boston Symphony To Play in Russ...

Washington, April 27 ... The State Department ...king to the Boston Symph... Orchestra to take the plac... the Philadelphia Orches... which has canceled plans ... play in the Soviet Union ... year.

...partment officials said ...y that substitution of the ...on orchestra, if it can be ...nged, would have the ...d virtue of not costing ... U. S. government one ...y.

...e Boston Symphony is ...g to be in West Europe ... the Scandinavian coun... during August and Sep...er. Officials said they ... a way can be found to ...d this tour into Russia ...ive days or so.

...cost to the U. S. govern... would be involved, they ... The Soviet government ... act as impressario, as ... in the case of the Porgy ... Bess Opera Co. This ... guarantee expenses and ...fit no matter what the ... receipts turned out to ...

Orchestra To Visit Russia

WASHINGTON, April 27 (AP). — The State department is looking to the Boston Symphony Orchestra to take the place of the Philadelphia orchestra, which has cancelled plans to play in the Soviet Union this year.

Department officials said today that substitution of the Boston orchestra, if it can be arranged, would have the added virtue of not costing the U.S. government one penny.

Donald L. Engle, manager of the 105-member Philadelphia orchestra, telegraphed the department last night that the group had voted unanimously against going through with a proposed trip to the Soviet Union Aug. 15.

This closed the negotiations which had been dogged by more than the usual U.S.-Soviet discord in such cases. There also was union-management trouble. This labor dispute over a pension plan spilled over into the efforts to send the world famous group to Russia.

The Boston Symphony is going to be in West Europe and the Scandinavian countries during August and September. Officials said they hope a way can be found to extend this tour into Russia for five days or so.

No cost to the U.S. government would be involved, they said. The Soviet government would act as impressario, as it did in the case of the Porgy and Bess Opera Co. This would guarantee expenses and a profit no matter what the gate receipts turned out to be.

A spokesman for the Boston Symphony said there is time available in the orchestra's European tour schedule to fit in the Russian concerts if they can be arranged. He said the orchestra management would have a statement "as soon as things are definite."

Boston Symphony May Visit Russia

BOSTON. — (UP) — The Boston Symphony is expected to visit Russia this summer.

The 104-piece orchestra was asked by the State department yesterday to substitute for the Philadelphia Symphony, which was forced to cancel its planned soviet tour because of a labor dispute.

Actual consent by the orchestra members remained the only point to be completed. The State department said there would be no trouble in arranging visas and travel accommodations.

Thomas D. Perry, Jr., orchestra business manager, conferred yesterday on arrangements with State department officials in Washington.

The symphony already has made plans to leave in mid-August for a month-long tour of Europe. After appearances in Scotland and Ireland, the group will visit Finland and Czechoslovakia. It has open dates for Sept. 5 and 6, at which time it is expected the orchestra would be able to go from Helsinki, Finland, to Moscow.

BSO Awaits Bid From Moscow for Soviet Concert

BOSTON (UP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra today awaited a formal invitation from Moscow for a trip to the Soviet Union.

The Russian cultural attache in Washington has made preliminary overtures to the Boston Symphony which already had scheduled a West European tour this summer.

The Philadelphia orchestra was on tap to go but members of that group voted unanimously against the trip late last week.

Sunday night, the Boston Symphony ended its 75th anniversary season with a special concert to raise additional funds for its first European tour since 1953.

The 71st annual season of Boston pops concerts will open Tuesday night under the direction of Arthur Fiedler. It will be his 27th year as conductor of the popular concert series.

urier
IDGE, Mass.
Independent
,000 Free
6 1956

Graduate Concert

Symphony Or-
open the fin
s 75th year wit
on written fo
lege's 75th An one of the few
s most disting-
n composers to-
Daniels.
scored for mixed pets, percussion
the "Psalm of performed for e last year at Diamond Jubilee
he Harvard Glee
Radcliffe Choral
Sanders Theatre,

undergraduate repeat the work
en orchcestrated instruments, Fri-
n and Saturday
l 27 and 28) in ll with the Bos-
ony Orchestra.
ch conducting.
of Radcliffe with 900, Miss Daniel's
have been mark-
temporary style
not only kept
e times, but has
ental as well.
preludes and sy-
s for chorus and ich have been
y Koussevitsky,
nson and other
onductors, have musical times
ey were written.
ss Daniels wrote
o", a ccomposi-
ed chorus, for osition which the
Radcliffe thor-
formed with the hony Orchestra
Hall, H.T. Par-
Boston Transcript
does a woman
ite in such a nd large scale

years later,
of Praise" re-
gh its structure
the more comes and rhythms
emerged during
des. Of this com-
ston critic wrote
is well wrought,
gorous, contem-
best sense, Miss
the gift of good
ntion, a talent
at this work.
ls' musical back-
he stage for her father was pre-
he Handel and
y in Boston for
But although at large part in d, it did not beportant part of
til she entered
lege. As an un-
she was the soloist of the y and composed
ree operettas in either conducted
a or sang the
t. Josephine Hull,
9, was also a
the cast.
iving an A. B.
under she studied

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 122,000

APR 25 1956

Society

Century-Old Composition to Have Premiere Here

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

Providing musical training for young Bostonians at nominal fee the Boston Music School will observe its 48th year of community service with a chamber music concert on April 30. The 8:30 program at 251 Commonwealth av. will benefit the work of the school, which is also supported by Red Feather allocations and gifts of friends.

John Holmes and Paul and Helen Keaney will offer from manuscript a trio for oboe, horn and piano believed unheard before, although it was written by Heinrich von Heraogenberg in Brahms' day. Norma Farber will be the soprano soloist in pieces by Steffani and Bach and a poem "To the Lighthouse" set to music by John Bavicchi. The program will begin with trios by Ignaz and Franz Lachner.

Sponsors planning to take guests to the benefit include Mrs. Charles S. Richardson, Mrs. Alexander Steinert, Mr. and Mrs. Carl A. Weyerhaeuser, Mrs. H. S. Payson Rowe, Mrs. John A. Lunn, Mr. and Mrs. Kendall Preston, Mrs. Frederic Galacar, Mr. and Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller and Mr. and Mrs. John E. Boit.

Others interested in the performance include Mrs. John T. Bottomley, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Boyden, Mr. and Mrs. John Codman, George M. Butler Jr., Miss Susanna R. Dabney, Mr. and Mrs. William W. Dunnell Jr., Ernest Buskirk, Miss Mary Burk, Miss Waring Inge, Miss Pris cilla Dunphy, Miss Anne Eise man, Miss Penny Pownin Mrs. Philip Drinker, Mis Ishbel Keefer and Mis Barbara Ames.

(Bachrach)

IN VIRGINIA on her wedding trip is Mrs. John J. Finnigan (Patricia Carey), who was married April 21 at the Basilica of Our Lady of Perpetual Help. The

THE FINAL SYMPHONY CONCERT this week by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will feature Mabel Daniels' "Psalm of Praise" written for Radcliffe's 75th anniversary last year. The work will be offered at the Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts conducted by Charles Munch and performed by members of the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society.

ACTIVITIES FOR OLDER PEOPLE will be the theme of the hobby show to be staged at Horticultural Hall May 11. Sponsored by the Red Feather's Community Recreation Service, the annual "60-plus" show will include collections as well as crafts and paintings. Show patrons include Miss Emma S. Alden, Miss Eleanor W. Allen, Lewis Armistead, F. Gregg Bemis, Mrs. William A. Burnham, Mrs. J. Templeman Coolidge, Mrs. Livingston Davis, Mrs. Henry G. Everett Jr., Mrs. David Forbes, Mrs. Marie Griggs, Mrs. Brinley M. Hall, Alan Hay, Charles Jackson, Ernest Jacoby, Mrs. Atherton Loring, Mrs. Albert G. Mason, Rev. John U. Miller, Arthur G. Rotch, Mrs. William P. Smith, Thomas J. Turley, Mrs. Guy Waring, Mrs. Eva Whiting White and Mrs. W. W. Dunnell.

NEW GARDENS surround old Beacon Hill houses own before by the Bee ill Garden Club will be o om 10 until 6, giving visi chance to see those of J layton B. Craig at 8 W edar st., Mrs. Edward ft at 8 Walnut st., homas C. Howard at 46 ernon st., Mrs. Frederic agg at 14 Walnut st., olly Hebert at 32 West C , Mrs. Thomas E. P. Rid Chestnut st. and mes C. White at 34 ernon st.

PRACTICAL DEMONSTRATION of the services contrib the Beverly Hospital by lunteers was given yeste ternoon at the annual me

BENEFIT CHAIRMAN y 5 at Pops which will gis College Night, is Mrs. F Dillon, who is serving with illiam Graham.

f the hospital's aid associat eeting at St. Peter's Episc hurch in Beverly, White es and members of o anches of volunteer se monstrated their roles.

Mrs. Harry B. Duane Jr., d ctor of the volunteer service id tribute to Mrs. Sears Tuck nan and Mrs. George F vinn, who have served a hite Ladies for 14 year hers taking part in the pre m included Miss Grace Nan director of nursing service s. Thomas J. Fitzpatrick, R. N Mrs. Jacob H. Fine of th isory committee.

West Roxbury Transcript
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 6324

Parkway Transcript
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 7,994

APR 26 1956

Emmanuel Night At Pops May 14

Emmanuel College Alumnae and students from West Roxbury are planning for the annual Emmanuel Night at the Pops to be held May 14.

Committee members are working hard to make the Symphony Hall event a family night as well, with students and alumnae attending in family groups with their parents, brothers, sisters, husbands and children.

Mrs. George H. Sweeney of Arlington is chairman and Mrs. Edward C. Keane of West Roxbury as co-chairmen.

A special feature of the Pops' program will be the presentation of songs by the Emmanuel College Glee Club.

Proceeds of the concert, sponsored by the Alumnae Association will benefit the college building program. Tickets however, must be obtained by May 6 if benefits from the sale are to be realized.

Serving on the committee from West Roxury are: Mrs. James Travers, Mrs. James Conway, Mrs. John R. Barry, Mrs. Edmond J. Donlan, Mrs. Paul Markey, Mrs. Thomas Gaquin and Mrs. Matthew Butler.

Sun (m)
LEWISTON-AUBURN, Me.
Independent

Joins NU Group

—John F. Carney, 102 Winthrop street, is one of 17 Northeastern University engineering students inducted into Phi Kappa Sigma, a national engineering and is a graduate of Coyle High school.

—Much interest was demonstrated in the "Hobby Show" conducted Thursday night in Baldwin Hall of First Parish Congregational church. Throughout the day-long program, numerous participants and guests filled the hall to inspect the many hobbies which varied from foreign dolls and uniforms to Japanese articles and hooked rugs. Mrs.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 130,559

APR 25 1956

Undergraduate Choruses to Sing

Boston Symphony to Play New Mabel Daniels Work

By ELINOR HUGHES

"Psalm of Praise," the latest choral composition by Mabel Daniels, outstanding woman composer and celebrated graduate of Radcliffe College, will be performed at the final pair of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening at Symphony Hall.

This work was written by Miss Daniels for the 75th anniversary of Radcliffe and first was presented at Radcliffe's Diamond Choral Society in Sanders Theater, Cambridge, last year.

3D WOMAN HONORED

The same undergraduate choruses will sing "Psalm of Praise" with the Boston Symphony under the direction of Charles Muench and also will be heard in Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, the other work on the program.

Miss Daniels is only the third woman to have a symphonic work played by the Boston Symphony, the other composers having been Margaret Ruthven Lang and H. H. A. Beech, whose compositions were performed prior to the turn of the century. "Psalm of Praise," moreover, is her third work to be given at Symphony Hall, the others being "Exultate Deo" in 1933 and "Deep Forest" in 1937. "Exultate Deo," incidentally, was also written in honor of Radcliffe College at the time of the college's 50th anniversary.

That Mabel Daniels should have devoted her life to music is not surprising because her father was president of the Handel and Haydn Society for many years. As an undergraduate at Radcliffe she was the leader and soloist of the Choral Society and composed music for three operettas in which she either conducted the orchestra or sang the principal part. Josephine Hull, Radcliffe '99, was also a member of the cast.

Following her graduation, magna cum laude, she studied composition with George W. Chadwick in Boston and Ludwig Thuille in Munich, and in 1905 wrote "An American Girl in Munich," impressions of her life as a music student in that historic city.

Through her career her music has been marked by a contemporary style and a willingness to experiment. Her orchestra preludes and symphonic works have won high praise not only from music critics but also from such

NEWARK, N. J.
N. J. Afro-American
Circ. W. 9,489

APR 28 1956

Betty Allen gives recital

TALLAHASSEE — Betty Allen, promising young mezzo-soprano appeared in concert at Florida A. and M. University, Sunday evening, under the auspices of the artists and lyceum committee.

Miss Allen was born in Ohio and was graduated from Wilberforce University.

Her career launched when Charles Munch selected her as soloist with the symphony in Tanglewood. She has sung in Carnegie Hall, Tanglewood's Theatre in Paris, and in leading concerts in Europe.

TOWNS fought three hours yesterday in Sacred Heart Church. About 500 persons suspect a short circuit caused conductors as Mitropoulos, Bernstein, Sabarbirolli, Howard Hanson, and others. She has received several valuable awards for her contribution to music. She has received degrees from Howard University and her alma mater. She is a member of the New England Conservatory of Music, a cor- of the MacDowell Colony, and a director of the Music of Boston University and the Zimbler Sinfonietta.

Her compositions, in addition to already mentioned, include "Songs of Elfland," a sonata for piano and violin; "Pi- d," "The Holy Star," "Fantasy" and "The d." She has won numerous prizes for compositions, a National Federation of Clubs award, and for years was director of Simmons College.

State Dept. Asks Boston Symphony To Play in Rus

Washington, April 27 (
The State Department
looking to the Boston Sympho ny Orchestra to take the plac
of the Philadelphia Orches tra, which has canceled plan to play in the Soviet Unio
this year.

Department officials sai today that substitution of th
Boston orchestra, if it can be arranged, would have the added virtue of not costing the U. S. government one penny.

The Boston Symphony is going to be in West Europe
and the Scandinavian countries during August and September. Officials said they hope a way can be found to extend this tour into Russia
for five days or so.

No cost to the U. S. government would be involved, they said. The Soviet government would act as impressario, as it did in the case of the Porgy
and Bess Opera Co. This would guarantee expenses and a profit no matter what the gate receipts turned out to be.

Boston Symphony To Visit Russia

BOSTON (UP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra is expected to visit Russia this summer.

The 104-piece orchestra was asked by the State Department Friday to substitute for the Philadelphia Symphony, which was forced to cancel its planned Soviet tour because of a labor dispute.

The Boston symphony already has made plans to leave in mid-August for a month-long tour of Europe. It has open dates for Sept. 5 and 6, at which time it is expected the orchestra would be able to go from Helsinki, Finland, to Moscow.

labor dispute over a pension plan spilled over into the efforts to send the world famous group to Russia.

Boston Symphony May Visit Russia

Boston—(UP)—The Boston Symphony is expected to visit Russia this summer.

The 104-piece orchestra was asked by the State Department yesterday to substitute for the Philadelphia Symphony, which was forced to cancel its planned Soviet tour because of a labor dispute.

Actual consent by the orchestra members remained the only point to be completed. The State Department said there would be no trouble in arranging visas and travel accommodations.

The symphony already has made plans to leave in mid-August for a month-long tour of Europe. After appearances in Scotland and Ireland, the group will visit Finland and Czechoslovakia. It has open dates for Sept. 5 and 6, at which time it is expected the orchestra would be able to go from Helsinki, Finland, to Moscow.

BOSTON (UP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra is expected to visit Russia this summer.

The 104-piece orchestra was asked by the State Department Friday to substitute for the Philadelphia Symphony, which was forced to cancel its planned Soviet tour because of a labor dispute.

The Boston symphony already has made plans to leave in mid-August for a month-long tour of Europe. It has open dates for Sept. 5 and 6, at which time it is expected the orchestra would be able to go from Helsinki, Finland, to Moscow.

Washington.

The symphony already has made plans to leave in mid-August for a month-long tour of Europe. After appearances in Scotland and Ireland, the group will visit Finland and Czechoslovakia. It has open dates for Sept. 5 and 6, at which time it is expected the orchestra would be able to go from Helsinki, Finland, to Moscow.

Iron Curtain.

Courier
BRIDGE, Mass.
Independent
1,000 Free
6 1956

Graduate Concert

n Symphony Or-open the fin
s 75th year wit
on written fo
llege's 75th An one of the few
ps most disting-
en composers to-
Daniels.
scored for mixed
mpets, percussion
the "Psalm of performed for me last year at Diamond Jubilee
he Harvard Glee
Radcliffe Choral
Sanders Theatre,

undergraduate repeat the work
een orchcestrated instruments, Fri-
n and Saturday
il 27 and 28) in all with the Bos-
ony Orchestra.
ch conducting.
of Radcliffe with 900, Miss Daniel's
have been mark-
ntemporary style
not only kept
e times, but has
ental as well.
preludes and sy-
s for chorus and hich have been
y Koussevitsky,
nson and other conductors, have e musical times
ey were written.
ss Daniels wrote
o", a ccomposi-
xed chorus, for osition which the
Radcliffe thor-
formed with the hony Orchestra
Hall, H.T. Par-
Boston Transcript
does a woman
rite in such a nd large scale

years later,
of Praise" re-
gh its structure
the more comes and rhythms
emerged during
des. Of this com-
ston critic wrote
is well wrought,
gorous, contem-
best sense, Miss
the gift of good
ntion, a talent
at this work.
s' musical back-
he stage for her father was pre-
he Handel and
y in Boston for
But although
at large part in
, it did not beportant part of
til she entered
lege. As an un-
she was the soloist of the y and composed
ree operettas in either conducted
a or sang the
. Josephine Hull,
, was also a
he cast.
ving an A. B.
nde she studied

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 122,000

APR 25 1956

Society — Century-Old Composition to Have Premiere Here

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

Providing musical training for young Bostonians at nominal fees the Boston Music School will observe its 48th year of community service with a chamber music concert on April 30. The 8:30 program at 251 Commonwealth ave. will benefit the work of the school, which is also supported by Red Feather allocations and gifts of friends.

John Holmes and Paul and Helen Keaney will offer from manuscript a trio for oboe, horn and piano believed unheard before, although it was written by Heinrich von Heraogenberg in Brahms' day. Norma Farber will be the soprano soloist in pieces by Steffani and Bach and a poem, "To the Lighthouse" set to music by John Bavicchi. The program will begin with trios by Ignaz and Franz Lachner.

Sponsors planning to take guests to the benefit include Mrs. Charles S. Richardson, Mrs. Alexander Steinert, Mr. and Mrs. Carl A. Weyerhaeuser, Mrs. H. S. Paxson Rowe, Mrs. John A. Lunn, Mr. and Mrs. Kendall Preston, Mrs. Frederic Galacar, Mr. and Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller and Mr. and Mrs. John E. Boit.

Others interested in the performance include Mrs. John T. Bottomley, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Boyden, Mr. and Mrs. John Codman, George M. Butler Jr., Miss Susanna R. Dabney, Mr. and Mrs. William W. Dunnell Jr., Ernest

Buskirk, Miss Mary Burk
Miss Waring Inge, Miss Pris cilla Dunphy, Miss Anne Eise man, Miss Penny Powning
Mrs. Philip Drinker, Mis
Ishbel Keefer and Mis
Barbara Ames.

THE FINAL SYMPHONY CON
CERT this week by the Bosto
Symphony Orchestra will feat ture Mabel Daniels' "Psalm o
Praise" written for Radcliffe'
75th anniversary last year. Th work will be offered at the Fri day afternoon and Saturda evening concerts conducted b
Charles Munch and performe
by members of the Harvard Gle Club and Radcliffe Choral So ciety.

ACTIVITIES FOR OLDER PEO
PLE will be the theme of th hobby show to be staged a Horticultural Hall May 11. Spon sored by the Red Feather's Com munity Recreation Service, the annual "60-plus" show will include collections as well as crafts and paintings. Show patrons include Miss Emma S.
Alden, Miss Eleanor W. Allen,
Lewis Armistead, F. Gregg
Bemis, Mrs. William A. Burnham, Mrs. J. Templeman Cool-edge, Mrs. Livingston Davis, Mrs.
Henry G. Everett Jr.,
David Forbes, Mrs. Marie Gr
Mrs. Brinley M. Hall, Alan
Charles Jackson, Ernest Ja
Mrs. Atherton Loring, Mrs.
G. Mason, Rev. John
Arthur G. Rotch,
n P. Smith, Thoma
Mrs. Guy Waring,
Whiting White and Dunnell.

GARDENS surroun
Beacon Hill houses
n before by the Bee
Garden Club will be o
10 until 6, giving visi nce to see those of M on B. Craig at 8 W
r st., Mrs. Edward at 8 Walnut st.,
mas C. Howard at 46
on st., Mrs. Frederic g at 14 Walnut st.,
y Hebert at 32 West C
Mrs. Thomas E. P. Ri
Chestnut st. and es C. White at 34
non st.

RACTICAL DEMONST
N of the services contri the Beverly Hospital b
unteers was given yeste
ernoon at the annual me

ENEFIT CHAIRMAN
ay 5 at Pops which wil
gis College Night, is Mrs. F
Dillon, who is serving with illiam Graham.

the hospital's aid associa
eeting at St. Peter's Episc hurch in Beverly, White es and members of d
anches of volunteer se
monstrated their roles.

Mrs. Harry B. Duane Jr., d ctor of the volunteer service
id tribute to Mrs. Sears Tuck man and Mrs. George vinn, who have served hite Ladies for 14 year hers taking part in the pre
m included Miss Grace Nan-
director of nursing services;
s. Thomas J. Fitzpatrick, R. N.,
Mrs. Jacob H. Fine of the
isory committee.

pute over a pension plan spilled over into the efforts to send the world famous group to Russia.

The Boston Symphony is going to be in West Europe and the Scandinavian countries during August and September. Officials said they hope a way can be found to extend this tour into Russia for five days or so.

No cost to the U.S. government would be involved, they said. The Soviet government would act as impressario, as it did in the case of the Porgy and Bess Opera Co. This would guarantee expenses and a profit no matter what the gate receipts turned out to be.

Miss Philippa Guerrette, cous in of the bride, was maid o honor. She was attired in a blus pink nylon net gown, sprinkle with sequins over shirred tulle and carried a cascade of pin carnations.

Bridesmaids were Miss Patri cia Carey and Miss France
Crowley, Miss Carey and Mis
Crowley wore pink and blue gowns, matched in style of ylor

ORIENTAL

Emmanuel Night At Pops May 14

Emmanuel College Alumnae and students from West Roxbury are planning for the annual Emmanuel Night at the Pops to be held May 14.

Committee members are working hard to make the Symphony Hall event a family night as well, with students and alumnae attending in family groups with their parents, brothers, sisters, husbands and children.

Mrs. George H. Sweeney of Arlington is chairman and Mrs. Edward C. Keane of West Roxbury as co-chairmen.

A special feature of the Pops' program will be the presentation of songs by the Emmanuel College Glee Club.

Proceeds of the concert, sponsored by the Alumnae Association will benefit the college building program. Tickets however, must be obtained by May 6 if benefits from the sale are to be realized.

Serving on the committee from West Roxury are: Mrs. James Travers, Mrs. James Conway, Mrs. John R. Barry, Mrs. Edmond J. Donlan, Mrs. Paul Markey, Mrs. Thomas Gaquin and Mrs. Matthew Butler.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 130,559

APR 25 1956

67

Undergraduate Choruses to Sing

Boston Symphony to Play New Mabel Daniels Work

By ELINOR HUGHES

"Psalm of Praise," the latest choral composition by Mabel Daniels, outstanding woman composer and celebrated graduate of Radcliffe College, will be performed at the final pair of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening at Symphony Hall.

This work was written by Miss Daniels for the 75th anniversary of Radcliffe and first was presented at Radcliffe's Diamond Choral Society in Sanders Theater, Cambridge, last year.

3D WOMAN HONORED

The same undergraduate choruses will sing "Psalm of Praise" with the Boston Symphony under the direction of Charles Muench and also will be heard in Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, the other work on the program.

Miss Daniels is only the third woman to have a symphonic work played by the Boston Symphony, the other composers having been Margaret Ruthven Lang and H. H. A. Beech, whose compositions were performed prior to the turn of the century. "Psalm of Praise," moreover, is her third work to be given at Symphony Hall, the others being "Exultate Deo" in 1933 and "Deep Forest" in 1937. "Exultate Deo," incidentally, was also written in honor of Radcliffe College at the time of the college's 50th anniversary.

That Mabel Daniels should have devoted her life to music is not surprising because her father was president of the Handel and Haydn Society for many years. As an undergraduate at Radcliffe she was the leader and soloist of the Choral Society and composed music for three operettas in which she either conducted the orchestra or sang the principal part. Josephine Hull, Radcliffe '99, was also a member of the cast.

Following her graduation, magna cum laude, she studied composition with George W. Chadwick in Boston and Ludwig Thuille in Munich, and in 1905 wrote "An American Girl in Munich," impressions of her life as a music student in that historic city.

Through her career her music has been marked by a contemporary style and a willingness to experiment. Her orchestra preludes and symphonic works have won high praise not only from music critics but also from such distinguished conductors as Koussevitzky, Barbirolli, Howard Hanson and others, and in recognition of her contribution to American music she has received honorary degrees from Tufts, Boston University and her alma mater. She is a trustee of the New England Conservatory of Music, a corporate member of the MacDowell Colony and a director of the Friends of Music of Boston University and the Zimbler Sinfonietta.

Other compositions, in addition to those already mentioned, include "Songs of Elfland," a sonata for piano and violin; "Pirate's Island," "The Holy Star," "Holiday Fantasy" and "The Christ Child." She has won numerous prizes for compositions, including a National Federation of Music Clubs award, and for several years was director of music at Simmons College.

NEWARK, N. J.
N. J. Afro-American
Circ. W. 9,489

APR 28 1956

Betty Allen

Legislature Election Law

Limitation on occupations to exemption from service.
Election every 10 years on constitutional convention.
Grant specific home rule power to cities and towns.
Provide for holding one-day law revisions.
Grant East Providence vote on provisions of the home rule

Transportation Bids Solicited

State Dept. Asks Boston Symphony To Play in Russ

Washington, April 27 (
The State Department
looking to the Boston Sympho
ny Orchestra to take the plac
of the Philadelphia Orches tra, which has canceled plans to play in the Soviet Union
this year.

Department officials said
today that substitution of the Boston orchestra, if it can be arranged, would have the added virtue of not costing the U. S. government one penny.

The Boston Symphony is going to be in West Europe
and the Scandinavian countries during August and September. Officials said they hope a way can be found to extend this tour into Russia
for five days or so.

No cost to the U. S. government would be involved, they said. The Soviet government would act as impressario, as it did in the case of the Porgy
and Bess Opera Co. This would guarantee expenses and
a profit no matter what the gate receipts turned out to be.

Boston Symphony New Russia Replacement

WASHINGTON, April 27 (AP) — The State Department is looking to the Boston Symphony Orchestra to take the place of the Philadelphia orchestra, which has canceled plans to play in the Soviet Union this year.

Department officials said today that substitution of the Boston orchestra, if it can be arranged, would have the added virtue of not costing the U. S. government one penny.

Donald L. Engle, manager of the 105-member Philadelphia orchestra, telegraphed the department last night that the group had voted unanimously against going through with a proposed trip to the Soviet Union Aug. 15.

This closed the negotiations which had been dogged by more than the usual U. S.-Soviet discord in such cases. There also was union-management trouble. This labor dispute over a pension plan spilled over into the efforts to send the world famous group to Russia.

Boston Symphony May Visit Russia

BOSTON (UP) — The Boston Symphony is expected to visit Russia this summer.

The 104-piece orchestra was asked by the State Department yesterday to substitute for the Philadelphia Symphony, which was forced to cancel its planned Soviet tour because of a labor dispute.

Actual consent by the orchestra members remained the only point to be completed. The State Department said there would be no trouble in arranging visas and travel accommodations.

The Symphony already has made plans to leave in mid-August for a month-long tour of Europe.

public affairs, said.

Perry said the orchestra already has scheduled one concert behind the Iron Curtain. This is on Sept. 11 in Prague.

The orchestra will leave Boston in mid-August.

By Boston's Symphony Due

BOSTON, April 28 (UP)—The Boston Symphony is expected to visit Russia this Summer.

The 104-piece orchestra was asked by the State Department to substitute for the Philadelphia Symphony, which was forced to cancel its planned Soviet tour because of a labor dispute.

Actual consent by the orchestra members remained the only point to be completed. The State Department said there would be no trouble in arranging visas and travel accommodatoins.

Thomas D. Perry Jr., orchestra business manager, conferred yesterday on arrangements with State Department officials in Washington.

The symphony already has made plans to leave in mid-August for a month-long tour of Europe. After appearances in Scotland and Ireland, the group will visit Finland and Czechoslovakia. It has open dates for Sept. 5 and 6, at which time it is expected the orchestra would be able to go from Helsinki, Finland, to Moscow.

Iron Curtain.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 122,000

APR 25 1956

Society

Century-Old Composition to Have Premiere Here

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

Providing musical training for young Bostonians at nominal fee, the Boston Music School will observe its 48th year of community service with a chamber music concert on April 30. The 8:30 program at 251 Commonwealth ave. will benefit the work of the school, which is also supported by Red Feather allocations and gifts of friends.

John Holmes and Paul and Helen Keaney will offer from manuscript a trio for oboe, horn and piano believed unheard before, although it was written by Heinrich von Heraogenberg in Brahms' day. Norma Farber will be the soprano soloist in pieces by Steffani and Bach and a poem "To the Lighthouse" set to music by John Bavicchi. The program will begin with trios by Ignaz and Franz Lachner.

Sponsors planning to take guests to the benefit include Mrs. Charles S. Richardson, Mrs. Alexander Stement, Mr. and Mrs. Carl A. Weyerhaeuser, Mrs. H. S. Payson Rowe, Mrs. John A. Lunn, Mr. and Mrs. Kendall Preston, Mrs. Frederic Galacar, Mr. and Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller and Mr. and Mrs. John E. Boit.

Others interested in the performance include Mrs. John T. Bottomley, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Boyden, Mr. and Mrs. John Codman, George M. Butler Jr., Miss Susanna R. Dabney, Mr. and Mrs. William W. Dunnell Jr., Ernest

pute over a pension plan spilled over into the efforts to send the world famous group to Russia.

The Boston Symphony is going to be in West Europe and the Scandinavian countries during August and September. Officials said they hope a way can be found to extend this tour into Russia for five days or so.

No cost to the U.S. government would be involved, they said. The Soviet government would impressario Buskirk, Miss Mary Burk; Miss Waring Inge, Miss Pris cilla Dunphy, Miss Anne Eise man, Miss Penny Powning Mrs. Philip Drinker, Mis Ishbel Keefer and Mis Barbara Ames.

THE FINAL SYMPHONY CON CERT this week by the Bosto Symphony Orchestra will feat ture Mabel Daniels' "Psalm o Praise" written for Radcliffe' 75th anniversary last year. Th work will be offered at the Fri day afternoon and Saturda evening concerts conducted b Charles Munch and performe by members of the Harvard Gle Club and Radcliffe Choral So ciety.

ACTIVITIES FOR OLDER PEO PLE will be the theme of th hobby show to be staged Horticultural Hall May 1 sored by the Red Feather munity Recreation Serv annual "60-plus" show clude collections as w crafts and paintings. patrons include Miss En Alden, Miss Eleanor W. Lewis Armistead, F. J Bemis, Mrs. William A. ham, Mrs. J. Templeman edge, Mrs. Livingston Davq Henry G. Everett Jr. David Forbes, Mrs. Marie Mrs. Brinley M. Hall, Ala Charles Jackson, Ernest Mrs. Atherton Loring, M G. Mason, Rev. Jo Arthur G. Rotch P. Smith, Thon Mrs. Guy Waring miting White and Dunnell.

ARDENS surrou eacon Hill house before by the B arden Club will be 0 until 6, giving v nce to see those o on B. Craig at 8 st., Mrs. Edwa at 8 Walnut st., as C. Howard at on st., Mrs. Freder g at 14 Walnut st Hebert at 32 West Mrs. Thomas E. P. R Chestnut st. and es C. White at non st.

RACTICAL DEMON N of the services contr the Beverly Hospital nteers was given yeste rnoon at the annual mee

Emmanuel Night At Pops May 14

Emmanuel College Alumnae and students from West Roxbury are planning for the annual Emmanuel Night at the Pops to be held May 14.

Committee members are working hard to make the Symphony Hall event a family night as well, with students and alumnae attending in family groups with their parents, brothers, sisters, husbands and children.

Mrs. George H. Sweeney of Arlington is chairman and Mrs. Edward C. Keane of West Roxbury as co-chairmen.

A special feature of the Pops' program will be the presentation of songs by the Emmanuel College Glee Club.

Proceeds of the concert, sponsored by the Alumnae Association will benefit the college building program. Tickets however, must be obtained by May 6 if benefits from the sale are to be realized.

Legislature Election La

tion provisions of the state legislature this

ENEFIT CHAIRMAN f ay 5 at Pops, which will b gis College Night, is Mrs. Frar Dillon, who is serving with Mr illiam Graham.

f the hospital's aid associatio eeting at St. Peter's Episcop hurch in Beverly, White L es and members of oth anches of volunteer servi monstrated their roles.

Mrs. Harry B. Duane Jr., d ctor of the volunteer service id tribute to Mrs. Sears Tuck man and Mrs. George I winn, who have served hite Ladies for 14 year hers taking part in the pre am included Miss Grace Nan , director of nursing services; s. Thomas J. Fitzpatrick, R. N., d Mrs. Jacob H. Fine of the visory committee.

Symphony May Play In Russia

The Boston Symphony Orchestra may play two concerts in Russia during September, it was learned today.

The 104-piece orchestra already has scheduled an European trip but has two dates open in September.

The State Department yesterday requested the Boston orchestra to substitute for the Philadelphia Orchestra which cancelled its planned Russian trip.

Thomas D. Perry Jr., business manager of the Boston Symphony, spent some tmie yesterday in Washington discussing arrangements with the State Department.

The only hitch to making the announcement official is consent of the members of the orchestra, Robinson McIlvaine, State Department deputy assistant for public affairs, said.

Perry said the orchestra already has scheduled one concert behind the Iron Curtain. This is on Sept. 11 in Prague.

The orchestra will leave Boston in mid-August.

State Dept. Asks Boston Symphony To Play in Rus

Washington, April 27 (
The State Department
looking to the Boston Sympl
ny Orchestra to take the plac
of the Philadelphia Orche
tra, which has canceled plans
to play in the Soviet Union
this year.

Department officials said
today that substitution of the Boston orchestra, if it can be arranged, would have the added virtue of not costing the U. S. government one penny.

The Boston Symphony is going to be in West Europe
and the Scandinavian countries during August and September. Officials said they hope a way can be found to extend this tour into Russia
for five days or so.

No cost to the U. S. government would be involved, they said. The Soviet government would act as impressario, as it did in the case of the Porgy
and Bess Opera Co. This would guarantee expenses and
a profit no matter what the gate receipts turned out to be.

Boston Symphony New Russia Replacement

WASHINGTON, April 27 (AP) — The State Department is looking to the Boston Symphony Orchestra to take the place of the Philadelphia orchestra, which has cancelled plans to play in the Soviet Union this year.

Department officials said today that substitution of the Boston orchestra, if it can be arranged, would have the added virtue of not costing the U. S. government one penny.

Donald L. Engle, manager of the 105-member Philadelphia orchestra, telegraphed the department last night that the group had voted unanimously against going through with a proposed trip to the Soviet Union Aug. 15.

This closed the negotiations which had been dogged by more than the usual U. S.-Soviet discord in such cases. There also was union-management trouble. This labor dispute over a pension plan spilled over into the efforts to send the world famous group to Russia.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 130,559

APR 25 1956

Undergraduate Choruses to Sing

Boston Symphony to Play New Mabel Daniels Work

By ELINOR HUGHES

"Psalm of Praise," the latest choral composition by Mabel Daniels, outstanding woman composer and celebrated graduate of Radcliffe College, will be performed at the final pair of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening at Symphony Hall.

This work was written by Miss Daniels for the 75th anniversary of Radcliffe and first was presented at Radcliffe's Diamond Choral Society in Sanders Theater, Cambridge, last year.

3D WOMAN HONORED

The same undergraduate choruses will sing "Psalm of Praise" with the Boston Symphony under the direction of Charles Muench and also will be heard in Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, the other work on the program.

Miss Daniels is only the third woman to have a symphonic work played by the Boston Symphony, the other composers having been Margaret Ruthven Lang and H. H. A. Beech, whose compositions were performed prior to the turn of the century. "Psalm of Praise," moreover, is her third work to be given at Symphony Hall, the others being "Exultate Deo" in 1933 and "Deep Forest" in 1937. "Exultate Deo," incidentally, was also written in honor of Radcliffe College at the time of the college's 50th anniversary.

That Mabel Daniels should have devoted her life to music is not surprising because her father was president of the Handel and Haydn Society for many years. As an undergraduate at Radcliffe she was the leader and pianist of the Choral Society and played music for three operettas throughout the world, "resettling far from home, buried in those brave men now? Scattered in which she either conducted the orchestra or sang the part of the last war. Where are the orchestra from the beginning to the principal part. Josephine Hull, Army that fought for Polish free- Radcliffe '99, was also a mem- General Anders, who led the only ber of the cast.

Following her graduation, refugees marched through the cum laude, she studied streets, headed by the intrepid with George W. Wick in Boston and Ludwig Wolfe in Munich, and in 1905 "An American Girl in Mu- impressions of her life as music student in that historic

Throughout her career her music expressions, bruised for great- been marked by a contem- wounded for great-power style and a willingness to inquilities; the chastise- experiment. Her orchestra pre- power have been sacrificed to the co-existence of and symphonic works have high praise not only from revolutions for national and individual freedom, have always critics but also from such contrary, small states, and guished conductors as the freedom of small nations. On Hanson and others, and in has never been accompanied by prolonged world peace. But it nition of her contribution been the rule of every period of merican music she has re- d honorary degrees from s, Boston University and her alma mater. She is a tee of the New England ervatory of Music, a cor- te member of the MacDow- olony and a director of the ends of Music of Boston Uni- tuity and the Zimbler Sinfonier compositions, in addition those already mentioned, in- de "Songs of Elfland," a son- for piano and violin; "Pi- rate's Island," "The Holy Star," "A Holiday Fantasy" and "The Christ Child." She has won numerous prizes for compositions, including a National Federation of Music Clubs award, and for several years was director of music at Simmons College.

Symphony Men Check Red Tape on Moscow Visit

A visit this year by the Boston Symphony Orchestra to Moscow, and possibly other cities in Russia, seemed virtually assured today.

A nearly unanimous vote taken this week among the 104 members of the world-famed orchestra, the Globe learned today, just about cinched the trip.

The orchestra's business manager, Thomas D. Perry Jr., of Hingham, and the president of the trustees, Henry B. Cabot, were in Washington today, ironing out details with the State Department.

Officially, the Boston Symphony was mum on the question of a definite decision. But a reliable source indicated that the poll of the members was the deciding factor.

The few Russian-born members expressed fear or apprehension. What few dissents arose came from those who thought that living, eatin gand transportatin facilities in Rusia might be too tiring.

The trip won't cost the United States anything. The Boston Symphony had planned an itenerary throughout Western Europe this Summer anyway, and the Kremlin has offered to pick up the extra tab if the orchestra does visit Russia.

Also on the schedule, it is understood, is a Sept. 11 visit to Prague, Czechoslvakia, also behind the Iron Curtain.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 122,000

APR 25 1956

Society — Century-Old Composition to Have Premiere Here

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

Providing musical training for young Bostonians at nominal fees the Boston Music School will observe its 48th year of community service with a chamber music concert on April 30. The 8:30 program at 251 Commonwealth ave. will benefit the work of the school, which is also supported by Red Feather allocations and gifts of friends.

John Holmes and Paul and Helen Keaney will offer from manuscript a trio for oboe, horn and piano believed unheard before, although it was written by Heinrich von Herzogenberg in Brahms' day. Norma Farber will be the soprano soloist in pieces by Steffani and Bach and a poem, To the Lighthouse, set to music by John Bavicchi. The program will begin with trios by Ignaz and Franz Lachner.

Sponsors planning to take guests to the benefit include Mrs. Charles S. Richardson, Mrs. Alexander Steinert, Mr. and Mrs. Carl A. Weyerhaeuser, Mrs. H. S. Payson Rowe, Mrs. John A. Lunn, Mr. and Mrs. Kendall Preston, Mrs. Frederic Galacar, Mr. and Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller and Mr. and Mrs. John E. Boit.

Others interested in the performance include Mrs. John T. Bottomley, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Boyden, Mr. and Mrs. John Codman, George M. Butler Jr., Miss Susanna R. Dabney, Mr. and Mrs. William W. Dunnell Jr., Ernest

Buskirk, Miss Mary Burke, Miss Waring Inge, Miss Priscilla Dunphy, Miss Anne Eiseman, Miss Penny Powning, Mrs. Philip Drinker, Miss Ishbel Keefer and Miss Barbara Ames.

THE FINAL SYMPHONY CONCERT this week by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will feature Mabel Daniels' "Psalm of Praise" written for Radcliffe's 75th anniversary last year. The work will be offered at the Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts conducted by Charles Munch and performed by members of the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society.

ACTIVITIES FOR OLDER PEOPLE will be the theme of a hobby show to be staged in Horticultural Hall May 11. Sponsored by the Red Feather's Community Recreation Service, the annual "60-plus" show will include collections as well as crafts and paintings. Sponsors include Miss Emma L. Alden, Miss Eleanor W. Allen, Lewis Armistead, F. Gr... Bemis, Mrs. William A. Bu... ham, Mrs. J. Templeman C... edge, Mrs. Livingston Davis, M... Henry G. Everett Jr., M... David Forbes, Mrs. Marie Gri... Mrs. Brinley M. Hall, Alan B... Charles Jackson, Ernest Jac... Mrs. Atherton Loring, Mrs. ... G. Mason, Rev. John ... Arthur G. Rotch, ... P. Smith, Thoma... Mrs. Guy Waring, ... hiting White and ... Dunnell.

GARDENS surroun... Beacon Hill houses ... before by the Be... Garden Club will be ... 10 until 6, giving vis... nce to see those of ... on B. Craig at 8 W... st., Mrs. Edward ... at 8 Walnut st., M... as C. Howard at 46 ... on st., Mrs. Frederick ... at 14 Walnut st., M... Hebert at 32 West Ced... Mrs. Thomas E. P. Rice ... Chestnut st. and M... es C. White at 34 ... on st.

PRACTICAL DEMONSTR... ON of the services contribut... the Beverly Hospital by ... unteers was given yesterd... ernoon at the annual meeti...

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 130,559

APR 25 1956

Undergraduate Choruses to Sing

Boston Symphony to Play New Mabel Daniels Work

By ELINOR HUGHES

"Psalm of Praise," the latest choral composition by Mabel Daniels, outstanding woman composer and celebrated graduate of Radcliffe College, will be performed at the final pair of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening at Symphony Hall.

This work was written by Miss Daniels for the 75th anniversary of Radcliffe and first was presented at Radcliffe's Diamond Choral Society in Sanders Theater, Cambridge, last year.

...D WOMAN HONORED

The same undergraduate choruses will sing "Psalm of Praise" with the Boston Symphony under the direction of Charles Muench and also will be heard in Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, the other work on the program.

Miss Daniels is only the third woman to have a symphonic work played by the Boston Symphony, the other composers having been Margaret Ruthven Lang and H. H. A. Beach, whose compositions were performed prior to the turn of the century. "Psalm of Praise," moreover, is her third work to be given at Symphony Hall, the others being "Exultate Deo" in 1933 and "Deep Forest" in 1937. "Exultate Deo," incidentally, was also written in honor of Radcliffe College at the time of the college's 50th anniversary.

That Mabel Daniels should have devoted her life to music is not surprising because her father was president of the Handel and Haydn Society for many years. As an undergraduate at Radcliffe she was the leader and pianist of the Choral Society and composed music for three operettas throughout the world, "Reset-ting far from home, buried in the orchestra or sang the principal part. Josephine Hull, '99, was also a member of the cast.

Following her graduation, she studied composition with George W. Chadwick in Boston and Ludwig Wille in Munich, and in 1905 wrote "An American Girl in Munich," the powers been healed. Throughout her career her music has been marked by a contemporary style and a willingness to accept new impressions of her life as a student in that historic period of peace has been upon us. Her inaugurations, bursted for great-power wounded for great-power sufferers, have aroused great powers. Small nations, sacrificed to the co-existence of high praise not only from critics but also from such distinguished conductors as Koussevitzky, Barbirolli, Howard Hanson and others, and in recognition of her contribution to American music she has received honorary degrees from Tufts, Boston University and her alma mater. She is a trustee of the New England Conservatory of Music, a charter member of the MacDowell Colony and a director of the Friends of Music of Boston University and the Zimbler Sinfonietta.

Other compositions, in addition to those already mentioned, include "Songs of Elfland," a sonata for piano and violin; "Pirate's Island," "The Holy Star," "A Holiday Fantasy" and "The Christ Child." She has won numerous prizes for compositions, including a National Federation of Music Clubs award, and for several years was director of music at Simmons College.

This is no new idea. Co-existence between great powers has been the rule of every period of prolonged world peace. But it has never been accompanied by freedom of small nations. On contrary, small states, and revolutions for national and individual freedom, have always been sacrificed to the co-existence of great powers. Small nations, pre-ment. Her orchestra pre-miere works have

Emmanuel Night At Pops May 14

Emmanuel College Alumnae and students from West Roxbury are planning for the annual Emmanuel Night at the Pops to be held May 14.

Committee members are working hard to make the Symphony Hall event a family night as well, with students and alumnae attending in family groups with their parents, brothers, sisters, husbands and children.

Mrs. George H. Sweeney of Arlington is chairman and Mrs. ...

...state legislature this session accepted a watered-down version of the Hogan commission's proposal to take ... Hall of Fame ... church. Throughout the day-long program, numerous parishioners and guests filled the hall to in-

Boston Orchestra May Tour Russia

WASHINGTON, Apr. 27 (AP) — The State Department is looking to the Boston Symphony Orchestra to take the place of the Philadelphia orchestra, which has canceled plans to play in the Soviet Union this year.

Department officials said today that substitution of the Boston Orchestra, if it can be arranged, would have the added virtue of not costing the United States government one penny. The Boston Symphony is going to be in West Europe and the Scandinavian countries during August and September. Officials said they hope a way can be found to extend this tour into Russia for five days or so.

No cost to the U.S. government would be involved, they said. The Soviet government would act as impressario, as it did in the case of the Porgy and Bess Opera Co. This would guarantee expenses and a profit no matter what the gate receipts turned out to be.

A spokesman for the Boston Symphony said there is time available in the orchestra's European tour schedule to fit in the Russian concerts if they can be arranged. He said the orchestra management would have a statement "as soon as things are definite."

Symphony Men Check Red Tape on Moscow Visit

A visit this year by the Boston Symphony Orchestra to Moscow, and possibly other cities in Russia, seemed virtually assured today.

A nearly unanimous vote taken this week among the 104 members of the world-famed orchestra, the Globe learned today, just about cinched the trip.

The orchestra's business manager, Thomas D. Perry Jr., of Hingham, and the president of the trustees, Henry B. Cabot, were in Washington today, ironing out details with the State Department.

Officially, the Boston Symphony was mum on the question of a definite decision. But a reliable source indicated that the poll of the members was the deciding factor.

The few Russian-born members expressed fear or apprehension. What few dissents arose came from those who thought that living, eatin gand transportatin facilities in Rusia might be too tiring.

The trip won't cost the United States anything. The Boston Symphony had planned an itenerary throughout Western Europe this Summer anyway, and the Kremlin has offered to pick up the extra tab if the orchestra does visit Russia.

Also on the schedule, it is understood, is a Sept. 11 visit to Prague, Czechoslvakia, also behind the Iron Curtain.

...ENEFIT CHAIRMAN for ...ay 5 at Pops which will be ...gis College Night, is Mrs. Frank ... Dillon, who is serving with Mrs. ...illiam Graham.

...f the hospital's aid association. ...eeting at St. Peter's Episcopal ...hurch in Beverly, White La... ...es and members of other ...anches of volunteer service ...monstrated their roles.

Mrs. Harry B. Duane Jr., di... ...ctor of the volunteer services, ...id tribute to Mrs. Sears Tuck... ...man and Mrs. George H. ...winn, who have served as ...hite Ladies for 14 years. ...hers taking part in the pro... ...am included Miss Grace Nan... ..., director of nursing services; ...s. Thomas J. Fitzpatrick, R. N., ...d Mrs. Jacob H. Fine of the ...isory committee.

State Dept. Asks Boston Symphony To Play in Rus...

Washington, April 27 (AP) — The State Department is looking to the Boston Symphony Orchestra to take the place of the Philadelphia Orchestra, which has canceled plans to play in the Soviet Union this year.

Department officials said today that substitution of the Boston orchestra, if it can be arranged, would have the added virtue of not costing the U. S. government one penny.

The Boston Symphony is going to be in West Europe and the Scandinavian countries during August and September. Officials said they hope a way can be found to extend this tour into Russia for five days or so.

No cost to the U. S. government would be involved, they said. The Soviet government would act as impressario, as it did in the case of the Porgy and Bess Opera Co. This would guarantee expenses and a profit no matter what the gate receipts turned out to be.

Boston Symphony New Russia Replacement

WASHINGTON, April 27 (AP) — The State Department is looking to the Boston Symphony Orchestra to take the place of the Philadelphia orchestra, which has canceled plans to play in the Soviet Union this year.

Department officials said today that substitution of the Boston orchestra, if it can be arranged, would have the added virtue of not costing the U. S. government one penny.

Donald L. Engle, manager of the 105-member Philadelphia orchestra, telegraphed the department last night that the group had voted unanimously against going through with a proposed trip to the Soviet Union Aug. 15.

This closed the negotiations which had been dogged by more than the usual U. S.-Soviet discord in such cases. There also was union-management trouble. This labor dispute over a pension plan spilled over into the efforts to send the world famous group to Russia.

...pute over a pension plan spilled over into the efforts to send the world famous group to Russia.

The Boston Symphony is going to be in West Europe and the Scandinavian countries during August and September. Officials said they hope a way can be found to extend this tour into Russia for five days or so.

No cost to the U.S. government would be involved, they said. The Soviet government would act as impressario, as it did in the case of the Porgy and Bess Opera Co. This would guarantee expenses and a profit no matter what the gate receipts turned out to be.

A spokesman for the Boston Symphony said there is time available in the orchestra's European tour schedule to fit in the Russian concerts if they can be arranged. He said the orchestra management would have a statement "as soon as things are definite."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 122,000

APR 25 1956

Society — Century-Old Composition to Have Premiere Here

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

Providing musical training for young Bostonians at nominal fee the Boston Music School will observe its 48th year of community service with a chamber music concert on April 30. The 8:30 program at 251 Commonwealth ave. will benefit the work of the school, which is also supported by Red Feather allocations and gifts of friends.

John Holmes and Paul and Helen Keaney will offer from manuscript a trio for oboe, horn and piano believed unheard before, although it was written by Heinrich von Herzogenberg in Brahms' day. Norma Farber will be the soprano soloist in pieces by Steffani and Bach and a poem "To the Lighthouse" set to music by John Bavicchi. The program will begin with trios by Ignaz and Franz Lachner.

Sponsors planning to take guests to the benefit include Mrs. Charles S. Richardson, Mrs. Alexander Steinert, Mr. and Mrs. Carl A. Weyerhaeuser, Mrs. H. S. Payson Rowe, Mrs. John A. Lunn, Mr. and Mrs. Kendall Preston, Mrs. Frederic Galacar, Mr. and Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller and Mr. and Mrs. John E. Boit.

Others interested in the performance include Mrs. John T. Bottomley, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Boyden, Mr. and Mrs. John Codman, George M. Butler Jr., Miss Susanna R. Dabney, Mr. and Mrs. William W. Dunnell Jr., Ernest Buskirk, Miss Mary Burk[illegible] Miss Waring Inge, Miss Priscilla Dunphy, Miss Anne Eiseman, Miss Penny Powning, Mrs. Philip Drinker, Mis[illegible] Ishbel Keefer and Mis[illegible] Barbara Ames.

THE FINAL SYMPHONY CONCERT this week by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will feature Mabel Daniels' "Psalm of Praise" written for Radcliffe's 75th anniversary last year. The work will be offered at the Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts conducted by Charles Munch and performed by members of the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society.

ACTIVITIES FOR OLDER PEOPLE will be the theme of the hobby show to be staged at Horticultural Hall May 11. Sponsored by the Red Feather's Community Recreation Service, the annual "60-plus" show will include collections as well as crafts and paintings. Show patrons include Miss Emma S[illegible] Alden, Miss Eleanor W. Aller, Lewis Armistead, F. Greg[illegible] Bemis, Mrs. William A. Bur[illegible] ham, Mrs. J. Templeman Co[illegible] edge, Mrs. Livingston Davis, M[illegible] Henry G. Everett Jr., M[illegible] David Forbes, Mrs. Marie Grig[illegible] Mrs. Brinley M. Hall, Alan H[illegible] Charles Jackson, Ernest Jaco[illegible] Mrs. Atherton Loring, Mrs. [illegible] G. Mason, Rev. John [illegible] Arthur G. Rotch, M[illegible] P. Smith, Thomas [illegible] Mrs. Guy Waring, M[illegible] hiting White and M[illegible] Dunnell.

ARDENS surrounding [illegible] eacon Hill houses no[illegible] before by the Beacon [illegible] arden Club will be ope[illegible] 10 until 6, giving visitor[illegible] nce to see those of Mr[illegible] on B. Craig at 8 We[illegible] st., Mrs. Edward [illegible] at 8 Walnut st., M[illegible] as C. Howard at 46 M[illegible] on st., Mrs. Frederick [illegible] g at 14 Walnut st., M[illegible] Hebert at 32 West Ced[illegible] Mrs. Thomas E. P. Rice [illegible] Chestnut st. and M[illegible] es C. White at 34 M[illegible] non st.

RACTICAL DEMONSTR[illegible] N of the services contrib[illegible] the Beverly Hospital by [illegible] unteers was given yesterday [illegible] ernoon at the annual meeting [illegible]

ENEFIT CHAIRMAN for [illegible] ay 5 at Pops which will be [illegible] gis College Night, is Mrs. Frank Dillon, who is serving with Mrs. [illegible] illiam Graham.

[illegible] f the hospital's aid association. [illegible] eeting at St. Peter's Episcopal [illegible] hurch in Beverly, White La[illegible] es and members of service [illegible] anches of volunteer service [illegible] monstrated their roles.

Mrs. Harry B. Duane Jr., di[illegible] ctor of the volunteer services, [illegible] id tribute to Mrs. Sears Tuck[illegible] man and Mrs. George H. [illegible] winn, who have served as [illegible] hite Ladies for 14 years. [illegible] hers taking part in the pro[illegible] am included Miss Grace Nan[illegible], director of nursing services; [illegible] s. Thomas J. Fitzpatrick, R. N., [illegible] Mrs. Jacob H. Fine of the [illegible] visory committee.

pute over a pension plan spilled over into the efforts to send the world famous group to Russia.

The Boston Symphony is going to be in West Europe and the Scandinavian countries during August and September. Officials said they hope a way can be found to extend this tour into Russia for five days or so.

No cost to the U.S. government would be involved, they said. The Soviet government would [illegible] impressario [illegible] miss Philippa Guerrette, cous[illegible] in of the bride, was maid of honor. She was attired in a blush pink nylon net gown, sprinkle with sequins over shirred tulle and carried a cascade of pink carnations.

Bridesmaids were Miss Patricia Carey and Miss France Crowley, Miss Carey and Miss Crowley wore pink and blue gowns, matched in style of nylon

[illegible] ay vis[illegible] Soviet

WASHINGTON, April 27 (AP). — The State Department is looking to the Boston Symphony Orchestra to take the place of the Philadelphia Orchestra, which has canceled plans to play in the Soviet Union this year.

Donald L. Engle, manager of the 105-member Philadelphia Orchestra, telegraphed the department last night that the group had voted unanimously against a proposed trip to the Soviet Union Aug. 15.

[illegible] be able to go from [illegible] land, to Moscow.

[illegible] their the usual U.S.-Soviet disco[illegible] in such cases. There also was u[illegible] ion-managerment trouble. This labor dispute over a pension plan spilled over into the efforts to send the world famous group to Russia.

The Boston Symphony is going to be in West Europe and the Scandinavian countries during August and September. Officials said they hope a way can be found to extend this tour into Russia for five days or so.

No cost to the U.S. government would be involved, they said. The Soviet government would act as impressario, as it did in the case of the Porgy and Bess Opera Co. This would guarantee expenses and a profit no matter what the gate receipts turned out to be.

A spokesman for the Boston Symphony said there is time available in the orchestra's European tour schedule to fit in the Russian concerts if they can be arranged. He said the orchestra management would have a statement "as soon as things are definite."

State Dept. Asks Boston Symphony To Play in Rus[illegible]

Washington, April 27 (AP). — The State Department is looking to the Boston Symphony Orchestra to take the place of the Philadelphia Orchestra, which has canceled plans to play in the Soviet Union this year.

Department officials said today that substitution of the Boston orchestra, if it can be arranged, would have the added virtue of not costing the U. S. government one penny.

The Boston Symphony is going to be in West Europe and the Scandinavian countries during August and September. Officials said they hope a way can be found to extend this tour into Russia for five days or so.

No cost to the U. S. government would be involved, they said. The Soviet government would act as impressario, as it did in the case of the Porgy and Bess Opera Co. This would guarantee expenses and a profit no matter what the gate receipts turned out to be.

Boston Symphony New Russia Replacement

WASHINGTON, April 27 (AP) — The State Department is looking to the Boston Symphony Orchestra to take the place of the Philadelphia orchestra, which has cancelled plans to play in the Soviet Union this year.

Department officials said today that substitution of the Boston orchestra, if it can be arranged, would have the added virtue of not costing the U. S. government one penny.

Donald L. Engle, manager of the 105-member Philadelphia orchestra, telegraphed the department last night that the group had voted unanimously against going through with a proposed trip to the Soviet Union Aug. 15.

This closed the negotiations which had been dogged by more than the usual U. S.-Soviet discord in such cases. There also was union-management trouble. This labor dispute over a pension plan spilled over into the efforts to send the world famous group to Russia.

Emmanuel Night At Pops May 14

Emmanuel College Alumnae and students from West Roxbury are planning for the annual Emmanuel Night at the Pops to be held May 14.

Committee members are working hard to make the Symphony Hall event a family night as well with students and alumnae [illegible] gr[illegible] er[illegible] dr[illegible]

[illegible] state legislature this [illegible] accepted a waterfront [illegible] Hall of Fine [illegible] of the Hogan com[illegible] church. Throughout the day-long program, numerous parishioners and guests filled the hall to in[illegible]

[illegible] claim to have won this [illegible] to take note of it. [illegible] st parties on the Conti[illegible] s all over Europe, and the [illegible] ular fronts" of Socialists [illegible] ting an important effort [illegible] r at a time when the [illegible] ence between great powers has [illegible] been the rule of every period of [illegible] prolonged world peace. But it [illegible] never been accompanied by [illegible] freedom of small nations. On [illegible] contrary, small states, and [illegible] guished conductors as [illegible] sevitzky, Barbirolli, Howe[illegible] Hanson and others, and in [illegible] nition of her contribution [illegible] merican music she has re[illegible] d honorary degrees from [illegible] s, Boston University and her [illegible] alma mater. She is a [illegible] tee of the New England [illegible] nservatory of Music, a cor[illegible] member of the MacDowe[illegible] olony and a director of the [illegible] ends of Music of Boston Uni[illegible] versity and the Zimbler Sinfoni[illegible]

[illegible] nger compositions, in addition [illegible] those already mentioned, in[illegible] de "Songs of Elfland," a sonata for piano and violin; "Pirate's Island," "The Holy Star," "A Holiday Fantasy" and "The Christ Child." She has won numerous prizes for compositions, including a National Federation of Music Clubs award, and for several years was director of music at Simmons College.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 130,559

APR 25 1956

Undergraduate Choruses to Sing

Boston Symphony to Play New Mabel Daniels Work

By ELINOR HUGHES

"Psalm of Praise," the latest choral composition by Mabel Daniels, outstanding woman composer and celebrated graduate of Radcliffe College, will be performed at the final pair of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening at Symphony Hall.

[illegible] s work was written by [illegible] Daniels for the 75th anni[illegible] ry of Radcliffe and first [illegible] presented at Radcliffe's Dia[illegible] Choral Society in Sanders [illegible] ater, Cambridge, last year.

WOMAN HONORED

[illegible] same undergraduate chor[illegible] will sing "Psalm of Praise" [illegible] the Boston Symphony under [illegible] irection of Charles Muench [illegible] also [illegible] be heard in Beetho[illegible] Ninth Symphony, the other [illegible] on the program.

Miss Daniels is only the third woman to have a symphonic work played by the Boston Symphony, the other composers having been Margaret Ruthven Lang and H. H. A. Beech, whose compositions were performed prior to the turn of the century. "Psalm of Praise," moreover, is her third work to be given at Symphony Hall, the others being "Exultate Deo" in 1933 and "Deep Forest" in 1937. "Exultate Deo," incidentally, was also written in honor of Radcliffe College at the time of the college's 50th anniversary.

That Mabel Daniels should have devoted her life to music is not surprising because her father was president of the Handel and Haydn Society for many years. As an undergraduate at Radcliffe she was the leader and [illegible] of the Choral Society and [illegible] sed music for three oper[illegible] in which she either con[illegible] the orchestra or sang the [illegible] pal part. Josephine Hull, [illegible] liffe '99, was also a mem[illegible] f the cast.

[illegible] lowing her graduation, [illegible] treets, headed by the intrepid [illegible] eneral Anders, who led the only [illegible] rmy that fought for Polish free[illegible] om from the beginning to the [illegible] osition with George W. [illegible] wick in Boston and Ludwig [illegible] le in Munich, and in 1905 [illegible] "An American Girl in Mu[illegible] sic student in that historic [illegible] impressions of her life as [illegible] ower of peace has been upon [illegible] ower iniquities; the chastise[illegible] rough her career her music [illegible] been marked by a contem[illegible] porary style and a willingness to [illegible] ment. Her orchestra pre[illegible] and symphonic works have [illegible] high praise not only from [illegible] critics but also from such [illegible]

[illegible] ed with the queen, a two-mile[illegible] le in Munich, and in 1905 [illegible] "An American Girl in Mu[illegible] sic student in that historic [illegible] impressions of her life as [illegible] ower of peace has been upon [illegible] ower iniquities; the chastise[illegible] rough her career her music [illegible] been marked by a contem[illegible] porary style and a willingness to [illegible] ment. Her orchestra pre[illegible] and symphonic works have [illegible] high praise not only from [illegible] critics but also from such [illegible]

[illegible] ed with their stripes have [illegible] the powers been healed.

[illegible] ed for great-power [illegible] ed by a contem[illegible] ing style and a willingness to [illegible] ment. Her orchestra pre[illegible] and symphonic works have [illegible] high praise not only from [illegible] critics but also from such [illegible]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 122,000

APR 25 1956

Society — Century-Old Composition to Have Premiere Here

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

Providing musical training for young Bostonians at nominal fee the Boston Music School will observe its 48th year of community service with a chamber music concert on April 30. The 8:30 program at 251 Commonwealth ave. will benefit the work of the school, which is also supported by Red Feather allocations and gifts of friends.

John Holmes and Paul and Helen Keaney will offer from manuscript a trio for oboe, horn and piano believed unheard before, although it was written by Heinrich von Heraogenberg in Brahms' day. Norma Farber will be the soprano soloist in pieces by Steffani and Bach and a poem "To the Lighthouse" set to music by John Bavicchi. The program will begin with trios by Ignaz and Franz Lachner.

Sponsors planning to take guests to the benefit include Mrs. Charles S. Richardson, Mrs. Alexander Steinert, Mr. and Mrs. Carl A. Weyerhaeuser, Mrs. H. S. Payson Rowe, Mrs. John A. Lunn, Mr. and Mrs. Kendall Preston, Mrs. Frederic Galacar, Mr. and Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller and Mr. and Mrs. John E. Boit.

Others interested in the performance include Mrs. John T. Bottomley, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Boyden, Mr. and Mrs. John Codman, George M. Butler Jr., Miss Susanna R. Dabney, Mr. and Mrs. William W. Dunnell Jr., Ernest Buskirk, Miss Mary Burke, Miss Waring Inge, Miss Priscilla Dunphy, Miss Anne Eiseman, Miss Penny Powning, Mrs. Philip Drinker, Miss Ishbel Keefer and Miss Barbara Ames.

THE FINAL SYMPHONY CONCERT this week by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will feature Mabel Daniels' "Psalm of Praise" written for Radcliffe's 75th anniversary last year. The work will be offered at the Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts conducted by Charles Munch and performed by members of the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society.

ACTIVITIES FOR OLDER PEOPLE will be the theme of the hobby show to be staged in Horticultural Hall May 11. Sponsored by the Red Feather's Community Recreation Service, the annual "60-plus" show will include collections as well as crafts and paintings. Sponsors include Miss Emma Alden, Miss Eleanor W. Allen, Lewis Armistead, F. Gr... Bemis, Mrs. William A. Bu... ham, Mrs. J. Templeman Coolidge, Mrs. Livingston Davis, Mrs. Henry G. Everett Jr., Mrs. David Forbes, Mrs. Marie Griggs, Mrs. Brinley M. Hall, Alan Hay, Charles Jackson, Ernest Jacoby, Mrs. Atherton Loring, Mrs. Al... G. Mason, Rev. John U... Arthur G. Rotch, Mrs. ... P. Smith, Thomas J... Mrs. Guy Waring, Mrs. ... Whiting White and Mrs. ... Dunnell.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 130,559

APR 25 1956

Undergraduate Choruses to Sing

Boston Symphony to Play New Mabel Daniels Work

By ELINOR HUGHES

"Psalm of Praise," the latest choral composition by Mabel Daniels, outstanding woman composer and celebrated graduate of Radcliffe College, will be performed at the final pair of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening at Symphony Hall.

This work was written by Miss Daniels for the 75th anniversary of Radcliffe and first presented at Radcliffe's Diamond Choral Society in Sanders Theater, Cambridge, last year.

WOMAN HONORED

The same undergraduate chorus will sing "Psalm of Praise" with the Boston Symphony under the direction of Charles Muench and also will be heard in Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, the other work on the program.

Miss Daniels is only the third woman to have a symphonic work played by the Boston Symphony, the other composers having been Margaret Ruthven Lang and H. H. A. Beech, whose compositions were performed prior to the turn of the century. "Psalm of Praise," moreover, is her third work to be given at Symphony Hall, the others being "Exultate Deo" in 1933 and "Deep Forest" in 1937. "Exultate Deo," incidentally, was also written in honor of Radcliffe College at the time of the college's 50th anniversary.

That Mabel Daniels should have devoted her life to music is not surprising because her father was president of the Handel and Haydn Society for many years. As an undergraduate at Radcliffe she was the leader and "belle" of the Choral Society and sang music for three operas in which she either conducted the orchestra or sang the principal part. Josephine Hull, Radcliffe '99, was also a member of the cast.

Following her graduation, cum laude, she studied composition with George W. Chadwick in Boston and Ludwig Wüllner in Munich, and in 1905 published "An American Girl in Music," impressions of her life as a music student in that historic year, and with their stripes have come inquiries; the chastisements of peace has been upon them.

Through her career her music has expressions, bruised for great-power wounded for great-power, been marked by a contemporary style and a willingness to suffer internal vicarious sufferers, have sacrificed to the co-existence of great powers. Small nations, individual freedom, have always been and symphonic works have received high praise not only from critics but also from such distinguished conductors as Koussevitzky, Barbirolli, Howard Hanson and others, and in recognition of her contribution to American music she has received honorary degrees from Tufts, Boston University and her alma mater. She is a trustee of the New England Conservatory of Music, a corresponding member of the MacDowell Colony and a director of the Friends of Music of Boston University and the Zimbler Sinfonietta.

Longer compositions, in addition to those already mentioned, include "Songs of Elfland," a sonata for piano and violin; "Pirate's Island," "The Holy Star," "A Holiday Fantasy" and "The Christ Child." She has won numerous prizes for compositions, including a National Federation of Music Clubs award, and for several years was director of music at Simmons College.

Boston Symphony May Visit Russia

BOSTON (UP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra is expected to visit Russia this summer.

The 104-piece orchestra was asked by the State Department Friday to substitute for the Philadelphia Symphony, which was forced to cancel its planned Soviet tour because of a labor dispute.

The Boston symphony already has made plans to leave in mid-August for a month-long tour of Europe. It has open dates for Sept. 5 and 6, at which time is expected the orchestra would be able to go from Helsinki, Finland, to Moscow.

Symphony Men Check Red Tape on Moscow Visit

A visit this year by the Boston Symphony Orchestra to Moscow, and possibly other cities in Russia, seemed virtually assured today.

A nearly unanimous vote taken this week among the 104 members of the world-famed orchestra, the Globe learned today, just about cinched the trip.

The orchestra's business manager, Thomas D. Perry Jr., of Hingham, and the president of the trustees, Henry B. Cabot, were in Washington today, ironing out details with the State Department.

Officially, the Boston Symphony was mum on the question of a definite decision. But a reliable source indicated that the poll of the members was the deciding factor.

The few Russian-born members expressed fear or apprehension. What few dissents arose came from those who thought that living, eatin gand transportatin facilities in Rusia might be too tiring.

The trip won't cost the United States anything. The Boston Symphony had planned an itenerary throughout Western Europe this Summer anyway, and the Kremlin has offered to pick up the extra tab if the orchestra does visit Russia.

Also on the schedule, it is understood, is a Sept. 11 visit to Prague, Czechoslvakia, also behind the Iron Curtain.

State Dept. Asks Boston Symphony To Play in Russia

Washington, April 27 (AP)— The State Department is looking to the Boston Symphony Orchestra to take the place of the Philadelphia Orchestra, which has canceled plans to play in the Soviet Union this year.

Department officials said today that substitution of the Boston orchestra, if it can be arranged, would have the added virtue of not costing the U. S. government one penny.

The Boston Symphony is going to be in West Europe and the Scandinavian countries during August and September. Officials said they hope a way can be found to extend this tour into Russia for five days or so.

No cost to the U. S. government would be involved, they said. The Soviet government would act as impressario, as it did in the case of the Porgy and Bess Opera Co. This would guarantee expenses and a profit no matter what the gate receipts turned out to be.

Boston Symphony New Russia Replacement

WASHINGTON, April 27 (AP) — The State Department is looking to the Boston Symphony Orchestra to take the place of the Philadelphia orchestra, which has canceled plans to play in the Soviet Union this year.

Department officials said today that substitution of the Boston orchestra, if it can be arranged, would have the added virtue of not costing the U. S. government one penny.

Donald L. Engle, manager of the 105-member Philadelphia orchestra, telegraphed the department last night that the group had voted unanimously against going through with a proposed trip to the Soviet Union Aug. 15.

This closed the negotiations which had been dogged by more than the usual U. S.-Soviet discord in such cases. There also was union-management trouble. This labor dispute over a pension plan spilled over into the efforts to send the world famous group to Russia.

ENEFIT CHAIRMAN for ay 5 at Pops which will be gis College Night, is Mrs. Frank Dillon, who is serving with Mrs. illiam Graham.

f the hospital's aid association. eeting at St. Peter's Episcopal hurch in Beverly, White Laies and members of other anches of volunteer service monstrated their roles.

Mrs. Harry B. Duane Jr., director of the volunteer services, id tribute to Mrs. Sears Tuckman and Mrs. George H. vinn, who have served as hite Ladies for 14 years. hers taking part in the pro- am included Miss Grace Nan-, director of nursing services; s. Thomas J. Fitzpatrick, R. N., Mrs. Jacob H. Fine of the isory committee.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 122,000

APR 25 1956

Society — Century-Old Composition to Have Premiere Here

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

Providing musical training for young Bostonians at nominal fee the Boston Music School will observe its 48th year of community service with a chamber music concert on April 30. The 8:30 program at 251 Commonwealth ave. will benefit the work of the school, which is also supported by Red Feather allocations and gifts of friends.

John Holmes and Paul and Helen Keaney will offer from manuscript a trio for oboe, horn and piano believed unheard before, although it was written by Heinrich von Heraogenberg in Brahms' day. Norma Farber will be the soprano soloist in pieces by Steffani and Bach and a poem "To the Lighthouse" set to music by John Bavicchi. The program will begin with trios by Ignaz and Franz Lachner.

Sponsors planning to take guests to the benefit include Mrs. Charles S. Richardson, Mrs. Alexander Steinert, Mr. and Mrs. Carl A. Weyerhaeuser, Mrs. H. S. Payson Rowe, Mrs. John A. Lunn, Mr. and Mrs. Kendall Preston, Mrs. Frederic Galacar, Mr. and Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller and Mr. and Mrs. John E. Boit.

Others interested in the performance include Mrs. John T. Bottomley, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Boyden, Mr. and Mrs. John Codman, George M. Butler Jr., Miss Susanna R. Dabney, Mr. and Mrs. William W. Dunnell, Jr., Ernest

Buskirk, Miss Mary Bu
Miss Waring Inge, Miss
cilla Dunphy, Miss Anne man, Miss Penny Pow
Mrs. Philip Drinker,
Ishbel Keefer and
Barbara Ames.

THE FINAL SYMPHONY CONCERT this week by the Symphony Orchestra will ture Mabel Daniels' "Psa
Praise" written for Radc 75th anniversary last year work will be offered at th day afternoon and Sat evening concerts conduct
Charles Munch and perf
by members of the Harvard Club and Radcliffe Chora
ciety.

ACTIVITIES FOR OLDER PEOPLE will be the theme of hobby show to be staged Horticultural Hall May 11. Sp sored by the Red Feather's Co
munity Recreation Service, annual "60-plus" show will clude collections as well crafts and paintings. Sh patrons include Miss Emma Alden, Miss Eleanor W. All
Lewis Armistead, F. Gr
Bemis, Mrs. William A. Bu
ham, Mrs. J. Templeman Co edge, Mrs. Livingston Davis, M
Henry G. Everett Jr., M
David Forbes, Mrs. Marie Grig
Mrs. Brinley M. Hall, Alan H
Charles Jackson, Ernest Jacol
Mrs. Atherton Loring, Mrs.
G. Mason, Rev. John
Arthur G. Rotch, M
P. Smith, Thomas
Mrs. Guy Waring, M
hiting White and M
Dunnell.

ARDENS surroundin
eacon Hill houses no before by the Beacon arden Club will be open 0 until 6, giving visitors
nce to see those of Mrs. on B. Craig at 8 West st., Mrs. Edward A at 8 Walnut st., Mrs
as C. Howard at 46 Mt on st., Mrs. Frederick L g at 14 Walnut st., Miss Hebert at 32 West Cedar
Mrs. Thomas E. P. Rice a Chestnut st. and Mrs es C. White at 34 Mt
non st.

RACTICAL DEMONSTRA
N of the services contributed the Beverly Hospital by it unteers was given yesterday rnoon at the annual meeting

pute over a pension plan spilled over into the efforts to send the world famous group to Russia.

The Boston Symphony is going to be in West Europe and the Scandinavian countries during August and September. Officials said they hope a way can be found to extend this tour into Russia for five days or so.

No cost to the U.S. government would be involved, they said. The Soviet government would act as impressario

miss Philippa Guerrette, cous
ela Carey and Miss France
Crowley, Miss Carey and Mis
Crowley wore pink and blu gowns, matched in style of ny lor

Bridesmaids were Miss Patri
carnations.

By JOHN DREBINGER

Throughout their u campaign this spring the G made it clear they were ba heavily on three youngs
Said Manager Bill Rigne rehabilitation program for and Foster Castleman—in Al Worthington, Daisy Sp

4-Bagger Scores Castle
in Sixth—Worthington
Giants' Mound Victo

DLM 10 1 111LD

ENEFIT CHAIRMAN for ay 5 at Pops which will be gis College Night, is Mrs. Frank Dillon, who is serving with Mrs.
illiam Graham.

f the hospital's aid association.
eeting at St. Peter's Episcopal hurch in Beverly, White La-es and members of other anches of volunteer service
monstrated their roles.

Mrs. Harry B. Duane Jr., dictor of the volunteer services, id tribute to Mrs. Sears Tuck-man and Mrs. George H.
vinn, who have served as hite Ladies for 14 years.
hers taking part in the prom included Miss Grace Nan-
director of nursing services;
s. Thomas J. Fitzpatrick, R. N.,
Mrs. Jacob H. Fine of the
isory committee.

State Dept. Asks Boston Symphony To Play in Russia

Washington, April 27 (AP)—The State Department is looking to the Boston Symphony Orchestra to take the place of the Philadelphia Orchestra, which has canceled plans to play in the Soviet Union this year.

Department officials said today that substitution of the Boston orchestra, if it can be arranged, would have the added virtue of not costing the U. S. government one penny.

The Boston Symphony is going to be in West Europe and the Scandinavian countries during August and September. Officials said they hope a way can be found to extend this tour into Russia for five days or so.

No cost to the U. S. government would be involved, they said. The Soviet government would act as impressario, as it did in the case of the Porgy and Bess Opera Co. This would guarantee expenses and a profit no matter what the gate receipts turned out to be.

Boston Symphony New Russia Replacement

WASHINGTON, April 27 (AP) — The State Department is looking to the Boston Symphony Orchestra to take the place of the Philadelphia orchestra, which has canceled plans to play in the Soviet Union this year.

Department officials said today that substitution of the Boston orchestra, if it can be arranged, would have the added virtue of not costing the U. S. government one penny.

Donald L. Engle, manager of the 105-member Philadelphia orchestra, telegraphed the department last night that the group had voted unanimously against going through with a proposed trip to the Soviet Union Aug. 15.

This closed the negotiations which had been dogged by more than the usual U. S.-Soviet discord in such cases. There also was union-management trouble. This labor dispute over a pension plan spilled over into the efforts to send the world famous group to Russia.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 130,559

APR 25 1956

Undergraduate Choruses to Sing

Boston Symphony to Play New Mabel Daniels Work

By ELINOR HUGHES

"Psalm of Praise," the latest choral composition by Mabel Daniels, outstanding woman composer and celebrated graduate of Radcliffe College, will be performed at the final pair of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening at Symphony Hall.

This work was written by Miss Daniels for the 75th anniversary of Radcliffe and first was presented at Radcliffe's Diamond Choral Society in Sanders Theater, Cambridge, last year.

3D WOMAN HONORED

The same undergraduate choruses will sing "Psalm of Praise" with the Boston Symphony under the direction of Charles Muench and also will be heard in Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, the other work on the program.

Miss Daniels is only the third woman to have a symphonic work played by the Boston Symphony, the other composers having been Margaret Ruthven Lang and H. H. A. Beech, whose compositions were performed prior to the turn of the century. "Psalm of Praise," moreover, is her third work to be given at Symphony Hall, the others being "Exultate Deo" in 1933 and "Deep Forest" in 1937. "Exultate Deo," incidentally, was also written in honor of Radcliffe College at the time of the college's 50th anniversary.

That Mabel Daniels should have devoted her life to music is not surprising because her father was president of the Handel and Haydn Society for many years. As an undergraduate at Radcliffe she was the leader and [illegible] of the Choral Society and [illegible]sed music for three oper[illegible] in which she either con[illegible] the orchestra or sang the [illegible]pal part. Josephine Hull, [illegible]iffe '99, was also a mem[illegible] of the cast.

[illegible]lowing her graduation, [illegible] cum laude, she studied [illegible]osition with George W. [illegible]wick in Boston and Ludwig [illegible]le in Munich, and in 1905 [illegible] "An American Girl in Mu[illegible]sic student in that historic [illegible]

[illegible]rough her career her music [illegible]een marked by a contem[illegible]y style and a willingness to [illegible]riment. Her orchestra pre[illegible] and symphonic works have [illegible] high praise not only from [illegible] critics but also from such [illegible]guished conductors as [illegible]sevitzky, Barbirolli, How[illegible]Hanson and others, and in [illegible]nition of her contribution [illegible]merican music she has re[illegible]d honorary degrees from [illegible]s, Boston University and her [illegible] alma mater. She is a [illegible]tee of the New England [illegible]nservatory of Music, a cor[illegible]te member of the MacDow[illegible]olony and a director of the [illegible]nds of Music of Boston Uni[illegible]nuity and the Zimbler Sinfoni[illegible]

[illegible]er compositions, in addition [illegible]hose already mentioned, in[illegible]de "Songs of Elfland," a son[illegible] for piano and violin; "Pi[illegible]rate's Island," "The Holy Star," "A Holiday Fantasy" and "The Christ Child." She has won nu[illegible]nerous prizes for compositions, [illegible]ncluding a National Federation [illegible]f Music Clubs award, and for [illegible]everal years was director of [illegible]music at Simmons College.

BOSTON SYMPHONY MAY GO TO RUSSIA

No Cost to U. S. Gov't; Philadelphia Group Cancels Trip

WASHINGTON, April 27 (AP) — The State Department is looking to the Boston Symphony Orchestra to take the place of the Philadelphia orchestra, which has cancelled plans to play in the Soviet Union this year.

Department officials said today that substitution of the Boston orchestra, if it can be arranged, would have the added virtue of not costing the U. S. Government one penny.

Donald L. Engle, manager of the 105-member Philadelphia orchestra, telegraphed the department last night that the group had voted unanimously against going through with a proposed trip to the Soviet Union Aug. 15.

This closed the negotiations which had been dogged by more than the usual U.S.-Soviet discord in such cases. There also was union-managerment trouble. This labor dispute over a pension plan spilled over into the efforts to send the world famous group to Russia.

The Boston Symphony is going to be in West Europe and the Scandinavian countries during August and September. Officials said they hope a way can be found to extend this tour into Russia for five days or so.

No cost to the U.S. government would be involved, they said. The Soviet government would act as impressario, as it did in the case of the Porgy and Bess Opera Co. This would guarantee expenses and a profit no matter what the gate receipts turned out to be.

A spokesman for the Boston Symphony said there is time available in the orchestra's European tour schedule to fit in the Russian concerts if they can be arranged. He said the orchestra management would have a statement "as soon as things are definite."

Symphony Men Check Red Tape on Moscow Visit

A visit this year by the Boston Symphony Orchestra to Moscow, and possibly other cities in Russia, seemed virtually assured today.

A nearly unanimous vote taken this week among the 104 members of the world-famed orchestra, the Globe learned today, just about inched the trip.

The orchestra's business manager, Thomas D. Perry Jr., of Hingham, and the president of the trustees, Henry B. Cabot, were in Washington today, ironing out details with the State Department.

Officially, the Boston Symphony was mum on the question of a definite decision. But a reliable source indicated that the poll of the members was the deciding factor.

The few Russian-born members expressed fear or apprehension. What few dissents arose came from those who thought that living, eatin gand transportatin facilities in Rusia might be too tiring.

The trip won't cost the United States anything. The Boston Symphony had planned an itenerary throughout Western Europe this Summer anyway, and the Kremlin has offered to pick up the extra tab if the orchestra does visit Russia.

Also on the schedule, it is understood, is a Sept. 11 visit to Prague, Czechoslvakia, also behind the Iron Curtain.

Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 10,000 Free
APR 26 1956

Boston Pops Concerts Opens 71st Season In Symphony Hall Assistant Conductor Named

Gay colors and a light heart will be in order come Tuesday evening in Symphony Hall when the Pops, born and grown in Boston, will begin their seventy-first season in Symphony Hall. The Pops will continue nightly through the month of May, and during June the concerts will be played nightly except Sunday. The season will close Saturday evening June 30.

ARTHUR FIEDLER

A hit procession that started in 1885 the Pops Concerts are a favorite entertainment for hundreds of Boston residents. With the advent of Spring when young and old alike think of lighter happier aspects of life, the Pops Concerts offering the less strenous type of music blend themselves to the mood with bright rythm and flowing melodies.

Arthur Fiedler will inaugurate the season of the Pops Orchestra for his 27th year as its conductor. As always, the floor seats in the auditorium will have been removed and replaced by tables, allowing patrons who have floor seats to enjoy liquid and other refreshments at the same time that they listen to the inimitable musical performances of the Pops.

For the first time in the history of the Pops concerts an Assistant Conductor has been named. He is Harry Ellis Dickson, a member of the violin section in the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who in recent seasons has made many appearances as a guest conductor of the Boston Pops. Last season Mr. Dickson conducted the first four weeks of the Pops during the absence of Mr. Fiedler. He is also the conductor of the Brookline Youth Concerts and he organized the Civic Orchestra in Providence.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 122,000
APR 27 1956

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Part.
Circ. 20,000
APR 26 1956

MUSIC IN REVIEW

By GERALD A. BERLIN

BSO: HANDEL, MOZART AND HONEGGER

Charles Munch was a warm personal friend of the late Arthur Honegger and has consistently shown a close affinity for his music. He manifested this to Boston audiences as far back as his first appearance in 1947, when, as guest conductor, he gave one of the earliest American performances of the Symphony No. 3, entitled "Liturgique." Honegger died last December, and it was mete that at last weekend's concert, the penultimate of the 1955-56 season, Mr. Munch should devote the last half of the program to another performance of the Symphonie "Liturgique" as well as to the first performance at these concerts of Honegger's "Chant de Joie."

The Symphonie "Liturgique" was composed in 1945-46 and was dedicated to Mr. Munch.. Apparently the state of the post-war world had profoundly depressed Honegger and this symphony embodies in a most personal way his feeling of hopelessness and despair, yet realization of the joys and beauties that life could provide. The work is a major evocation of the art of Honegger's later years: large and tragic proportions, elaborate polyphony stressed at the expense of instrumental color, highly characteristic, acrid harmonic textures, powerful and unremitting rhythmic drive. The Symphony has its gentler moments but the predominant mood remains one of futility. Yet, Mr. Munch must have thought that Honegger's post-war feeling did not wholly bespeak the man and for that reason felt it necessary to conclude his apostrophe to his friend with the "Chant de joie," a vigorous, buoyant, spiritually unclouded work composed in 1923 (the same as the renowned "Pacific 231"), whose intent is signified by its title. As might be expected, the orchestral performance was extremely mettlesome.

The first half of the program—and a very listenable one it was—consisted of Handel's Suite for Orchestra, "The Faithful Shepherd," as arranged by Sir Thomas Beecham, and the first performance at these concerts (sic!) of Mozart's D major Piano Concerto, K. 451, with the distinguished Czech pianist, Rudolph Firkusny, as soloist. "The Faithful Shepherd" was an early and rather unsuccessful opera of Handel, which years later he revised and revived. How faithful Sir Thomas' now famous arrangement is to the original operatic score either in spirit or detail, I cannot say. If the instrumentation for baroque purposes is on the lush side and the flow of the sections of the suite a bit chopped up, still the transcription retains the mellifluousness, stateliness and idyllic charm one associates with the great Handel in general.

As for the D major concerto, though no giant among the Mozart piano concertos, this is nonetheless a work of brilliance, polish, maturity and utmost refinement of style. That it had never been played at these concerts until the instant occasion is an astonishing commentary on seventy-five years of programing. Various reviews in the press by my colleagues who had attended the Friday performance had emphasized such liberties as too much use of pedals, exaggerated affetuoso in the slow movement, lingering phrasings and other such indiciae of over-romanticization. On Saturday night, at least, these reports certainly proved unfounded. Mr. Firkusny played cleanly, straightforwardly and in unimpeachably good Mozartian taste, blending his solo instrument unobtrusively, indeed with innate mastery, into the instrumental dialogue of the orchestral accompaniment. The applause was long and, I submit, well earned.

The final concert of the season this weekend will consist of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony with the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society and Adele Addison, soprano, Eunice Alberts, contralto, David Lloyd, tenor, and Mac Morgan, bass, as soloists. The program will commence with Mabel Daniels' "A Psalm of Praise for Mixed Chorus and Orchestra," composed for the 75th anniversary of Radcliffe College.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 122,000
APR 28 1956

Symphony Men Vote Soviet Tour

'Not Afraid,' Say Members Born in Russia

By JOHN WM. RILEY

The next unofficial United States ambassadors to Russia may be the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

At least, if the members of the orchestra have anything to say about it, the Symphony will extend its planned tour from the British Isles and Scandinavia into the Soviet Union.

The 104 members, when asked their opinion by the Symphony management, voted almost unanimously this week to go along with the proposal to extend their tour into Russia.

This is the sort of democratic process which might not be understood in the Soviet Union, where men and groups do as they are told. The members of the Boston Symphony have accepted the responsibility and challenge of performing their art, as ambassadors, just as did the members of the "Porgy and Bess" troupe which performed Gershwin's opera in Moscow last season to Russian acclaim.

Philadelphia Orchestra members have voted unanimously against a trip to Russia proposed for them. This opens the way for the Boston Symphony which, originally, was the favored ambassador.

Thomas D. Perry Jr., business manager of the orchestra, spent two hours yesterday afternoon in Washington talking over plans with Robinson McIlvaine, State Department deputy assistant for public affairs.

The few Russian-born members of the Boston Symphony express no fear about the trip.

SYMPHONY
Page Fourteen
Independent Democrat
Circ. 285,839
APR 28 1956

NEWS OF MUSIC

Special Symphony Concert

By JOHN WM. RILEY

The 75th anniversary season of the Boston Symphony ends this week with the last regular programs in Symphony Hall this afternoon and tomorrow night, and a special concert on Sunday evening at 8:30. This last concert, offering two symphonies—the Seventh of Beethoven and the "Pathetique" of Tchaikovsky—has special significance, both musically and otherwise. For the proceeds will go to help pay the costs of the orchestra's tour of Europe this Summer.

The Sunday night concert should be a cheery note for hundreds of Boston music lovers who have been unable to break through the blockage of the orchestra's sold-out-by-subscription situation. As perhaps is generally known, the Boston Symphony's concerts for many years have been sold out each Fall before the season's opening.

Appropriately for this anniversary, the two symphonies and their composers are part of the orchestra's history. In the infancy of the orchestra—in the first season of its first conductor, Georg Henschel, in 1881-82—it cut its teeth on Beethoven's nine symphonies. On its opening program in the old Music Hall it played the master's "Dedication of the House." It closed its 19 years' stay in Music Hall with his Ninth Symphony. Moving to Symphony Hall in 1900, it played his "Missa Solemnis" on the inaugural program. And high on the golden frame of the proscenium of Symphony Hall, the name of but one composer is molded—Beethoven.

The music of Tchaikovsky has had a curious history in the annals of the Boston Symphony. Introduced at a Symphony concert in 1883, his "Slavic March" was denounced by a Boston critic who said that the piece must be the result of the composer's winning a bet "that he could write the most absolutely hideous thing that had ever been put on paper."

Not until 1892 did the orchestra play a Tchaikovsky symphony—The Fifth, conducted by Nikisch. Two years later Paur introduced the "Pathetique," which divided the critics. One declared that it "speaks not of beauty, but of the morbid melancholy of a dying century." Another took the opposite view, saying that "it would long remain in favor." It is now one of the most frequently performed symphonies in the Boston orchestra's large repertory.

A program of Polish piano music, including a piece by Paderewski probably never before performed in America, will be presented in the New England Conservatory's Recital Hall tonight by Halina Zythieweicz. The Paderewski piece is Variation and Fugue in A minor, Op. 11.

Tenor Roland Hayes will give a concert in the All Saints Lutheran Church, 85 West Newton st., Sunday evening. Reginald Boardman will be the piano accompanist in songs of Haydn, Bach, Schubert, as well as a group of Afro-American religious songs.

Samuel Mayes, solo cellist of the Boston Symphony, and Leo Litwin, Boston Pops pianist, will give a concert in the Women's City Club tonight at 8:15. The program includes Beethoven's A major Sonata, works of Haydn, Chopin and Debussy.

Two outstanding concerts are scheduled next week at the New England Conservatory. On Wednesday evening, the Conservatory Chorus and Orchestra combine under Richard Burgin's direction in Schubert's Mass in E-flat major. Lorna Cooke DeVaron will conduct part of the program, which includes a capella religious works of Schutz and Byrd. On Thursday evening Roger Voisin will conduct the various forces of the Conservatory in Stravinsky's "L'Histoire du Soldat." A chamber orchestra, vocal soloists, dancers and actors will take part. Both concerts are free.

Film Times

ASTOR—"I'll Cry Tomorrow," 9:30, 11:30, 1:35, 3:40, 5:40, 7:45, 9:45.

BEACON HILL—"Diabolique," 10, 12, 2, 4, 6, 8, 10.

BOSTON THEATRE—"Cinerama Holiday," two performances: 2:30, 8:40.

CASINO—Stage, 12, 2:45, 8:30; "Robbers' Roost," 9, 5:02; "To Catch a Thief," 9:54, 6:24.

CENTER—"Desert Rats," 9:40, 1:05, 4:35, 8:00; "Frogmen," 11:20, 2:50, 6:15, 9:45.

EXETER THEATRE—"Touch and Go," 2:35, 5, 7:20, 9:54; "Helen Keller Story," 1:45, 4:10, 6:25, 8:45.

FENWAY—"Mohawk," 1:00, 3:50, 6:35, 9:30; "Red Sundown," 11:35, 2:25, 5:10, 8:00.

KEITH MEMORIAL—"Creature Walks Among Us," 11:00, 1:48, 4:35, 7:24, 10:12; "Price of Fear," 9:30, 12:18, 3:06, 5:54, 8:42.

KENMORE—"Lady Killers," 1:34, 3:36, 5:33, 7:40, 9:46; "Fa of Lincoln," 1:12, 3:14, 5:16, 7:18, 9:24.

LOEW'S ORPHEUM—"The Swan," 11:30, 2:55, 6:25, 9:55; "The Broken Star," 10:05, 1:30, 5, 8:30.

LOEW'S STATE—"The Swan," 11:30, 2:55, 6:20, 9:50; "The Broken Star," 1:30, 4:55, 8:25.

MAYFLOWER—"Love Me or Leave Me," 9:35, 1:35, 5:30, 9:30; "The Last Hunt," 11:45, 3:40, 7:40.

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 185,401
APR 28 1956

Symphony Finale

The Boston Symphony Orchestra terminates its 75th anniversary winter season tomorrow night at 8:30 in Symphony Hall with a special concert, Charles Munch, conducting. Proceeds from the concert will be used to help supply funds for the European tour next August and September.

For this special concert Mr. Munch has scheduled two symphonies . . . Beethoven's Seventh and Tchaikovsky's "Pathetique."

The Beethoven Symphony was the first work Mr. Munch recorded after he became the orchestra's musical director; the recording has consistently been one of the orchestra's best sellers and Mr. Munch has a special reputation in the performance of the score.

The Tchaikovsky Symphony was programmed by Mr. Munch early in his first season here; the last time he conducted it in Boston was to open the 1951-52 season, in a pair of concerts played in memory of Serge Koussevitzky.

Remaining tickets for the concert will be put on sale at the Symphony Hall box office on Sunday at 1:30 p. m.

Music Review

By TUCKER KEISER

If the listener with notions or preconceptions about Beethoven's Ninth "Choral" checks them at the door, he will have a good time at the symphony concert this week end. Conductor Charles Munch has conceived this work in the broadest possible theatrical terms, both personally and musically.

The conductor has removed all restraint. He shouts, sings, shushes, stamps, leaps and lunges. Beethoven's magnificent music lifts him emotionally into a passionate paean.

Musically the score emerges as a series of intensely brilliant effects, mounting steadily until the choral finale, a veritable apocalyptic trauma. Tempi are pushed almost beyond physical endurance, details ignored, and whole phrases swallowed in the mad-long rush. Urgency soon becomes overwhelming. The listener is swept along helplessly in the torrent of sound.

The end comes suddenly. The silence itself seems thunderous. The listener is stunned for a moment, then reacts with almost hysterical applause.

The opening "Psalm of Praise" by Mabel Daniels, a short festive piece composed for chorus, string, percussion, and trumpets and written for the 75th anniversary of Radcliffe College, was dwarfed by the Ninth that followed.

Assisting in yesterday's performance was the Boston Symphony, the Harvard-Radcliffe Chorus, and a quartet including Adele Addison, Eunice Alberts, David Lloyd and Mac Morgan.

Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 10,000 Free

APR 26 1956

Boston Pops Concerts Opens 71st Season In Symphony Hall Assistant Conductor Named

Gay colors and a light heart will be in order come Tuesday evening in Symphony Hall when the Pops, born and grown in Boston, will begin their seventy-first season in Symphony Hall. The Pops will continue nightly through the month of May, and during June the concerts will be played nightly except Sunday. The season will close Saturday evening June 30.

ARTHUR FIEDLER

A hit procession that started in 1885 the Pops Concerts are a favorite entertainment for hundreds of Boston residents. With the advent of Spring when young and old alike think of lighter happier aspects of life, the Pops Concerts offering the less strenous type of music blend themselves to the mood with bright rythm and flowing melodies.

Arthur Fiedler will inaugurate the season of the Pops Orchestra for his 27th year as its conductor. As always, the floor seats in the auditorium will have been removed and replaced by tables, allowing patrons who have floor seats to enjoy liquid and other refreshments at the same time that they listen to the inimitable musical performances of the Pops.

For the first time in the history of the Pops concerts an Assistant Conductor has been named. He is Harry Ellis Dickson, a member of the violin section in the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who in recent seasons has made many appearances as a guest conductor of the Boston Pops. Last season Mr. Dickson conducted the first four weeks of the Pops during the absence of Mr. Fiedler. He is also the conductor of the Brookline Youth Concerts and he organized the Civic Orchestra in Providence.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 3078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 122,000

APR 27 1956

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 122,000

APR 28 1956

MUSIC IN ...

By GERALD A. BERLIN

BSO: HANDEL, MOZART AND HONEGGER

Charles Munch was a warm personal friend of the late Arthur Honegger and has consistently shown a close affinity for his music. He manifested this to Boston audiences as far back as his first appearance in 1947, when, as guest conductor, he gave one of the earliest American performances of the Symphony No. 3, entitled "Liturgique." Honegger died last December, and it was mete that at last weekend's concert, the penultimate of the 1955-56 season, Mr. Munch should devote the last half of the program to another performance of the Symphonie "Liturgique" as well as to the first performance at these concerts of Honegger's "Chant de Joie."

The Symphonie "Liturgique" was composed in 1945-46 and was dedicated to Mr. Munch.. Apparently the state of the post-war world had profoundly depressed Honegger and this symphony embodies in a most personal way his feeling of hopelessness and despair, yet realization of the joys and beauties that life could provide. The work is a major evocation of the art of Honegger's later years: large and tragic proportions, elaborate polyphony stressed at the expense of instrumental color, highly characteristic, acrid harmonic textures, powerful and unremitting rhythmic drive. The Symphony has its gentler moments but the predominant mood remains one of futility. Yet, Mr. Munch must have thought that Honegger's post-war feeling did not wholly bespeak the man and for that reason felt it necessary to conclude his apostrophe to his friend with the "Chant de joie," a vigorous, buoyant, spiritually unclouded work composed in 1923 (the same as the renowned "Pacific 231"), whose intent is signified by its title. As might be expected, the orchestral performance was extremely mettlesome.

The first half of the program—and a very listenable one it was—consisted of Handel's Suite for Orchestra, "The Faithful Shepherd," as arranged by Sir Thomas Beecham, and the first performance at these concerts (sic!) of Mozart's D major Piano Concerto, K. 451, with the distinguished Czech pianist, Rudolph Firkusny, as soloist. "The Faithful Shepherd" was an early and rather unsuccessful opera of Handel, which years later he revised and revived. How faithful Sir Thomas' now famous arrangement is to the original operatic score either in spirit or detail, I cannot say. If the instrumentation for baroque purposes is on the lush side and the flow of the sections of the suite a bit chopped up, still the transcription retains the mellifluousness, stateliness and idyllic charm one associates with the great Handel in general.

As for the D major concerto, though no giant among the Mozart piano concertos, this is nonetheless a work of brilliance, polish, maturity and utmost refinement of style. That it had never been played at these concerts until the instant occasion is an astonishing commentary on seventy-five years of programing. Various reviews in the press by my colleagues who had attended the Friday performance had emphasized such liberties as too much use of pedals, exaggerated affetuoso in the slow movement, lingering phrasings and other such indiciae of over-romanticization. On Saturday night, at least, these reports certainly proved unfounded. Mr. Firkusny played cleanly, straightforwardly and in unimpeachably good Mozartian taste, blending his solo instrument unobtrusively, indeed with innate mastery, into the instrumental dialogue of the orchestral accompaniment. The applause was long and, I submit, well earned.

The final concert of the season this weekend will consist of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony with the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society and Adele Addison, soprano, Eunice Alberts, contralto, David Lloyd, tenor, and Mac Morgan, bass, as soloists. The program will commence with Mabel Daniels' "A Psalm of Praise for Mixed Chorus and Orchestra," composed for the 75th anniversary of Radcliffe College.

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 185,401

APR 28 1956

Symphony Finale

The Boston Symphony Orchestra terminates its 75th anniversary winter season tomorrow night at 8:30 in Symphony Hall with a special concert, Charles Munch, conducting. Proceeds from the concert will be used to help supply funds for the European tour next August and September.

For this special concert Mr. Munch has scheduled two symphonies . . . Beethoven's Seventh and Tchaikovsky's "Pathetique."

The Beethoven Symphony was the first work Mr. Munch recorded after he became the orchestra's musical director; the recording has consistently been one of the orchestra's best sellers and Mr. Munch has a special reputation in the performance of the score.

The Tchaikovsky Symphony was programmed by Mr. Munch early in his first season here; the last time he conducted it in Boston was to open the 1951-52 season, in a pair of concerts played in memory of Serge Koussevitzky.

Remaining tickets for the concert will be put on sale at the Symphony Hall box office on Sunday at 1:30 p. m.

...ONY

...ued from the First Page

"We hope we will go . . . it ... be wonderful," says one member who, though born in Poland, studied and worked in Russia for nearly 10 years. "We would like to go very much," he says. "We might do much good."

He says the Russian-born members are all in favor of the trip. Members of the orchestra have not been in touch with friends in Russia since the war although before the war some visited the Soviet Union and corresponded with people there.

No cost would accrue to the United States Government if the Boston Symphony extended its tour into Russia. The Soviet Union would guarantee the costs as impresario, as it did with the "Porgy and Bess" company.

NEWS OF MUSIC

Special Symphony Concert

By JOHN WM. RILEY

The 75th anniversary season of the Boston Symphony ends this week with the last regular programs in Symphony Hall this afternoon and tomorrow night, and a special concert on Sunday evening at 8:30. This last concert, offering two symphonies—the Seventh of Beethoven and the "Pathetique" of Tchaikovsky—has special significance, both musically and otherwise. For the proceeds will go to help pay the costs of the orchestra's tour of Europe this Summer.

The Sunday night concert should be a cheery note for hundreds of Boston music lovers who have been unable to break through the blockage of the orchestra's sold-out-by-subscription situation. As perhaps is generally known, the Boston Symphony's concerts for many years have been sold out each Fall before the season's opening.

Appropriately for this anniversary, the two symphonies and their composers are part of the orchestra's history. In the infancy of the orchestra—in the first season of its first conductor, Georg Henschel, in 1881-82—it cut its teeth on Beethoven's nine symphonies. On its opening program in the old Music Hall it played the master's "Dedication of the House." It closed its 19 years' stay in Music Hall with his Ninth Symphony. Moving to Symphony Hall in 1900, it played his "Missa Solemnis" on the inaugural program. And high on the golden frame of the proscenium of Symphony Hall, the name of but one composer is molded—Beethoven.

The music of Tchaikovsky has had a curious history in the annals of the Boston Symphony. Introduced at a Symphony concert in 1883, his "Slavic March" was denounced by a Boston critic who said that the piece must be the result of the composer's winning a bet "that he could write the most absolutely hideous thing that had ever been put on paper."

Not until 1892 did the orchestra play a Tchaikovsky symphony—The Fifth, conducted by Nikisch. Two years later Paur introduced the "Pathetique," which divided the critics. One declared that it "speaks not of beauty, but of the morbid melancholy of a dying century." Another took the opposite view, saying that "it would long remain in favor." It is now one of the most frequently performed symphonies in the Boston orchestra's large repertory.

A program of Polish piano music, including a piece by Paderewski probably never before performed in America, will be presented in the New England Conservatory's Recital Hall tonight by Halina Zythieweicz. The Paderewski piece is Variation and Fugue in A minor, Op. 11.

Tenor Roland Hayes will give a concert in the All Saints Lutheran Church, 85 West Newton st., Sunday evening. Reginald Boardman will be the piano accompanist in songs of Haydn, Bach, Schubert, as well as a group of Afro-American religious songs.

Samuel Mayes, solo cellist of the Boston Symphony, and Leo Litwin, Boston Pops pianist, will give a concert in the Women's City Club tonight at 8:15. The program includes Beethoven's A major Sonata, works of Haydn, Chopin and Debussy.

Two outstanding concerts are scheduled next week at the New England Conservatory. On Wednesday evening, the Conservatory Chorus and Orchestra combine under Richard Burgin's direction in Schubert's Mass in E-flat major. Lorna Cooke DeVaron will conduct part of the program, which includes a capella religious works of Schutz and Byrd. On Thursday evening Roger Voisin will conduct the various forces of the Conservatory in Stravinsky's "L'Histoire du Soldat." A chamber orchestra, vocal soloists, dancers and actors will take part. Both concerts are free.

Film Times

ASTOR—"I'll Cry Tomorrow," 9:30, 11:30, 1:35, 3:40, 5:40, 7:45, 9:45.

BEACON HILL—"Diabolique," 10, 12, 2, 4, 6, 8, 10.

BOSTON THEATRE—"Cinerama Holiday," two performances: 2:30, 8:40.

CASINO—Stage, 12, 2:45, 8:30; "Robbers' Roost," 9, 5:02; "To Catch a Thief," 9:54, 6:24.

CENTER—"Desert Rats," 9:40, 1:05, 4:35, 8:00; "Frogmen," 11:20, 2:50, 6:15, 9:45.

EXETER THEATRE—"Touch and Go," 2:35, 5, 7:20, 9:54; "Helen Keller Story," 1:45, 4:10, 6:25, 8:45.

FENWAY—"Mohawk," 1:00, 3:50, 6:35, 9:30; "Red Sundown," 11:35, 2:25, 5:10, 8:00.

KEITH MEMORIAL—"Creature Walks Among Us," 11:00, 1:48, 4:35, 7:24, 10:12; "Price of Fear," 9:30, 12:18, 3:06, 5:54, 8:42.

KENMORE—"Lady Killers," 1:34, 3:36, 5:33, 7:40, 9:46; "Fa of Lincoln," 1:12, 3:14, 5:16, 7:18, 9:24.

LOEW'S ORPHEUM—"The Swan," 11:30, 2:55, 6:25, 9:55; "The Broken Star," 10:05, 1:30, 5, 8:30.

LOEW'S STATE—"The Swan," 11:30, 2:55, 6:20, 9:50; "The Broken Star," 1:30, 4:55, 8:25.

MAYFLOWER—"Love Me or Leave Me," 9:35, 1:35, 5:30, 9:30; "The Last Hunt," 11:45, 3:40, 7:40.

Post (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 285,839

APR 28 1956

Music Review

By TUCKER KEISER

If the listener with notions or preconceptions about Beethoven's Ninth "Choral" checks them at the door, he will have a good time at the symphony concert this week end. Conductor Charles Munch has conceived this work in the broadest possible theatrical terms, both personally and musically.

The conductor has removed all restraint. He shouts, sings, shushes, stamps, leaps and lunges. Beethoven's magnificent music lifts him emotionally into a passionate paean.

Musically the score emerges as a series of intensely brilliant effects, mounting steadily until the choral finale, a veritable apocalyptic trauma. Tempi are pushed almost beyond physical endurance, details ignored, and whole phrases swallowed in the mad-long rush. Urgency soon becomes overwhelming. The listener is swept along helplessly in the torrent of sound.

The end comes suddenly. The silence itself seems thunderous. The listener is stunned for a moment, then reacts with almost hysterical applause.

The opening "Psalm of Praise" by Mabel Daniels, a short festive piece composed for chorus, string, percussion, and trumpets and written for the 75th anniversary of Radcliffe College, was dwarfed by the Ninth that followed.

Assisting in yesterday's performance was the Boston Symphony, the Harvard-Radcliffe Chorus, and a quartet including Adele Addison, Eunice Alberts, David Lloyd and Mac Morgan.

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 154,241

APR 27 1956

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 397,884

Post (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 285,839

APR 28 1956

S INVITATION

...phony ...ssia Bid

May Play in Russia

Boston Symphony 'Happy' To Accept Soviet Offer

The world-famous Boston Symphony Orchestra would be "very happy" to accept an invitation to play in Soviet Russia this summer if one is received and other details can be worked out.

The possibility of extending planned European tour behind the Iron Curtain came into the spotlight yesterday when it was announced that the Philadelphia Orchestra had cancelled a scheduled trip to Russia because that the State Department was looking to Boston to fill the gap.

A spokesman for the Boston orchestra expressed the feeling that the invitation should come directly from the Soviet, and not from the State Department, if it is to be considered.

David Oistrakh, Soviet violinist played with the Philadelphia orchestra during his American tour last year, a factor that entered into the Russian invitation going to that city first.

Expenses Guaranteed

Since the Boston orchestra is going to be in West Europe and the Scandinavian countries during August and September, officials are optimistic that it can be arranged to extend the tour into Russia for five days or so.

As in the case of the Porgy and Bess Opera Company, the Soviet government guarantees expenses and a profit no matter what the gate receipts are.

...tone, flexibility, harmonious ensemble and abundance of variety, nuances and color.

The Boston Symphony, which also has a world reputation, is going to be in West Europe and the Scandinavian countries during August and September. Officials said they hope a way can be found to extend this tour into Russia for five days or so.

COSTS GUARANTEED

No cost to the U. S. government would be involved, they said. The Soviet government would act as impressario, as it did in the case of the Porgy and Bess Opera Co. This would guarantee expenses and a profit no matter what the gate receipts turned out to be.

...istian Science
Monitor (e)
...STON, Mass.
...on-partisan
...irc. 165,872
APR 28 1956

(m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 397,884
APR 28 1956

Top of The News

Find Student Dead

Winchester Colby student, missing since Tuesday, was found dead in Augusta, Me. hotel. —Page

Won't Go Home

Four Soviet sailors rejected, in salty terms, a plea by Red Ambassador Zaroubin that they return home. —Page

Macfadden Riches

N. Y. Atty. says Macfadden estate executor showed him $500,000 gold brick late publisher is supposed to have buried. —Page

Nab Ex-Grid Star

A former Weymouth football star was nabbed in Maine on bad check charges. —Page

Approve Gas Hike

DPU has approved a 25-cents-a-month gas hike by the Boston Gas Co. —Page

Hearst Oratory

A Holy Cross student from California won first place in the college student segment of the New England finals of the Hearst Oratory contest. —Page 4

O. K. Confession

John Gilbert Graham loses plea to bar from murder trial confession that he blew up plane with 44 aboard. —Page 5

Motorama Finale

Crowds continue to jam Motorama right up to the end of the 1956 edition. —Page 4

Road Bill Passed

House approves record-breaking $52 billion roads program. —Page 2

Regrets Spy Role

David Greenglass regrets role that sent sister to electric chair in atom spy case. —Page 5

Symphony Gets Bid

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has been asked to tour the Soviet Union. —Page 4

Rocky Abdicates

Rocky Marciano hangs up boxing gloves for keeps. —Back Page

Red Sox Lose, 5-2

Yankees hand Red Sox 5th straight loss, 5-2, behind Don Larsen. —Back Page

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,872
APR 28 1956

Pops Programs

71st Season Set to Open On Tuesday

Lipnitzki

Walter Gieseking will give a piano recital Sunday afternoon in Symphony Hall.

The 71st season of the Boston Pops will open in Symphony Hall Tuesday evening, May 1. Arthur Fiedler, who has been conductor of the Boston Pops concerts since 1930, will again be on the podium.

For the first time in the history of the Pops concerts an assistant conductor has been named. He is Harry Ellis Dickson, a member of the violin section in the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who in recent seasons has made many appearances as a guest conductor of the Boston Pops. Last season Mr. Dickson conducted the first four weeks of the Pops during the absence of Mr. Fiedler. He is also the conductor of the Brookline Youth Concerts and he organized the Civic Orchestra in Providence.

Many local organizations and businesses have arranged their own special nights at the Pops. Among those who will be in attendance during the first week are the New England Grenfell Association, the American Society of Orthodontists, the Women's City Club, Colby Junior College, Peter Bent Brigham Hospital, Mount Ida Junior College, Dana Hall, and Regis College.

♪ ♪ ♪

The season will continue through Saturday, June 30. During the first five weeks there will be concerts every night including Sunday. After the fifth week the concerts will be played Monday through Saturday evenings, with no Sunday concerts.

Tickets for each of the performances during the first week of the season are now on sale at the Symphony Hall box office, and tickets will be on sale throughout the season one week in advance of each concert.

The soloists for the opening week include five pianists and one organist. Luise Vosgerchian will be heard in Liszt's Concerto No. 1 on opening night and again on Sunday night. On Wednesday night Mineko Sasahara will play the first movement of Rachmaninov's Concerto No. 2; on Thursday, Leo Litwin the Weber Concertstück; on Friday, Meg Bachman the Mozart Concerto No. 12. Berj Zamkochian will be organ soloist in Handel's Concerto No. 2 on Saturday evening.

♪ ♪ ♪

The programs:

Tuesday Evening, May 1

El Capitan, March ..... Sousa
Music of the Spheres, Waltzes ..... Josef Strauss
Fantasia on Greensleeves ..... Vaughan Williams
Overture to "La Belle Hélène" ..... Offenbach
Piano Concerto No. 1, in E-flat ..... Liszt
Soloist: Luise Vosgerchian
Suite from "The Nutcracker" ..... Tchaikovsky
Selection from "My Fair Lady" ..... Loewe-Hayman
Love Is a Many-Splendored Thing ..... Fain-Mason
Hungarian Dance No. 5 ..... Brahms
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

♪ ♪ ♪

Wednesday Evening, May 2

Slavonic Dance in C major ..... Dvořák
Overture to "Die Fledermaus" ..... Strauss
Intermezzo from "Tales of Hoffman" ..... Offenbach
Scherzo from Symphony No. 6 ..... Tchaikovsky
Piano Concerto No. 2, in C minor (First Movement) ..... Rachmaninov
Soloist: Mineko Sasahara
Three Dances from "The Three-Cornered Hat" ..... Falla
Colby Junior College Glee Club
Florence Barbieri, Director
Selection from "My Fair Lady" ..... Loewe-Hayman
The Blue-Tail Fly (Contrasts) ..... Rhodes
Sailors' Dance, from "The Red Poppy" ..... Glière
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

♪ ♪ ♪

Thursday Evening, May 3

Rakoczy March ..... Berlioz
Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro" ..... Mozart
Prelude and Love-Death, from "Tristan and Isolde" ..... Wagner
Masurka and Galop, from "Masquerade" ..... Khachaturian
Concertstück for Piano and Orchestra ..... Weber
Soloist: Leo Litwin
Capriccio Espagnol ..... Rimsky-Korsakov
Popspourri ..... Arr. by Mason
The Surrey With the Fringe on Top ..... Rodgers-Gould
Triumphal March from "Aida" ..... Verdi
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

♪ ♪ ♪

Friday Evening, May 4

Knightsbridge March ..... Coates
Where the Citrons Bloom, Waltzes ..... Strauss
Pavane ..... Ravel
Finlandia, Tone Poem ..... Sibelius
Piano Concerto No. 12 in A major, K. 414 ..... Mozart
Soloist: Meg Bachman
Suite from "Gaîté Parisienne" ..... Offenbach
Popspourri ..... Arr. by Mason
On the Trail, from "Grand Canyon Suite" ..... Grofé
Sabre Dance, from "Gayne" ..... Khachaturian
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

♪ ♪ ♪

Saturday Evening, May 5

Regis Night

Washington Post, March ..... Sousa
Music of the Spheres, Waltzes ..... Josef Strauss
Prayer of Thanksgiving ..... Valerius
Overture to "Orpheus in the Underworld" ..... Offenbach
Organ Concerto No. 2, in B flat ..... Handel
Soloist: Berj Zamkochian
Bolero ..... Ravel
Regis College Glee Club
Berj Zamkochian, Director
Selection from "Carousel" ..... Rodgers
Jalousie, Gypsy Tango ..... Gade
Wedding Dance ..... Press
Regis Alma Mater
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

♪ ♪ ♪

Sunday Evening, May 6

MIT Night

Wedding March, from "The Golden Cockerel" ..... Rimsky-Korsakov
Three Dances from "The Three-Cornered Hat" ..... Falla
Iron Works ..... Mossolov
Overture to "La Belle Hélène" ..... Offenbach
Piano Concerto No. 1, in E-flat ..... Liszt
Soloist: Luise Vosgerchian
MIT Glee Club
Klaus Liepmann conducting
Popspourri ..... Arr. by Mason
Love Is a Many-Splendored Thing ..... Fain-Mason
Thunder and Lightning ..... Strauss
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

Concert Calendar

Sunday, April 29

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting. Beethoven, Tchaikovsky. Symphony Hall, 8:30.

Walter Gieseking, pianist. Symphony Hall, 3:30.

George Szpinalski, violinist. Jordan Hall, 3:30.

New York Woodwind Quintet. Gardner Museum, 2. Free.

Komitas Choral Society, Rouben Gregorian conducting. Sanders Theater, Cambridge, 3.

Roland Hayes, tenor. All Saints Lutheran Church, 85 West Newton Street, 3:30.

North Park College Choir of Chicago. John Hancock Hall, 8.

Yale University Concert Band. MIT Kresge Auditorium, 4:15. Free.

Boston Conservatory Orchestra, Rouben Gregorian conducting. Auditorium, 31 Hemenway Street, 8:30. Free.

Monday, April 30

Norma Farber, soprano. College Club, 40 Commonwealth Avenue, 8:30.

Tuesday, May 1

Ayrton Pinto, violinist, and Tan Crone, pianist. Gardner Museum, 2:45. Free.

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 248,071

APR 29 1956

...ox and Symphony

To the Editor of The Herald:

The radio programs of the great Boston Symphony Orchestra as part of its seventy-fifth Anniversary celebration are eagerly awaited here in Maryland by a homesick native who has listened to our world famous group of distinguished musicians for some thirty years. Like most other residents of Greater Boston, I have claimed the music of the orchestra prime evidence of the City's cultural leadership.

Now, though we yet suffer from the loss of his predecessor, I look for more great music from the Boston Symphony under the leadership of Dr. Charles Munch. After another agonizing radio program of anniversary selected compositions only one phrase seems adequate to describe this music—"it stinks!"

Thanks be to the Boston Red Sox and Tom Yawkey who continues the tradition of great leadership by offering the classical direction of Pinky Higgins. May we have more of his solid thinking in the selections of the Boston Symphony!

WALLACE E. DOW
Moakton, Md.

...writers and poets who come

...uld Be Heard

...n M. Sutherland

...her debut at New York's Town Hall, she has been welcomed in recitals and appearances with the country's leading orchestras. In 1952-53 she appeared six times as soloist with Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra, singing the difficult part in Mahler's "Resurrection Symphony"—a taxing experience for many a more mature artist. She has also sung with the San Francisco Opera in a variety of roles, such as "The Barber of Seville," "Mefistofele," "Boris Godounov" and "Electra."

♪ ♪ ♪

She has sung under such exacting task masters as Monteux, Munch, Wallenstein, and Koussevitzky with great success. Always her roles have been vital, though arduous—such works as Handel's "Messiah," Mahler's "Das Lied von der Erde," "Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, and the more recent work of Arthur Honegger, "Joan of Arc at the Stake."

Miss Moudry obtained much of her early training in California where she attended the University of California in Los Angeles and lent her brilliance to such activities as the Bach Festival at Carmel, and the Pasadena Civic Orchestra.

♪ ♪ ♪

Recently she joined Saramae Endich, Marvin Worden, and Robert Rue to form the Tanglewood Opera Quartet which has proved of unusual interest to concert audiences. At Tanglewood, in the Berkshires of Massachusetts, the site of a celebrated festival in the summer and the home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, artists strive to maintain its high professional standard.

Among the qualities attributed to Janice Moudry by critics is her effortlessness, her excellent diction, her ability to convey a sense of solace through song.

Janice Moudry

WITH OUR COMPLIMENTS...

Although this clipping is beyond your order we thought it would interest you.

Please accept it with our compliments.

Sincerely,

NEW ENGLAND NEWSCLIP AGENCY, INC.

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 154,241

APR 27 1956

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 397,884

Post (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 285,839

APR 28 1956

S INVITATION

l C phony
ssia Bid

...t Dept. is looking to

May Play in Russia

Boston Symphony 'Happy' To Accept Soviet Offer

The world-famous Boston Symphony Orchestra would be "very happy" to accept an invitation to play in Soviet Russia this summer if one is received and other details can be worked out.

The possibility of extending planned European tour behind the Iron Curtain came into the spotlight yesterday when it was announced that the Philadelphia Orchestra had cancel a scheduled trip to Russia that the State Department was looking to Boston to fill the gap.

A spokesman for the Boston orchestra expressed the feeling that the invitation should come direct from the Soviet, and not from the State Department, if it is to be considered

David Oistrahk, Soviet violinist played with the Philadelphia orchestra during his American tour last year, a factor that entered into the Russian invitation going to that city first.

Expenses Guaranteed

Since the Boston orchestra is going to be in West Europe and the Scandinavian countries during August and September, officials are optimistic that it can be arranged to extend the tour into Russia for five days or so.

As in the case of the Porgy and Bess Opera Company, the Soviet government guarantees expenses and a profit no matter what the gate receipts are.

tone, flexibility, harmonious ensemble and abundance of variety, nuances and color.

The Boston Symphony, which also has a world reputation, is going to be in West Europe and the Scandinavian countries during August and September. Officials said they hope a way can be found to extend this tour into Russia for five days or so.

COSTS GUARANTEED

No cost to the U. S. government would be involved, they said. The Soviet government would act as impressario, as it did in the case of the Porgy and Bess Opera Co. This would guarantee expenses and a profit no matter what the gate receipts turned out to be.

...ld Be Heard

By Elizabeth M. Sutherland

Since Kirsten Flagstad departed the concert halls of this country, music critics and impresarios have searched far and wide for a personality of equal vocal ability. Many claim to have found it in the person of Miss Janice Moudry, an engaging mezzo-soprano from Minnesota.

Since 1951, when she made

Janice Moudry

her debut at New York's Town Hall, she has been welcomed in recitals and appearances with the country's leading orchestras. In 1952-53 she appeared six times as soloist with Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra, singing the difficult part in Mahler's "Resurrection Symphony"—a taxing experience for many a more mature artist. She has also sung with the San Francisco Opera in a variety of roles, such as "The Barber of Seville," "Mefistofele," "Boris Godounov" and "Electra."

♪ ♪ ♪

She has sung under such exacting task masters as Monteux, Munch, Wallenstein, and Koussevitzky with great success. Always her roles have been vital, though arduous—such works as Handel's "Messiah," Mahler's "Das Lied von der Erde," "Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, and the more recent work of Arthur Honegger, "Joan of Arc at the Stake."

Miss Moudry obtained much of her early training in California where she attended the University of California in Los Angeles and lent her brilliance to such activities as the Bach Festival at Carmel, and the Pasadena Civic Orchestra.

♪ ♪ ♪

Recently she joined Saramae Endich, Marvin Worden, and Robert Rue to form the Tanglewood Opera Quartet which has proved of unusual interest to concert audiences. At Tanglewood, in the Berkshires of Massachusetts, the site of a celebrated festival in the summer and the home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, artists strive to maintain its high professional standard.

Among the qualities attributed to Janice Moudry by critics is her effortlessness, her excellent diction, her ability to convey a sense of solace through song.

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 397,884

APR 28 1956

Top of The News

Find Student Dead
Winchester Colby student, missing since Tuesday, was found dead in Augusta, Me. hotel. —Page 3

Won't Go Home
Four Soviet sailors rejected, in salty terms, a plea by Red Ambassador Zaroubin that they return home. —Page 2

Macfadden Riches
N. Y. Atty. says Macfadden estate executor showed him $500,000 gold brick late publisher is supposed to have buried. —Page 3

Nab Ex-Grid Star
A former Weymouth football star was nabbed in Maine on bad check charges. —Page 3

Approve Gas Hike
DPU has approved a 25-cents-a-month gas hike by the Boston Gas Co. —Page 2

Hearst Oratory
A Holy Cross student from California won first place in the college student segment of the New England finals of the Hearst Oratory contest. —Page 4

O. K. Confession
John Gilbert Graham loses plea to bar from murder trial confession that he blew up plane with 44 aboard. —Page 5

Motorama Finale
Crowds continue to jam Motorama right up to the end of the 1956 edition. —Page 4

Road Bill Passed
House approves record-breaking $52 billion roads program. —Page 2

Regrets Spy Role
David Greenglass regrets role that sent sister to electric chair in atom spy case. —Page 5

Symphony Gets Bid
The Boston Symphony Orchestra has been asked to tour the Soviet Union. —Page 4

Rocky Abdicates
Rocky Marciano hangs up boxing gloves for keeps. —Back Page

Red Sox Lose, 5-2
Yankees hand Red Sox 5th straight loss, 5-2, behind Don Larsen. —Back Page

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,872

APR 28 1956

Pops Programs

71st Season Set to Open On Tuesday

The 71st season of the Boston Pops will open in Symphony Hall Tuesday evening, May 1. Arthur Fiedler, who has been conductor of the Boston Pops concerts since 1930, will again be on the podium.

For the first time in the history of the Pops concerts an assistant conductor has been named. He is Harry Ellis Dickson, a member of the violin section in the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who in recent seasons has made many appearances as a guest conductor of the Boston Pops. Last season Mr. Dickson conducted the first four weeks of the Pops during the absence of Mr. Fiedler. He is also the conductor of the Brookline Youth Concerts and he organized the Civic Orchestra in Providence.

Many local organizations and businesses have arranged their own special nights at the Pops. Among those who will be in attendance during the first week are the New England Grenfell Association, the American Society of Orthodontists, the Women's City Club, Colby Junior College, Peter Bent Brigham Hospital, Mount Ida Junior College, Dana Hall, and Regis College.

♪ ♪ ♪

The season will continue through Saturday, June 30. During the first five weeks there will be concerts every night including Sunday. After the fifth week the concerts will be played Monday through Saturday evenings, with no Sunday concerts.

Tickets for each of the performances during the first week of the season are now on sale at the Symphony Hall box office, and tickets will be on sale throughout the season one week in advance of each concert.

The soloists for the opening week include five pianists and one organist. Luise Vosgerchian will be heard in Liszt's Concerto No. 1 on opening night and again on Sunday night. On Wednesday night Mineko Sasahara will play the first movement of Rachmaninov's Concerto No. 2; on Thursday, Leo Litwin the Weber Concertstück; on Friday, Meg Bachman the Mozart Concerto No. 12. Berj Zamkochian will be organ soloist in Handel's Concerto No. 2 on Saturday evening.

♪ ♪ ♪

The programs:

Tuesday Evening, May 1

El Capitan, March ..... Sousa
Music of the Spheres, Waltzes ..... Josef Strauss
Fantasia on Greensleeves ..... Vaughan Williams
Overture to "La Belle Helène" ..... Offenbach
Piano Concerto No. 1, in E-flat . Liszt
Soloist: Luise Vosgerchian
Suite from "The Nutcracker" ..... Tchaikovsky
Selection from "My Fair Lady" ..... Loewe-Hayman
Love Is a Many-Splendored Thing ..... Fain-Mason
Hungarian Dance No. 5 ..... Brahms
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

♪ ♪ ♪

Wednesday Evening, May 2

Slavonic Dance in C major .. Dvořák
Overture to "Die Fledermaus" ..... Strauss
Intermezzo from "Tales of Hoffman" ..... Offenbach
Scherzo from Symphony No. 6, ... Tchaikovsky
Piano Concerto No. 2, in C minor (First Movement) ... Rachmaninov
Soloist: Mineko Sasahara
Three Dances from "The Three-Cornered Hat" ..... Falla
Colby Junior College Glee Club
Florence Barbieri, Director
Selection from "My Fair Lady" ..... Loewe-Hayman
The Blue-Tail Fly (Contrasts) Rhodes
Sailors' Dance, from "The Red Poppy" ..... Glière
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

♪ ♪ ♪

Thursday Evening, May 3

Rakoczy March ..... Berlioz
Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro" ..... Mozart
Prelude and Love-Death, from "Tristan and Isolde" ..... Wagner
Mazurka and Galop, from "Masquerade" ..... Khachaturian
Concertstück for Piano and Orchestra ..... Weber
Soloist: Leo Litwin
Capriccio Espagnol Rimsky-Korsakov
Popspourri ..... Arr. by Mason
The Surrey With the Fringe on Top ..... Rodgers-Gould
Triumphal March from "Aida" . Verdi
Arthur Fiedler Conductor

♪ ♪ ♪

Friday Evening, May 4

Knightsbridge March ..... Coates
Where the Citrons Bloom, Waltzes ..... Strauss
Pavane ..... Ravel
Finlandia, Tone Poem ..... Sibelius
Piano Concerto No 12 in A major, K. 414 ..... Mozart
Soloist: Meg Bachman
Suite from "Gaîté Parisienne" ..... Offenbach
Popspourri ..... Arr. by Mason
On the Trail, from "Grand Canyon Suite" ..... Grofé
Sabre Dance, from "Gayne" ..... Khachaturian
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

♪ ♪ ♪

Saturday Evening, May 5
Regis Night

Washington Post, March ..... Sousa
Music of the Spheres, Waltzes ..... Josef Strauss
Prayer of Thanksgiving ..... Valerius
Overture to "Orpheus in the Underworld" ..... Offenbach
Organ Concerto No. 2, in B flat ..... Handel
Soloist: Berj Zamkochian
Bolero ..... Ravel
Regis College Glee Club
Berj Zamkochian, Director
Selection from "Carousel" ... Rodgers
Jalousie, Gypsy Tango ..... Gade
Wedding Dance ..... Press
Regis Alma Mater
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

♪ ♪ ♪

Sunday Evening, May 6
MIT Night

Wedding March, from "The Golden Cockerel" ..... Rimsky-Korsakov
Three Dances from "The Three-Cornered Hat" ..... Falla
Iron Works ..... Mossolov
Overture to "La Belle Hélène" ..... Offenbach
Piano Concerto No 1, in E-flat . Liszt
Soloist: Luise Vosgerchian
MIT Glee Club
Klaus Liepmann conducting
Popspourri ..... Arr. by Mason
Love Is a Many-Splendored Thing ..... Fain-Mason
Thunder and Lightning ..... Strauss
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

Lipnitzki

Walter Gieseking will give a piano recital Sunday afternoon in Symphony Hall.

Concert Calendar

Sunday, April 29

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting. Beethoven, Tchaikovsky. Symphony Hall, 8:30.

Walter Gieseking, pianist. Symphony Hall, 3:30.

George Szpinalski, violinist. Jordan Hall, 3:30.

New York Woodwind Quintet. Gardner Museum, 2. Free.

Komitas Choral Society, Rouben Gregorian conducting. Sanders Theater, Cambridge, 3.

Roland Hayes, tenor. All Saints Lutheran Church, 85 West Newton Street, 3:30.

North Park College Choir of Chicago. John Hancock Hall, 8.

Yale University Concert Band. MIT Kresge Auditorium, 4:15. Free.

Boston Conservatory Orchestra, Rouben Gregorian conducting. Auditorium, 31 Hemenway Street, 8:30. Free.

Monday, April 30

Norma Farber, soprano. College Club, 40 Commonwealth Avenue, 8:30.

Tuesday, May 1

Ayrton Pinto, violinist, and Tan Crone, pianist. Gardner Museum, 2:45. Free.

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 248,071

APR 29 1956

...ox and Symphony

To the Editor of The Herald:

The radio programs of the great Boston Symphony Orchestra as part of its seventy-fifth Anniversary celebration are eagerly awaited here in Maryland by a homesick native who has listened to our world famous group of distinguished musicians for some thirty years. Like most other residents of Greater Boston, I have claimed the music of the orchestra prime evidence of the City's cultural leadership.

Now, though we yet suffer from the loss of his predecessor, I look for more great music from the Boston Symphony under the leadership of Dr. Charles Munch. After another agonizing radio program of anniversary selected compositions only one phrase seems adequate to describe this music—"it stinks!"

Thanks be to the Boston Red Sox and Tom Yawkey who continues the tradition of great leadership by offering the classical direction of Pinky Higgins. May we have more of his solid thinking in the selections of the Boston Symphony!

WALLACE E. DOW
Monkton, Md.

Complete Strength in Oils Features Market

Oil shares featured a substantially higher stock market yesterday, gains of 3 to 5 points occurring in key issues, with gains generally running from 1 to 3 points. Dow-Jones industrials climbed 4.91 points and the rails picked up 0.74.

Cement stocks rose briskly in response to House approval of the pending bill calling for a vast

Boston Symphony Gets Russia Bid

WASHINGTON (AP)—The State Dept. is looking to the Boston Symphony Orchestra to take the place of the Philadelphia Orchestra, which has cancelled plans to play in the Soviet Union this year.

Department officials said yesterday that substitution of the Boston orchestra, if it can be arranged, would have the added virtue of not costing the U. S. government one penny.

Donald L. Engle, manager of the 105-member Philadelphia orchestra, has telegraphed the department that the group had voted unanimously against going through with a proposed trip to the Soviet Union Aug. 15.

UNION TROUBLE RISES

This closed the negotiations which had been dogged by more than the usual U. S.-Soviet discord in such cases. There also was union-management trouble. This labor dispute over a pension plan spilled over into the efforts to send the world famous group to Russia.

David Oistrakh, Soviet violinist, hailed as the world's greatest, played with the Philadelphia Orchestra under Eugene Ormandy last year.

Afterward Oistrakh was lyrical in his praise:

"There is hardly another orchestra in the world which may be compared in beauty of tone, flexibility, harmonious ensemble and abundance of variety, nuances and color.

The Boston Symphony, which also has a world reputation, is going to be in West Europe and the Scandinavian countries during August and September. Officials said they hope a way can be found to extend this tour into Russia for five days or so.

COSTS GUARANTEED

No cost to the U. S. government would be involved, they said. The Soviet government would act as impressario, as it did in the case of the Porgy and Bess Opera Co. This would guarantee expenses and a profit no matter what the gate receipts turned out to be.

ed virtue of not costing th United States Government on penny.

Donald L. Engle, manager o the 105-member Philadelphi Orchestra, telegaphed the de partment last night that th group had voted unanimousl against going through wtih proposed trip to the Sovie Union Aug. 15.

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 397,884
APR 28 1956

Top of The News

Find Student Dead
Winchester Colby student, missing since Tuesday, was found dead in Augusta, Me. hotel. —Page 1

Won't Go Home
Four Soviet sailors rejected, in salty terms, a plea by Red Ambassador Zaroubin that they return home. —Page 2

Macfadden Riches
N. Y. Atty. says Macfadden estate executor showed him $500,000 gold brick late publisher is supposed to have buried. —Page 2

Nab Ex-Grid Star
A former Weymouth football star was nabbed in Maine on bad check charges. —Page 3

Approve Gas Hike
DPU has approved a 25-cents-a-month gas hike by the Boston Gas Co. —Page 2

Hearst Oratory
A Holy Cross student from California won first place in the college student segment of the New England finals of the Hearst Oratory contest. —Page 4

O. K. Confession
John Gilbert Graham loses plea to bar from murder trial confession that he blew up plane with 44 aboard. —Page 5

Motorama Finale
Crowds continue to jam Motorama right up to the end of the 1956 edition. —Page 4

Road Bill Passed
House approves record-breaking $52 billion roads program. —Page 2

Regrets Spy Role
David Greenglass regrets role that sent sister to electric chair in atom spy case. —Page 5

Symphony Gets Bid
The Boston Symphony Orchestra has been asked to tour the Soviet Union. —Page 4

Rocky Abdicates
Rocky Marciano hangs up boxing gloves for keeps. —Back Page

Red Sox Lose, 5-2
Yankees hand Red Sox 5th straight loss, 5-2, behind Don Larsen. —Back Page

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,872
APR 28 1956

Pops Programs

71st Season Set to Open On Tuesday

Lipnitzki

Walter Gieseking will give a piano recital Sunday afternoon in Symphony Hall.

The 71st season of the Boston Pops will open in Symphony Hall Tuesday evening, May 1. Arthur Fiedler, who has been conductor of the Boston Pops concerts since 1930, will again be on the podium.

For the first time in the history of the Pops concerts an assistant conductor has been named. He is Harry Ellis Dickson, a member of the violin section in the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who in recent seasons has made many appearances as a guest conductor of the Boston Pops. Last season Mr. Dickson conducted the first four weeks of the Pops during the absence of Mr. Fiedler. He is also the conductor of the Brookline Youth Concerts and he organized the Civic Orchestra in Providence.

Many local organizations and businesses have arranged their own special nights at the Pops. Among those who will be in attendance during the first week are the New England Grenfell Association, the American Society of Orthodontists, the Women's City Club, Colby Junior College, Peter Bent Brigham Hospital, Mount Ida Junior College, Dana Hall, and Regis College.

♪ ♪ ♪

The season will continue through Saturday, June 30. During the first five weeks there will be concerts every night including Sunday. After the fifth week the concerts will be played Monday through Saturday evenings, with no Sunday concerts.

Tickets for each of the performances during the first week of the season are now on sale at the Symphony Hall box office, and tickets will be on sale throughout the season one week in advance of each concert.

The soloists for the opening week include five pianists and one organist. Luise Vosgerchian will be heard in Liszt's Concerto No. 1 on opening night and again on Sunday night. On Wednesday night Mineko Sasahara will play the first movement of Rachmaninov's Concerto No. 2; on Thursday, Leo Litwin the Weber Concertstück; on Friday, Meg Bachman the Mozart Concerto No. 12. Berj Zamkochian will be organ soloist in Handel's Concerto No. 2 on Saturday evening.

♪ ♪ ♪

The programs:

Tuesday Evening, May 1

El Capitan, March ..... Sousa
Music of the Spheres, Waltzes ..... Josef Strauss
Fantasia on Greensleeves ..... Vaughan Williams
Overture to "La Belle Hélène" ..... Offenbach
Piano Concerto No. 1, in E-flat . Liszt
Soloist: Luise Vosgerchian
Suite from "The Nutcracker" ..... Tchaikovsky
Selection from "My Fair Lady" ..... Loewe-Hayman
Love Is a Many-Splendored Thing ..... Fain-Mason
Hungarian Dance No. 5 ..... Brahms
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

♪ ♪ ♪

Wednesday Evening, May 2

Slavonic Dance in C major .. Dvořák
Overture to "Die Fledermaus" ..... Strauss
Intermezzo from "Tales of Hoffman" ..... Offenbach
Scherzo from Symphony No. 6, ... Tchaikovsky
Piano Concerto No. 2, in C minor (First Movement) ... Rachmaninov
Soloist: Mineko Sasahara
Three Dances from "The Three-Cornered Hat" ..... Falla
Colby Junior College Glee Club
Florence Barbiers, Director
Selection from "My Fair Lady" ..... Loewe-Hayman
The Blue-Tail Fly (Contrasts) Rhodes
Sailors' Dance, from "The Red Poppy" ..... Glière
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

♪ ♪ ♪

Thursday Evening, May 3

Rakoczy March ..... Berlioz
Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro" ..... Mozart
Prelude and Love-Death, from "Tristan and Isolde" ..... Wagner
Mazurka and Galop, from "Masquerade" ..... Khachaturian
Concertstück for Piano and Orchestra ..... Weber
Soloist: Leo Litwin
Capriccio Espagnol Rimsky-Korsakov
Popspourri ..... Arr. by Mason
The Surrey With the Fringe on Top ..... Rodgers-Gould
Triumphal March from "Aida" . Verdi
Arthur Fiedler Conductor

♪ ♪ ♪

Friday Evening, May 4

Knightsbridge March ..... Coates
Where the Citrons Bloom, Waltzes ..... Strauss
Pavane ..... Ravel
Finlandia, Tone Poem ..... Sibelius
Piano Concerto No 12 in A major, K. 414 ..... Mozart
Soloist: Meg Bachman
Suite from "Gaîté Parisienne" ..... Offenbach
Popspourri ..... Arr. by Mason
On the Trail, from "Grand Canyon Suite" ..... Grofé
Sabre Dance, from "Gayne" ..... Khachaturian
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

♪ ♪ ♪

Saturday Evening, May 5

Regis Night

Washington Post, March ..... Sousa
Music of the Spheres, Waltzes ..... Josef Strauss
Prayer of Thanksgiving ..... Valerius
Overture to "Orpheus in the Underworld" ..... Offenbach
Organ Concerto No. 2, in B flat ..... Handel
Soloist: Berj Zamkochian
Bolero ..... Ravel
Regis College Glee Club
Berj Zamkochian, Director
Selection from "Carousel" ... Rodgers
Jalousie, Gypsy Tango ..... Gade
Wedding Dance ..... Press
Regis Alma Mater
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

♪ ♪ ♪

Sunday Evening, May 6

MIT Night

Wedding March, from "The Golden Cockerel" ..... Rimsky-Korsakov
Three Dances from "The Three-Cornered Hat" ..... Falla
Iron Works ..... Mossolov
Overture to "La Belle Hélène" ..... Offenbach
Piano Concerto No 1, in E-flat . Liszt
Soloist: Luise Vosgerchian
MIT Glee Club
Klaus Liepmann conducting
Popspourri ..... Arr. by Mason
Love Is a Many-Splendored Thing ..... Fain-Mason
Thunder and Lightning ..... Strauss
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

Concert Calendar

Sunday, April 29

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting. Beethoven, Tchaikovsky. Symphony Hall, 8:30.

Walter Gieseking, pianist. Symphony Hall, 3:30.

George Szpinalski, violinist. Jordan Hall, 3:30.

New York Woodwind Quintet. Gardner Museum, 2. Free.

Komitas Choral Society, Rouben Gregorian conducting. Sanders Theater, Cambridge, 3.

Roland Hayes, tenor. All Saints Lutheran Church, 85 West Newton Street, 3:30.

North Park College Choir of Chicago. John Hancock Hall, 8.

Yale University Concert Band. MIT Kresge Auditorium, 4:15. Free.

Boston Conservatory Orchestra, Rouben Gregorian conducting. Auditorium, 31 Hemenway Street, 8:30. Free.

Monday, April 30

Norma Farber, soprano. College Club, 40 Commonwealth Avenue, 8:30.

Tuesday, May 1

Ayrton Pinto, violinist, and Tan Crone, pianist. Gardner Museum, 2:45. Free.

ld Be Heard

By Elizabeth M. Sutherland

Since Kirsten Flagstad departed the concert halls of this country, music critics and impresarios have searched far and wide for a personality of equal vocal ability. Many claim to have found it in the person of Miss Janice Moudry, an engaging mezzo-soprano from Minnesota.

Since 1951, when she made

Janice Moudry

her debut at New York's Town Hall, she has been welcomed in recitals and appearances with the country's leading orchestras. In 1952-53 she appeared six times as soloist with Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra, singing the difficult part in Mahler's "Resurrection Symphony"—a taxing experience for many a more mature artist. She has also sung with the San Francisco Opera in a variety of roles, such as "The Barber of Seville," "Mefistofele," "Boris Godounov" and "Electra."

♪ ♪ ♪

She has sung under such exacting task masters as Monteux, Munch, Wallenstein, and Koussevitzky with great success. Always her roles have been vital, though arduous—such works as Handel's "Messiah," Mahler's "Das Lied von der Erde," "Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, and the more recent work of Arthur Honegger, "Joan of Arc at the Stake."

Miss Moudry obtained much of her early training in California where she attended the University of California in Los Angeles and lent her brilliance to such activities as the Bach Festival at Carmel, and the Pasadena Civic Orchestra.

♪ ♪ ♪

Recently she joined Saramae Endich, Marvin Worden, and Robert Rue to form the Tanglewood Opera Quartet which has proved of unusual interest to concert audiences. At Tanglewood, in the Berkshires of Massachusetts, the site of a celebrated festival in the summer and the home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, artists strive to maintain its high professional standard.

Among the qualities attributed to Janice Moudry by critics is her effortlessness, her excellent diction, her ability to convey a sense of solace through song.

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 248,071
APR 29 1956

ox and Symphony

To the Editor of The Herald:

The radio programs of the great Boston Symphony Orchestra as part of its seventy-fifth Anniversary celebration are eagerly awaited here in Maryland by a homesick native who has listened to our world famous group of distinguished musicians for some thirty years. Like most other residents of Greater Boston, I have claimed the music of the orchestra prime evidence of the City's cultural leadership.

Now, though we yet suffer from the loss of his predecessor, I look for more great music from the Boston Symphony under the leadership of Dr. Charles Munch. After another agonizing radio program of anniversary selected compositions only one phrase seems adequate to describe this music—"it stinks!"

Thanks be to the Boston Red Sox and Tom Yawkey who continues the tradition of great leadership by offering the classical direction of Pinky Higgins. May we have more of his solid thinking in the selections of the Boston Symphony!

WALLACE E. DOW
Monkton, Md.

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 897,884
APR 28 1956

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,872
APR 28 1956

Ask Hub Symphony to Go to Russia

WASHINGTON, April 27 (AP)—The State Department is looking to the Boston Symphony Orchestra to take the place of the Philadelphia Orchestra, which has canceled plans to play in the Soviet Union this year.

Department officials said today that substitution of the Boston orchestra, if it can be arranged, would have the added virtue of not costing the United States Government one penny.

Donald L. Engle, manager of the 105-member Philadelphia Orchestra, telegaphed the department last night that the group had voted unanimously against going through wtih a proposed trip to the Soviet Union Aug. 15.

This closed the negotiations which had been dogged by more than the usual United States-Soviet discord in such cases. There also was union-management trouble. This labor dispute over a pension plan spilled over into the efforts to send the world famous group to Russia.

SYMPHONY
Page Twelve

profit no matter what the gate receipts turned out to be.

The whole question of exchanges of technical and cultural groups with Russia has outgrown the State Department's facilities for handling them.

It has asked Congress for $55,625 to ad nine people to its payroll to handle such affairs. In the meantime, temporary arrangements had been made—by scrounging here and there among available employees.

Officials hope by next week two foreign services, with the help of two secretaries, can take over the problem.

The State Department administers a special $5,000,000 Presidential fund for spreading American culture abroad. It was from this fund that $267,000 was taken to finance a six-week Far East tour last year of the Symphony of the Air.

The department cancelled the plans to send the Symphony of the Aid to the Near East after complaints, investigated by the FBI, that some the group's members were "leftists." The official reasons given for this cancellation were that facilities were poor in the Near East and so was the quality of the orchestra's leadership.

...t Dead
...tudent, miss... was found ... hotel. —Page 1

...Home
...s rejected, ir... by Red Am... that they re... —Page 2

...Riches
...s Macfadden showed him ... late publisher buried. —Page 3

...rid Star
...nouth football ... Maine on bad —Page 3

...as Hike
...ved a 25-cents... by the Boston —Page 2

Hearst Oratory
A Holy Cross student from California won first place in the college student segment of the New England finals of the Hearst Oratory contest. —Page 4

O. K. Confession
John Gilbert Graham loses plea to bar from murder trial confession that he blew up plane with 44 aboard. —Page 5

Motorama Finale
Crowds continue to jam Motorama right up to the end of the 1956 edition. —Page 4

Road Bill Passed
House approves record-breaking $52 billion roads program. —Page 2

Regrets Spy Role
David Greenglass regrets role that sent sister to electric chair in atom spy case. —Page 5

Symphony Gets Bid
The Boston Symphony Orchestra has been asked to tour the Soviet Union. —Page 4

Rocky Abdicates
Rocky Marciano hangs up boxing gloves for keeps. —Back Page

Red Sox Lose, 5-2
Yankees hand Red Sox 5th straight loss, 5-2, behind Don Larsen. —Back Page

Pops Programs

71st Season Set to Open On Tuesday

The 71st season of the Boston Pops will open in Symphony Hall Tuesday evening, May 1. Arthur Fiedler, who has been conductor of the Boston Pops concerts since 1930, will again be on the podium.

For the first time in the history of the Pops concerts an assistant conductor has been named. He is Harry Ellis Dickson, a member of the violin section in the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who in recent seasons has made many appearances as a guest conductor of the Boston Pops. Last season Mr. Dickson conducted the first four weeks of the Pops during the absence of Mr. Fiedler. He is also the conductor of the Brookline Youth Concerts and he organized the Civic Orchestra in Providence.

Many local organizations and businesses have arranged their own special nights at the Pops. Among those who will be in attendance during the first week are the New England Grenfell Association, the American Society of Orthodontists, the Women's City Club, Colby Junior College, Peter Bent Brigham Hospital, Mount Ida Junior College, Dana Hall, and Regis College.

♪ ♪ ♪

The season will continue through Saturday, June 30. During the first five weeks there will be concerts every night including Sunday. After the fifth week the concerts will be played Monday through Saturday evenings, with no Sunday concerts.

Tickets for each of the performances during the first week of the season are now on sale at the Symphony Hall box office, and tickets will be on sale throughout the season one week in advance of each concert.

The soloists for the opening week include five pianists and one organist. Luise Vosgerchian will be heard in Liszt's Concerto No. 1 on opening night and again on Sunday night. On Wednesday night Mineko Sasahara will play the first movement of Rachmaninov's Concerto No. 2; on Thursday, Leo Litwin the Weber Concertstück; on Friday, Meg Bachman the Mozart Concerto No. 12. Berj Zamkochian will be organ soloist in Handel's Concerto No. 2 on Saturday evening.

♪ ♪ ♪

The programs:

Tuesday Evening, May 1

El Capitan, March ..... Sousa
Music of the Spheres, Waltzes ..... Josef Strauss
Fantasia on Greensleeves ..... Vaughan Williams
Overture to "La Belle Hélène" ..... Offenbach
Piano Concerto No. 1, in E-flat . Liszt
Soloist: Luise Vosgerchian
Suite from "The Nutcracker" ..... Tchaikovsky
Selection from "My Fair Lady" ..... Loewe-Hayman
Love Is a Many-Splendored Thing ..... Fain-Mason
Hungarian Dance No. 5 ..... Brahms
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

♪ ♪ ♪

Wednesday Evening, May 2

Slavonic Dance in C major ... Dvořák
Overture to "Die Fledermaus" ..... Strauss
Intermezzo from "Tales of Hoffman" ..... Offenbach
Scherzo from Symphony No. 6, ... Tchaikovsky
Piano Concerto No. 2, in C minor (First Movement) ... Rachmaninov
Soloist: Mineko Sasahara
Three Dances from "The Three-Cornered Hat" ..... Falla
Colby Junior College Glee Club
Florence Barbieri, Director
Selection from "My Fair Lady" ..... Loewe-Hayman
The Blue-Tail Fly (Contrasts) Rhodes
Sailors' Dance, from "The Red Poppy" ..... Glière
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

♪ ♪ ♪

Thursday Evening, May 3

Rakoczy March ..... Berlioz
Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro" ..... Mozart
Prelude and Love-Death, from "Tristan and Isolde" ..... Wagner
Mazurka and Galop, from "Masquerade" ..... Khachaturian
Concertstück for Piano and Orchestra ..... Weber
Soloist: Leo Litwin
Capriccio Espagnol Rimsky-Korsakov
Popspourri ..... Arr. by Mason
The Surrey With the Fringe on Top ..... Rodgers-Gould
Triumphal March from "Aida" . Verdi
Arthur Fiedler Conductor

♪ ♪ ♪

Friday Evening, May 4

Knightsbridge March ..... Coates
Where the Citrons Bloom, Waltzes ..... Strauss
Pavane ..... Ravel
Finlandia, Tone Poem ..... Sibelius
Piano Concerto No 12 in A major, K. 414 ..... Mozart
Soloist: Meg Bachman
Suite from "Gaîté Parisienne" ..... Offenbach
Popspourri ..... Arr. by Mason
On the Trail, from "Grand Canyon Suite" ..... Grofé
Sabre Dance, from "Gayne" ..... Khachaturian
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

♪ ♪ ♪

Saturday Evening, May 5
Regis Night

Washington Post, March ..... Sousa
Music of the Spheres, Waltzes ..... Josef Strauss
Prayer of Thanksgiving ..... Valerius
Overture to "Orpheus in the Underworld" ..... Offenbach
Organ Concerto No. 2, in B flat ..... Handel
Soloist: Berj Zamkochian
Bolero ..... Ravel
Regis College Glee Club
Berj Zamkochian, Director
Selection from "Carousel" ... Rodgers
Jalousie, Gypsy Tango ..... Gade
Wedding Dance ..... Press
Regis Alma Mater
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

♪ ♪ ♪

Sunday Evening, May 6
MIT Night

Wedding March, from "The Golden Cockerel" ..... Rimsky-Korsakov
Three Dances from "The Three-Cornered Hat" ..... Falla
Iron Works ..... Mossolov
Overture to "La Belle Hélène" ..... Offenbach
Piano Concerto No 1, in E-flat . Liszt
Soloist: Luise Vosgerchian
MIT Glee Club
Klaus Liepmann conducting
Popspourri ..... Arr. by Mason
Love Is a Many-Splendored Thing ..... Fain-Mason
Thunder and Lightning ..... Strauss
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

Lipnitzki

Walter Gieseking will give a piano recital Sunday afternoon in Symphony Hall.

Concert Calendar

Sunday, April 29

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting. Beethoven, Tchaikovsky. Symphony Hall, 8:30.

Walter Gieseking, pianist. Symphony Hall, 3:30.

George Szpinalski, violinist. Jordan Hall, 3:30.

New York Woodwind Quintet. Gardner Museum, 2. Free.

Komitas Choral Society, Rouben Gregorian conducting. Sanders Theater, Cambridge, 3.

Roland Hayes, tenor. All Saints Lutheran Church, 85 West Newton Street, 3:30.

North Park College Choir of Chicago. John Hancock Hall, 8.

Yale University Concert Band. MIT Kresge Auditorium, 4:15. Free.

Boston Conservatory Orchestra, Rouben Gregorian conducting. Auditorium, 31 Hemenway Street, 8:30. Free.

Monday, April 30

Norma Farber, soprano. College Club, 40 Commonwealth Avenue, 8:30.

Tuesday, May 1

Ayrton Pinto, violinist, and Tan Crone, pianist. Gardner Museum, 2:45. Free.

...ld Be Heard

By Elizabeth M. Sutherland

Since Kirsten Flagstad departed the concert halls of this country, music critics and impresarios have searched far and wide for a personality of equal vocal ability. Many claim to have found it in the person of Miss Janice Moudry, an engaging mezzo-soprano from Minnesota.

Since 1951, when she made

Janice Moudry

her debut at New York's Town Hall, she has been welcomed in recitals and appearances with the country's leading orchestras. In 1952-53 she appeared six times as soloist with Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra, singing the difficult part in Mahler's "Resurrection Symphony"—a taxing experience for many a more mature artist. She has also sung with the San Francisco Opera in a variety of roles, such as "The Barber of Seville," "Mefistofele," "Boris Godounov" and "Electra."

♪ ♪ ♪

She has sung under such exacting task masters as Monteux, Munch, Wallenstein, and Koussevitzky with great success. Always her roles have been vital, though arduous—such works as Handel's "Messiah," Mahler's "Das Lied von der Erde," "Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, and the more recent work of Arthur Honegger, "Joan of Arc at the Stake."

Miss Moudry obtained much of her early training in California where she attended the University of California in Los Angeles and lent her brilliance to such activities as the Bach Festival at Carmel, and the Pasadena Civic Orchestra.

♪ ♪ ♪

Recently she joined Saramae Endich, Marvin Worden, and Robert Rue to form the Tanglewood Opera Quartet which has proved of unusual interest to concert audiences. At Tanglewood, in the Berkshires of Massachusetts, the site of a celebrated festival in the summer and the home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, artists strive to maintain its high professional standard.

Among the qualities attributed to Janice Moudry by critics is her effortlessness, her excellent diction, her ability to convey a sense of solace through song.

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 248,071
APR 29 1956

...ox and Symphony

To the Editor of The Herald:

The radio programs of the great Boston Symphony Orchestra as part of its seventy-fifth Anniversary celebration are eagerly awaited here in Maryland by a homesick native who has listened to our world famous group of distinguished musicians for some thirty years. Like most other residents of Greater Boston, I have claimed the music of the orchestra prime evidence of the City's cultural leadership.

Now, though we yet suffer from the loss of his predecessor, I look for more great music from the Boston Symphony under the leadership of Dr. Charles Munch. After another agonizing radio program of anniversary selected compositions only one phrase seems adequate to describe this music—"it stinks!"

Thanks be to the Boston Red Sox and Tom Yawkey who continues the tradition of great leadership by offering the classical direction of Pinky Higgins. May we have more of his solid thinking in the selections of the Boston Symphony!

WALLACE E. DOW
Monkton, Md.

Symphony to Russia

Continued from the First Page

David Oistrakh, Soviet violinist, hailed as the world's greatest, played with the Philadelphia Orchestra under Eugene Ormandy last year.

Afterward Oistrakh was lyrical in his praise:

"There is hardly another orchestra in the world which may be compared in beauty of tone, flexibility, harmonious ensemble and abundance of variety, nuances and color."

The Boston Symphony, which also has a world reputation is going to be in West Europe and the Scandinavian countries during August and September. Officials said they hope a way can be found to extend this tour trip into Russia for five days or so.

No cost to the United States Government would be involved, they said. The Soviet Government would act as impressario, as it did in the case of the Porgy and Bess Opera Company. This would guarantee expenses and a profit no matter what the gate receipts turned out to be.

The whole question of exchanges of technical and cultural groups with Russia has outgrown the State Department's facilities for handling them.

It has asked Congress for $55,625 to ad nine people to its payroll to handle such affairs. In the meantime, temporary arrangements had been made—by scrounging here and there among available employees.

Officials hope by next week two foreign services, with the help of two secretaries, can take over the problem.

The State Department administers a special $5,000,000 Presidential fund for spreading American culture abroad. It was from this fund that $267,000 was taken to finance a six-week Far East tour last year of the Symphony of the Air.

The department cancelled the plans to send the Symphony of the Aid to the Near East after complaints, investigated by the FBI, that some the group's members were "leftists." The official reasons given for this cancellation were that facilities were poor in the Near East and so was the quality of the orchestra's leadership.

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 397,884
APR 28 1956

Top of The News

Find Student Dead

Winchester Colby student, missing since Tuesday, was found dead in Augusta, Me. hotel. —Page 1

Won't Go Home

Four Soviet sailors rejected, in salty terms, a plea by Red Ambassador Zaroubin that they return home. —Page 2

Macfadden Riches

N. Y. Atty. says Macfadden estate executor showed him $500,000 gold brick late publisher is supposed to have buried. —Page 2

Nab Ex-Grid Star

A former Weymouth football star was nabbed in Maine on bad check charges. —Page 3

Approve Gas Hike

DPU has approved a 25-cents-a-month gas hike by the Boston Gas Co. —Page 2

Hearst Oratory

A Holy Cross student from California won first place in the college student segment of the New England finals of the Hearst Oratory contest. —Page 4

O. K. Confession

John Gilbert Graham loses plea to bar from murder trial confession that he blew up plane with 44 aboard. —Page 5

Motorama Finale

Crowds continue to jam Motorama right up to the end of the 1956 edition. —Page 4

Road Bill Passed

House approves record-breaking $52 billion roads program. —Page 2

Regrets Spy Role

David Greenglass regrets role that sent sister to electric chair in atom spy case. —Page 5

Symphony Gets Bid

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has been asked to tour the Soviet Union. —Page 4

Rocky Abdicates

Rocky Marciano hangs up boxing gloves for keeps. —Back Page

Red Sox Lose, 5-2

Yankees hand Red Sox 5th straight loss, 5-2, behind Don Larsen. —Back Page

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,872
APR 28 1956

Pops Programs

71st Season Set to Open On Tuesday

Lipnitzki

Walter Gieseking will give a piano recital Sunday afternoon in Symphony Hall.

The 71st season of the Boston Pops will open in Symphony Hall Tuesday evening, May 1. Arthur Fiedler, who has been conductor of the Boston Pops concerts since 1930, will again be on the podium.

For the first time in the history of the Pops concerts an assistant conductor has been named. He is Harry Ellis Dickson, a member of the violin section in the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who in recent seasons has made many appearances as a guest conductor of the Boston Pops. Last season Mr. Dickson conducted the first four weeks of the Pops during the absence of Mr. Fiedler. He is also the conductor of the Brookline Youth Concerts and he organized the Civic Orchestra in Providence.

Many local organizations and businesses have arranged their own special nights at the Pops. Among those who will be in attendance during the first week are the New England Grenfell Association, the American Society of Orthodontists, the Women's City Club, Colby Junior College, Peter Bent Brigham Hospital, Mount Ida Junior College, Dana Hall, and Regis College.

♪ ♪ ♪

The season will continue through Saturday, June 30. During the first five weeks there will be concerts every night including Sunday. After the fifth week the concerts will be played Monday through Saturday evenings, with no Sunday concerts.

Tickets for each of the performances during the first week of the season are now on sale at the Symphony Hall box office, and tickets will be on sale throughout the season one week in advance of each concert.

The soloists for the opening week include five pianists and one organist. Luise Vosgerchian will be heard in Liszt's Concerto No. 1 on opening night and again on Sunday night. On Wednesday night Mineko Sasahara will play the first movement of Rachmaninov's Concerto No. 2; on Thursday, Leo Litwin the Weber Concertstück; on Friday, Meg Bachman the Mozart Concerto No. 12. Berj Zamkochian will be organ soloist in Handel's Concerto No. 2 on Saturday evening.

♪ ♪ ♪

The programs:

Tuesday Evening, May 1

El Capitan, March ..... Sousa
Music of the Spheres, Waltzes ..... Josef Strauss
Fantasia on Greensleeves ..... Vaughan Williams
Overture to "La Belle Hélène" ..... Offenbach
Piano Concerto No. 1, in E-flat . Liszt
Soloist: Luise Vosgerchian
Suite from "The Nutcracker" ..... Tchaikovsky
Selection from "My Fair Lady" ..... Loewe-Hayman
Love Is a Many-Splendored Thing ..... Fain-Mason
Hungarian Dance No. 5 ..... Brahms
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

♪ ♪ ♪

Wednesday Evening, May 2

Slavonic Dance in C major .. Dvořák
Overture to "Die Fledermaus" ..... Strauss
Intermezzo from "Tales of Hoffman" ..... Offenbach
Scherzo from Symphony No. 6 ..... Tchaikovsky
Piano Concerto No. 2, in C minor (First Movement) ..... Rachmaninov
Soloist: Mineko Sasahara
Three Dances from "The Three-Cornered Hat" ..... Falla
Colby Junior College Glee Club
Florence Barbieri, Director
Selection from "My Fair Lady" ..... Loewe-Hayman
The Blue-Tail Fly (Contrasts) Rhodes
Sailors' Dance, from "The Red Poppy" ..... Glière
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

♪ ♪ ♪

Thursday Evening, May 3

Rakoczy March ..... Berlioz
Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro" ..... Mozart
Prelude and Love-Death, from "Tristan and Isolde" ..... Wagner
Mazurka and Galop, from "Masquerade" ..... Khachaturian
Concertstück for Piano and Orchestra ..... Weber
Soloist: Leo Litwin
Capriccio Espagnol Rimsky-Korsakov
Popspourri ..... Arr. by Mason
The Surrey With the Fringe on Top ..... Rodgers-Gould
Triumphal March from "Aida" . Verdi
Arthur Fiedler Conductor

♪ ♪ ♪

Friday Evening, May 4

Knightsbridge March ..... Coates
Where the Citrons Bloom, Waltzes ..... Strauss
Pavane ..... Ravel
Finlandia, Tone Poem ..... Sibelius
Piano Concerto No 12 in A major, K. 414 ..... Mozart
Soloist: Meg Bachman
Suite from "Gaîté Parisienne" ..... Offenbach
Popspourri ..... Arr. by Mason
On the Trail, from "Grand Canyon Suite" ..... Grofé
Sabre Dance, from "Gayne" ..... Khachaturian
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

♪ ♪ ♪

Saturday Evening, May 5
Regis Night

Washington Post, March ..... Sousa
Music of the Spheres, Waltzes ..... Josef Strauss
Prayer of Thanksgiving ..... Valerius
Overture to "Orpheus in the Underworld" ..... Offenbach
Organ Concerto No. 2, in B flat ..... Handel
Soloist: Berj Zamkochian
Bolero ..... Ravel
Regis College Glee Club
Berj Zamkochian, Director
Selection from "Carousel" ... Rodgers
Jalousie, Gypsy Tango ..... Gade
Wedding Dance ..... Fress
Regis Alma Mater
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

♪ ♪ ♪

Sunday Evening, May 6
MIT Night

Wedding March, from "The Golden Cockerel" ..... Rimsky-Korsakov
Three Dances from "The Three-Cornered Hat" ..... Falla
Iron Works ..... Mossolov
Overture to "La Belle Hélène" ..... Offenbach
Piano Concerto No 1, in E-flat . Liszt
Soloist: Luise Vosgerchian
MIT Glee Club
Klaus Liepmann conducting
Popspourri ..... Arr. by Mason
Love Is a Many-Splendored Thing ..... Fain-Mason
Thunder and Lightning ..... Strauss
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

Concert Calendar

Sunday, April 29

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting. Beethoven, Tchaikovsky. Symphony Hall, 8:30.

Walter Gieseking, pianist. Symphony Hall, 3:30.

George Szpinalski, violinist. Jordan Hall, 3:30.

New York Woodwind Quintet. Gardner Museum, 2. Free.

Komitas Choral Society, Rouben Gregorian conducting. Sanders Theater, Cambridge, 3.

Roland Hayes, tenor. All Saints Lutheran Church, 85 West Newton Street, 3:30.

North Park College Choir of Chicago. John Hancock Hall, 8.

Yale University Concert Band. MIT Kresge Auditorium, 4:15. Free.

Boston Conservatory Orchestra, Rouben Gregorian conducting. Auditorium, 31 Hemenway Street, 8:30. Free.

Monday, April 30

Norma Farber, soprano. College Club, 40 Commonwealth Avenue, 8:30.

Tuesday, May 1

Ayrton Pinto, violinist, and Tan Crone, pianist. Gardner Museum, 2:45. Free.

...ld Be Heard

By Elizabeth M. Sutherland

Since Kirsten Flagstad departed the concert halls of this country, music critics and impresarios have searched far and wide for a personality of equal vocal ability. Many claim to have found it in the person of Miss Janice Moudry, an engaging mezzo-soprano from Minnesota.

Since 1951, when she made her debut at New York's Town Hall, she has been welcomed in recitals and appearances with the country's leading orchestras. In 1952-53 she appeared six times as soloist with Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra, singing the difficult part in Mahler's "Resurrection Symphony"—a taxing experience for many a more mature artist. She has also sung with the San Francisco Opera in a variety of roles, such as "The Barber of Seville," "Mefistofele," "Boris Godounov" and "Electra."

Janice Moudry

♪ ♪ ♪

She has sung under such exacting task masters as Monteux, Munch, Wallenstein, and Koussevitzky with great success. Always her roles have been vital, though arduous—such works as Handel's "Messiah," Mahler's "Das Lied von der Erde," "Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, and the more recent work of Arthur Honegger, "Joan of Arc at the Stake."

Miss Moudry obtained much of her early training in California where she attended the University of California in Los Angeles and lent her brilliance to such activities as the Bach Festival at Carmel, and the Pasadena Civic Orchestra.

♪ ♪ ♪

Recently she joined Saramae Endich, Marvin Worden, and Robert Rue to form the Tanglewood Opera Quartet which has proved of unusual interest to concert audiences. At Tanglewood, in the Berkshires of Massachusetts, the site of a celebrated festival in the summer and the home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, artists strive to maintain its high professional standard.

Among the qualities attributed to Janice Moudry by critics is her effortlessness, her excellent diction, her ability to convey a sense of solace through song.

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 248,071
APR 29 1956

...ox and Symphony

To the Editor of The Herald:

The radio programs of the great Boston Symphony Orchestra as part of its seventy-fifth Anniversary celebration are eagerly awaited here in Maryland by a homesick native who has listened to our world famous group of distinguished musicians for some thirty years. Like most other residents of Greater Boston, I have claimed the music of the orchestra prime evidence of the City's cultural leadership.

Now, though we yet suffer from the loss of his predecessor, I look for more great music from the Boston Symphony under the leadership of Dr. Charles Munch. After another agonizing radio program of anniversary selected compositions only one phrase seems adequate to describe this music—"it stinks!"

Thanks be to the Boston Red Sox and Tom Yawkey who continues the tradition of great leadership by offering the classical direction of Pinky Higgins. May we have more of his solid thinking in the selections of the Boston Symphony!

WALLACE E. DOW
Monkton, Md.

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 397,884
APR 28 1956

Top of The News

Find Student Dead

Winchester Colby student, miss ing since Tuesday, was found dead in Augusta, Me. hotel.
—Page 1

Won't Go Home

Four Soviet sailors rejected, in salty terms, a plea by Red Ambassador Zaroubin that they return home.
—Page 2

Macfadden Riches

N. Y. Atty. says Macfadden estate executor showed him $500,000 gold brick late publisher is supposed to have buried.
—Page 3

Nab Ex-Grid Star

A former Weymouth football star was nabbed in Maine on bad check charges.
—Page 3

Approve Gas Hike

DPU has approved a 25-cents-a-month gas hike by the Boston Gas Co.
—Page 2

Hearst Oratory

A Holy Cross student from California won first place in the college student segment of the New England finals of the Hearst Oratory contest.
—Page 4

O. K. Confession

John Gilbert Graham loses plea to bar from murder trial confession that he blew up plane with 44 aboard.
—Page 5

Motorama Finale

Crowds continue to jam Motorama right up to the end of the 1956 edition.
—Page 4

Road Bill Passed

House approves record-breaking $52 billion roads program.
—Page 2

Regrets Spy Role

David Greenglass regrets role that sent sister to electric chair in atom spy case.
—Page 5

Symphony Gets Bid

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has been asked to tour the Soviet Union.
—Page 4

Rocky Abdicates

Rocky Marciano hangs up boxing gloves for keeps.
—Back Page

Red Sox Lose, 5-2

Yankees hand Red Sox 5th straight loss, 5-2, behind Don Larsen.
—Back Page

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,872
APR 28 1956

Pops Programs

71st Season Set to Open On Tuesday

Lipnitzki

Walter Gieseking will give a piano recital Sunday afternoon in Symphony Hall.

The 71st season of the Boston Pops will open in Symphony Hall Tuesday evening, May 1. Arthur Fiedler, who has been conductor of the Boston Pops concerts since 1930, will again be on the podium.

For the first time in the history of the Pops concerts an assistant conductor has been named. He is Harry Ellis Dickson, a member of the violin section in the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who in recent seasons has made many appearances as a guest conductor of the Boston Pops. Last season Mr. Dickson conducted the first four weeks of the Pops during the absence of Mr. Fiedler. He is also the conductor of the Brookline Youth Concerts and he organized the Civic Orchestra in Providence.

Many local organizations and businesses have arranged their own special nights at the Pops. Among those who will be in attendance during the first week are the New England Grenfell Association, the American Society of Orthodontists, the Women's City Club, Colby Junior College, Peter Bent Brigham Hospital, Mount Ida Junior College, Dana Hall, and Regis College.

♪ ♪ ♪

The season will continue through Saturday, June 30. During the first five weeks there will be concerts every night including Sunday. After the fifth week the concerts will be played Monday through Saturday evenings, with no Sunday concerts.

Tickets for each of the performances during the first week of the season are now on sale at the Symphony Hall box office, and tickets will be on sale throughout the season one week in advance of each concert.

The soloists for the opening week include five pianists and one organist. Luise Vosgerchian will be heard in Liszt's Concerto No. 1 on opening night and again on Sunday night. On Wednesday night Mineko Sasahara will play the first movement of Rachmaninov's Concerto No. 2; on Thursday, Leo Litwin the Weber Concertstück; on Friday, Meg Bachman the Mozart Concerto No. 12. Berj Zamkochian will be organ soloist in Handel's Concerto No. 2 on Saturday evening.

♪ ♪ ♪

The programs:

Tuesday Evening, May 1

El Capitan, March ..... Sousa
Music of the Spheres, Waltzes ..... Josef Strauss
Fantasia on Greensleeves ..... Vaughan Williams
Overture to "La Belle Hélène" ..... Offenbach
Piano Concerto No. 1, in E-flat . Liszt
Soloist: Luise Vosgerchian
Suite from "The Nutcracker" ..... Tchaikovsky
Selection from "My Fair Lady" ..... Loewe-Hayman
Love Is a Many-Splendored Thing ..... Fain-Mason
Hungarian Dance No. 5 ..... Brahms
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

♪ ♪ ♪

Wednesday Evening, May 2

Slavonic Dance in C major ... Dvořák
Overture to "Die Fledermaus" ..... Strauss
Intermezzo from "Tales of Hoffman" ..... Offenbach
Scherzo from Symphony No. 6, ... Tchaikovsky
Piano Concerto No. 2, in C minor (First Movement) ... Rachmaninov
Soloist: Mineko Sasahara
Three Dances from "The Three-Cornered Hat" ..... Falla
Colby Junior College Glee Club
Florence Barbieri, Director
Selection from "My Fair Lady" ..... Loewe-Hayman
The Blue-Tail Fly (Contrasts) Rhodes
Sailors' Dance, from "The Red Poppy" ..... Glière
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

♪ ♪ ♪

Thursday Evening, May 3

Rakoczy March ..... Berlioz
Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro" ..... Mozart
Prelude and Love-Death, from "Tristan and Isolde" ..... Wagner
Mazurka and Galop, from "Masquerade" ..... Khachaturian
Concertstück for Piano and Orchestra ..... Weber
Soloist: Leo Litwin
Capriccio Espagnol Rimsky-Korsakov
Popspourri ..... Arr. by Mason
The Surrey With the Fringe on Top ..... Rodgers-Gould
Triumphal March from "Aida" Verdi
Arthur Fiedler Conductor

♪ ♪ ♪

Friday Evening, May 4

Knightsbridge March ..... Coates
Where the Citrons Bloom, Waltzes ..... Strauss
Pavane ..... Ravel
Finlandia, Tone Poem ..... Sibelius
Piano Concerto No 12 in A major, K. 414 ..... Mozart
Soloist: Meg Bachman
Suite from "Gaîté Parisienne" ..... Offenbach
Popspourri ..... Arr. by Mason
On the Trail, from "Grand Canyon Suite" ..... Grofé
Sabre Dance, from "Gayne" ..... Khachaturian
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

♪ ♪ ♪

Saturday Evening, May 5

Regis Night

Washington Post, March ..... Sousa
Music of the Spheres, Waltzes ..... Josef Strauss
Prayer of Thanksgiving ..... Valerius
Overture to "Orphsus in the Underworld" ..... Offenbach
Organ Concerto No. 2, in B flat ..... Handel
Soloist: Berj Zamkochian
Bolero ..... Ravel
Regis College Glee Club
Berj Zamkochian, Director
Selection from "Carousel" ... Rodgers
Jalousie, Gypsy Tango ..... Gade
Wedding Dance ..... Press
Regis Alma Mater
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

♪ ♪ ♪

Sunday Evening, May 6

MIT Night

Wedding March, from "The Golden Cockerel" ..... Rimsky-Korsakov
Three Dances from "The Three-Cornered Hat" ..... Falla
Iron Works ..... Mossolov
Overture to "La Belle Hélène" ..... Offenbach
Piano Concerto No. 1, in E-flat Liszt
Soloist: Luise Vosgerchian
MIT Glee Club
Klaus Liepmann conducting
Popspourri ..... Arr. by Mason
Love Is a Many-Splendored Thing ..... Fain-Mason
Thunder and Lightning ..... Strauss
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

Concert Calendar

Sunday, April 29

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting. Beethoven, Tchaikovsky. Symphony Hall, 8:30.

Walter Gieseking, pianist. Symphony Hall, 3:30.

George Szpinalski, violinist. Jordan Hall, 3:30.

New York Woodwind Quintet. Gardner Museum, 2. Free.

Komitas Choral Society, Rouben Gregorian conducting. Sanders Theater, Cambridge, 3.

Roland Hayes, tenor. All Saints Lutheran Church, 85 West Newton Street, 3:30.

North Park College Choir of Chicago. John Hancock Hall, 8.

Yale University Concert Band. MIT Kresge Auditorium, 4:15. Free.

Boston Conservatory Orchestra, Rouben Gregorian conducting. Auditorium, 31 Hemenway Street, 8:30. Free.

Monday, April 30

Norma Farber, soprano. College Club, 40 Commonwealth Avenue, 8:30.

Tuesday, May 1

Ayrton Pinto, violinist, and Tan Crone, pianist. Gardner Museum, 2:45. Free.

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 248,071
APR 29 1956

...ox and Symphony

To the Editor of The Herald:

The radio programs of the great Boston Symphony Orchestra as part of its seventy-fifth Anniversary celebration are eagerly awaited here in Maryland by a homesick native who has listened to our world famous group of distinguished musicians for some thirty years. Like most other residents of Greater Boston, I have claimed the music of the orchestra prime evidence of the City's cultural leadership.

Now, though we yet suffer from the loss of his predecessor, I look for more great music from the Boston Symphony under the leadership of Dr. Charles Munch. After another agonizing radio program of anniversary selected compositions only one phrase seems adequate to describe this music—"it stinks!"

Thanks be to the Boston Red Sox and Tom Yawkey who continues the tradition of great leadership by offering the classical direction of Pinky Higgins. May we have more of his solid thinking in the selections of the Boston Symphony!

WALLACE E. DOW
Monkton, Md.

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,872
APR 28 1956

...uld Be Heard

...n M. Sutherland

writers and poets who come

WITH OUR COMPLIMENTS...

Although this clipping is beyond your order we thought it would interest you.

Please accept it with our compliments.

Sincerely,

NEW ENGLAND NEWSCLIP AGENCY, INC.

Janice Moudry

her debut at New York's Town Hall, she has been welcomed in recitals and appearances with the country's leading orchestras. In 1952-53 she appeared six times as soloist with Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra, singing the difficult part in Mahler's "Resurrection Symphony"—a taxing experience for many a more mature artist. She has also sung with the San Francisco Opera in a variety of roles, such as "The Barber of Seville," "Mefistofele," "Boris Godounov" and "Electra."

♪ ♪ ♪

She has sung under such exacting task masters as Monteux, Munch, Wallenstein, and Koussevitzky with great success. Always her roles have been vital, though arduous—such works as Handel's "Messiah," Mahler's "Das Lied von der Erde," "Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, and the more recent work of Arthur Honegger, "Joan of Arc at the Stake."

Miss Moudry obtained much of her early training in California where she attended the University of California in Los Angeles and lent her brilliance to such activities as the Bach Festival at Carmel, and the Pasadena Civic Orchestra.

♪ ♪ ♪

Recently she joined Saramae Endich, Marvin Worden, and Robert Rue to form the Tanglewood Opera Quartet which has proved of unusual interest to concert audiences. At Tanglewood, in the Berkshires of Massachusetts, the site of a celebrated festival in the summer and the home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, artists strive to maintain its high professional standard.

Among the qualities attributed to Janice Moudry by critics is her effortlessness, her excellent diction, her ability to convey a sense of solace through song.

...ced from the First Page

David Oistrakh, Soviet violinist, hailed as the world's greatest, played with the Philadelphia Orchestra under Eugene Ormandy last year.

Afterward Oistrakh was lyrical in his praise:

"There is hardly another orchestra in the world which may be compared in beauty of tone, flexibility, harmonious ensemble and abundance of variety, nuances and color."

The Boston Symphony, which also has a world reputation is going to be in West Europe and the Scandinavian countries during August and September. Officials said they hope a way can be found to extend this tour trip into Russia for five days or so.

No cost to the United States Government would be involved, they said. The Soviet Government would act as impressario, as it did in the case of the Porgy and Bess Opera Company. This would guarantee expenses and a profit no matter what the gate receipts turned out to be.

The whole question of exchanges of technical and cultural groups with Russia has outgrown the State Department's facilities for handling them.

It has asked Congress for $55,625 to ad nine people to its payroll to handle such affairs. In the meantime, temporary arrangements had been made—by scrounging here and there among available employees.

Officials hope by next week two foreign services, with the help of two secretaries, can take over the problem.

The State Department administers a special $5,000,000 Presidential fund for spreading American culture abroad. It was from this fund that $267,000 was taken to finance a six-week Far East tour last year of the Symphony of the Air.

The department cancelled the plans to send the Symphony of the Aid to the Near East after complaints, investigated by the FBI, that some the group's members were "leftists." The official reasons given for this cancellation were that facilities were poor in the Near East and so was the quality of the orchestra's leadership.

...hony
Vote
t Tour
Afraid,' embers
Russia
WM. RILEY official United tors to Russia ton Symphony
he members of ave anything to
Symphony will ned tour from es and Scandi-
Soviet Union.
ers, when asked
the Symphony
voted almost s week to go
proposal to ex-
nto Russia. of democratic ight not be un-
Soviet Union,
groups do as e members of hony have ac-
onsibility and forming their rs, just as did
he "Porgy and ch performed in Moscow
ssian acclaim.
chestra mem-
unanimously
Russia pro-
This opens the n Symphony
was the fa-
Jr., business
hestra, spent
y afternoon
lking over
McIlvaine,
puty assis-
n members
ny express
7 crat ic
ew
KEISER with notions about Bee-
horal" checks
he will have
e symphony
nd. Conduc-
h has con-
the broadest terms, both
ically.
s removed outs, sings,
leaps and nagnificent onally into re emerges
ely brilliant teadily until a veritable
Tempi are nd physical ngered, and owed in the cy soon be-
The lishelplessly
nd.
denly. The

Blast Kills 10, Levels Building; Match Blamed

PULASKI, Va., April 27 (AP) — A restaurant operated by an explosion and fire today blasted off that business and story brick building with the

Allene's

ULTS

Men's TALK price OCK

Commonwealth Armory, Bost and SUNDAY
28-29
UITS MEN n men's S TALK"
price
OCK

Blast Kills 10, Levels Building; Match Blamed

PULASKI, Va., April 27 (AP) — A restaurant owner lit a match to a gas leveled a three-story brick building tenant and injured 10 today that exploded and ileine;

phony
Vote
t Tour
Afraid,'
Members
Russia
WM. RILEY
nofficial United dors to Russia
ston Symphony

he members of
ave anything to Symphony will nned tour from es and Scandi-
Soviet Union.
ers, when asked
the Symphony
voted almost
s week to go
roposal to exinto Russia.
of democratic ight not be un-
Soviet Union,
groups do as e members of hony have ac-
onsibility and forming their rs, just as did
he "Porgy and ich performed
in Moscow
ssian acclaim.
chestra mem-
unanimously
Russia pro-
This opens the n Symphony
was the fa-
Jr., business
hestra, spent
y afternoon
lking over
McIlvaine,
puty assis-
n members
ny express

7 crat

ic
ew
KEISER with notions
about Bee-
horal" checks
he will have e symphony
end. Conduc-
h has con-
the broadest terms, both
sically.
s removed puts, sings,
leaps and nagnificent
onally into

re emerges
ely brilliant teadily until a veritable
. Tempi are nd physical gnored, and owed in the cy soon be-
. The lishelplessly
nd.
denly. The thunderous,

...ced from the First Page

David Oistrakh, Soviet violinist, hailed as the world's greatest, played with the Philadelphia Orchestra under Eugene Ormandy last year.

Afterward Oistrakh was lyrical in his praise:

"There is hardly another orchestra in the world which may be compared in beauty of tone, flexibility, harmonious ensemble and abundance of variety, nuances and color."

The Boston Symphony, which also has a world reputation is going to be in West Europe and the Scandinavian countries during August and September. Officials said they hope a way can be found to extend this tour trip into Russia for five days or so.

No cost to the United States Government would be involved, they said. The Soviet Government would act as impressario, as it did in the case of the Porgy and Bess Opera Company. This would guarantee expenses and a profit no matter what the gate receipts turned out to be.

The whole question of exchanges of technical and cultural groups with Russia has outgrown the State Department's facilities for handling them.

It has asked Congress for $55,625 to ad nine people to its payroll to handle such affairs. In the meantime, temporary arrangements had been made—by scrounging here and there among available employees.

Officials hope by next week two foreign services, with the help of two secretaries, can take over the problem.

The State Department administers a special $5,000,000 Presidential fund for spreading American culture abroad. It was from this fund that $267,000 was taken to finance a six-week Far East tour last year of the Symphony of the Air.

The department cancelled the plans to send the Symphony of the Aid to the Near East after complaints, investigated by the FBI, that some the group's members were "leftists." The official reasons given for this cancellation were that facilities were poor in the Near East and so was the quality of the orchestra's leadership.

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 397,884
APR 28 1956

Top of The News

Find Student Dead

Winchester Colby student, missing since Tuesday, was found dead in Augusta, Me. hotel. —Page 1

Won't Go Home

Four Soviet sailors rejected, in salty terms, a plea by Red Ambassador Zaroubin that they return home. —Page 2

Macfadden Riches

N. Y. Atty. says Macfadden estate executor showed him $500,000 gold brick late publisher is supposed to have buried. —Page 2

Nab Ex-Grid Star

A former Weymouth football star was nabbed in Maine on bad check charges. —Page 3

Approve Gas Hike

DPU has approved a 25-cents-a-month gas hike by the Boston Gas Co. —Page 2

Hearst Oratory

A Holy Cross student from California won first place in the college student segment of the New England finals of the Hearst Oratory contest. —Page 4

O. K. Confession

John Gilbert Graham loses plea to bar from murder trial confession that he blew up plane with 44 aboard. —Page 5

Motorama Finale

Crowds continue to jam Motorama right up to the end of the 1956 edition. —Page 4

Road Bill Passed

House approves record-breaking $52 billion roads program. —Page 2

Regrets Spy Role

David Greenglass regrets role that sent sister to electric chair in atom spy case. —Page 5

Symphony Gets Bid

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has been asked to tour the Soviet Union. —Page 4

Rocky Abdicates

Rocky Marciano hangs up boxing gloves for keeps. —Back Page

Red Sox Lose, 5-2

Yankees hand Red Sox 5th straight loss, 5-2, behind Don Larsen. —Back Page

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,872
APR 28 1956

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,872
APR 28 1956

Pops Programs

71st Season Set to Open On Tuesday

The 71st season of the Boston Pops will open in Symphony Hall Tuesday evening, May 1. Arthur Fiedler, who has been conductor of the Boston Pops concerts since 1930, will again be on the podium.

For the first time in the history of the Pops concerts an assistant conductor has been named. He is Harry Ellis Dickson, a member of the violin section in the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who in recent seasons has made many appearances as a guest conductor of the Boston Pops. Last season Mr. Dickson conducted the first four weeks of the Pops during the absence of Mr. Fiedler. He is also the conductor of the Brookline Youth Concerts and he organized the Civic Orchestra in Providence.

Many local organizations and businesses have arranged their own special nights at the Pops. Among those who will be in attendance during the first week are the New England Grenfell Association, the American Society of Orthodontists, the Women's City Club, Colby Junior College, Peter Bent Brigham Hospital, Mount Ida Junior College, Dana Hall, and Regis College.

♪ ♪ ♪

The season will continue through Saturday, June 30. During the first five weeks there will be concerts every night including Sunday. After the fifth week the concerts will be played Monday through Saturday evenings, with no Sunday concerts.

Tickets for each of the performances during the first week of the season are now on sale at the Symphony Hall box office, and tickets will be on sale throughout the season one week in advance of each concert.

The soloists for the opening week include five pianists and one organist. Luise Vosgerchian will be heard in Liszt's Concerto No. 1 on opening night and again on Sunday night. On Wednesday night Mineko Sasahara will play the first movement of Rachmaninov's Concerto No. 2; on Thursday, Leo Litwin the Weber Concertstück; on Friday, Meg Bachman the Mozart Concerto No. 12. Berj Zamkochian will be organ soloist in Handel's Concerto No. 2 on Saturday evening.

♪ ♪ ♪

The programs:

Tuesday Evening, May 1

El Capitan, March ..... Sousa
Music of the Spheres, Waltzes ..... Josef Strauss
Fantasia on Greensleeves ..... Vaughan Williams
Overture to "La Belle Hélène" ..... Offenbach
Piano Concerto No. 1, in E-flat ..... Liszt
Soloist: Luise Vosgerchian
Suite from "The Nutcracker" ..... Tchaikovsky
Selection from "My Fair Lady" ..... Loewe-Hayman
Love Is a Many-Splendored Thing ..... Fain-Mason
Hungarian Dance No. 5 ..... Brahms
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

♪ ♪ ♪

Wednesday Evening, May 2

Slavonic Dance in C major ..... Dvořák
Overture to "Die Fledermaus" ..... Strauss
Intermezzo from "Tales of Hoffman" ..... Offenbach
Scherzo from Symphony No. 6 ..... Tchaikovsky
Piano Concerto No. 2, in C minor (First Movement) ..... Rachmaninov
Soloist: Mineko Sasahara
Three Dances from "The Three-Cornered Hat" ..... Falla
Colby Junior College Glee Club
Florence Barbiers, Director
Selection from "My Fair Lady" ..... Loewe-Hayman
The Blue-Tail Fly (Contrasts) ..... Rhodes
Sailors' Dance, from "The Red Poppy" ..... Glière
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

♪ ♪ ♪

Thursday Evening, May 3

Rakoczy March ..... Berlioz
Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro" ..... Mozart
Prelude and Love-Death, from "Tristan and Isolde" ..... Wagner
Mazurka and Galop, from "Masquerade" ..... Khachaturian
Concertstück for Piano and Orchestra ..... Weber
Soloist: Leo Litwin
Capriccio Espagnol ..... Rimsky-Korsakov
Popspourri ..... Arr. by Mason
The Surrey With the Fringe on Top ..... Rodgers-Gould
Triumphal March from "Aida" ..... Verdi
Arthur Fiedler Conductor

♪ ♪ ♪

Friday Evening, May 4

Knightsbridge March ..... Coates
Where the Citrons Bloom, Waltzes ..... Strauss
Pavane ..... Ravel
Finlandia, Tone Poem ..... Sibelius
Piano Concerto No 12 in A major, K. 414 ..... Mozart
Soloist: Meg Bachman
Suite from "Gaîté Parisienne" ..... Offenbach
Popspourri ..... Arr. by Mason
On the Trail, from "Grand Canyon Suite" ..... Grofé
Sabre Dance, from "Gayne" ..... Khachaturian
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

♪ ♪ ♪

Saturday Evening, May 5
Regis Night

Washington Post, March ..... Sousa
Music of the Spheres, Waltzes ..... Josef Strauss
Prayer of Thanksgiving ..... Valerius
Overture to "Orpheus in the Underworld" ..... Offenbach
Organ Concerto No. 2, in B flat ..... Handel
Soloist: Berj Zamkochian
Bolero ..... Ravel
Regis College Glee Club
Berj Zamkochian, Director
Selection from "Carousel" ..... Rodgers
Jalousie, Gypsy Tango ..... Gade
Wedding Dance ..... Press
Regis Alma Mater
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

♪ ♪ ♪

Sunday Evening, May 6
MIT Night

Wedding March, from "The Golden Cockerel" ..... Rimsky-Korsakov
Three Dances from "The Three-Cornered Hat" ..... Falla
Iron Works ..... Mossolov
Overture to "La Belle Hélène" ..... Offenbach
Piano Concerto No 1, in E-flat ..... Liszt
Soloist: Luise Vosgerchian
MIT Glee Club
Klaus Liepmann conducting
Popspourri ..... Arr. by Mason
Love Is a Many-Splendored Thing ..... Fain-Mason
Thunder and Lightning ..... Strauss
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

Lipnitzki

Walter Gieseking will give a piano recital Sunday afternoon in Symphony Hall.

Concert Calendar

Sunday, April 29

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting. Beethoven, Tchaikovsky. Symphony Hall, 8:30.

Walter Gieseking, pianist. Symphony Hall, 3:30.

George Szpinalski, violinist. Jordan Hall, 3:30.

New York Woodwind Quintet. Gardner Museum, 2. Free.

Komitas Choral Society, Rouben Gregorian conducting. Sanders Theater, Cambridge, 3.

Roland Hayes, tenor. All Saints Lutheran Church, 85 West Newton Street, 3:30.

North Park College Choir of Chicago. John Hancock Hall, 8.

Yale University Concert Band. MIT Kresge Auditorium, 4:15. Free.

Boston Conservatory Orchestra, Rouben Gregorian conducting. Auditorium, 31 Hemenway Street, 8:30. Free.

Monday, April 30

Norma Farber, soprano. College Club, 40 Commonwealth Avenue, 8:30.

Tuesday, May 1

Ayrton Pinto, violinist, and Tan Crone, pianist. Gardner Museum, 2:45. Free.

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 248,071
APR 29 1956

...ox and Symphony

To the Editor of The Herald:

The radio programs of the great Boston Symphony Orchestra as part of its seventy-fifth Anniversary celebration are eagerly awaited here in Maryland by a homesick native who has listened to our world famous group of distinguished musicians for some thirty years. Like most other residents of Greater Boston, I have claimed the music of the orchestra prime evidence of the City's cultural leadership.

Now, though we yet suffer from the loss of his predecessor, I look for more great music from the Boston Symphony under the leadership of Dr. Charles Munch. After another agonizing radio program of anniversary selected compositions only one phrase seems adequate to describe this music—"it stinks!"

Thanks be to the Boston Red Sox and Tom Yawkey who continues the tradition of great leadership by offering the classical direction of Pinky Higgins. May we have more of his solid thinking in the selections of the Boston Symphony!

WALLACE E. DOW
Monkton, Md.

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,872
APR 28 1956

writers and poets who come

WITH OUR COMPLIMENTS...

Although this clipping is beyond your order we thought it would interest you.

Please accept it with our compliments.

Sincerely,

NEW ENGLAND NEWSCLIP AGENCY, INC.

Janice Moudry

...uld Be Heard

...h M. Sutherland

her debut at New York's Town Hall, she has been welcomed in recitals and appearances with the country's leading orchestras. In 1952-53 she appeared six times as soloist with Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra, singing the difficult part in Mahler's "Resurrection Symphony"—a taxing experience for many a more mature artist. She has also sung with the San Francisco Opera in a variety of roles, such as "The Barber of Seville," "Mefistofele," "Boris Godounov" and "Electra."

♪ ♪ ♪

She has sung under such exacting task masters as Monteux, Munch, Wallenstein, and Koussevitzky with great success. Always her roles have been vital, though arduous—such works as Handel's "Messiah," Mahler's "Das Lied von der Erde," "Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, and the more recent work of Arthur Honegger, "Joan of Arc at the Stake."

Miss Moudry obtained much of her early training in California where she attended the University of California in Los Angeles and lent her brilliance to such activities as the Bach Festival at Carmel, and the Pasadena Civic Orchestra.

♪ ♪ ♪

Recently she joined Saramae Endich, Marvin Worden, and Robert Rue to form the Tanglewood Opera Quartet which has proved of unusual interest to concert audiences. At Tanglewood, in the Berkshires of Massachusetts, the site of a celebrated festival in the summer and the home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, artists strive to maintain its high professional standard.

Among the qualities attributed to Janice Moudry by critics is her effortlessness, her excellent diction, her ability to convey a sense of solace through song.

72

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,872

APR 28 1956

Beethoven's Ninth at Symphony

Lenscraft

Arthur Fiedler will open the 71st season of Pops concerts in Symphony Hall Tuesday night.

'Psalm' by Mabel Daniels In Final Weekend Program

By Harold Rogers

There are few works so appropriate for ending a season as Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

This was Charles Munch's choice for the concluding concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 75th anniversary. With it he set the welkin ringing yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall, and he will doubtless do so again tonight. There is an extra concert this season—the one scheduled for Sunday night when Mr. Munch will conduct Beethoven's Seventh and Tchaikovsky's "Pathétique."

Exuberant joy was the keynote yesterday, in the titles as well as the music. Mr. Munch opened with the first performance at these concerts of "A Psalm of Praise" by Mabel Daniels, composed for the 75th anniversary of Radcliffe College last year. And the closing choral movement of Beethoven's Ninth, of course, is set to Schiller's "Ode to Joy."

Miss Daniels is the dean of American women composers. Few, if any, have matched her achievement, especially in the choral field. She is not afraid to be daring, an attribute much in evidence in her "Psalm of Praise." She can set up spare, open-positioned chords, and her discreet dissonances add a dash of contemporary salt.

But the important thing about this work is that it says what it wants to say in no uncertain terms. With texts from the Old Testament the chorus sings of praise, chants of praise, shouts of praise.

* * *

The orchestra does its share, too, in mirroring the instruments named in the song—the psaltery and harp, flute, viol, and lute, trumpet, pipe, and timbrel, drum, sackbut, cymbals of brass, dulcimer, and shawm. What is more, Miss Daniels simplified this Biblical ensemble to strings, three trumpets, and percussion, with a resulting effect, we dare say, as joyous as anything heard in Biblical times.

The excellent choral forces are those trained by G. Wallace Woodworth—the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society. For the Beethoven Ninth they were joined by four superb soloists whom we know well in Boston—Adele Addison, soprano, Eunice Alberts, contralto, David Lloyd, tenor, and Mac Morgan, bass. Their voices are matched in opulent timbre and dynamics. They are artists of the first order.

* * *

Since the quality of joy was uppermost in yesterday's program, it is the sad duty of this listener to register a few joyless observations. If Mr. Munch wishes to take the second movement—marked Molto vivace and Presto—as fast as these markings permit, then he should discipline his players until they can play the music that fast. There was the confusion of imprecision more than once. On the other hand, Mr. Munch took the Adagio molto so slowly that the woodwind section nearly fell apart during its featured portion.

There is no gainsaying that Mr. Munch adds electricity to nearly everything he puts his baton to, and he added much intensity to the "Ode to Joy" yesterday. But after observing his way Beethoven for seven seasons, it is apparent that he is unpredictable when playing Beethoven's works, and we may as well resign ourselves to this fact.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 122,000

APR 28 1956

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Beethoven Ninth Ends Season

The Boston Symphony Orchestra played yesterday the afternoon concert of the 24th and last pair in the Friday-Saturday series, at Symphony Hall. Charles Munch conducted. The program: Mabel Daniels: A Psalm of Praise, for Mixed Chorus, Three Trumpets, Percussion and Strings (first time at these concerts); Beethoven: Ninth Symphony, in D minor. The Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, prepared by G. Wallace Woodworth, assisted. The soloists were Adele Addison, soprano; Eunice Alberts, contralto; David Lloyd, tenor, and Mac Morgan, bass.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Since a Boston Symphony season must come to an end, what better conclusion than the great and visionary Ninth Symphony of Beethoven? Appropriately Charles Munch chose it for the final concerts of the orchestra's 75th Anniversary season, yesterday afternoon and tonight.

The final regular concerts, that is to say, for an extra program will be given at Symphony Hall tomorrow evening as a sort of coda to the Anniversary observances, and to help raise funds for the European tour in the Summer. At this special concert Mr. Munch will conduct the Seventh Symphony of Beethoven and the Sixth, or "Pathetique," Symphony by Tchaikovsky.

During yesterday's performance of the mighty Ninth, I was reminded of a complimentary appraisal of Mr. Munch, said to me privately last week, by an admiring colleague, also a conductor: "He is a true maker of music." This performance was a true making of music. Such a giant score might intimidate some conductors, or, peculiarly, urge them to special effects of displayful eloquence.

"The Long Line" Kept

Not with Charles Munch. Every measure, every page of the Ninth sounded with the devoted simplicity, the precise care for the smallest details, and the continuity from section to section, movement to movement, which is the quality of the man as interpreter. This continuity, known more fashionably these days as "the long line," is of utmost importance to the whole structure—and the interpretation of so long, noble and overwhelming a masterpiece.

Through it all the orchestra really "sang," and the song never failed to touch the heart. All was in proportion, all sounded with the beauty of a rich, deep sonority; the "recitative" of the finale was cleanly and expressively phrased by cellos and double-basses. Above all these excellences was an intensity of spirit which carried you up into that world of purity and nobility, which is great music.

The difficulties, and they are many and varied, for the vocal parts in the choral finale, are an old story. No doubt a performance of these pages perfect in every way will never be heard from human chorus or soloists. Yesterday the Harvard and Radcliffe singers did exceptionally well. Here, perhaps, is an exception to the rule that mature men and women do better, in tonal volume, than youngsters. Mr. Woodworth's chorus navigated the high notes and the speed with remarkable agility, which, perhaps, a chorus of older people might not have done so well.

Daniels Piece Fine

Of the soloists, the soprano voice of Adele Addison stood out most plainly. But the work of Eunice Alberts was resonant and as musical; David Lloyd dealt with the tenor part admirably, and though Mac Morgan has not yet mastered the smoothness and the flexibility which the opening baritone solo demands, his voice was an integral part of the solid tone when all four soloists were heard together.

The rushing measures of the prestissimo coda, and the concluding D major chord were hardly sounded when a storm of cheers broke from the audience. Applause and cries of "Bravo!" continued as Mr. Munch and the soloists bowed again and again. Then, for him alone, a noisy ovation.

The concert was exceptionally short, for there was no intermission. Mr. Munch happily chose for opening piece a short choral work by the Boston composer, Mabel Daniels, who was present and received cordial acknowledgement from the audience. This was the Psalm of Praise, composed for the 75th Anniversary of Radcliffe College, and which was heard this week in an instrumentally expanded version for three trumpets, percussion, and strings.

This is a fine piece, compact, of an Oriental coloring which beautifully reflects the character of the Old Testament text. There is joy in the words and in the vigorous, plangent music. Harmonically, Miss Daniels' writing is bold and brave, of a dissonance which is expressive but not smothering, and altogether logical for the musical conception as a whole. The Psalm of Praise deserves to take its place in the choral repertory.

Sunday Post
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 230,930

APR 29 1956

SPEAKER—John J. Hearne, Irish envoy, will speak at Eire Society dinner at Sheraton Plaza on May 5.

Hub Symphony Will Get $1000

Presentation of a gift of $1000 to the Boston Symphony Orchestra will highlight the 19th annual dinner of the Eire Society of Boston at the Sheraton Plaza Saturday.

Joseph Gannon, president of the society, will make the presentation to Michael T. Kelleher, a trustee of the orchestra. The gift is being made in appreciation of the concerts to be given by the orchestra in Cork and Dublin.

Sunday Post
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 230,930

APR 29 1956

Music Notes

"Pops" Opens Tuesday

Arthur Fiedler will inaugurate the 71st season of the Boston "Pops" Orchestra and his 27th year as its conductor this Tuesday evening in Symphony Hall. Luise Vosgerchian will be the featured soloist in Liszt's Concerto No. 1 in E flat. Also listed are selections from "My Fair Lady" and a symphonic arrangement of "Love Is a Many-Splendored Thing."

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
Circ. D. 526,215 - S. 1,146,860

APR 28 1956

Boston Hears Choral Work By a Woman

By JOHN H. FENTON
Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, April 27—A Radcliffe College graduate rose from the audience at Symphony Hall today and bowed in response to an ovation for her accomplishments as a composer.

Miss Mabel Daniels, tiny, elderly and smiling, was being honored for her "Psalm of Praise." It was played at the closing Friday afternoon performance of the season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society sang the vocal parts of the work. The performance will be repeated tomorrow night.

Twenty years ago the symphony played Miss Daniels' "Exultate Deo," with a mixed chorus from the two colleges.

When Charles Munch, musical director of the Boston Symphony, planned the closing two concerts of the orchestra's seventy-fifth anniversary season, he decided to pay tribute to an American woman composer whose alma mater observed its seventy-fifth anniversary last year.

Miss Daniels composed "Psalm of Praise" for the Radcliffe diamond jubilee, just as she had written "Exultate Deo" for the college's fiftieth anniversary in 1929.

One of her brightest memories, she said, is of Christmas Eve in 1935. Then she heard the choir of St. Bartholomew's Protestant Episcopal Church in New York sing her "Christ Child." This is a carol set to words of G. K. Chesterton.

The Radcliffe alumna has heard three of her works played by the Boston orchestra. Her "Deep Forest" was presented in 1937. Although "Exultate Deo" was composed for the Radcliffe fiftieth anniversary, the orchestra did not play it until four years later.

Miss Daniels' penchant for composing came to the fore in her undergraduate days, when she composed the music for three operettas. In these she either conducted the orchestra or sang the principal part.

Studied in Munich

After receiving a degree, magna cum laude, in 1900, Miss Daniels studied composition and orchestration with George W. Chadwick in Boston and with Ludwig Thuille in Munich. In 1905 she wrote "An American Girl in Munich," a book based on her impressions as a music student.

Miss Daniels scored today the popular belief that composing was done by sitting at a piano. "Just the opposite," she said with a laugh. "One of the most difficult things to do is to boil down a symphonic piece into a piano semblance of it."

Instead, she explained, "I hear a theme for individual instruments running through my head; for example, a flute, with a background of strings."

Miss Daniels said she thought that women composers today were "better equipped" than in her day. But she added that composing still meant plenty of hard work.

Women today, she commented, have better opportunities for learning music through playing in an orchestra. In an earlier day, they did the next best thing—sang in a chorus, she said.

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 185,401

APR 28 1956

Pops Opens 71st Season

The 71st season of the Boston Pops Orchestra, with Arthur Fiedler beginning his 27th year as conductor, will be inaugurated Tuesday night in Symphony Hall.

As always, the floor seats in the auditorium will have been removed and replaced by tables, allowing patrons occupying floor seats to enjoy liquid and other refreshments as they listen to the inimitable musical performances of the Pops.

For the first time in the history of the Pops concerts, there will be an assistant conductor, Harry Ellis Dickson. He is a member of the violin section in the Boston Symphony Orchestra and in recent seasons has made many appearances as a guest conductor at the Pops. Last season he conducted the first four weeks of the Pops during the absence of Mr. Fiedler. He is also the conductor of the Brookline Youth Concerts and he organized the Civic Orchestra in Providence.

The Pops concerts will continue nightly through the month of May. During June, the concerts will be played nightly except Sunday. The season will close on Saturday night, June 30. Tickets will be on sale at Symphony Hall box office one week in advance of each concert.

72

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,872

APR 28 1956

-Beethoven's Ninth at Symphony

Lenscraft

Arthur Fiedler will open the 71st season of Pops concerts in Symphony Hall Tuesday night.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 122,000

APR 28 1956

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Beethoven Ninth Ends Season

The Boston Symphony Orchestra played yesterday the afternoon concert of the 24th and last pair in the Friday-Saturday series, at Symphony Hall. Charles Munch conducted. The program: Mabel Daniels: A Psalm of Praise, for Mixed Chorus, Three Trumpets, Percussion and Strings (first time at these concerts); Beethoven: Ninth Symphony, in D minor. The Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, prepared by G. Wallace Woodworth, assisted. The soloists were Adele Addison, soprano; Eunice Alberts, contralto; David Lloyd, tenor, and Mac Morgan, bass.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Since a Boston Symphony season must come to an end, what better conclusion than the great and visionary Ninth Symphony of Beethoven? Appropriately Charles Munch chose it for the final concerts of the orchestra's 75th Anniversary season, yesterday afternoon and tonight.

The final regular concerts, that is to say, for an extra program will be given at Symphony Hall tomorrow evening as a sort of coda to the Anniversary observances, and to help raise funds for the European tour in the Summer. At this special concert Mr. Munch will conduct the Seventh Symphony of Beethoven and the Sixth, or "Pathetique," Symphony by Tchaikovsky.

During yesterday's performance of the mighty Ninth, I was reminded of a complimentary appraisal of Mr. Munch, said to me privately last week, by an admiring colleague, also a conductor: "He is a true maker of music." This performance was a true making of music. Such a giant score might intimidate some conductors, or, peculiarly, urge them to special effects of displayful eloquence.

"The Long Line" Kept

Not with Charles Munch. Every measure, every page of the Ninth sounded with the devoted simplicity, the precise care for the smallest details, and the continuity from section to section, movement to movement, which is the quality of the man as interpreter. This continuity, known more fashionably these days as "the long line," is of utmost importance to the whole structure—and the interpretation of so long, noble and overwhelming a masterpiece.

Through it all the orchestra really "sang," and the song never failed to touch the heart. All was in proportion, all sounded with the beauty of a rich, deep sonority; the "recitative" of the finale was cleanly and expressively phrased by cellos and double-basses. Above all these excellences was an intensity of spirit which carried you up into that world of purity and nobility, which is great music.

The difficulties, and they are many and varied, for the vocal parts in the choral finale, are an old story. No doubt a performance of these pages perfect in every way will never be heard from human chorus or soloists. Yesterday the Harvard and Radcliffe singers did exceptionally well. Here, perhaps, is an exception to the rule that mature men and women do better, in tonal volume, than youngsters. Mr. Woodworth's chorus navigated the high notes and the speed with remarkable agility, which, perhaps, a chorus of older people might not have done so well.

Daniels Piece Fine

Of the soloists, the soprano voice of Adele Addison stood out most plainly. But the work of Eunice Alberts was resonant and as musical; David Lloyd dealt with the tenor part admirably, and though Mac Morgan has not yet mastered the smoothness and the flexibility which the opening baritone solo demands, his voice was an integral part of the solid tone when all four soloists were heard together.

The rushing measures of the prestissimo coda, and the concluding D major chord were hardly sounded when a storm of cheers broke from the audience. Applause and cries of "Bravo!" continued as Mr. Munch and the soloists bowed again and again. Then, for him alone, a noisy ovation.

The concert was exceptionally short, for there was no intermission. Mr. Munch happily chose for opening piece a short choral work by the Boston composer, Mabel Daniels, who was present and received cordial acknowledgement from the audience. This was the Psalm of Praise, composed for the 75th Anniversary of Radcliffe College, and which was heard this week in an instrumentally expanded version for three trumpets, percussion and strings.

This is a fine piece, compact, of an Oriental coloring which beautifully reflects the character of the Old Testament text. There is joy in the words and in the vigorous, plangent music. Harmonically, Miss Daniels' writing is bold and brave, of a dissonance which is expressive but not smothering, and altogether logical for the musical conception as a whole. The Psalm of Praise deserves to take its place in the choral repertory.

Sunday Post
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 230,930

APR 29 1956

'Psalm' by Mabel Daniels In Final Weekend Program

By Harold Rogers

There are few works so appropriate for ending a season as Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

This was Charles Munch's choice for the concluding concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 75th anniversary. With it he set the welkin ringing yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall, and he will doubtless do so again tonight. There is an extra concert this season—the one scheduled for Sunday night when Mr. Munch will conduct Beethoven's Seventh and Tchaikovsky's "Pathétique."

Exuberant joy was the keynote yesterday, in the titles as well as the music. Mr. Munch opened with the first performance at these concerts of "A Psalm of Praise" by Mabel Daniels, composed for the 75th anniversary of Radcliffe College last year. And the closing choral movement of Beethoven's Ninth, of course, is set to Schiller's "Ode to Joy."

Miss Daniels is the dean of American women composers. Few, if any, have matched her achievement, especially in the choral field. She is not afraid to be daring, an attribute much in evidence in her "Psalm of Praise." She can set up spare, open-positioned chords, and her discreet dissonances add a dash of contemporary salt.

But the important thing about this work is that it says what it wants to say in no uncertain terms. With texts from the Old Testament the chorus sings of praise, chants of praise, shouts of praise.

* * *

The orchestra does its share, too, in mirroring the instruments named in the song—the psaltery and harp, flute, viol, and lute, trumpet, pipe, and timbrel, drum, sackbut, cymbals of brass, dulcimer, and shawm. What is more, Miss Daniels simplified this Biblical ensemble to strings, three trumpets, and percussion, with a resulting effect, we dare say, as joyous as anything heard in Biblical times.

The excellent choral forces are those trained by G. Wallace Woodworth—the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society. For the Beethoven Ninth they were joined by four superb soloists whom we know well in Boston—Adele Addison, soprano, Eunice Alberts, contralto, David Lloyd, tenor, and Mac Morgan, bass. Their voices are matched in opulent timbre and dynamics. They are artists of the first order.

* * *

Since the quality of joy was uppermost in yesterday's program, it is the sad duty of this listener to register a few joyless observations. If Mr. Munch wishes to take the second movement—marked Molto vivace and Presto—as fast as these markings permit, then he should discipline his players until they can play the music that fast. There was the confusion of imprecision more than once. On the other hand, Mr. Munch took the Adagio molto so slowly that the woodwind section nearly fell apart during its featured portion.

There is no gainsaying that Mr. Munch adds electricity to nearly everything he puts his baton to, and he added much intensity to the "Ode to Joy" yesterday. But after observing his way Beethoven for seven seasons, it is apparent that he is unpredictable when playing Beethoven's works, and we may as well resign ourselves to this fact.

SPEAKER—John J. Hearne, Irish envoy, will speak at Eire Society dinner at Sheraton Plaza on May 5.

Hub Symphony Will Get $1000

Presentation of a gift of $1000 to the Boston Symphony Orchestra will highlight the 19th annual dinner of the Eire Society of Boston at the Sheraton Plaza Saturday.

Joseph Gannon, president of the society, will make the presentation to Michael T. Kelleher, a trustee of the orchestra. The gift is being made in appreciation of the concerts to be given by the orchestra in Cork and Dublin.

Sunday Post
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 230,930

APR 29 1956

Music Notes

"Pops" Opens Tuesday

Arthur Fiedler will inaugurate the 71st season of the Boston "Pops" Orchestra and his 27th year as its conductor this Tuesday evening in Symphony Hall. Luise Vosgerchian will be the featured soloist in Liszt's Concerto No. 1 in E flat. Also listed are selections from "My Fair Lady" and a symphonic arrangement of "Love Is a Many-Splendored Thing."

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
Circ. D. 526,215 - S. 1,146,860

APR 28 1956

Boston Hears Choral Work By a Woman

By JOHN H. FENTON
Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, April 27—A Radcliffe College graduate rose from the audience at Symphony Hall today and bowed in response to an ovation for her accomplishments as a composer.

Miss Mabel Daniels, tiny, elderly and smiling, was being honored for her "Psalm of Praise." It was played at the closing Friday afternoon performance of the season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society sang the vocal parts of the work. The performance will be repeated tomorrow night.

Twenty years ago the symphony played Miss Daniels' "Exultate Deo," with a mixed chorus from the two colleges.

When Charles Munch, musical director of the Boston Symphony, planned the closing two concerts of the orchestra's seventy-fifth anniversary season, he decided to pay tribute to an American woman composer whose alma mater observed its seventy-fifth anniversary last year.

Miss Daniels composed "Psalm of Praise" for the Radcliffe diamond jubilee, just as she had written "Exultate Deo" for the college's fiftieth anniversary in 1929.

One of her brightest memories, she said, is of Christmas Eve in 1935. Then she heard the choir of St. Bartholomew's Protestant Episcopal Church in New York sing her "Christ Child." This is a carol set to words of G. K. Chesterton.

The Radcliffe alumna has heard three of her works played by the Boston orchestra. Her "Deep Forest" was presented in 1937. Although "Exultate Deo" was composed for the Radcliffe fiftieth anniversary, the orchestra did not play it until four years later.

Miss Daniels' penchant for composing came to the fore in her undergraduate days, when she composed the music for three operettas. In these she either conducted the orchestra or sang the principal part.

Studied in Munich

After receiving a degree, magna cum laude, in 1900, Miss Daniels studied composition and orchestration with George W. Chadwick in Boston and with Ludwig Thuille in Munich. In 1905 she wrote "An American Girl in Munich," a book based on her impressions as a music student.

Miss Daniels scored today the popular belief that composing was done by sitting at a piano. "Just the opposite," she said with a laugh. "One of the most difficult things to do is to boil down a symphonic piece into a piano semblance of it."

Instead, she explained, "I hear a theme for individual instruments running through my head; for example, a flute, with a background of strings."

Miss Daniels said she thought that women composers today were "better equipped" than in her day. But she added that composing still meant plenty of hard work.

Women today, she commented, have better opportunities for learning music through playing in an orchestra. In an earlier day, they did the next best thing—sang in a chorus, she said.

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 185,401

APR 28 1956

Pops Opens 71st Season

The 71st season of the Boston Pops Orchestra, with Arthur Fiedler beginning his 27th year as conductor, will be inaugurated Tuesday night in Symphony Hall.

As always, the floor seats in the auditorium will have been removed and replaced by tables, allowing patrons occupying floor seats to enjoy liquid and other refreshments as they listen to the inimitable musical performances of the Pops.

For the first time in the history of the Pops concerts, there will be an assistant conductor, Harry Ellis Dickson. He is a member of the violin section in the Boston Symphony Orchestra and in recent seasons has made many appearances as a guest conductor at the Pops. Last season he conducted the first four weeks of the Pops during the absence of Mr. Fiedler. He is also the conductor of the Brookline Youth Concerts and he organized the Civic Orchestra in Providence.

The Pops concerts will continue nightly through the month of May. During June, the concerts will be played nightly except Sunday. The season will close on Saturday night, June 30. Tickets will be on sale at Symphony Hall box office one week in advance of each concert.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 180,559
APR 28 1956

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, gave the 24th program of its 75th season in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. The soloists were Adele Addison, soprano; Eunice Alberts, contralto; David Lloyd, tenor, and Mac Morgan, bass. Assisting were the Radcliffe Choral Society and the Harvard Glee Club, G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor. The program:

A Psalm of Praise ..... Mabel Daniels
Symphony No. 9 in D minor, Op. 125 ..... Beethoven

By RUDOLPH ELIE

There is no event in the calendar year I view with more mingled emotions than this, the last regular symphony concert of the season.

On the one hand there is the end of the music season, a long and arduous one for the reviewer who must trot about to musical events three and four or more times a week; on the other the end of the refreshing stimulations of these weekly concerts, which add the special dimension of grateful personal contacts among the listeners as well as the musical communication with the orchestra. The weather may occasionally intrude and the fatigues of the winter season may pile up, but for a brief two hours on a Friday afternoon or a Saturday night, there is repose, respite, re-invigoration.

ANNUAL RITE

The final program was but an hour and a quarter long, for it was the annual rite of the Ninth Symphony. But an unusual aspect was the presence on the program of a work by Mabel Daniels, who shares with but six other women the distinction of having her music performed by the Boston Symphony in the whole 75 years of its existence.

It is a curious thing, it has always seemed to me, that music is the one field in all art, indeed in all human endeavor, that women have never achieved a masterpiece corresponding even to those of lesser masters in music. In years gone by the orchestra has played music by Ethel Leginska, Margaret Lang, Helen Hopekirk, Mrs. H. M. A. Beach, Henriette Bosman and Lili Boulanger: it has never repeated it and there is very little likelihood it ever will be revived.

Nor, in its present form, does it seem likely Miss Daniels' very fine "Psalm of Praise" for mixed chorus, three trumpets, percussion and strings, will take its place in the repertoire. By "present form" I mean as a concert hall work; it will undoubtedly have many a performance in its original form with piano, trumpets and percussion, for it is a sound and vigorous work echoing the jubilation of the text from the Old Testament. Its inner part is lovely supplicatory lyric beautifully suited to the mixed chorus, and it ends on a note of triumph. The idiom is personal, makes little use of dissonance, but its contrapuntal lines in the outer sections are somewhat angular in a more contemporary vein. The modulations are free and interesting and, all in all, it is the agreeable product of a lively and gifted mind. Miss Daniels was in the audience and most cordially received.

ENORMOUS WORK

I am always at a loss for words with the Ninth, there being virtually nothing to add to the literature on this enormous work, so it always comes down to the performance. Until the later stages of the melodramatic choral finale, it was a very fine performance indeed. Mr. Munch did the scherzo with particular effect, catching the lightning tempo without rushing and bringing out its heroically playful nuances with great sensitivity. The slow movement was a mood of sombre yet tender lyricism in the highest level of expression, though it was briefly marred by the entrance of a horn noticeably sharp in pitch.

The finale, which contains what is certainly the most ungrateful part for a solo quartet ever composed, lost its big lines in a fierce driving conclusion, but the chorus was with the conductor every second and sang with elan and a splendid balance, the sopranos this time getting on top and attacking vigorously and cleanly. Adele Addison, Eunice Alberts, David Lloyd and Mac Morgan as the soloists contending with the impossible almost made it seem possible, Miss Addison in particular soaring above the tumult in striking fashion, though the others traversed the notes with equal brilliance.

And so, with bravos and a standing, applauding audience making a demonstration, the 75th season of the Boston Symphony orchestra came to a conclusion in an ocean of sound. It seems, at this moment, a long, long time to October. Sunday night, incidentally, the orchestra will give a concert to benefit its forthcoming European trip, the program consisting of Beethoven's Seventh Symphony and Tchaikovsky's Sixth.

Sunday Post
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 230,930
APR 29 1956

Meeting ... for
Smith N ... Boston
Smith C ... social work a ... Miss Marian ...

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 248,071

Sunday Sun
LOWELL, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 27,559

Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Republican
Circ. 104,780
APR 29 1956

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 122,000
APR 30 1956

Symphony Awaits Soviet Bid for Trip to Moscow

By JOHN WM. RILEY

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union Leader (m)
MANCHESTER, N. H.
Independent
Circ. 42,546
APR 30 1956

Boston Symphony Awaits Bid to Tour Russia

Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 113,081
Chronicle (e)
WILLIMANTIC, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 5,500
American (e)
WATERBURY, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 39,951
Bulletin (e)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 146,283
APR 30 1956

Boston Symphony Weighs Red Visit

Boston —(UP)— The Boston Symphony Orchestra today awaited a formal invitation from Moscow for a trip to the Soviet Union.

The Russian cultural attache in Washington has made preliminary overtures to the Boston Symphony which already had scheduled a west European tour this summer.

The Philadelphia orchestra was on tap to go but members of that group voted unanimously against the trip late last week.

Last night, the Boston Symphony ended its 75th anniversary season with a special concert to raise additional funds for its first European tour since 1953.

The 71st annual season of Boston pops concerts will open tomorrow night under the direction of Arthur Fiedler. It will be his 27th year as conductor of the popular concert series.

At her Newton Center home Mrs. Robert M. P. Kennard (right), chairman of opening night at Symphony Pops, Tuesday, for the benefit of the Grenfell Mission, talks over the duties of flower vendors with (left to right) Mrs. Wellington Wells 3d, Miss Charlotte Nickerson, Miss Betsy Wilte and Miss Tenley Albright.

Now Assured on Symphony

...day to be assured of hear- ...phony Orchestra in Moscow ...al was down ...s refused to ...or Charles ...te conductor ...the Boston ...led to leave ...r abroad in ...ule calls for ...the Iron Cur- ...choslovakia, ...its schedule ...t. 5 and 6 ...Helsinki, Fin- ...a short hop by plane into ...sia.

...he State department re- ...ted that Soviet government ...ld guarantee the orchestra ...enses and a profit for con- ...s within the country.

Chestra Ma... ...dy's in Sov...

...The ...king to ...Orches- ...the ...which ...lay in ...the Soviet Uni... ...Department ...that substitutio... ...Orchestra, if it ...would have the ...

...only ...state ...ld be ...s and ...erred ...with ...s in ...has ...d-Au- ...ur of ...es in ...group ...choslo- ...r Sept. ...is ex- ...uld be ...inland, ...made a ...952.

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 248,071
APR 29 1956

Jesuit to Get Eire Society Medal Here

The Very Rev. Robert I. Gannon, S.J., former president of Fordham University, will receive the Eire Society Gold Medal at the society's 19th annual dinner Saturday at 6:30 p.m. at the Sheraton Plaza Hotel.

John J. Hearne, Irish ambassador, and Edward B. Hanify, a Boston attorney, will address the more than 750 members and friends expected to attend.

1,000 TO SYMPHONY

A gift of $1,000 will be presented to the Boston Symphony Orchestra by the society, in appreciation of concerts to be given by the orchestra this summer in Cork and Dublin.

Joseph Gannon, president of the Eire Society, will be toastmaster. Head table guests will include Joseph Shields, Irish consul; Hugh A. Moriarty, president of the American Order of Hibernians; Charles T. Burke, president of the Charitable Irish Society; William B. Caroran, president of the Clover Club; and Humphrey J. Mahoney, president of the Central Council of Irish Country Clubs.

Father Gannon, who will be given the gold medal as a "true educator of men and a priest of God," completed his early studies at Loyola School and Georgetown University. He entered the Society of Jesus in 1913 as an instructor of English and philosophy at Fordham, and was ordained in 1926.

He received an M. A. degree at Christ College, Cambridge, in 1930, and holds a Litt.D. degree from Georgetown and honorary degrees from several colleges and universities. He is now president of Loyola School in New York.

Previous recipients of the society's gold medal include Archbishop Cushing, Prof. Fred N. Robinson of Harvard and John Ford, the film director.

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 248,071
APR 29 1956

EVERGREEN FAVORITES: ARTHUR FIEDLER AND THE POPS will join forces once again on Tuesday night when Boston Pops concerts start their 71st season at Symphony Hall with Mr. Fiedler conducting.

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 248,071
APR 29 1956

(Herald Staff Photo by Maynard White)

FLOWER VENDORS at the opening night of the Pops in Symphony Hall, Tuesday evening, will include Charlotte Nickerson, Dedham and Tenley Albright of Newton. For the fourteenth year, the New England Grenfell Association is sponsoring the opening to help the work of the Grenfell Mission in Labrador.

Sunday Post
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 230,930
APR 29 1956

CO-CHAIRMAN of alumnae committee planning annual Emmanuel Night at the Pops, Monday, May 14, at Symphony Hall, is Mrs. Edward C. Keane of West Roxbury. Proceeds of the concert will benefit the college building program.

...RK, N. Y.
...IMES
...6,215 - S. 1,146,860
APR 28 1956

...on Hears ...al Work ... Woman

...N H. FENTON
...The New York Times.

...April 27—A Rad- ...e graduate rose from ...e at Symphony Hall ...owed in response to ...for her accomplish- ...composer.

...el Daniels, tiny, el- ...smiling, was being ...r her "Psalm of ... was played at the ...day afternoon per- ...the season by the ...phony Orchestra.

...ard Glee Club and ...fe Choral Society ...vocal parts of the ...performance will be ...morrow night.

...years ago the sym- ...d Miss Daniels' "Ex- ... with a mixed chorus ...o colleges.

...arles Munch, musi- ... of the Boston Sym- ...ne the closing two ...the orchestra's sev- ...niversary season, he ... pay tribute to an ... woman composer ... mater observed its ...n anniversary last

...els composed "Psalm ...or the Radcliffe dia- ...e, just as she had ...ultate Deo" for the ...tieth anniversary in

...her brightest mem- ...aid, is of Christmas ... Then she heard the ...Bartholomew's Prot- ...copal Church in New ...ner "Christ Child." ...arol set to words of ...erton.

...cliffe alumna has ... of her works played ...ston orchestra. Her ...est" was presented ...Although "Exultate ... composed for the ...fiftieth anniversary, ...ra did not play it ...ears later.

...niels' penchant for ...came to the fore in ...raduate days, when ...sed the music for ...ettas. In these she ...ucted the orchestra ... principal part.

...ed in Munich

...eceiving a degree, ... laude, in 1900, Miss ...ied composition and ...n with George W. ...n Boston and with ...uille in Munich. In ...rote "An American ...nich," a book based ...ressions as a music

...els scored today the ...lief that composing ...y sitting at a piano. ... opposite," she said ...h. "One of the most ...ngs to do is to boil ...nphonic piece into a ...ance of it."

...he explained, "I hear ...or individual instru- ...ing through my head; ...e, a flute, with a ... of strings."

...iels said she thought ...n composers today ...r equipped" than in ...But she added that ...still meant plenty of

...oday, she commented, ...r opportunities for ...usic through playing ...estra. In an earlier ...d the next best thing ... chorus, she said.

... Season

...Orchestra and in re- ...s has made many ... as a guest conductor. ... Last season he con- ... first four weeks of ...ring the absence of ... He is also the con- ...he Brookline Youth ...d he organized the ...stra in Providence. ... concerts will continue ...ough the month of ...g June, the concerts ...ayed nightly except ...e season will close on ...ght, June 30. Ticket ...ale at Symphony Hall ...one week in advance ...cert.

TORK, N. Y.
TIMES
6,215 + S. 1,146,860

APR 28 1956

on Hears al Work Woman

N H. FENTON
The New York Times.

April 27—A Rad- e graduate rose from e at Symphony Hall owed in response to for her accomplish- composer.

el Daniels, tiny, el- smiling, was being r her "Psalm of was played at the day afternoon per- the season by the nphony Orchestra.

vard Glee Club and ffe Choral Society vocal parts of the performance will be morrow night.

years ago the sym- d Miss Daniels' "Ex- with a mixed chorus o colleges.

arles Munch, musi- of the Boston Sym- ne the closing two the orchestra's sev- nniversary season, he pay tribute to an woman composer mater observed its n anniversary last els composed "Psalm for the Radcliffe dia- e, just as she had ultate Deo" for the tieth anniversary in her brightest mem- aid, is of Christmas . Then she heard the Bartholomew's Prot- copal Church in New ner "Christ Child." arol set to words of erton.

dcliffe alumna has of her works played ston orchestra. Her est" was presented Although "Exultate composed for the iftieth anniversary, ra did not play it ears later.

niels' penchant for came to the fore in raduate days, when sed the music for ettas. In these she ucted the orchestra principal part.

led in Munich

eceiving a degree, laude, in 1900, Miss died composition and n with George W. n Boston and with uille in Munich. In rote "An American nich," a book based ressions as a music hels scored today the lief that composing y sitting at a piano. opposite," she said h. "One of the most ngs to do is to boil nphonic piece into a ance of it."

he explained, "I hear or individual instru- ng through my head; e, a flute, with a of strings."

iels said she thought n composers today r equipped" than in But she added that still meant plenty of oday, she commented, r opportunities for usic through playing estra. In an earlier d the next best thing chorus, she said.

Season

Orchestra and in re- s has made many as a guest conductor Last season he con- first four weeks of ring the absence of He is also the con- he Brookline Youth d he organized the tra in Providence.

concerts will continue ough the month of g June, the concerts ayed nightly except e season will close on ght, June 30. Tickets ale at Symphony Hall one week in advance cert.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 130,559

APR 28 1956

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, gave the 24th program of its 75th season in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. The soloists were Adele Addison, soprano, Eunice Alberts, contralto, David Lloyd, tenor, and Mac Morgan, bass. Assisting were the Radcliffe Choral Society and the Harvard Glee Club, G. Wallace Woodworth conducting. The program: A Psalm of Praise, Mabel Daniels. Op. 125 Symphony No. 9 in D minor, Op. 125 . . . Beethoven

BY RUDOLPH ELIE

There is no event in the calendar year I view with more mingled emotions than this, the last regular symphony concert of the season.

On the one hand there is the end of the music season, a long and arduous one for the reviewer who must trot about to musical events three and four or more times a week; on the other the end of the refreshing stimulations of these weekly concerts, which add the special dimension of grateful personal contacts among the listeners as well as the musical communication with the orchestra. The weather may occasionally intrude and the fatigues of the winter season may pile up, but for a brief two hours on a Friday afternoon or a Saturday night, there is repose, respite, re-invigoration.

ANNUAL RITE

The final program was but an hour and a quarter long, for it was the annual rite of the Ninth Symphony. But an unusual aspect was the presence on the program of a work by Mabel Daniels, who shares with but six other women the distinction of having her music performed by the Boston Symphony in the whole 75 years of its existence.

It is a curious thing, it has always seemed to me, that music is the one field in all art, indeed in all human endeavor, that women have never achieved a masterpiece corresponding even to those of lesser masters in music. In years gone by the orchestra has played music by Ethel Leginska, Margaret Lang, Helen Hopekirk, Mrs. H. M. A. Beach, Henriette Bosman and Lili Boulanger: it has never repeated it and there is very little likelihood it ever will be revived.

Nor, in its present form, does it seem likely Miss Daniels' very fine "Psalm of Praise" for mixed chorus, three trumpets, percussion and strings, will take its place in the repertoire. By "present form" I mean as a concert hall work; it will undoubtedly have many a performance in its original form with piano, trumpets and percussion, for it is a sound and vigorous work echoing the jubilation of the text from the Old Testament. Its inner part is lovely supplicatory lyric beautifully suited to the mixed chorus, and it ends on a note of triumph. The idiom is personal, makes little use of dissonance, but its contrapuntal lines in the outer sections are somewhat angular in a more contemporary vein. The modulations are free and interesting and, all in all, it is the agreeable product of a lively and gifted mind. Miss Daniels was in the audience and most cordially received.

ENORMOUS WORK

I am always at a loss for words with the Ninth, there being virtually nothing to add to the literature on this enormous work, so it always comes down to the performance. Until the later stages of the melodramatic choral finale, it was a very fine performance indeed. Mr. Munch did the scherzo with particular effect, catching the lightning tempo without rushing and bringing out its heroically playful nuances with great sensitivity. The slow movement was a mood of sombre yet tender lyricism in the highest level of expression, though it was briefly marred by the entrance of a horn noticeably sharp in pitch.

The finale, which contains what is certainly the most ungrateful part for a solo quartet ever composed, lost its big lines in a fierce driving conclusion, but the chorus was with the conductor every second and sang with elan and a splendid balance, the sopranos this time getting on top and attacking vigorously and cleanly. Adele Addison, Eunice Alberts, David Lloyd and Mac Morgan as the soloists contending with the impossible almost made it seem possible, Miss Addison in particular soaring above the tumult in striking fashion, though the others traversed the notes with equal brilliance.

And so, with bravos and a standing, applauding audience making a demonstration, the 75th season of the Boston Symphony orchestra came to a conclusion in an ocean of sound. It seems, at this moment, a long, long time to October. Sunday night, incidentally, the orchestra will give a concert for benefit its forthcoming European trip, the program consisting of Beethoven's Seventh Symphony and Tchaikovsky's Sixth.

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 248,071

Sunday Sun
LOWELL, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 27,559

Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Republican
Circ. 104,780

APR 29 1956

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 122,000

APR 30 1956

Symphony Awaits Soviet Bid for Trip to Moscow

BY JOHN WM. RILEY

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union Leader (m)
MANCHESTER, N. H.
Independent
Circ. 42,546

APR 30 1956

Boston Symphony Awaits Bid to Tour Russia

Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 113,081

Chronicle (e)
WILLIMANTIC, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 5,500

American (e)
WATERBURY, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 39,951

Bulletin (e)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 146,283

APR 30 1956

Boston Symphony Weighs Red Visit

Boston —(UP)— The Boston Symphony Orchestra today awaited a formal invitation from Moscow for a trip to the Soviet Union.

The Russian cultural attache in Washington has made preliminary overtures to the Boston Symphony which already had scheduled a west European tour this summer.

The Philadelphia orchestra was on tap to go but members of that group voted unanimously against the trip late last week.

Last night, the Boston Symphony ended its 75th anniversary season with a special concert to raise additional funds for its first European tour since 1953.

The 71st annual season of Boston pops concerts will open tomorrow night under the direction of Arthur Fiedler. It will be his 27th year as conductor of the popular concert series.

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 248,071

APR 29 1956

EVERGREEN FAVORITES: ARTHUR FIEDLER AND THE POPS will join forces once again on Tuesday night when Boston Pops concerts start their 71st season at Symphony Hall with Mr. Fiedler conducting.

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 248,071

APR 29 1956

(Herald Staff Photo by Maynard White)

FLOWER VENDORS at the opening night of the Pops in Symphony Hall, Tuesday evening, will include Charlotte Nickerson of Dedham and Tenley Albright of Newton. For the fourteenth year, the New England Grenfell Association is sponsoring the opening to help the work of the Grenfell Mission in Labrador.

Sunday Post
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 230,930

APR 29 1956

CO-CHAIRMAN of alumnae committee planning annual Emmanuel Night at the Pops, Monday, May 14, at Symphony Hall, is Mrs. Edward C. Keane of West Roxbury. Proceeds of the concert will benefit the college building program.

Sunday Post
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 230,930

APR 29 1956

Meeting
Smith N
Smith C
work a
Marian

At her Newton Center home Mrs. Robert M. P. Kennard (right), chairman of opening night at Symphony Pops, Tuesday, for the benefit of the Grenfell Mission, talks over the duties of flower vendors with (left to right) Mrs. Wellington Wells 3d, Miss Charlotte Nickerson, Miss Betsy Wilte and Miss Tenley Albright.

Now Assured on Symphony

day to be assured of hear- ony Orchestra in Moscow al was down

rs refused to tor Charles ate conductor the Boston led to leave r abroad in ule calls for the Iron Cur- echoslovakia, its schedule pt. 5 and 6 elsinki, Fin- a short hop by plane into sia.

he State department re- ted that Soviet government ld guarantee the orchestra enses and a profit for con- ts within the country.

chestra Ma dy's in Sov

The king to Orches- the which lay in the Soviet Unio Department that substitutio Orchestra, if it would have the only state ld be s and rches- ferred with s in has id-Au- ur of ces in group choslo- r Sept. is ex- uld be inland, made a 1952.

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 248,071

APR 29 1956

Jesuit to Get Eire Society Medal Here

The Very Rev. Robert I. Gannon, S.J., former president of Fordham University, will receive the Eire Society Gold Medal at the society's 19th annual dinner Saturday at 6:30 p.m. at the Sheraton Plaza Hotel.

John J. Hearne, Irish ambassador, and Edward B. Haniy, a Boston attorney, will address the more than 750 members and friends expected to attend.

1,000 TO SYMPHONY

A gift of $1,000 will be presented to the Boston Symphony Orchestra by the society, in appreciation of concerts to be given by the orchestra this summer in Cork and Dublin.

Joseph Gannon, president of the Eire Society, will be toastmaster. Head table guests will include Joseph Shields, Irish Consul; Hugh A. Moriarty, president of the American Order of Hibernians; Charles T. Burke, president of the Charitable Irish Society; William B. Caroran, president of the Clover Club; and Humphrey J. Mahoney, president of the Central Council of Irish Country Clubs.

Father Gannon, who will be given the gold medal as a "true educator of men and a priest of God," completed his early studies at Loyola School and Georgetown University. He entered the Society of Jesus in 1913 as an instructor of English and philosophy at Fordham, and was ordained in 1926.

He received an M. A. degree at Christ College, Cambridge, in 1930, and holds a Litt.D. degree from Georgetown and honorary degrees from several colleges and universities. He is now president of Loyola School in New York.

Previous recipients of the society's gold medal include Archbishop Cushing, Prof. Fred N. Robinson of Harvard and John Ford, the film director.

YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
26,215 - S. 1,146,860
APR 28 1956

on Hears al Work Woman

HN H. FENTON
o The New York Times.

April 27—A Rad- e graduate rose from e at Symphony Hall owed in response to for her accomplish- composer.

bel Daniels, tiny, el- smiling, was being or her "Psalm of was played at the iday afternoon per- of the season by the mphony Orchestra. rvard Glee Club and iffe Choral Society vocal parts of the performance will be morrow night.

years ago the sym- ed Miss Daniels' "Ex- " with a mixed chorus wo colleges.

harles Munch, musi- r of the Boston Sym- nne the closing two f the orchestra's sev- anniversary season, he pay tribute to an woman composer a mater observed its th anniversary last niels composed "Psalm for the Radcliffe dia- llee, just as she had Exultate Deo" for the iftieth anniversary in her brightest mem- said, is of Christmas 5. Then she heard the t. Bartholomew's Prot- scopal Church in New ner "Christ Child." carol set to words of sterton.

adcliffe alumna has e of her works played Boston orchestra. Her orest" was presented Although "Exultate s composed for the fiftieth anniversary, stra did not play it years later.

Daniels' penchant for came to the fore in rgraduate days, when posed the music for erettas. In these she nducted the orchestra e principal part.

ided in Munich receiving a degree, m laude, in 1900, Miss udied composition and tion with George W. in Boston and with Thuille in Munich. In wrote "An American Munich," a book based mpressions as a music aniels scored today the belief that composing by sitting at a piano. he opposite," she said igh. "One of the most things to do is to boil ymphonic piece into a nblance of it."

, she explained, "I hear for individual instru- nning through my head; nple, a flute, with a nd of strings."

aniels said she thought men composers today tter equipped" than in But she added that g still meant plenty of k.

n today, she commented, tter opportunities for music through playing chestra. In an earlier did the next best thing a chorus, she said.

t Season

Orchestra and in re- sons has made many ces as a guest conductor ps. Last season he con- e first four weeks of during the absence of er. He is also the con- the Brookline Youth and he organized the chestra in Providence.

ps concerts will continue- hrough the month of ring June, the concerts played nightly except The season will close on night, June 30. Tickets n sale at Symphony Hall e one week in advance concert.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 130,559
APR 28 1956

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, gave the 24th program of the 75th season in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. The soloists were Adele Addison, soprano; Eunice Alberts, contralto; David Lloyd, tenor, and Mac Morgan, bass. Assisting were the Radcliffe Choral Society and the Harvard Glee Club, G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor. The program:

A Psalm of Praise ..... Mabel Daniels
Symphony No. 9 in D minor, Op. 125 ..... Beethoven

By RUDOLPH ELIE

There is no event in the calendar year I view with more mingled emotions than this, the last regular symphony concert of the season.

On the one hand there is the end of the music season, a long and arduous one for the reviewer who must trot about to musical events three and four or more times a week; on the other the end of the refreshing stimulations of these weekly concerts, which add the special dimension of grateful personal contacts among the listeners as well as the musical communication with the orchestra. The weather may occasionally intrude and the fatigues of the winter season may pile up, but for a brief two hours on a Friday afternoon or a Saturday night, there is repose, respite, re-invigoration.

ANNUAL RITE

The final program was but an hour and a quarter long, for it was the annual rite of the Ninth Symphony. But an unusual aspect was the presence on the program of a work by Mabel Daniels, who shares with but six other women the distinction of having her music performed by the Boston Symphony in the whole 75 years of its existence.

It is a curious thing, it has always seemed to me, that music is the one field in all art, indeed in all human endeavor, that women have never achieved a masterpiece corresponding even to those of lesser masters in music. In years gone by the orchestra has played music by Ethel Leginska, Margaret Lang, Helen Hopekirk, Mrs. H. M. A. Beach, Henriette Bosman and Lili Boulanger: it has never repeated it and there is very little likelihood it ever will be revived.

Nor, in its present form, does it seem likely Miss Daniels' very fine "Psalm of Praise" for mixed chorus, three trumpets, percussion and strings, will take its place in the repertoire. By "present form" I mean as a concert hall work; it will undoubtedly have many a performance in its original form with piano, trumpets and percussion, for it is a sound and vigorous work echoing the jubilation of the text from the Old Testament. Its inner part is lovely supplicatory lyric beautifully suited to the mixed chorus, and it ends on a note of triumph. The idiom is personal, makes little use of dissonance, but its contrapuntal lines in the outer sections are somewhat angular in a more contemporary vein. The modulations are free and interesting and, all in all, it is the agreeable product of a lively and gifted mind. Miss Daniels was in the audience and most cordially received.

ENORMOUS WORK

